NFL-ESPN hearing set

WASHINGTON—A Senate subcommittee plans to hold a hearing tomorrow to examine possible anti-trust implications of the NFL's TV rights deal with ESPN. Among those scheduled to testify are NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle and William Grimes, president and chief executive officer of ESPN. Also, Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., last week asked the Justice Department to review the relationship between ABC and ESPN.

Fla. ad tax repeal closer

TALLAHASSEE, FLA.—The Florida Senate last week passed a bill to repeal the state's controversial 5 percent tax on advertising and other services, while the Florida House passed a bill to revise it. A joint conference committee is scheduled today to begin developing a compromise bill. The Florida Association of Broadcasters said it is optimistic. (Continued on Page 43)

'Star Trek' beams up viewers

By WILLIAM MAHONEY
Staff reporter

LOS ANGELES—"Star Trek: The Next Generation" invaded TV stations last week and early ratings indicate it packed a wallop.

Of the nine independent stations in A.C. Nielsen Co.'s overnight markets that aired the two-hour series pilot between Sept. 28 and 30, three won their slot, three came in second and three placed third.

That performance came despite the fact that six of the stations were UHF outlets, which are frequently trounced by stronger VHF network affiliates.

In Chicago, for example, home of three network-owned VHF stations as well as strong independents owned by Tribune Broadcasting and Fox Broadcasting Co., "Star Trek" gave WPWR, Channel 50, an 11.1 rating (percentage of all TV homes) and a 17 share (percentage of sets in use), good enough for third place in the nation's third largest TV market.

The most successful outing was on independent KCOP-TV in Los Angeles, which beat all its competition, network stations included, with a 21.2/29, the highest ratings ever recorded by the station.

Paramount Pictures, which produced and distributed "Star Trek: The Next Generation," said in a press release that the nine stations for which "Trek" ratings were available had scored, on average, numbers (Continued on Page 43)

Geraldo Rivera wins with viewers in spite of critics

By RICHARD MAHLER
Los Angeles bureau chief

Geraldo Rivera may yet get the last laugh on the TV critics who have ridiculed him ever since "The Mystery of Al Capone's Vaults" 18 months ago.

Despite the slings of outraged pundits, Mr. Rivera is now winning viewers and raves from station executives for his new talk show, "Geraldo!"

Narrowcast cable services multiplying

By JANET STILSON
Staff reporter

NEW YORK—Two new cable networks launch this month, bringing to at least 10 the number of new national cable services begun this year or under consideration.

Many of these new services will be on display this week at the Atlantic Cable Show in Atlantic City, N.J., and all are tightly focused, in a virtual narrowcasting mode.

For example, the two networks launching this month are The Fashion Channel (on Oct. 1) and the J.C. Penney Co.-backed Shop Television Network (on Oct. 16).

Also in the works are another Penney-sponsored shop-at-home network, Telaction; a Baltimore-based service previewing cable programming called Preview; and a 24-hour health and fitness channel dubbed You TV.

In addition, the Lifetime cable television network is contemplating a spinoff service for medical professionals, its officials say.

These upcoming efforts follow on the heels of such earlier 1987 launches as Time Inc.'s Festival pay (Continued on Page 43)

Gillett's Storer TV buy hits roadblock at FCC

By DOUG HALONEN
Staff reporter

WASHINGTON—Group broadcaster George Gillett Jr.'s proposed $650 million buy into Storer's TV stations hit a major snag here last week, just days before the acquisition was scheduled to close.

Sources said the commissioners of the Federal Communications Commission have bowed to congressional pressure and agreed to reconsider action by agency staff approving the deal.

House Telecommunications Subcommittee Chairman Ed Markey, D-Mass., and seven other congressmen asked the FCC last week to derail the sale due to concerns that Mr. Gillett would violate the agency's station ownership restrictions.

The congressmen expressed concern that Mr. Gillett may have retained "effective control" of five TV stations he spun off earlier this year to make room in his station portfolio to buy a controlling interest in six Storer stations.

FCC rules generally limit a single firm to a total of 12 TV stations, and Mr. Gillett already had 11.

Mr. Gillett is one of three trustees of a family trust that now owns the five former Gillett stations jointly with Busse Broadcasting.

Because Mr. Gillett already had six TV stations after the spinoff, his effective control of his five former stations through a trust, plus the six Storer stations, would be "well in excess of the 12-station limitation," the congressmen said in their letter.

Vincent Pepper, Mr. Gillett's Washington communications counsel, said he believed the FCC staff's original approval of the deal had been "entirely proper."

Mr. Pepper didn't think the review by the FCC commissioners would derail the deal or its closing, which he said the parties had planned for shortly after Oct. 15.

"I assume the FCC will undertake its review very quickly," Mr. Pepper said.

Rep. Markey and other congressmen have often stressed that the station ownership rules need to be upheld. #

CBS defers action on records sale

By DIANE MERMIGAS
Senior reporter

The CBS board last week deferred action on the sale of its record unit to Sony Corp. for more than $2 billion, but will consider selling all or part of the division to shareholders.

The board said it will determine the fate of CBS Records at its regularly scheduled Oct. 14 meeting.

Walter Yetnikoff, CBS Records president, who talked to the board last week, is likely to be part of any deal made to sell the unit.

A high-level CBS source said no other formal offers for the records unit are being considered but that others could yet be submitted. It is also possible Sony could increase its offer.

By selling all or part of the records group to its shareholders, CBS could avoid paying an estimated $600 million in taxes it would incur by selling the unit to another buyer.

William Paley, CBS founder and chairman, who has headed a board faction opposed to selling the records unit, is said to be willing to consider spinning off the division to shareholders, a move in which money wouldn't change hands.

Such an arrangement would enable Mr. Paley to retain the same 8 percent interest in records that he currently holds in CBS Inc. Also, he likely would be named chairman of the records venture, high-level CBS sources said.

Insiders say a sale also could create heavy tax ramifications for Laurence Tisch, CBS chief executive officer, who has led the charge to sell the records unit.

High-level CBS sources said the CBS board remains divided over the issue of whether to sell the records unit at all.

Last week, CBS completed the sale of its magazine division to a management-led group for $650 million, boosting the company's total cash reserves to well over $2 billion.

Although there has been growing Wall Street speculation that Mr. Tisch eventually will seek to merge CBS and Loews, CBS officials last week said that no such plan is being considered. #

'Dolly' strives to retain ratings

By WILLIAM MAHONEY
Staff reporter

LOS ANGELES—ABC's "Dolly" got off to a solid ratings start in its premiere, but the question of the ratings race late last week was whether viewers would return for the second show.

"Dolly," the variety hour hosted by Dolly Parton, was one of several ABC shows that got off to strong starts, though the network overall was topped by returning champion NBC as well as CBS for the week ended Sept. 27.

ABC's growth appears to be at the expense of CBS, because NBC continues to dominate the trio with its powerful slate of returning hits.

According to national ratings from A.C. Nielsen Co., "Dolly" was the highest-rated show for Sunday, Sept. 27, with an average 24.7 rating (percentage of TV homes) and a 38 share (percentage of sets in use). That earned the ABC variety series a fifth-place ranking overall for the week ending that night.

Yet "Dolly's" premiere wasn't enough for ABC to win the night. ABC averaged a 15.4/26, behind a 17.8/30 for CBS and NBC's 16.5/27.

Last week, ABC also lost Monday night to NBC, but maintained its hold on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Ratings for Thursday and Friday weren't available at press time Friday.

NBC won Monday night with an average 20/31, bolstered by the strength of its made-for-TV movie, "Assault and Matrimony," which earned a 20.2/32, and "ALF," the night's highest-rated show with a 20.3/32. CBS was second with a 13.9/22, beating ABC's 13.2/21.

ABC easily took Tuesday with an average 22.6/37, beating NBC's 15/25 and CBS's 9.5/16. ABC's "Growing Pains" was the highest-rated Tuesday show with a 26.5/41.

ABC won by a smaller margin on Wednesday night with a 16/27, followed by NBC and CBS's tie at 13.2/22. ABC's "Hooperman," with a 17.5/28, was the night's highest-rated show for the second week in a row.

For the week ended Sept. 27, NBC came out on top overall with an average 16.5/29, beating CBS's 14.6/25 and ABC's 14.2/24.

On Sunday night, the duel between CBS's "Murder, She Wrote" and NBC's "Family Ties" and "My Two Dads" continued, but CBS came out on top. "Murder" earned a 20.4/32, topping the NBC shows' 19.6/31 average.

On Thursday, Sept. 24, NBC's "The Cosby Show" and "A Different World" duo came in first and second in the weekly rankings with a 31.5/51 and 31.3/49, respectively. "A Different World" was the highest-rated new series of the week.

CBS's "Tour of Duty" was beaten squarely by the NBC combination that night, earning a 10.6/17 in its first outing. #

NBC's Grossman stirs public broadcasting debate

By ROBERT HOMAN
Staff reporter

WASHINGTON—Public broadcasting is on the defensive again, this time because of a network executive it formerly called its own.

At issue is a recent speech in which NBC News President Larry Grossman suggested that the staff of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting be slashed from about 100 to just its board and a few auditors.

Mr. Grossman, who served as Public Broadcasting Service president from 1976 to 1984, also said federal money for public TV should no longer be used to support local stations.

Instead, it should go toward improving the system's national programming, he said.

After the speech, which was made at a Southern Educational Communications Association conference, public TV executives suggested that Mr. Grossman had forgotten his public TV roots.

"He ought to pay attention to NBC News and the NBC strike and stay out of public broadcasting," said CPB Acting Chairman Howard Gutin.

Responded Mr. Grossman: "I was invited by SECA to give my views, and I was happy to come because I care a lot."

His theory is that a re-targeting of resources would be the best way to improve public broadcasting.

The Grossman speech came as the CPB board was preparing for some soul-searching over various matters during a retreat that was to be held yesterday. Board member Dan Brenner said he wanted to discuss whether the CPB should exist at all.

In defense of the CPB's current budgetary process, corporation President Donald Ledwig told the SECA audience that public TV's federal appropriations need more scrutiny than a few auditors could provide.

"What would CPB say when it went before Congress under this proposed scheme—"Please give us $200 million, and we will send you a report in five years to tell you what we did with it?" Mr. Ledwig asked.

The CPB was created by Congress to act as a buffer between the federal government and public broadcasters in order to keep politics out of programming decisions.

But some critics charge that the CPB has grown much larger than it needs to be to perform its function of funneling federal money to the stations.

"The Ford Foundation gave away scores of millions of dollars with only a few people," said Rick Breitenfeld, president of public station WHYI-TV in Philadelphia.

A CPB spokesman said the corporation spends about 4 percent of its federal appropriations on administration, including rent and salaries.

Out of appropriations of $214 million in fiscal year 1988, CPB will distribute $142 million to radio and TV stations, according to CPB.

Of the remainder, $50 million is distributed for national programming, about $9 million is spent on running CPB and more than $12 million is spent for music royalties, TV interconnection and satellite fees and services such as programming research and management consulting, a spokesman said.

Anthony Tiano, president and general manager of public station KQED-TV in San Francisco, said he's not sure taxpayers from one area of the country should have to pay for local public TV programming in other areas.

Yet Randall Feldman, president and general manager of public station KMBH-TV in Harlingen, Texas, said his station would "go off the air" if it were denied federal funds.

Elwin Basquin, president and general manager of public station WTVP-TV in Peoria, Ill., said major-market public TV stations, which produce most national programming, favor redirecting all federal funds into national programming because they would get the money.

"I would fight it all the way," he said.

But William McCarter, president of public station WTTW-TV in Chicago, a major producer of national public TV programming, said even if all federal money was allocated to national programming, his station would not reap a windfall. #

Mr. Rogers visits Soviet neighborhood

By ROBERT HOMAN
Staff reporter

WASHINGTON—After spending 10 days in the Soviet Union, Mr. Rogers returned to his own neighborhood last week.

Fred Rogers, now in his 20th season on PBS's "Mr. Rogers' Neighborhood," went to the Soviet Union to tape segments on "Good Night, Little Ones," a 15-minute children's program airing in that country daily at 8 p.m.

The visit by Mr. Rogers marked the first time a foreign guest had appeared on the Soviet program, according to Mr. Rogers' producer, Margy Whitmer.

In turn, Tatiana Vedeneeva, the host of the Soviet children's show, will come to the United States to visit the set of "Mr. Rogers' Neighborhood" in November.

Mr. Rogers became interested in the exchange idea after David Newell, his public relations director, told him about a clip he saw of the Soviet children's program that was aired on ABC's "Nightline."

But it took six months of negotiations with Soviet state broadcasting officials before plans for the exchange were completed.

Ms. Whitmer said the main difference between American and Soviet TV is that, in the Soviet Union, you "have to ask permission to do everything."

In a meeting shortly after their arrival, the Americans found themselves sitting stiffly at a table across from the Soviets, Ms. Whitmer said.

But after Mr. Rogers showed the Soviets at the meeting that his puppet, X the owl, had suffered a broken beak during the trip, one of his hosts quickly slipped out of room and glued and painted the beak.

"For me, this was a symbol of the hospitality we found throughout the trip," Mr. Rogers said.

"That gesture set the tone," Ms. Whitmer said.

"The people were wonderful."

The segments produced in Moscow, as well as Ms. Vedeneeva's visit to the United States, will air on public TV stations here during the week of March 7, 1988.

Family Communications, which produces "Mr. Rogers' Neighborhood," also sells books and videotapes featuring Mr. Rogers, such as "Going to the Dentist."#

PPV growth accelerating

By JANET STILSON
Staff reporter

NEW YORK—Though the total dollars still aren't overwhelming, the growth of pay-per-view appears to be accelerating.

Jeffrey Reiss, chairman of Request Television, says he expects the industry to generate about $70 million in revenues this year, nearly double the $40 million total last year. And he predicts an increase to $100 million in 1988.

"There's been enormous progress in the last six to nine months," says Edward Bleier, president of pay TV, animation and network features at Warner Bros. "It's coming faster than I thought. A year ago Paul Kagan Associates was saying cable systems were not going addressable. Now they're going forward rapidly."

The growth of PPV has been held back in large part due to technical problems.

Because PPV requires cable subscribers to order specific movies at a specific hour, the business has awaited the growth of addressable equipment—or high-tech phone systems—allowing quick, easy communication between the subscriber and the cable company.

That's happening now, says Mr. Bleier. He points to three major factors contributing to the industry's growth spurt:

- A drop in the cost of adding impulse sidecars to cable converter boxes, allowing subscribers to order movies at the push of a button. General Instrument's Jerrold division, for example, has decreased its sidecar prices to $15 per unit from about $40 over the past year.

Mr. Bleier believes the growth of impulse technology is critically important.

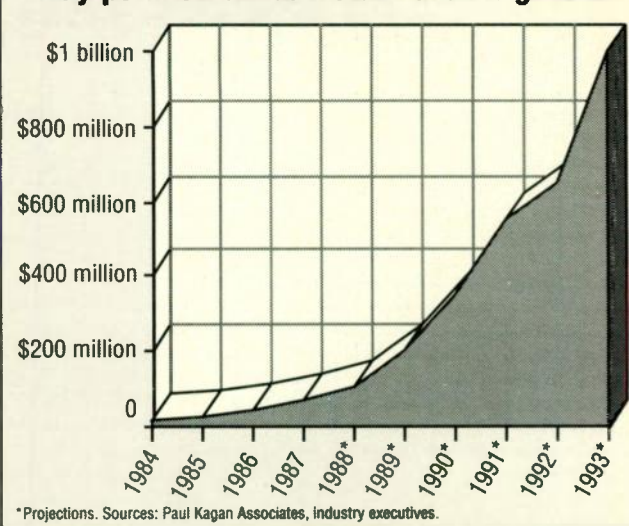

"The three rules of pay-per-view are like the three rules of real estate," he says. "Instead of location, location, location, it's impulse, impulse, impulse."

- The installation of automatic number identification services by telephone companies over the last six months, allowing viewers to order PPV movies by dialing 800 numbers.

A computer instantly processes ANI orders and provides the system with billing information—eliminating the long delays and limited ordering hours that have proven a problem in the past.

Pay-per-view annual retail revenue growth

Ads pulled from NFL telecasts

By RICHARD TEDESCO
Staff reporter

NEW YORK—Advertisers last week began pulling ads from the first weekend of National Football League replacement games.

Ford Motor Co., Chrysler Corp. and Miller Brewing Co. were among those that pulled advertising from yesterday's and tonight's games.

"We've informed the league that unless the teams can prove that they can play NFL-caliber football, we won't be advertising on the replacement games," said John McCandless, a Chrysler spokesman.

All three networks agreed to carry the initial weekend of games featuring replacement players and a handful of NFL strike breakers.

But NBC, for one, was considering alternative programming should the strike continue, including boxing or other anthology programming, according to sources close to the network.

The NFL games carried on all three networks are worth about $25 million a weekend in advertising revenue. Some sources estimate that the three networks may have already lost as much as $10 million from advertiser defections.

If the replacement games draw disappointing ratings, the networks would lose even more revenue resulting from the subsequent make-goods for underdelivery.

Ford expects to be negotiating "up to the 11th hour" each week of the strike to reposition its ads, according to Rod Sieb, a Ford spokesman.

"We don't frankly feel we'll get the same bang for the buck from the substitute games," he said.

Mr. Sieb said media alternatives to TV ads would also be considered.

GTE had also informed its agency, DDB Needham Worldwide, that it was dropping out because it did not want to, in effect, cross union picket lines.

But some of DDB's other clients were choosing to retain their NFL ad time.

"This weekend, there's the curiosity factor," said Bart McHugh, senior vice president and media director at DDB Needham Worldwide.

He also cited the factor of increased interest with the return of some recognizable NFL stars, like Dallas Cowboys quarterback Danny White.

But Ron Von Urff, media buyer for J. Walter Thompson, was describing the situation as a "mad Humana claims the use of the fictional Ecumena corporation on "St. Elsewhere" (l.) infringes on its trademark, which appears on all of its hospitals (above).

Hospital chain fails to stymie 'St. Elsewhere'

By MARIANNE PASKOWSKI
New York bureau chief

NEW YORK—A major hospital chain failed in a court effort to keep last week's episode of NBC's "St. Elsewhere" off the air, but it's planning further legal action this week.

Humana Inc., a Louisville, Ky.-based chain of for-profit hospitals, plans to continue pressing its contentions that NBC is infringing on its trademark by using the fictitious name "Ecumena" as the owner of the show's St. Eligius teaching hospital.

Before last week's episode, Humana asked a federal district court in Paducah, Ky., for a temporary restraining order to stop the show from airing.

It also sought an additional prohibition against the future use of the "Ecumena" name in the series.

Humana attorneys filed the motion less than 24 hours before the show was to air last Wednesday, Sept. 30, causing the network to scramble.

NBC executives remained in limbo until 7 p.m. (ET) the night of the program waiting for the judge's ruling. They made contingency plans to air a rerun of the series, which runs at 10 p.m., in the event they received an unfavorable ruling.

Although the court denied Humana's motion to keep the show off the air, it did order NBC to carry an advisory for last week's episode stating: "Ecumena is a fictional company that does not represent any actual company or corporation."

CBS seeking middle ground in the morning

By DIANE MERMIGAS
Senior reporter

CBS News President Howard Stringer last week said the replacement show for "The Morning Program" will find "a middle ground" between entertainment and hard news, much like the network's morning competition.

That likely will be a welcome sign for CBS affiliates, who were encouraged by last week's scrapping of "The Morning Program" but said they don't want a predominantly hard news focus for the new show.

CBS returned control of the morning time block to the news division and hired ABC's Kathleen Sullivan to co-host the as-yet untitled new show, which is slated to premiere Nov. 30 from 7 a.m. to 9 a.m. (ET).

Mr. Stringer told ELECTRONIC MEDIA, "I think the experience of the past five years indicates that the extremes of news and entertainment programming in the morning don't get us or the affiliates the audiences we want. We'll have to find some middle ground not far from what the other networks are doing."

Mr. Stringer says he believes his network bosses will give him sufficient time to make the new morning broadcast work.

"If there's anything we've learned here at CBS about this daypart, it's that change is lethal," he said.

Affiliate executives say they want a mix of news and entertainment, as well as a commitment that the show will stay in the same format for at least two years in order to build a following.

MCA eyes relaunch of all-barter 'Vice'

By MARIANNE PASKOWSKI
New York bureau chief

NEW YORK—Rebuffed in its first attempt to sell "Miami Vice" in syndication, MCA TV may now relaunch the show as an all-barter deal.

Don Menchel, MCA TV president, said the company was considering a number of possibilities but had no firm plans on taking "Miami Vice" back into syndication.

Last winter, MCA pulled "Miami Vice" from the syndication market, where it was being offered as an all-cash deal, because of the soft demand for off-network hour shows.

MCA later had discussions with the basic cable USA Network, of which MCA is half-owner, about picking up the off-network hour.

But in the past few weeks, MCA has met with the Fox Television Stations and the Tribune Broadcasting Co., discussing a number of scenarios to get the program back into the broadcast market.

Mel Smith, vice president and director of programming for the Tribune stations, described the meeting with MCA as more of a fact-finding mission rather than a full-blown presentation.

"Basically, MCA wanted station input on what would it take to sell off-network hours in this marketplace," Mr. Smith said.

MCA, according to Mr. Smith, discussed a number of plans for syndicating the program, among them selling the show next fall on a barter basis.

Under this plan, as Mr. Smith described it, MCA would offer stations 92 episodes to be aired back-to-back twice a week, as well as five two-part episodes.

This scenario calls for MCA to give stations seven minutes of local ad time to sell per episode, and hold back five minutes for national advertisers.

Sources say MCA's strategy of offering stations two-hour blocks is an effort to recreate the successful "Miami Vice-A-Thon" that the syndicator staged on its own WWOR-TV in New York Sept. 1 and Sept. 2.#

Spectrum fees considered

By DOUG HALONEN
Staff reporter

WASHINGTON—A Senate committee is giving new life to a controversial proposal to require broadcasters to pay the government each year for the use of their frequencies.

Industry leaders were startled last week to find that the spectrum-fee idea, which they have opposed for years, is currently under consideration as a budget proposal by the Senate Commerce Committee.

Also troubling to broadcasting officials is the notion that the proposal might be getting promoted as a backlash against broadcasters following the elimination of the fairness doctrine.

"I think this was triggered by the fairness doctrine," said John Summers, National Association of Broadcasters senior executive vice president.

"If they (Congress) do move ahead, that will be a factor."

As of late last week, it was unclear whether support for the spectrum-fee concept was serious or broad on Capitol Hill, however.

Tom Cohen, who is the senior counsel to the commerce committee, said a spectrum fee is among the revenue-raising options that the committee staff has proposed to help bring the federal budget into line.

As part of its budgetary obligations, the committee is supposed to come up with a plan by Oct. 19 for raising $600 million in the next two years.

Mr. Cohen also said the decision on what course to pursue will be up to Sen. Ernest "Fritz" Hollings, D-S.C., committee chairman, and his colleagues.

One reason broadcasters may have been caught unaware by the news is that the committee in the past had appeared to be focusing on another unpopular proposal—auctioning off non-broadcast spectrum.

"No way will we accept spectrum fees," Mr. Summers said. "We'll fight those like hell."#

NBC introduces HDTV system

By RICHARD TEDESCO
Staff reporter

NEW YORK—NBC announced last week the development of a new high-definition television system that it says is compatible with existing channel allotments.

Many of the other HDTV systems that have been proposed would require additional spectrum space for each channel to handle the enhanced signal.

"The advantage of this system is that it goes into the existing channel space," explained Thomas Keller, senior vice president of science and technology for the National Association of Broadcasters.

The new NBC system, dubbed Advanced Compatible Television, could be operational by 1992, NBC officials said last week.

In making its announcement in advance of the HDTV Colloquium to be held in Ottawa this week, NBC became the latest of several companies to introduce an enhanced or high-definition TV system that is compatible with the current NTSC standard.

The NBC system employs 1,050 lines of picture resolution instead of the present NTSC standard of 525 lines, according to James Carnes, vice president of consumer electronics and information sciences at the David Sarnoff Research Center.

It also offers enhanced vertical and horizontal resolution to increase the picture quality by an estimated 56 percent, Mr. Carnes said.

"It is a significant improvement over NTSC, and it's practical," he said. "We feel it's going to enhance the movement to HDTV."

NBC executives say the network has spent $20 million over the past three years and $45 million over the last decade to develop this system.

Michael Sherlock, NBC president of operations and technical services, called the ACTV system a "breakthrough" and said his company would seek industry support for an additional $30 million to develop the system.

The system has an estimated aspect ratio (width to depth) of 5:3 or 16:9, so a wide-screen TV would be needed to realize the picture enhancements.

But a present standard receiver could also translate the HDTV signal.#

KABC, Nielsen settle lawsuit

By ADAM BUCKMAN
Staff reporter

A lawsuit brought against A.C. Nielsen Co. by KABC-TV in Los Angeles was settled out of court last week.

Although both companies confirmed that the suit was settled, neither side would reveal details about the settlement.

KABC sued Nielsen last June after the research company removed eight days of ratings for KABC's 11 p.m. (PT) newscasts from the May sweeps ratings report.

Nielsen yanked KABC's numbers because the station ran a series of news reports that profiled some of Southern California's Nielsen families.

The ratings company charged that the series amounted to "ratings distortion," because the reports could have lured the Nielsen families into watching the newscast.

In its lawsuit, KABC asked for a temporary restraining order that would have prevented Nielsen from mailing the May report. A judge denied the request and the reports were mailed June 18.

But KABC, which has denied that the news series was a deliberate attempt to distort the ratings, continued to press its suit.

According to sources familiar with the case, KABC wanted a court to reverse Nielsen's judgment that KABC was guilty of ratings distortion.#

THE #1 SMASH HIT OF THE SEASON!

DUCKTALES is everything it's quacked up to be, and more. It's only our first week, but already it's clear, no other program, new or returning delivers increases for its stations like we do. Not just a leader in its time period. Not just #1 in its program category. Compare DUCKTALES to any program in any daypart. No one delivers time period, market share and overall rank increases like DUCKTALES.

DUCKTALES DELIVERS IN PRIME TIME.

Our two-hour "sneak preview" delivered ratings and shares that any theatrical first-run release would love to have, both in our prime-time 8-10PM run and in cumulative exposure. And, DUCKTALES held—and built—audience across its whole prime time run. Audiences were actually larger in its second hour than in its first and you can't have late evening growth without adult appeal. The universal Disney pulling power works for DUCKTALES just as it does for all of our theatrical films.

More pay for overnight clearances

More and more, syndicators who want clearances in New York, Los Angeles and Chicago are willing to pay stations to carry their programs from midnight to 6 a.m. Though no one likes to talk about it, insiders say the system serves both sides well: Stations get cash for running free programming, while syndicators get the clearances they need in the top three markets to meet national advertiser demands. And of course if the programs do well in normal time periods in other markets, they can always be rescheduled.

Look for more network pre-emptions in late morning and afternoon if the generally strong numbers for Tribune's "Geraldo!" continue. Some stations already are airing two-hour syndicated talk blocks, taking a cue from talk-oriented radio stations that enjoy tremendous listener loyalty. "The Big Three are worried," says one former network programming executive. "They are trying to control costs on the one hand, and fighting pre-emptions or delayed broadcasts (of network fare) on the other." The prediction: more experimentation by ABC, CBS and NBC in vulnerable time periods.

Remember the MTV crew detained at the Russian border? The crew was in the Soviet Union to produce a special, which premieres this week, on Soviet rock 'n' roll. In the meantime, MTV VJ Alan Hunter got word that he's been convicted by the Russian authorities and fined 450 rubles ($675). The Russians still maintain that Mr. Hunter was bringing in a boom box to sell on the black market.

As Paramount's "Star Trek: The Next Generation" takes off, the second member of its original writing and production team departs. The contract of the show's associate producer, D.C. Fontana, who co-wrote the pilot, expires tomorrow and isn't being renewed, insiders report. Earlier this summer, David Gerrold left his position as staff writer. Ms. Fontana and Mr. Gerrold were two of the four members of the new team that had worked on the original "Star Trek" series. John Pike, president of the network TV division of Paramount, downplays the importance of the moves, saying executive producer Gene Roddenberry, who remains with the new show, is the real creative force behind the series.

Insiders say the National Association of Broadcasters and other industry representatives are trying to discourage a Supreme Court challenge that could result in the elimination of the equal time law. The NAB is said to be concerned that such a challenge might further antagonize Congress, which is already disturbed about the FCC's axing of the fairness doctrine. However, Bill Branch, a news reporter for KOVR-TV in Sacramento, Calif., said last week that he would make the appeal if he could raise the $3,000 to $4,000 required for filing fees.

Sources say ESPN is shooting a pilot for a possible half-hour series in New York with National Media Group/High Bar Productions. That's the outfit that does the "Miss Olympia" body-building competition. The ESPN series would feature Corey Everson, the top-rated hot ticket among the female iron pumpers.

Bad press from the purists hasn't hurt the colorization business. Newcomer AFT is being paid $2,500 per minute for the updating of several black-and-white Republic Pictures films. For a typical 100-minute movie, that's a quarter of a million dollars.

Baseball fans who couldn't get enough of the pennant race were rewarded on NBC with a split screen view of the St. Louis Cardinals-Chicago Cubs contest during the Detroit Tigers-Toronto Blue Jays tilt on Sept. 27. This was the first time NBC used the technique, which is intended for use during conflicting live events at the 1988 Olympics. Michael Weisman, NBC executive producer, decided to try the double-barrelled approach just five minutes before game time.

Insiders say the Federal Communications Commission has chosen not to act on the most recent listener complaints lodged against Pacifica radio station WBAI-FM in New York. There were allegations that a women's group aired on sexual politics a few months back. The FCC apparently decided the comments weren't that dicey. However, WBAI staffers have received guidelines from Pacifica for clearing any broadcasts containing blue language in advance with the station's program director.

"Mirror, mirror on the wall, what's the best new show this fall," was the message printed on hand mirrors sent to the trade press for Columbia/Embassy's "The Charmings." The Insider can't help but be a little superstitious about the fate of the new show, which airs Thursdays on ABC. Both the original shipment and the second replacement shipment of mirrors arrived cracked. A spokesman from Columbia blamed United Parcel Service for the screw-up and wasn't overly concerned that the show might be jinxed by it.

Shock radio team suspended for antics

By ADAM BUCKMAN
Staff reporter

A morning radio team in Milwaukee was suspended without pay last week for on-air antics that have driven away at least six advertisers.

The controversy, which sources say has been building since shock jock Perry Stone began hosting WQFM-FM's morning show last February, came to a head 1½ weeks ago when two gay activists became fed up with Mr. Stone's derogatory references to homosexuals.

One of the activists, a free-lance columnist named Terry Boughner, said he and a friend began telephoning WQFM advertisers after hearing several references to homosexuals on the station's morning show.

According to Mr. Boughner, Mr. Stone and sidekick Randi Rhodes have referred to gays recently as "queers" and "faggots." The air personalities called an event aimed at raising money for AIDS patients a "homofest."

Satirical comedy bits with names such as "Tales from the Homo Side" have also been featured on the morning show recently, Mr. Boughner said.

When he called the station's advertisers, most of them said they were not aware of the morning show's content, which—besides taking shots at homosexuals—has included jokes about Polish-Americans, paraplegics and blacks.

One controversial bit this past summer involved a satirical representation of Milwaukee Brewers baseball player Cecil Cooper, who is black. The bit, which drew protests from black activists, depicted Mr. Cooper as an inarticulate black who hungers for watermelons and white women.

The air personalities, the general manager and the program director of WQFM were unavailable for comment.

Last week, four advertisers confirmed that they had pulled commercials from the WQFM morning show. According to the Milwaukee Journal newspaper, which covered the story in a series of articles last week, at least two other advertisers left the program.

A local media buyer, who places spots for Seven-Up, confirmed that the soft-drink company would not return to WQFM until Mr. Stone "is no longer employed there."

With pressure mounting on the station, General Manager Ralph Barnes announced that the morning team was being suspended "indefinitely" without pay as of Sept. 29.

But by week's end, according to Milwaukee Journal reporter Mike Zahn, Mr. Barnes was already talking about restoring the morning team in mid-October.

Mr. Zahn said Mr. Barnes indicated the morning show would be "toned down," but Mr. Stone said on a local TV talk show last week that he refuses to change.

At least one advertiser, American TV and Appliance of Madison, Wis., one of the state's biggest advertisers, told the Milwaukee Journal last week that it would restore its commercials to the morning show only if Mr. Stone changes his approach on the program.

PBS accused of defaming the banana

By DOUG HALONEN
Staff reporter

WASHINGTON—The International Banana Association says it has been bruised by PBS.

The association is so worked up about a condom demonstration using a banana in "AIDS: Changing the Rules," a PBS show hosted by Ron Reagan that's supposed to air Nov. 6, that it's threatening legal action.

"The banana is an important product and deserves to be treated with respect and consideration," said Robert Moore, banana association president, in a letter to PBS.

He said PBS will be held fully responsible for any damage to the banana industry.

"Further, we reserve all legal rights to protect the industry's interests from this arbitrary, unnecessary and insensitive action," he said.

In a letter of response, Nancy Hendry, PBS deputy general counsel, said the use of the fruit was appropriate.

"The decision to use a banana for this purpose is the type of editorial decision that the producer is uniquely qualified to make based on a broad range of aesthetic and journalistic considerations, including audience sensibilities and the clarity and effectiveness of the information conveyed," Ms. Hendry said.

Good news and bad news

This is traditionally the time of year when the fall network schedules take center stage. But this is not a traditional year.

Only a few weeks into the new season, it has already become apparent that some ABC series are being muscled out of prime time by new first-run syndicated shows. As we reported last week, several dozen ABC affiliates are running first-run fare in the 8 p.m. time slot on Fridays and Saturdays.

This is only partly a reflection of the perceived weakness of the ABC lineup those nights. It is also a vote of confidence in the growing quality of first-run product.

No matter how weak a network show is, affiliates won't drop it for second-rate sludge. But affiliates now have the option of picking up big-budget adventures such as "Star Trek: The Next Generation," original episodes of such former network shows as "Webster," "Sea Hunt" and "We Got it Made" and new comedies like the "The Dom Deluise Show."

Not all of these shows will work out once they reach the air. But there are enough of them—and enough money behind them—to lure affiliates that have already lost some of their attachment to the networks.

That's the other side of the equation. As we warned long ago, the networks invited just this sort of response when they moved to reduce the compensation they pay stations for carrying their programs.

Such a move forces stations to step back from the traditional network-affiliate relationship and look closely at the pure dollars and cents of programming. In the past, stations generally stuck with weak network shows because it was worth it in order to get the good ones—and the compensation.

Cut the comp, and some of that loyalty goes with it. It becomes more like straight business: Is it better to take the network cash and the few spots that come with a low-rated network show, or is there more money to be made selling five minutes of time on a syndicated show?

Clearly, some affiliates feel it's simply a better deal to take their own cut of prime time and let the network keep its cash.

That's bad news for the network and good news for syndicators. What it may eventually mean for the industry as a whole remains to be seen.

But we've always felt that more good programming is better than less, no matter where it comes from, or who distributes it. #

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

National test format was revived for alcoholism program

I was somewhat surprised by the article on "The National AIDS Awareness Test" suggesting that the show was reviving the old test format.

We were first involved in 1985 in syndicating a show called "The National Alcoholism Test" which aired in 110 TV markets. More recently, in 1986, we produced and distributed a show called "The National Teenage Drug and Alcohol Abuse Quiz" which has been sold in over 100 TV markets.

Although I do not mean to take away the impact a test format would have in educating the public on such an important and relevant disease as AIDS, alcohol and drug abuse is another major disease for which Public Service Video is proud to have revived the test format in 1985 to help educate the public on this important problem.

Policy of replacing prize spots is a mistake

The policy of one network and some syndicators to replace prize spots with national 30-second commercials is flawed and was not completely thought out.

Converting promotional spots to commercials could create hundreds of millions of dollars worth of additional national commercial inventory controlled by the networks and syndicators that could not only destroy the local station spot market, but could be overly disruptive for the entire television market.

The promotional or prize spots should never be linked to programing's 30-second commercial load, because it establishes a dangerous precedent that encourages abuses in the promotional area that will eventually be rewarded with the conversion of promotion spots to commercial spots.

Even with the proposed conversions to 30s, the prize spots will still exist in many of the game shows that are supposedly eliminating the spots.

The spots will only be more tightly controlled.

The promotional spots should be regulated independently of the 30-second commercials. Thirty-second spots should not be added every time programs or networks cut back or more strictly regulate the prize area.

The prize spots and promotional consideration spots are currently regulated by the syndicators, networks and station groups and have existed for over 25 years, without being a major clutter problem, especially relative to overall TV clutter.

Stations and advertisers are misguided if they believe in the pretense that it is in their best interest to convert a benign promotional area into a malignant commercial format that can spread to all programing, causing a major redistribution of advertising revenues and furthering the deterioration of the individual station's control over its own inventory.

Finally, the effort to convert is illogical considering the fact that there has been a successful movement to limit promotional time and format beginning with the 1987-88 season.

QUICK TAKES

How do you account for the growth of first-run syndicated shows in network prime time?

Ken Ladage
director of program operations
WRTV-TV
Indianapolis

"If you control the prime-time lineup, you can create more stability for your station. And from a money standpoint, you have a chance to make up some of the financial shortfalls the network may have. Also, the quality of these syndicated programs is improving."

Jules Moreland
program director
KFMB-TV
(CBS)
San Diego

"After you've been beat into the ground for awhile, you look at other ways of surviving. Also, networks tend to take a lot of early-morning and weekend hours. So there's a tendency to go into network prime time to get the local dollar figures up."

Philip Greene
vice president and general manager
WALB-TV
(NBC)
Albany, Ga.

"Based on the increasing competition from independent stations and cable TV, a lot of affiliates feel they can do better with syndicated shows. We don't do much pre-empting here, and none in prime time. We're an NBC affiliate, and we're very pleased with the network's programming."

Average annual radio compensation by market size

Salaries in radio

Study shows disparities by market size

By ADAM BUCKMAN
Staff reporter

While big-name radio personalities such as New York's Howard Stern may command salaries of $1 million per year, the average annual salary for a major-market radio host is more like $37,000, a new survey shows.

The study, "The 1987 Radio Employee Compensation and Fringe Benefits Report," was released last week by the National Association of Broadcasters in Washington and the Broadcast Financial Management Association in Des Plaines, Ill.

About 2,000 radio stations responded to the compensation survey, which was sent to all of the nation's 8,837 radio stations on the air last May, the NAB said.

With a relatively low response rate of 23.5 percent, the NAB said "care should be taken when interpreting the data."

But, said NAB Radio Board Chairman Jerry Lyman: "The figures give station management a general idea of compensation being paid in the various markets."

According to the survey, the average base salary for a general manager at a station located in a market with a population of 2.5 million or more is $90,385 with an average year-end bonus of $16,833.

Average base salaries for other department heads in the same sized market include $42,585 for a chief engineer, $51,588 for a program director, $37,540 for a news director and $31,295 for a promotion director.

On-air personalities in the same market receive an annual average salary of $36,990. News reporters are paid $33,339 and sports reporters receive $44,312.

Among sales personnel in the biggest markets, a general sales manager averages $84,096 per year, a local sales manager can expect $73,249 and a national sales manager can receive $69,733. Average annual compensation for account executives is $44,020.

But in markets with populations between 25,000 and 50,000, a general manager can expect to earn an average base salary of $29,720 with an average bonus of $2,577.

Chief engineers in those small markets average $15,015; program directors, $15,285; news directors, $14,710; and promotion directors, $16,320.

Average salaries for other staff members in small markets include $12,449 for an on-air personality, $11,153 for a news reporter and $8,508 for a sports reporter.

In the sales department, general sales managers receive an average of $27,628, local sales managers get $22,476 and account executives can expect $16,926.

The NAB's report has 34 tables of compensation for AM and FM stations in markets of all sizes. Besides market size, some of the tables base their compensation averages on the size of a station's revenue.

The report is available from the NAB at a cost of $40 for NAB members and $80 for non-members. #

NATPE exhibit space is selling at rapid pace

By RICHARD MAHLER
Los Angeles bureau chief

LOS ANGELES—Exhibition space is selling briskly for the 1988 National Association of Television Program Executives conference, a possible harbinger of a good year ahead for the TV syndication business.

And although it's early, NATPE organizers are guessing that the 1988 conference, to be held Feb. 25 to 29 in Houston, could attract a record 8,000 participants, up from 1987's 7,800 in New Orleans.

So far this year, 190 companies have purchased 225,000 square feet of exhibition space, about 25,000 more square feet of space than the total amount bought by 259 firms for last year's NATPE convention.

NATPE Executive Director Phil Corvo says exhibition space in Houston's George R. Brown Convention Center has been selling faster than expected.

Exhibit space in the Brown center is selling for $6 per square foot. Last year, it was $6 per square foot for some established customers and $8 per square foot for others.

As of last week, NATPE had 20,000 square feet still available, though Mr. Corvo declined to predict whether the space would sell out.

NATPE officials attribute the surge to a bullish advertising climate and continued consolidation within the syndication industry.

"Everyone (in the creative community) sees the success of King World, and they want to get in on it," says Mr. Corvo. "Stations have rebounded, and fourth-quarter advertising looks very good."

"People at stations have loosened up and started buying product again. This is the kind of cycle we've gone through many times in the past."

Mr. Corvo says he believes the entry of major network players, including Grant Tinker, Steve Friedman, Susan Winston and Joan Lundden, has given first-run programing new credibility among both affiliates and independents.

This year's convention doesn't bear a theme or slogan, other than it being NATPE's 25th anniversary.

Some of the biggest past and present names in television will headline panels at the conference.

For example, talk show host Phil Donahue is scheduled to moderate a general session on Feb. 28, during which network programming gurus of 1963 will reflect on "TV Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow."

Mr. Tinker, Mike Dann and Edgar Sherick—former entertainment executives from NBC, CBS and ABC, respectively—participated in a similar panel during the first NATPE convention 25 years ago.

Mr. Corvo is seeking commitments from the current network entertainment presidents for the same session, along with representatives from Fox Broadcasting Co. and various cable services. Jim Luton, program director at WFSB-TV in Hartford, Conn., is producing the panel discussion.

Taft Broadcasting buyout approved by shareholders

By DIANE MERMIGAS
Senior reporter

Officials of Taft Broadcasting and FMI Financial Corp. last week were targeting tomorrow for completion of their merger.

Although the merger was approved by Taft shareholders during a special meeting last week, at press time, the $1.4 billion transaction still awaited approval from the Federal Communications Commission.

Sources close to Carl Lindner, the Cincinnati investor who heads FMI, said he has lined up the necessary financing for the deal and was prepared to complete the deal upon FCC approval.

FMI is a subsidiary of Mr. Lindner's American Financial Corp. Taft would be its first broadcast-related interest.

After the merger, FMI will be renamed Great American Communications.

The merger will be financed primarily through $650 million in bank debt and $543 million in debt securities. Following last week's shareholder meeting, FMI began selling some of those debt securities.

Sources say FMI is considering selling its interests in food processing and insurance businesses, possibly to an American Financial affiliate, to help reduce the bank debt.

Stockholders will receive $157 in cash for each of their common shares of Taft, or $144 in cash plus one share of FMI Financial Corp., the subsidiary that will oversee Taft.

The name Taft Broadcasting will be used solely by Dudley Taft, the company's vice chairman and a member of the founding family, as he develops a new autonomous broadcast concern of his own.

At last week's meeting, Taft chairman Charles Mechem, in prepared remarks to shareholders, denied that any major management changes are afoot or that the sale of company assets are planned.

"It is not the end of our company, but it's continuation in a different form," he said.

Although Taft officials earlier this year considered selling off all or part of the company's entertainment group, it is believed that Mr. Lindner would like to retain that unit. #

Lorimar Telepictures to sell three network TV stations

By WILLIAM MAHONEY
Staff reporter

LOS ANGELES—Lorimar Telepictures Corp. last week agreed to sell its three network-affiliated TV stations as part of its effort to concentrate solely on entertainment.

As expected, Lorimar has entered a definitive agreement to sell the three stations to Goltrin Communications, a recently formed company headed by a Lorimar executive, for $23 million. The stations are KMID-TV in Midland-Odessa, Texas; KSPR-TV in Springfield, Mo.; and KCPM-TV in Chico-Redding, Calif.

Lorimar chairman Merv Adelson said the sale continues the company's focus on returning to its core entertainment business in the TV, motion picture and home video fields.

In June, Lorimar announced it would sell its six TV stations, including three network affiliates and three independents, and its magazine publishing and advertising businesses.

At that time, an agreement in principle had been reached to sell the three network affiliates to Joseph Goldfarb, who's currently a member of the office of the president, Lorimar Broadcast Group.

The transaction for the three stations is expected to close in about three to six months. When the deal is final, Mr. Goldfarb will resign his position with Lorimar to assume his post as president of Goltrin Communications.

The purchase marks the first acquisition for the new company, which was started in July as a privately held company.

The only properties Lorimar is still negotiating to sell are the three independent TV stations and its interest in US magazine, a Lorimar spokeswoman said.

Lorimar's independents are WPGH-TV in Pittsburgh; WCII-TV in San Juan, Puerto Rico; and WSUR-TV in Ponce, Puerto Rico. #

TV stations renew music license fight

By DOUG HALONEN

Staff reporter

WASHINGTON—Negotiations to reform the TV music licensing process apparently have failed, prompting the broadcasting industry to return to Capitol Hill for relief.

Broadcasters last week vowed to renew their legislative drive to reform the way TV stations pay for the rights to music in syndicated shows.

The All-Industry TV Music License Committee, which has been leading the charge, contended that a year-long effort to negotiate a compromise with music licensing organizations has been a waste of time.

The committee has long advocated licensing reforms to enable television stations to pay for the music they use in each syndicated show.

Currently, stations pay a blanket fee for all the tunes in the repertoires of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers and Broadcast Music Inc.

But ASCAP and BMI are vehemently opposed to the reforms, which broadcasters say would make it cheaper for them to do business.

In a statement last week, Les Arries, chairman of the TV committee, said ASCAP had been unwilling in negotiations to move toward the type of "structural reform" broadcasters had in mind.

"Sadly, we can only conclude that ASCAP's primary purpose in agreeing to negotiate with us was first to becloud and then torpedo broadcaster efforts in Congress to achieve structural reform in the copyright law," Mr. Arries said.

Responded Morton Gould, ASCAP president, "We regret that the local TV broadcasters have broken off negotiations. We at ASCAP always prefer to negotiate rather than litigate."

Legislation that would achieve broadcasters' ends is pending in both chambers of Congress.

But it's unclear whether this year's effort will fare any better than the one that fell short in the previous congressional session.

An aide to Sen. Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz., chairman of the Senate copyright subcommittee, said the senator hoped to hold hearings soon.

However, Bruce Lehman, legislative counsel to the all-industry committee, said Rep. Bob Kastenmeier, D-Wis., chairman of the House copyright subcommittee, has indicated that he does not want to take up music licensing this year.

The music reforms also have been opposed by a number of Hollywood film studios, which receive music royalties for the tunes they compose. #

Look who's talking:

Ahmad Rashad and Pat Mitchell

Offering by Hal Roach to focus on families

By WILLIAM MAHONEY

Staff reporter

LOS ANGELES—Another hat was tossed into the talk show ring last week with the unveiling of "The Family Show."

The one-hour daily strip syndicated program will highlight three families per show. Features will include home movies, family albums and visits with famous families.

Ahmad Rashad, the sportscaster and former NFL football star, and Pat Mitchell, a regular contributor on NBC's "Today" and a substitute for co-host Jane Pauley, have been lined up as co-hosts.

Hal Roach Studios will distribute the series when it enters the marketplace in fall 1988. Hal Roach will sell "The Family Show" on a cash-barter basis, but the split hasn't been determined yet.

It's being produced by Josephson Communications and Mitchell-Muldoon Productions, in association with Robert Halmi Productions.

"The Family Show" is daytime television's answer to the warm, funny and positive aspects of such prime-time programs as "The Cosby Show" and "Family Ties," says Mort Marcus, president of Los Angeles-based Hal Roach Telecommunications. "We analyzed the daytime market to see what was needed as a new format, and found there was room for an upbeat show, a show that directly challenges the negative and overly exploited attitude of other talk shows."

The program, which will be taped before a live audience, will explore the real-life comedies and dramas inherent in families.

Ms. Mitchell, who co-created the program, earlier had co-hosted "Hour Magazine" with Gary Collins before leaving in 1983 to create and host the nationally syndicated "Woman to Woman." Her bi-monthly segments on "Today" are titled "Woman to Woman on Today." Mr. Rashad is in his fifth year on NBC's "NFL Live" program and is also a regular contributor on the network's "SportsWorld." He also serves as a sports feature correspondent for "Entertainment Tonight." #

Regis Philbin and Kathie Lee Gifford

New York talk show to go into syndication

By MARIANNE PASKOWSKI

New York bureau chief

NEW YORK—Buena Vista Television has signed an agreement with WABC-TV in New York to nationally syndicate the station's locally produced "The Morning Show."

The weekday show, which will be renamed so that it can play in other time periods, will continue to be hosted by New York talent Regis Philbin and Kathie Lee Gifford.

The distributors plan to offer it on a cash-plus-barter basis, beginning in fall 1988.

Under his new contract with Buena Vista, Mr. Philbin will no longer host "Regis Philbin's Life Styles" on the Lifetime Cable Network.

Robert Jacquemin, senior vice president of Buena Vista Television, said that although the show will be competing against many strips in daytime next fall, he is nevertheless upbeat about its prospects.

"This show has a long track record of working," said Mr. Jacquemin. He claims that over the past decade, Mr. Philbin has achieved a level of success that few TV personalities have had.

"This is one of those rare opportunities when stations can buy a proven commodity rather than make a speculative purchase based solely on seeing a pilot," Mr. Jacquemin said.

On WABC, "The Morning Show" had grown from a 10 share (percentage of TV sets in use) to a 29 share during the 1986-87 season, making it the winner in its time period.

When Mr. Philbin appeared earlier on KABC-TV from 1979 to 1982, he also won the time period, showing an increase from a 22 share to a 29 share. Mr. Jacquemin is hoping the show will generate a 4 to 5 national rating (percentage of TV homes).

Brooke Bailey Johnson, program director at WABC-TV, said she hopes that Buena Vista can do for Regis Philbin what King World did for Oprah Winfrey. #

Doing it for laughs

Foursome provides TV with canned laughter

By WILLIAM MAHONEY
Staff reporter

HOLLYWOOD—Back in the early days of live television, a comedy punch line that didn't elicit any response from the studio audience couldn't be edited out later.

So a TV pioneer named Charlie Douglass invented something called "The Laugh Box" to add recorded laughter to the program.

Thirty-five years later, a modified version of Mr. Douglass' invention is still used by his son, Bob, and three other men who collectively provide 99 percent of TV's canned laughter.

While the networks do a little in-house "audience augmentation," or "audio sweetening" as it's also called, most of the laugh-track work is carried out by two tiny companies here.

Mr. Douglass is owner-operator of Northridge Electronics. The other three men in the business work at Sound One, which was formed by John Pratt, a former employee of Laugh Box inventor Charlie Douglass.

Mr. Pratt worked for Mr. Douglass for 20 years before breaking away in 1978 to form Sound One. The company is now run by Mr. Pratt's brother, Carroll, who employs two helpers, Craig Porter and Rick Himot.

The two companies don't overtly compete or advertise their services. They gain all of their business by word of mouth.

"Of the four of us, each one has a different technique," Mr. Douglass says.

The experts refer to each other as "the laugh men." When their three-month busy season starts as production picks up in June, they often trade business and refer clients to one another as things get hectic.

The laugh men cart the portable Laugh Box from studio to studio, sometimes doing 20 to 30 shows during 16-hour days as the fall season approaches.

The four are very secretive about the inner workings of the device because they have to build it themselves. There isn't enough of a market to warrant manufacturing such a device, Mr. Douglass explains.

"We play it like a typewriter," he says, pushing certain number-coded keys for certain types of laughter. Keys can be pushed for a giggle or a cough, for example, or for different lengths or intensities of applause and laughter.

His machine has 32 keys in four rows of eight each. It is about 15 inches wide, 20 inches deep and 25 inches high. The device has 50 audio tracks to store many different sounds.

Mr. Douglass is working on a new machine that will be about half of the Laugh Box's size and will have about 72 audio tracks to enable him to store a wider variety of laughs.

When he goes into a session, "the TV show is like a patchwork quilt," Mr. Douglass said, referring to the edited pieces of each program. "We go in to smooth it over."

But the laugh men do more than just add

Wireless cable operators fighting back

By DOUG HALONEN
Staff reporter

WASHINGTON—Wireless cable TV operators are alleging that conventional cable TV interests are hindering their development by blocking access to programming.

And at a convention here last week of the Wireless Cable Association, they unveiled one of their weapons for fighting back.

"I'll do what it takes to bring competition to the cable industry," said Rep. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., who has emerged as the wireless cable industry's leading champion on Capitol Hill.

Rep. Schumer told the 300 in attendance at the convention that he is drafting legislation aimed at curbing cable's power.

The congressman has alleged that the cable industry has been acquiring control of programming "to choke off competition by denying the wireless services the access to the programming." He has asked the Justice Department to conduct an investigation.

"I cannot think of a more clear-cut violation of antitrust," Rep. Schumer says.

He said he has been talking with representatives of the Motion Picture Association of America, which has been in a war of words with cable over which business should be restrained.

Meanwhile, the National Cable Television Association officially had no comment on Rep. Schumer's comments or the wireless cable industry's concerns.

The Wireless Cable Association represents the handful of pioneers currently using microwave frequencies to deliver packages of TV signals to homes.

The Federal Communications Commission paved the way for wireless cable services in 1983 by reallocating eight microwave channels for commercial operations. That technology is known as multi-channel multipoint distribution service.

But now, by using those frequencies and leasing others designated primarily for other uses, it's possible to put together enough spectrum to transmit up to 33 TV signals in some markets, industry representatives said.

Viewers need a special TV antenna and a decoder to receive wireless cable signals.

The conventioners appeared to be particularly concerned that pay-cable services such as HBO, which wireless cable operators believe to be vital to their own programming packages, may refuse to deal with them for competitive reasons.

HBO is owned by Time Inc., which also owns cable multiple system operator American Television and Communications Corp.

Perhaps the most ironic testimonial at the convention was offered by Bob Schmidt, a former NCTA president who has won the right from the Federal Communications Commission to provide four channels of wireless cable service in Los Angeles.

Mr. Schmidt, now an attorney for a Washington law firm, said cable operators had told him they will do "whatever's in their power to keep me out." He declined to reveal which cable operators said that.

Jim Theroux, president of Metro TEN, a company that is offering 12 channels of wireless cable in Cleveland, described another way to fight to get programming.

He said his firm filed an antitrust lawsuit against Showtime, a pay-cable service owned by Viacom International, another cable system operator.

"We sued them . . . and they set-led with us," said Mr. Theroux.

Overall, the state of the industry's business health was unclear from the convention.

Jim Clark, the association's president, said there are about a dozen wireless systems on the air now, including systems in Cleveland, Philadelphia and Milwaukee.

But Mr. Clark said he did not know whether any of the systems are profitable.

Mr. Theroux said Metro TEN had more than 10,000 subscribers, but he declined to comment on whether the system is turning a profit.

It also appears that some cable operators and wireless cable operators are taking more than a casual interest in each other.

For instance, an affiliate of Warner Cable Communications, which provides traditional cable service to Milwaukee, last year bought the 14-channel wireless system serving about 5,000 subscribers there.

Meanwhile, Mr. Theroux said

Metro TEN is seeking a franchise to provide traditional cable TV service to Cleveland areas it can't reach with its wireless service.

One shortcoming of wireless cable technology is that its signals can be blocked by trees and other terrain obstructions that offer little impediment to ordinary broadcast signals.

Mr. Theroux said trees and other obstacles limit his system's coverage to 70 percent of the Cleveland area.

"I've considered opening a dis-tributorship for Agent Orange," quipped Mr. Theroux, in reference to the controversial defoliant used in Vietnam.

Mark Fowler, former chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, told conventioners he thought the future of wireless cable was particularly bright.

"Wireless cable represents the first economically viable competitor to cable, a competitor that to a consumer looks just like cable," Mr. Fowler said. #

CBS pulls upset in Sports Emmy Awards

By RICHARD TEDESCO
Staff reporter

NEW YORK—CBS Sports pulled the upset of the evening at the 1986 National Sports Emmy Awards here last week.

CBS won the award from the National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences for outstanding live sports special with its coverage of the Daytona 500.

It had faced stiff competition that included NBC's World Series coverage; The Kentucky Derby and the baseball league championship series on ABC; and CBS's presentation of the NCAA Basketball Tournament.

Robert Fishman, director of the Daytona 500 broadcast, admitted his surprise, saying he had just told his wife "there was no way" the event would win.

TBS took four awards for its coverage of the 1986 Goodwill Games, including an award for technical innovation recognizing the size of the remote network it created to carry the games back from Moscow and several other European cities.

ABC and NBC each won five Emmys. PBS, Major League Baseball Productions and Pro-Serv Television won one award each.

ABC's "Wide World of Sports" took two awards, for outstanding editing of a series and editing of a special on its 25th anniversary show. The program has won 16 Emmys since it went on the air.

Al Michaels, play-by-play man for ABC's "NFL Monday Night Football," won the award for top sports host. John Madden, CBS's colorful commentator, was the winner of the top analyst award.

In addition to its Daytona 500 coup, CBS took top honors for outstanding live sports series for its NBA coverage.

"It's a sport that was given up for dead," said Ted Shaker, executive producer of CBS's NBC coverage. "We've tried to convey to the American public what a beautiful sport it is to watch."

NBC's awards included recognition for technical teams for the World Series, "Major League Baseball: An Inside Look" and "NFL '86."

Major League Baseball Productions was recognized for videotape editing for its "Light Moments in Sports."

ProServ won for the writing of "A Hard Road To Glory" about U.S. tennis star Arthur Ashe. #

Forecasts shared at cable meet

By JANET STILSON
Staff reporter

NEW YORK—Predictions that the Fox television network will die and commercials will be seen on pay-cable services were voiced during a cable industry luncheon last week.

With Kay Koplovitz, USA Network president and chief executive officer, as moderator, thoughts on TV's future were served up at the National Academy of Cable Programming's fall forum here.

The industry bigwigs who looked into their crystal balls included Frank Biondi, president and chief executive officer of Viacom International; Charles Dolan, chairman and chief executive officer of Cablevision Systems Corp.; Michael Fuchs, chairman and chief executive officer of HBO; and Fred Silverman, president of the Fred Silverman Co.

Although Mr. Silverman was a top-ranking executive at all three broadcast networks before forming his production company, he was no less enthusiastic than his fellow speakers on cable's status.

He noted two favorable trends: the afterlife of cable-originated programming—such as movies and MTV's awards shows—on broadcast television, and the new distribution window created by basic cable networks for recent off-network programs.

When asked whether Fox's television network has a stronger potential than cable services, Mr. Silverman answered: "My guess is the Fox network will fail."

Mr. Biondi's recent move from heading Coca-Cola's TV division to overseeing Viacom has not changed his opinion that it's "somewhat inevitable" pay-cable networks will add commercials.

"The price of the services is too high," Mr. Biondi explained, reiterating a prediction he voiced at last year's Western Cable Show.

"Getting the costs down isn't easy... and I don't see many alternatives other than advertising."

His comments led HBO's Mr. Fuchs to quip that if Viacom's Showtime or The Movie Channel add advertising spots, HBO is interested in buying time.

Also, Mr. Fuchs said the two major factors holding back cable ratings at this point are the cable networks' coverage of the U.S. TV market and publicity of their programming.

Mr. Dolan reserved all opinions concerning system investment in cable services, saying Cablevision is still studying the matter.

But he had much enthusiasm for regional cable networks—particularly his own. He reported Sports-channel New York, started in 1975, is now grossing $100 million. #

Is TV news shallow?

The Gulf war in 90 seconds.
A murder in a nearby town gets half a minute.

The story of a fatal bus accident in Canada is bumped in favor of a lion cub's birth at the zoo.

TV news is selective. Its time is limited. And what it does best is capture moments. The elation of the elected. The downcast of the defeated. The joy on a mother's face when her child is found. The blank stare of a stoned teenager.

Stories with pictures.

Summaries of what matters most.

That's TV news on a daily basis.

But sometimes stations move out of their summarizing role. WPRI-TV, Providence, R.I., and seven other Knight-Ridder television stations spent an entire month this year focusing on one topic: alcohol and drug abuse.

Today, seven out of 10 high school seniors drink. Almost half say they get drunk once a week. Many started at age nine or 10. One out of four smokes pot. And crack use is spreading too fast to quantify.

How do you reach a generation of young people who have been overexposed to hard scare anti-drug campaigns?

WPRI-TV tried humor.

They turned to "Mr. Bill." The clay man of Saturday Night Live fame created by Walter Williams. Mr. Bill is famous for being the quintessential victim. In public service announcements, Mr. Bill was offered drugs and alcohol and steadfastly refused them even as he got dumped on and squashed.

Did these moments of humor work on such a deadly serious topic?

In follow-up interviews, the spots were remembered and talked about by teenagers. They broke through the clutter of messages and got their point across.

WPRI-TV also broadcast its own musical play "None for the Road." Along with a teenage drug and alcohol test and several specials.

In Mobile, Ala., Knight-Ridder's WALA-TV, among other efforts, raised enough funds to keep the Partnership for Youth, an effective anti-drug force in the community, from closing its doors.

WTEN-TV in Albany, N.Y., got a strong response from its request to area high schools to submit their own public service announcements. The station was able to learn exactly how teens communicate with other teenagers and tailored their efforts accordingly.

Knight-Ridder stations in Tucson, Norfolk, Nashville, Oklahoma City and Flint all took on the same topic in a month-long marathon of news specials, editorials and series on the epidemic of addiction that has spread across the country.

It was anything but shallow. But then these are Knight-Ridder television stations.

KNIGHT-RIDDER

We never underestimate the American people.

Knight-Ridder, winner of five Pulitzer Prizes in 1987, is a worldwide communications company with eight television stations, cable systems, business information services and 32 daily newspapers.

Growth of pay-per-view is accelerating

Having conducted an 18-month test in Viacom Cable's Milwaukee system, AT&T expects to roll out its Information Forwarding service nationwide in 1988.

- The lucrative revenue-per-subscriber rates reported by companies such as Cable Value Services, a PPV network owned by General Instruments.

At the National Cable Television Association annual meeting in May, CVS announced it would guarantee systems picking up its service a 150 percent buy rate, which means subscribers able to receive the service would buy an average 1.5 offerings each month.

That breaks down to roughly $6 to $8 per subscriber every 30 days, according to CVS officials.

Promising as PPV executives say this news is, it's still clear that the business is in the beginning stages.

Of the three types of businesses involved in PPV—cable systems, motion picture studios and the PPV networks that function as middlemen—only the cable systems appear to be making significant dollars at this point.

And even at the operator level, the black ink doesn't run across the board.

Charles Dolan, chairman of Cablevision Systems, says his PPV channels probably won't be money-makers until at least 1989 or 1990.

"But it's worth doing because it creates excitement, and you want that liveliness in the system," he says.

Mr. Dolan has opted to program his PPV services on a stand-alone basis, rather than using networks.

But at New York Times Cable, one of the industry's most aggressive PPV proponents, Stephen Rockabrand, director of PPV operations, reports his two stand-alone channels have been profitable since 1985 and account for 11 percent of the company's business.

David Archer, director of business development at another PPV enthusiast, Viacom Cable, says he expects revenue from PPV services will surpass that generated from ad sales in two to three years in his systems.

In contrast, Hollywood executives say PPV revenues are still a paltry contributor to the bottom line of theatrical movies, which average $25 million to produce, market and promote.

Sources say an average hit movie generates about $200,000 in PPV revenues for movie studios, compared with the $10 million that hit movies can draw in sales of home video rights.

But studio executives also note that PPV revenue has jumped about 100 percent over the past year, and shouldn't be underestimated.

The No. 1 box-office grossing studio, Paramount Pictures, views 1987 as a PPV banner year. This is the first year the studio has had titles grossing $1 million retail in PPV.

Paramount's "Crocodile Dundee" will gross at least $1 million in PPV distribution, and the studio anticipates that "Golden Child" and "Star Trek IV" may top that figure as well, according to Alan Cole-Ford, vice president of video distribution at Paramount Pictures Corp.

That top-of-the-heap figure could escalate to $5 million by 1989, he says. That's the year he expects PPV to become a significant revenue contributor to his studio.

But Norman Horowitz, president of MGM/UA Telecommunications, sees no sudden PPV boom ahead.

"It's certainly going to increase" as a revenue source, he says. "But in 1966 Germany was on the verge of getting commercial TV, and it doesn't have it yet."

Currently, only about 5 million households receive PPV on a regular basis, out of a total 10 million homes that have addressable converter boxes capable of descrambling PPV offerings.

That compares with roughly 43.5 million basic cable households and 88.6 million total TV households in the United States, according to Nielsen Media Research.

PPV executives take those figures as a sign of the industry's enormous potential, and point specifically to the 10-year boom that transformed home video from a novelty into a $7 billion-a-year business.

"I don't see any reason why we won't experience the (home) video growth curve," says Scott Kurnit, president of Viacom International's Viewer's Choice. #

NATPE conference lineup set

Other highlights on the tentative schedule include:

Katharine Graham, president of the Washington Post Co., the corporate parent of the Post-Newsweek Stations, will keynote the opening breakfast session on Feb. 25. It will be produced by Rick Reeves, program director at WCPO-TV in Cincinnati. That day's luncheon will feature remarks by station owner George Gillett of The Gillett Group.

TV journalist Linda Ellerbee will moderate a Feb. 27 general session titled "The Next 25 Years for Society and TV," to be produced by Pat Patton, program director at KMBC-TV in Kansas City.

Scheduled panelists include Martin I. Horn of Needham & Harper, Chicago; Paul Lindberg of ASI Research, Los Angeles; Paul Isaacson of Young & Rubicam, New York; Robert Coen of McCann Erickson, New York; and Daniel Gold of Knight-Ridder, Miami.

Nick Freeman, program director at KIRO-TV in Seattle, will produce and moderate a general session Feb. 28 dubbed "Sports Programming: Is Free TV Being Priced Out of the Market?" Speakers will include Vince Baressi of KTXH-TV in Houston; Gerry Walsh of WLVI-TV in Boston; Bill Grimes of ESPN; and Bob Wussler of Turner Broadcasting.

On Feb. 25, Multimedia's Bruce Johansen and Lorimar's Michael Solomon will moderate an international seminar on global finance. The session is slated to include James Gatwood, chairman of Television South; Ricardo Tozzi, production president of the Belusconi Group/ReteEuropa; Michael Grade of the BBC; Robert Maxwell of TFI; and Klaus Hallig of West Germany's Beta-Taurus.

Syndicated talk show host Wil Shriner will host the annual Iris Awards for programing excellence Feb. 28 in Houston's Music Hall. #

ONLY ONE COMPETITOR IS ENTERED IN EVERY EVENT IN THE '88 WINTER GAMES.

When ABC-TV broadcasts the 1988 Winter Games, they'll need a videotape that's a tough competitor. That's why ABC chose Fuji H621E 1-inch videotape and H521EBR 3/4-inch videocassettes.

Fuji tape is tough enough to survive extreme weather conditions. It's also reliable, pass after pass.

And with Fuji, ABC will not only get a reliable tape, they'll get a team of service professionals who will be right there when they need them.

It's the same kind of service you can expect when you select Fuji as your videotape.

Because we know that to win in this business, you've got to be on top of your game.

Broadcast TV

The National Association of Broadcasters and 10 other national media organizations have sent a letter to all members of Congress urging them to oppose any further attempts at codifying the fairness doctrine. Joining the NAB were American Newspaper Publishers Association, American Society of Newspaper Editors, American Women in Radio and Television, Freedom of Expression Foundation, Magazine Publishers Association, National Broadcast Editorial Association, Radio-Television News Directors Association, Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press, Society of Professional Journalists/Sigma Delta Chi and Women in Communications.

"The Fourth Annual Television Academy Hall of Fame" will air Nov. 30 on Fox Broadcasting Co. This year's inductees will be Johnny Carson, Jacques Cousteau, Leonard Goldenson, Jim Henson, Bob Hope, Eric Sevareid and the late Ernie Kovacs. Taping of the event will take place Nov. 15 at the Fox studios.

Actress Juliet Prowse suffered a minor injury when she was bitten in the neck last week by a leopard during rehearsals for CBS's upcoming "Circus of the Stars," which will air in December. Ms. Prowse received five stitches for two puncture wounds near her carotid artery after the Sept. 28 attack. The 80-pound leopard, Sheila, was one of five uncaged leopards involved in rehearsal at the time. The animal unexpectedly lunged at Ms. Prowse.

Cable TV

Cable ratings continued to climb and broadcast affiliate numbers continued to slip in August, according to the Cabletelevision Advertising Bureau's analysis of the Nielsen Cable Status Report. Among its findings, the CAB reports ad-supported cable networks' ratings rose 40 percent and pay cable 18 percent on a 24-hour basis. The bureau says network affiliate ratings declined 8 percent in the same time period.

Nick at Nite will premiere "Rowan & Martin's Laugh-In" tonight. The program, acquired from Lorimar Syndication, will appear Monday through Friday at 10 p.m. (ET) and weekends at 8 p.m. "Laugh-In" originally appeared on NBC from 1968 to 1973. Nick at Nite is an MTV Networks service.

Group W Satellite Communications will provide transmission services for the Pay Per View Network in a multimillion dollar, six-year deal. PPVN, a joint venture of ATC Corp., Continental Cablevision, Cox Communications, Telecable Corp. and Newhouse Broadcasting, plans to start its movie service by year's end. PPVN also announced it has established administrative offices in Manhattan. The programing functions will be out of Los Angeles.

CNN and USA Today will team up in a polling effort for the 1988 election campaign. Polling will be done by the Gordon Black Corp. Results will be released on CNN's "Inside Politics '88," which debuts Nov. 2.

Home video

International Broadcast Systems has obtained overseas broadcast and home video distribution rights for "Captain Power and the Soldiers of the Future," plus home video and record album rights for "Barbie and the Rockers." The Dallas-based company is distributing half-hour episodes of the two new children's programs, both produced by Mattel.

Tony Douglass, former manager of promotions for Karl-Lorimar Home Video, has formed a new video production and marketing company, OVC Corp. The initial projects for the company, which is based in Costa Mesa, Calif., include a 3-D video, four original videos and a travel show.

Networks reported the signing of four radio stations for its satellite-delivered "Wave" format of New Age music. At the recent "Radio '87" convention in Anaheim, Calif., KZZC-FM in Kansas City became the first "Wave" affiliate. The station changed its call letters to KCWV on Sept. 24. In addition, three Gannett radio stations have agreed to take the new format: KSWV-FM in San Diego (formerly KSDO); KNUA-FM in Seattle (formerly KHIT); and KOAI-FM in Dallas (formerly KTKS).

Westfield, N.J.-based Statistical Research is adding several enhancements to its RADAR report of radio network ratings. In November, the research firm will increase its RADAR sample to 12,000 respondents, up from 8,000. SRI will continue to take an average of two consecutive six-month survey periods to produce network audience data and commercial clearance information, but will now use only the most recent six-month period for publishing lists of network affiliates. Another change in clearance information involves the selection of specific weeks for which clearances are processed. SRI will change its selection policy to include 12 possible weeks spread over six months, officials said.

Folsom Radio Ltd., owner of KIOQ-AM in Sacramento, Calif., has shut down the station in preparation for the launch of a new station in late November. Officials say the station, which broadcasts at 1030 AM, will return with "a unique blend of music and information" and new call letters. The station is off the air so the owners can make technical improvements in the station's transmitting power that would expand its coverage area.

Sports

Taking advantage of the programming gaps created by the NFL players' strike, Orbis Communications is offering a one-hour special, "Distant Replay." The program is being offered on a cash-only basis and has a window of Oct. 4 to Jan. 31, 1988. Hosted by journalist Dick Schapp and former Green Bay Packer Jerry Kramer, authors of the best-selling sports book, "Instant Replay," the program looks at the first Super Bowl in 1967.

"Countdown to '88, the Seoul Games," a weekly pre-Summer Olympics limited series offered by Garland, Texas-based ProServ Television, is set to air on several NBC stations, including WNBC-TV in New York; WMAQ-TV in Chicago; KSDK-TV in St. Louis; and WLWT-TV in Cincinnati. The weekly half-hour show begins the weekend of March 26, 1988, and ends the weekend of Sept. 11, 1988. ProServ is also offering 11 weeks of pre-Winter Olympics coverage, beginning Nov. 28.

Syndication

Syndicated talk show host Phil Donahue has offered the Democratic presidential candidates an absolutely free, unedited forum to talk among themselves. Penny Rotheiser, publicist for "Donahue," said the producers hope to tape the show in Washington sometime this week. "There's been all this talk about media interruption. We think it will be interesting to see how they do without it," Ms. Rotheiser said. "Phil calls it the ultimate in deregulation." Mr. Donahue would appear for only 30 seconds to open the show and 30 seconds to close the show. The 90 minutes of free-wheeling discussion would be cut into two one-hour shows.

Select Media Communications, the New York-based syndicator known for its nationally distributed vignette programing, will continue to market "Intermission," a short-form movie trivia feature designed to be aired during a TV station's movie broadcasts. Select Media renewed the feature for a second year on Sept. 28. Thirty seconds in length with a 30-second commercial, "Intermission" is aired on stations representing 86 percent of the country, including KTLA-TV in Los Angeles and WPWR-TV in Chicago.

New York-based Multimedia Entertainment is preparing a new game show, "Sweethearts," hosted by Charles Nelson Reilly. Co-produced by Multimedia and Richard Reid Productions, "Sweethearts" is scheduled to premiere in September 1988. The show will involve a panel of celebrities who will have to guess which couples appearing on the show are real "sweethearts" and which aren't.

"Tales From the Darkside" began its fourth season on the air in first-run syndication the week of Sept. 21, according to Laurel Entertainment. The series airs on more than 100 U.S. TV stations.

MTM Distribution has announced that "Rumors," its initial first-run syndicated program offering, will be produced for a September 1988 debut in association with Procter & Gamble, Three B Productions and Carson Productions. The latter company will clear one minute of national ad time for each half-hour episode of the cash-barter strip, which is proposed for fringe, access and late-night time periods. The reality-based series will check out widespread rumors and mysteries through five bureaus, with the results reported by co-hosts in Hollywood and New York.

American Film Technologies last week said it will colorize "Sands of Iwo Jima," the 1949 film starring John Wayne, for syndication by Republic Pictures Corp. The film will be available next spring. AFT is a new player in the colorization business. The program will be offered on a barter basis.

The Disney Channel has purchased "Risking It All," a 26-part adventure series hosted by Richard Crenna, and 13 new episodes of "Orphans of the Wild" from WesternWorld Television. The syndicator has also entered into a program development deal with The Discovery Channel for a one-hour documentary, "Crocodiles."

Other

Playboy Enterprises founder and Chairman Hugh Hefner has been honored by the Southern California Cable Association for his "continued defense and support" of the First Amendment. The SCCA annually honors an individual or group for "outstanding contributions to the cable industry." Playboy Video Corp. became a national cable TV programmer in 1982.

MCA TV International has completed a deal with Channel 10 in Perth, Australia involving about 1,500 hours of TV series, miniseries and specials, plus about 200 feature films, according to Colin Davis, MCA TV International president. Channel 10 is scheduled to begin operations in March 1988 as the first major commercial TV station to be licensed in Australia in 20 years.#

CBS ponders problem of too much cash

If you've been worried about CBS lately, you can relax. Sure, CBS's network TV ratings haven't been spectacular. And, true, a continuation of the NFL players' strike won't help. But the big problem that CBS might be facing in the months ahead is what to do with excess cash.

For those who read the financial news once every few weeks, reports of CBS's potential embarrassment of riches might come as a surprise. It wasn't long ago that Wall Street was bemoaning a supposedly weak TV ad market—so weak that the CBS TV network was going to report a loss for 1987.

While Wall Street never panicked over those reports, it nonetheless took them seriously. And for good reason. It's not easy to lose money in the network TV business.

Complain all you want to about videocassette recorders and cable TV and too much sports, but in the past a TV network has had to be pretty darned bad to lose money.

But it looks like things are getting back to normal. Analysts now expect CBS-TV to report a profit this year, thanks to cost cuts and a rise in demand for ad time.

CBS's latest worries result from the dire threat of Sony practically forcing CBS to sell its record division. The threat comes from the prospect of an offer just too juicy to pass up.

Obviously, Wall Street has been taking the threat pretty seriously, because CBS stock has been rising again lately—up to about $215 a share on the New York Stock Exchange.

The price has been hovering near the 52-week high after dipping to about $121 a share in the past 12 months.

The demand for CBS stock comes as many analysts have been raising their earnings estimates for the company. Most estimates project CBS earnings at about $9.25 a share this year, up from $7.52 in 1986. For next year, the consensus is that CBS will earn somewhere around $13 a share.

While earnings estimates have been going up, the demand for CBS stock results more from speculation about CBS Records. At press time, CBS was considering Sony's offer to purchase the records division for something more than most analysts figure it's worth.

Estimates varied as to what Sony was offering, but it was generally agreed that the figure was at least $2 billion. While the division did report profits of $162 million in 1986, most analysts agreed that CBS was going to have trouble walking away from such an offer.

In fact, the prospect was that CBS's stock might just keep rising if such an offer was made.

"If they got over $2 billion, the market would view that very favorably and the stock would probably respond accordingly," says Michael Arends, associate director of research for Kemper Financial Services in Chicago.

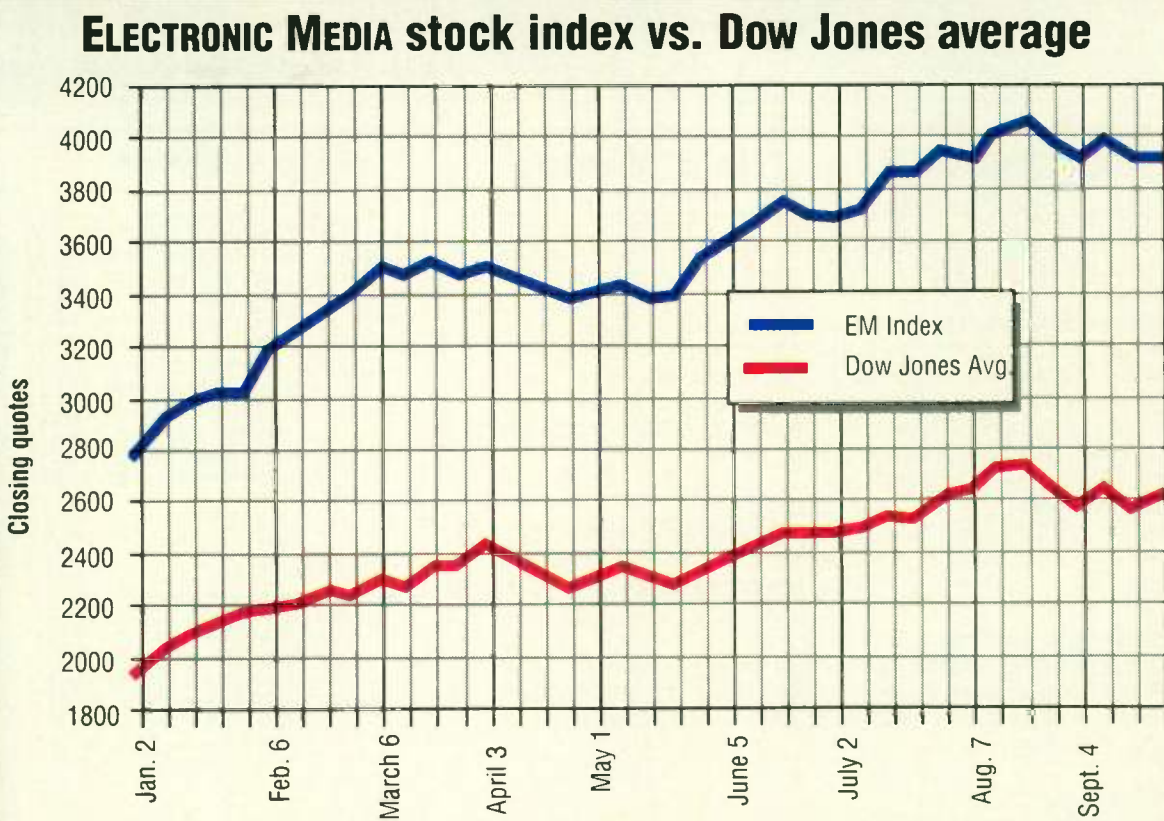

Mr. Arends estimates that the division will earn about $175

British firms to finance Telecom's TV projects

By RICHARD MAHLER
Los Angeles bureau chief

LOS ANGELES—Telecom Entertainment has lined up British financing for the co-production of a number of programs for the next two TV seasons, including network miniseries and made-for-TV movies.

The production company has $20 million in commitments for programming from 1987 to 1989 from several unspecified London-based TV companies. Telecom says the financial backing is its largest ever.

Telecom is developing projects that can be simultaneously distributed in the United Kingdom and the United States, as well as other countries.

Proposed shows in various stages of development include:

- "Love and Terror," an hour-long CBS late-night series from Art Wallace, creator of the long-running ABC daytime serial, "Dark Shadows."

- "The Hiding of Anne Frank," a two-hour made-for-TV movie for CBS. The General Foods Golden Showcase presentation is written by William Hanley, from the book by Meip Geis. It will begin filming Oct. 20 in Holland.

- "Breaking Home Ties," a two-hour made-for-TV film starring Eva Marie Saint and Jason Robards, currently in production. John Wilder wrote the story, based on a Norman Rockwell illustration.

- "Are You Lonesome Tonight," a four-hour miniseries for NBC based on Lucy deBarbin's story of her romance with Elvis Presley.

- An additional miniseries and made-for-TV movie for CBS, plus a two-hour film for NBC.

Telecom recently relocated here from New York, although it will still maintain an office in New York and in London. The British office will handle the international co-ventures, while the office here deals with the American creative community. #

Home Shopping Network requests investigations

CLEARWATER, FLA.—The Home Shopping Network here has asked the Securities and Exchange Commission and the American Stock Exchange to investigate the source of "false and misleading rumors" concerning its business and financial conditions, which may have manipulated the erratic pricing of its stock this year. HSN officials contend their company is in an unprecedented position of financial strength.

In other news, HSN has decided not to complete the proposed acquisition of Baltimore Federal Financial.

OAKLAND, CALIF.—Family Stations Inc. here has sold KEBR-FM in Sacramento, Calif., to Chicago-based Duchossois Communications Co. for $7.4 million. Family Stations, a non-profit station group, owns 25 FM stations, five AM stations and KFTL-TV in Stockton, Calif. Duchossois owns KDSM-TV in Des Moines, Iowa and three AM/FM outlets.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

ENGLEWOOD, COLO.—Jones Intercable here has sold cable TV systems in Illinois, Minnesota and Maryland to Cable TV Fund 14-A Ltd., a limited partnership of which Jones is general partner. The deal was valued at about $45 million.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.—Busse Broadcasting Corp. has acquired Kalamazoo's WWMT-TV, one of five TV stations recently transferred to Busse from Nashville, Tenn.-based Gillett Holdings.

LOS ANGELES—New World Entertainment here last week dropped its bid for Kenner Parker Toys that was made through its Marvel Entertainment Group subsidiary. New World had bid $47 a share for the toymaker, which earlier had accepted a bid from Tonka Corp. for $51 a share, or $622 million. #

Most of TV's laugh tracks made by 2 tiny companies laughter to a show, he says. They also add ambience and, in some cases, may actually have to tone down laughter.

Sometimes a member of a studio audience may have an annoying laugh that has to be edited out, he explains.

There can be as many as 100 to 150 laughs in a typical half-hour sitcom, Mr. Douglass says, and it may take him as many as 50 to 60 hours to put the right kinds of laughs on tape before he goes into a session. Different shows require different types of laughter, he says, either because of the size of the studio or the age group of a particular audience.

The laughs for the tracks in the laugh box may be from other studio sessions of the same show or from different shows, as long as the laughs are compatible.

"The more shows we have, the better," explains Mr. Douglass. He says the laugh men keep recordings of edited-out material from shows because "sometimes you can mix and match."

While videotape studios charge about $270 per hour, the laugh men charge about $140 to $160 an hour to add laughter to shows. However, "we have a lot of dead time," Mr. Douglass says, citing the seasonal aspect of the business.

On the average, the laugh men charge about $250 to $400 to do a half-hour show, depending on the program, he said.

This season, each of the networks have new comedies that don't use laugh tracks or even studio audiences. NBC's "The Days and Nights of Molly Dodd," ABC's "The Slap Maxwell Story" and CBS's "Frank's Place" have no laughter. Jay Tarses, who produces "Molly Dodd" and "Slap Maxwell," said of laugh tracks: "I hate them. I think they're offensive. I don't think people need to be told when to laugh."

But Mr. Douglass likens a TV comedy without a laugh track to viewing a film in an empty theater. He says a laugh track creates the same kind of "contagious laughter" experienced in a crowded theater.

And the laugh man doesn't see any trend away from recorded laughter. He points out that about 90 percent of comedy shows on TV have been "sweetened" with recorded laughter.

In anticipation of an increased work load, he is planning to double the size of his work force—to two.#

CBS pondering problem of having too much cash

million this year, although he says the figure depends on the success of albums by Bruce Springsteen and Michael Jackson.

Mr. Arends, who was among institutional analysts who attended a presentation by CBS majority stockholder Laurence Tisch recently, said CBS would have two main immediate options if it sold the division.

CBS could buy another TV station to bring its coverage of U.S. TV households closer to the 25 percent limit. However, says Mr. Arends, the current price of TV stations seems to make such a purchase unlikely.

"The second option would be to replace the records division with another leg on the stool—a related media or entertainment business," says Mr. Arends. "We could see a major acquisition."

Most analysts believe that Mr. Tisch is sincere when he says he's not anxious to sell the business. But no one doubts that he'll urge the CBS board to approve a sale if the price is right.

"It might be a good time to sell because they might have some non-recurring earnings, because Michael Jackson has presold 2.5 million albums even though he got lousy reviews," says Scott Black, who in the past has bought CBS shares for Boston's Delphi Management.

Just what the right price would be is subject to controversy on Wall Street, but Alan Gottesman, media analyst for L.F. Rothschild, says: "I'd have to re-evaluate my opinion of CBS management if this thing were to go for less than $2.5 billion."

Mr. Gottesman says that the division may be worth that much or more to Sony because of Sony's somewhat tenuous position as a pioneer in the field of digital audio tape recorders. "Sony pioneered the videotape business and wound up a loser because its Beta format became an orphan in the market," he says. "There was nothing intrinsically better about the VHS format, but another form of software simply became more popular."

"Having invented the market and getting creamed, I think Sony decided never to let that happen again. So now the next big consumer electronic product is digital audio tape, but the record companies don't want to play along. So Sony may think that the only way to solve the problem is to buy CBS Records and supply the software itself."

Adds Mr. Gottesman: "From CBS's point of view, it's never a trick to sell an asset for what it's worth. There's no incentive to do that, either, because the one thing that CBS doesn't need at the moment is cash."

"But if somebody offered them more than it's worth, they'd take the money. That's what they did with their (Ziff-Davis) magazine business. It's a case of heads they win, tails they don't lose."#

Advertisers pull out of NFL games

 scramble" with advertisers opting out of NFL games or looking for positions later in the season.
 "I think the ratings are going to be down substantially," said Mr. Von Urff. "There's a bit of a curiosity factor, that's going to be gone by Sunday afternoon."

NBC, like ABC and CBS, would not make any ratings projections for the replacement games.
 "We're not expecting NFL ratings for these games," said Kevin Monaghan, NBC director of sports information. "We're more realistic than that."
 CBS declined comment on ratings expectations for the regional double-header of six games it had scheduled.
 Neal Pilson, president of CBS Sports, declined to speculate on whether CBS would carry the replacement games beyond the first week.
 But earlier, one CBS executive said: "We're going to carry the games."
 CBS has made no further inquiries about carrying additional College Football Association games, said Chuck Neinas, CFA executive director. #

NFL's future on radio uncertain

By ADAM BUCKMAN
 Staff reporter

NEW YORK—Radio network and station executives last week were non-committal about their plans to continue to air the NFL's so-called "scab games" if the players' strike continues.
 All stations and networks contacted by ELECTRONIC MEDIA last week planned to air the first group of substitute games yesterday and tonight.
 But future plans are contingent on the quality of the substitute games and the size of the listening audience drawn by the first contests, some radio executives said.
 Some stations are contractually obligated to carry the substitute games, which feature backup players hired to work during the strike.
 "If the Chicago Bears organization fields a team and plays a game, we have to carry it," said Wayne Vriesman, vice president and station manager of Chicago's WGN-AM.
 At WABC-AM in New York, President and General Manager James Haviland said his station would air New York Jets replacement games regardless of any contractual obligations.
 "I haven't looked at the contract," Mr. Haviland said.
 "What's more important is that I have a business relationship with the Jets to preserve."
 Other officials said they would carry the first round of the substitute games because the public's curiosity about the contests seems strong.

 "At least in the first week, I think there's going to be considerable interest," said Robert Hosking, president of the CBS Radio Division.
 Besides the CBS Radio Network, Mutual Broadcasting System officials confirmed they plan to air the substitute NFL games. Mutual owns the rights to air two NFL games every Sunday during the season.
 But whether listener interest in substitute games will extend beyond the first week is uncertain.
 "If (the strike) continues, I'd rather they do no games at all than scab games," said Bob Abernethy, vice president and general manager of Boston's WHDH-AM, which recently began its first season of New England Patriots broadcasts.
 Radio executives said the football strike would not hurt their profitability unless it continues a few weeks longer.
 "If it goes on a long time, it will hurt us a great deal," said CBS's Mr. Hosking.
 He is particularly disappointed because CBS Radio Network's NFL broadcasts "were going to be more profitable than we budgeted." CBS paid $17 million last spring for three years of rights to broadcast Sunday night and Monday night games on the radio network.
 Michael Ewing, vice president and general manager of KRLD-AM in Dallas, said: "We're fans, too. We'd like to see this thing settled."
 KRLD, which broadcasts the Dallas Cowboys, is the flagship station of the Dallas Cowboys Radio Network, the nation's largest. The Cowboys network has nearly 200 affiliates, including 20 Spanish-language outlets.

 "We're just sitting here trying to plot strategy, and that's very hard when you don't know what's going on," said Gene Ashcraft, vice president and general manager of the Texas State Networks, which operates the Dallas Cowboys Radio Network.
 Stations and networks were beginning to experience advertiser fallout over the strike last week.
 Managers reported that companies with strong ties to labor unions were the first advertisers to express concern about advertising during substitute games.
 Some of those advertisers have canceled their commercials until the strike is settled, radio managers said.
 In response, some radio outlets were offering advertisers "bonus" commercials in other dayparts as an incentive for continuing to air commercials during substitute games.
 When advertisers begin asking for "relief" in the form of refunds or bonuses, "we'll ask for relief from our rights contract," said Art Caruso, president and general manager of Cleveland's WWWE-AM, which carries the Cleveland Browns.
 Other radio executives said they would seek a reduction in their rights fees if the strike drags on long enough to cripple their ability to profit from the season.
 Or, it may be possible that networks or stations could negotiate to get an extension of their contract to make up for the lost games. After the NFL strike in 1982, CBS Radio Network got an extra year of rights added to its contract. #

'Geraldo!' defies the critics and gains viewers

 ges. "He does extraordinary numbers, and that's something daytime TV badly needs."
 "The critics be damned," adds Darla Ellis, program director of ABC affiliate KUSA-TV in Denver. "I don't think it matters what they think. 'Geraldo!' is doing even better than I expected, and I'm thrilled and delighted."
 The difference in opinion over Mr. Rivera's style is one of television's great paradoxes: What is it that makes critics scorn Mr. Rivera and viewers admire him?
 Mr. Rivera believes his popularity is based on his passionate willingness to become involved emotionally, and sometimes physically, in the topics he covers.
 "I love it that I'm seen as a court of last resort or as an ombudsman," he says. "I get thousands of letters of support."
 One station publicist who's worked frequently with Mr. Rivera says he's constantly besieged by "blue-collar workers and people on the street who praise his 'sticking up for the little guy.'"
 Yet most TV critics have greeted his do-gooder act with scorn.
 At the Los Angeles Herald Examiner, critic David Gritten recently launched a now-familiar attack of Mr. Rivera's style by claiming his questions are always couched "in terms that invite screaming tabloid-style headlines."
 Howard Rosenberg, TV critic for the Los Angeles Times, once referred to Mr. Rivera in a review as "the human drug, injected into your home like a rusty needle."
 Mr. Rivera says he doesn't expect to get good reviews and he admits that he's "not perfect. I've made mistakes. But I don't act and I don't think I overplay. My emotions are sincere."
 "On and off camera, injustice makes me angry. I tend to react compassionately to victims and understandingly, passionately to villains and thieves," he says.
 His show features controversial topics that seem destined to produce strong opinions, whether positive or

'I've made mistakes. But I don't act and I don't think I overplay. My emotions are sincere.'
 —Geraldo Rivera

negative.
 During the first "Geraldo!" show, which focused on mental retardation, Mr. Rivera showed footage from his days as a young reporter at WABC-TV. That was where he exposed the overcrowded Willowbrook State School for Children, one of his most famous stories.
 After running the tape, Mr. Rivera wiped his eyes and said the scenes still affect him after all these years.
 He has tackled AIDS, racism and bias against female crime victims, the latter of which included an interview with Marla Hanson, a model and victim of a slash attack.
 "The critics tend to be intolerant of mavericks," says Mr. Rivera, responding to the volley of harsh reviews his new program has received.
 "They are unforgiving of people who break the mold. But I've always gotten solace from the viewers, and they're the ones who count."
 And that count is off to a solid start. For the week of Sept. 21, according to A.C. Nielsen Co. reports from the 13 overnight markets, "Geraldo!" drew a 4.2 rating (percentage of TV homes).

The show still trails "Oprah Winfrey," which got a 9.2 rating for that week, and "Donahue" with a 6.2, but it placed ahead of another talk-show newcomer, "The Wil Shriner Show," which pulled a 2.1.
 "Geraldo!" was first in its time period in Atlanta, Denver and Miami, with numbers that were higher than those attained by "Oprah" in that show's national debut last September.
 "Geraldo!" also won its time period in Detroit and San Francisco, though it took a beating in New York with a 1.5 on WWOR-TV.
 The show, produced by Mr. Rivera and Tribune Entertainment, is taped in New York and other cities for distribution to 94 stations.
 Sheldon Cooper, president of Tribune Entertainment, says, "He's an activist reporter and that's what viewers like. He's someone the press likes to go at, and I don't think that's bad as long as they're not hitting him just to be hitting him."
 Mr. Rivera long has cast himself as a champion of the causes of the meek.
 After a brief stint as a poverty lawyer on the Lower East Side of

New York, he joined WABC-TV in that city in 1970 as a specialist in social-cause stories.
 After becoming a local star, he jumped to ABC in 1974 as host of "Good Night America," then later joined the network's "20/20" in 1978.
 But he left that program after what he said was a dispute over the cancellation of a segment regarding Marilyn Monroe's relationship with the Kennedys. ABC said he resigned, but it didn't provide an explanation.
 Last year, his syndicated special "The Mystery of Al Capone's Vaults" produced an empty vault but a record in ratings.
 His plan for a syndicated talk show was bypassed by King World, then picked up by Tribune Entertainment.
 Mr. Rivera's activism can create controversy, as it did after he joined law enforcement officials for live, on-air drug busts in the syndicated special, "American Vice: The Doping of a Nation."
 Several lawsuits were threatened by those arrested, and one woman actually went to court in a case that was eventually dropped.

 For "Geraldo!," attorneys stand by to scrutinize each show for potential legal problems.
 Meanwhile, station officials are sticking up for Mr. Rivera and say the critical attacks on him appear to have no negative impact on viewers.
 When KTLA, a Tribune-owned independent in Los Angeles, began airing "Geraldo!" earlier this month, it captured its largest audience in years for the 9 a.m.-to-10 a.m. hour.
 KTLA's 4 rating, 16 share (percentage of sets in use) was eclipsed only by KABC's in-house talk show, "AM Los Angeles."
 "The critics seem to be behind the times," says KTLA's Mr. Bell. "Geraldo is an outsider, a Puerto Rican Jew who uses the medium in non-traditional ways. The audience likes a maverick who's not afraid to be unpopular with the establishment."
 But it remains to be seen whether Mr. Rivera's solid ratings will continue.
 At some stations, the ratings have trailed off a bit. For example, on KTLA the show averaged a 2.6 rating during the week of Sept. 21.
 Also, some station executives report that their ratings rise and fall depending on each episode's topic.
 Mr. Rivera prefers not to compare himself to Oprah Winfrey or Phil Donahue, the returning daytime talk show hosts who've lured big audiences with their provocative audience-participation programs.
 "I think of myself as having the style of (ABC-TV's 'Nightline' host) Ted Koppel and the audience of Phil Donahue," Mr. Rivera says.
 "I think daytime audiences have been low-balled in terms of topics. I can't be a soap opera or a Chippendale interviewer; I need an issue."
 He also says he isn't worried about running out of hot topics.
 "My viewers are people who are frustrated with not having a specific vehicle on television for dealing with what they regard as very real problems," Mr. Rivera says.
 "I like to use TV to effect positive social change, and I think you're seeing people respond to that." #

Court ruling on kids' shows heartens advocacy groups

By DOUG HALONEN
Staff reporter

WASHINGTON—The future of children's TV shows that revolve around a sponsor's toys, which have been criticized as "program-length commercials," may be in jeopardy.

At least that's the way children's advocates are hoping the chips will fall in the aftermath of a federal appeals court decision last week that threw out another children's TV ruling by the Federal Communications Commission.

This time around, the court junked an FCC ruling that would have relieved broadcasters of the obligation to disclose on the air the identity of toy manufacturers who sponsor product-based kids shows.

"We hope it will go a long way toward eliminating the exploitation of the child audience," said Frank Orme, president of the National Association for Better Broadcasting, a Los Angeles-based media watchdog group that prompted the court's action.

"I think it's a big victory," added Peggy Charren, president of Action for Children's Television.

But others seemed to believe that the watchdog groups might be making too much out of the case.

Barry Umansky, deputy general counsel for the National Association of Broadcasters, for instance, said an "easy cure" for the ruling would be to provide proper sponsorship identification for that sort of programing.

Said Bill Johnson, deputy chief of the FCC's Mass Media Bureau: "On the surface, it appears to be a mechanical thing, but there may be more to it."

Ms. Charren said the case can be read to suggest that the more than 70 programs designed to sell toys are commercials.

ACT is supporting legislation that would force the FCC to reimpose limits on the amount of commercials in children's programing.

In the court case, the NABB's complaint focused on "He-Man and the Masters of the Universe," a cartoon show produced by toy manufacturer Mattel and Group W Productions. The show was made available to stations on a barter basis.

NABB contended that the law required stations to identify Mattel's sponsorship of the programing, which revolves around Mattel toys. But the FCC ruled against the association, thereby prompting the lawsuit.

In an opinion written by Judge Spottswood Robinson, the appellate court held the agency's interpretation of the law "plainly conflicts with the unambiguously expressed intent of Congress."

Earlier this year, a different group of judges on the same court struck down an FCC decision abolishing limits on the amount of advertising permitted on children's television.

An FCC source said the agency had been hoping to address the latter case next month but that the court's new rejection could throw things off track. #

Morning show on CBS to seek middle ground

"I think many affiliates are hoping we're not back where we started a year ago when the news division had a hard news broadcast in the 7 a.m.-to-9 a.m. time slot that didn't work," said Paul Raymon, vice president and general manager of WAGA-TV, the CBS affiliate in Atlanta.

"I think most of us would be happy with a program that isn't extreme in one direction or another."

Though "The Morning Program" has been modestly profitable and attracted new advertisers to the daypart, it garnered record low ratings and affiliate ire for being too lightweight.

The signing of Ms. Sullivan, most recently a substitute host on ABC's "Good Morning America" and host of the network's "Health Show," is regarded as a key factor in CBS being able to produce a more traditional and competitive morning show.

However, because the new two-hour morning broadcast will be designed along the lines of NBC's "Today" and ABC's "Good Morning America," CBS officials say it's unlikely the network will lose any of the expanded viewer demographics and advertisers it has gained in that daypart.

"Morning Program" hosts Rolland Smith and Mariette Hartley will depart after the show's final broadcast Nov. 27. Both hosts said they regretted the show's cancellation and that they had given it their best shot.

Ms. Sullivan, in addition to her morning news duties, is expected to serve as a substitute for "CBS Evening News" anchor Dan Rather.

Last week, Ms. Sullivan, who is expected to make at least $500,000 annually for three years, telephoned CBS affiliate chairman Phil Jones to assure station executives of her commitment to the new show.

Mr. Stringer last week said he already has discussed the second co-hosting role with a number of prospects both inside and outside of CBS.

"I believe 50 to 60 percent of a show's appeal depends on getting just the right anchor combination," he said.

Veteran CBS News correspondents, including Charles Osgood, Bob Schieffer, Charles Kuralt and "Nightwatch" anchor Charlie Rose, are among those being considered, insiders said.

KATHLEEN SULLIVAN
Joining new CBS program

Mr. Stringer said some of the current morning contributors have been asked to stay for the new show. They include weather forecaster Mark McEwen, medical reporter Bob Arnott, consumer reporter Erin Moriarty and business reporter Robert Krulwich.

David Corvo, executive producer of "The CBS Morning News," which will continue as a straight hard news show from 6 a.m. to 7 a.m., will take on the added duties of executive producer of the new two-hour morning news program.

Faith Daniels, anchor of the early morning newscast, and Mr. Schieffer are top contenders to anchor the hard news segments of the new two-hour morning program, insiders said.

Bob Shanks, executive producer of "The Morning Program" since its inception last January, will return to independent production.

At least half of the current staff of 40 on "The Morning Program" are expected to be incorporated into a new staff of about 50, sources said.

A CBS official said the Nov. 30 starting date is a function of "the availability of talent and how quickly we can pull together a new show."

However, the network appeared to be attempting to circumvent plans by some affiliates to pre-empt the 7 a.m.-to-9 a.m. network programing early next year with syndicated and local programing of their own if "The Morning Program" continued to falter. #

Hospital chain challenging 'St. Elsewhere'

NBC, which earlier had offered to air the advisory, did so at the tail end of last week's episode.

But that disclaimer alone doesn't satisfy Humana, said James Cox, a Louisville attorney representing Humana in the case.

While Humana chose not to appeal the ruling when it came down Wednesday evening, it is reopening the matter in a Louisville federal court on Thursday. Humana plans to press its trademark infringement case, as well as other charges of unfair competition and interference with the right of publicity.

Mr. Cox said his firm was still assessing what damage Humana's reputation may have suffered and is considering going after NBC for damages for an unspecified amount.

Ric Cusick, a Louisville attorney representing NBC, agreed it was very possible that Humana would seek cash from the company.

He wouldn't discuss any other details of the case.

In "St. Elsewhere," Ecumena is depicted as a greedy, heartless organization which comes to the rescue of the financially troubled St. Eligius teaching hospital in Boston.

Mr. Cox said there were many confusing similarities between the fictional Ecumena and Humana, which runs teaching hospitals.

For example, the typeface and blue and white logos of both organizations are strikingly similar, he said.

And Ecumena, like the real Humana, is renovating its hospitals and installing artificial heart transplant units, he said.

Mr. Cox also said there was a startling similarity between the names of the chairman of the board of Ecumena—Wendell Collins—and Humana President Wendell Cherry.

At NBC, Curt Block, the network's vice president of media relations, would not comment on what defense NBC would take in court this week.

Mr. Block said that viewer reaction to last week's "St. Elsewhere" episode registered 33 complaints and 10 votes of approval—but those responses were caused when one character, Dr. Donald Westphall, "mooned" another character.

Mr. Block also gave no indication of whether future episodes of the series would carry the disclaimer or would be modified to eliminate references to Ecumena.

According to Mr. Block, "St. Elsewhere" producer MTM Enterprises has finished four episodes of the series, at a cost averaging about $850,000. Three shows have aired.

Officials at MTM could not be reached for comment last week.

This week, NBC plans to pre-empt "St. Elsewhere" for the National League baseball playoffs, an event scheduled before its legal tangles with Humana arose. #

Atlantic Cable attendance up

By JANET STILSON
Staff reporter

NEW YORK—The 1987 Atlantic Cable Show gets under way today with an anticipated 44 percent leap in attendance over last year's show.

The event, which takes place in Atlantic City, N.J., through Thursday, had a pre-registration list of 1,050 people as of last week. That figure is up from attendance of 690 people last year.

Diane Quinton, associate director of the New Jersey Cable Television Association, said the increase is partly due to a deal offered to cable companies by convention organizers. Companies now pay only for the first 15 employees attending the show, while the rest pay no admission fee.

Though attendance is expected to be way up, Ms. Quinton reports a slight decline in the number of exhibiting companies and booths.

This year's show will feature 170 exhibitors, compared to last year's 173. The number of booths declined to 328 from 338.

Other changes this year include a reduction in the number of seminars and panel discussions, a move designed to give exhibitors better opportunities for good floor traffic, Ms. Quinton said.

The show's hosts include the New Jersey association and cable organizations from Delaware, the District of Columbia, Maryland, New York and Pennsylvania.

The opening day is largely filled with sporting events and state association meetings.

Tuesday is highlighted by a keynote address by Ted Turner in keeping with the show's theme, "Makin' Waves."

Tuesday sessions include a look at federal issues facing cablecasters, moderated by Jim Mooney, president of the National Cable Television Association, and public relations efforts within communities, moderated by Susan Swain, vice president of corporate communications for C-SPAN.

Among the Wednesday sessions are an open forum hosted by Steve Effros, president of the Community Antenna Television Association, and a panel on channel repositioning moderated by Brenda Fox, vice president and general counsel for the NCTA.

The show closes on Thursday with a discussion of subscriber retention and a high-definition TV demonstration. # movie channel, the preview network Movietime Channel, TWA's 24-hour Travel Channel and the Orlando, Fla.-based National Shopping Club Celebrity Network.

Officials of several multiple cable system operators generally rate the new services' chances for success at about 50-50.

Marilyn Russell, program director at MSO Comcast Corp., reports that some of Comcast's systems have picked up The Fashion Channel, The Travel Channel and Festival.

But, she adds: "There's no new service we'd kill for."

For the most part, she says, the new networks aren't based on original ideas.

"We're talking about refried beans," she says.

While Jim Gray, president of Warner Cable Communications, agrees that the new services aren't "tremendously unique," he remains optimistic.

"I think the environment is greater today for more innovative programming ideas than ever before. There's a real interest and need for that," he says.

Industry executives point to several reasons why 1987 is proving so attractive to fledgling cable services:

- Entrepreneurs see dollar signs in cable's steadily increasing penetration of U.S. TV homes, which, according to Nielsen Media Research, is currently just under 50 percent.
- Established national cable networks have, in large part, made it into the profitability zone.
- Relatively low interest rates, when compared with four or five years ago, make borrowing a more attractive proposition.
- MSO equity offerings—still a fairly new twist in network launches—can provide services with significant distribution and/or financial backing.

For one service, TWA's The Travel Channel, getting MSO support could mean the difference between life and death.

Its penny-a-share offering prospectus to system operators, released last month, notes that if the "offering is not consummated as a result of the failure to achieve the minimum number of (full-time subscribers from participating systems), the company may not be able to continue its operations."

But one Travel Channel source brushes aside the warning. "It has to say dire things because the prospectus has to point out all possible risks."

At least one new service has already dropped out of the MSO offering race.

"We floated a trial balloon in February and had a smattering of interest, but the field was so crowded we decided not to go ahead," says Bill Baker, vice president of sales and marketing at Preview.

Comcast's Ms. Russell reports her company receives an equity offering almost every week.

Also contributing to the networking boom are changes in must-carry rules and the relaxation of regulations governing the cable industry, both of which promise a freeing up of channel availability.

New targeted cable services

The Fashion Channel: 16-hour home shopping network specializing in apparel, with more than 6 million subscribers. Start Date: October.

Festival: HBO's 24-hour service targeted to older non-pay television viewers with about 50,000 subscribers. Start Date: May.

Movietime Channel: 21-hour system-specific service previewing theatrical, pay-per-view, pay-TV and basic cable programming with 2.2 million subscribers. Start Date: July.

Preview: 24-hour system-specific channel previewing cable programming, with an anticipated 1 million subscribers. Start Date: December.

Shop Television Network: 24-hour home shopping service with 48 half-hour daily programs targeting different consumer groups with an anticipated 1.5 million subscribers. Start Date: October.

Telaction: J.C. Penney Co. interactive home shopping and information service operating almost 24 hours daily and anticipating 125,000 at official launch in spring 1988.

The Travel Channel: 24-hour travel network, with shop-at-home offerings and 4.5 million subscribers. Start Date: February.

You TV: 24-hour health, fitness and well-being network with an 8-hour schedule repeated three times and an anticipated 7 million subscribers. Start Date: March 1988.

Yet despite these rule changes, "there's still a terrible cable capacity crunch," says Ken Krushel, assistant vice president of new services at the MSO American Cablesystems Corp.

Making the competition even tougher are the new pay-per-view networks, which are after not just one channel but as many as four on a given service.

Overall, according to the National Cable Television Association, as of September there were 63 basic, pay, superstation and PPV services for systems to choose from.

"Operators are beginning to question the worth of channels. And in that environment, a number of new services have accelerated their launch dates" before capacity tightens even further, Mr. Krushel says.

In addition to the general conditions of the 1987 marketplace, the new networks point to reasons unique unto themselves for launching at this time.

Larry Namer, president and chief operating officer of Movietime Channel, a service previewing theatrical and television offerings, notes a tremendous surge in the number of theatrical titles released in the fourth quarter.

Similarly, one home shopping service executive says a fall launch is particularly timely because her research shows 44 percent of all apparel is sold in the fourth quarter.

Others, such as Linda Frankenbach, vice president of sales and marketing for HBO's Festival, say their networks have been in development for years, and that the current cable television environment has little to do with their launch at this time. #

'Star Trek' revival beams up high ratings on maiden voyage that were 146 percent higher than for the same time slot in November 1986.

Carol Myers Martz, KCOP-TV's program director, said the ratings for "Star Trek" were "exactly what I predicted."

However, programming executives at the three stations that came in third said they had hoped for even higher ratings.

"I had hoped for a 12," said LaRhe Vestal, who is the program director at Philadelphia's WTAF-TV, which placed third with a 10.5/15 for last week's "Star Trek" premiere.

Neal Sabin, program director of Chicago's WPWR, said he had hoped for a 15 rating.

WTXX in Hartford, Conn., was the other station that placed third in its market.

Its "Star Trek" broadcast scored 8.8/14; the station had hoped for a 15 rating.

In the other metered markets, KWGN-TV in Denver aired "Star Trek" and won its slot with a 17/28. The show gave Miami's WCIX-TV a win, too, with a 17.3/25.

Winning second place with "Star Trek" were KBHK-TV in San Francisco (11.7/18); WKBD-TV in Detroit (15.7/23); and KHTV in Houston (14.8/22).

The new series is being carried by 210 stations, including 112 network affiliates.

Collectively, those stations cover 99.3 percent of the country.

Promotion for last week's premiere episode was heavy. It included Paramount's home video release of the movie "Star Trek IV: The Voyage Home."

A 60-second spot carried before the movie on the tape encourages buyers of the $29.99 video to tune into the TV program, which features an all-new "Star Trek" cast. #

L.A. broadcasters steady in earthquake's aftermath

7:42 a.m. (PT). Most stations were knocked off the air for a few seconds, but nearly all were able to alert their audiences within five minutes of the first tremor.

The quake didn't cause any serious damage to Hollywood film studios or local stations.

But KCBS-TV, KNBC-TV and KNX-AM reported minor damage, including broken windows, falling plaster and cracked masonry.

One TV station, Spanish-language KVEA-TV, was knocked off the air for much of the morning.

"We had on a live religious program at the time (of the quake)," said Frank Cruz, vice president and general manager of KVEA, which has studios not far from the quake's epicenter. "They scrambled out of there and we immediately lost power until 9:10 a.m."

On the national TV news front, CNN said it broke the first report of the earthquake one minute after it occurred, at 10:43 a.m. Eastern time.

Its first footage of the damage was televised at 10:57 a.m., and the network devoted 50 percent of its programming to reports on the tragedy that day.

The three broadcast networks first aired the news within minutes of each other. NBC News reported the quake at 10:56 a.m., followed by CBS News at 10:57 a.m. and ABC News at 10:58 a.m.

CBS and NBC broke into daytime programming four times each and ABC three times.

In Los Angeles, the three network owned-and-operated TV stations suspended their network feeds for continuous live coverage of the disaster.

KABC-TV pre-empted ABC off-and-on until 12:30 p.m. (PT) and inserted Spanish-language reports from time to time. KCBS stayed with locally originated reports until 1 p.m., and KNBC covered it until noon.

Independent TV stations broke into regular programming shortly before 8 a.m. and provided special reports throughout the day.

Spanish-language KMEX-TV had continuous earthquake coverage from 9:15 a.m. until noon, using News Director Pete Moraga and General Manager Danny Villanueva as anchors.

KFWB-AM used its airborne traffic reporter to relay reports, while KNX-AM relied on a bank of police and fire department radios normally used by its drive-time traffic reporter. #
