The Music We Needed This Year

I'm doing fine now.

On “Feelings Mutual,” from his No. 1 album Luv Is Rage 2, Lil Uzi Vert begins the second verse, chest puffed out, with this obvious lie. He repeats it before the track goes dead quiet for a second. That ostentatious emphasis is recognizable to anyone who has clung to “fake it ’til you make it” as their mantra during a tough time. “I’m doing fine now” is what you say when you’re anything but.

Summarizing the ills of 2017 — politically, socially, culturally — is enough to crack anyone up. It’s why Uzi’s song “XO TOUR Llif3” and its refrain of “Push me to the edge/All my friends are dead” made perverse sense as a pop single this summer. But “I’m doing fine now” became my defining lyric for the year. That small declaration is appropriately hopeful, given the current situation. Say it enough times and maybe it’ll come true.

As ever, pop music is our reliable companion during trying times, offering escape as readily as it checks you back into reality.

Cardi B personified the thrill and satisfaction of professional advancement on her No. 1 single “Bodak Yellow (Money Moves).” Lana Del Rey stitched together past and present, connecting the turbulent ’60s to today, on “Coachella — Woodstock in My Mind,” from her No. 1 album Lust for Life. And Daddy Yankee and Luis Fonsi offered a vision of trysting on a beach in Puerto Rico with the No. 1 smash “Despacito.” The song dominated the nation’s attention for a record-tying 16 weeks, pointing to a more globalized future — one founded on pleasure rather than business. That beach may be unrecognizable now, wrecked by a hurricane, but the song lingers in the cultural imagination like a nice dream you can recall months later. We’re doing fine now.

Sincerely,

Ross Scarano, VICE PRESIDENT, CONTENT

Mariah Carey Jingles To The Top 10, At Last

THIS IS SUCH AN AMAZING CHRISTMAS GIFT," Mariah Carey told Billboard after her 1994 holiday classic, "All I Want for Christmas Is You," hit the top 10 of the Billboard Hot 100 for the first time.

The carol climbs 11-9 on the Dec. 30 Hot 100, with streaming heavily driving its surge. It gains by 4 percent to 25.2 million U.S. streams in the week ending Dec. 14, according to Nielsen Music, and ranks at No. 7 on the Streaming Songs chart. (Upon its original release, "Christmas" peaked at No. 12 on the Radio Songs tally during the 1994-95 holiday season, but because it was not a commercially available single then, it was ineligible to appear on the Hot 100 at the time. The song has re-entered the Hot 100 each year since 2012.)

"Christmas" is Carey's 28th Hot 100 top 10, tying her with Stevie Wonder for the fifth-most, after Madonna (38), The Beatles (34), Rihanna (31) and Michael Jackson (29).

"As a songwriter, I feel so honored," she said of the achievement. "I never thought we'd be talking about this happening, but I'm so thankful to everyone who embraces this song as part of their holiday tradition; it warms my heart. I am proud of this song that I wrote as a kid on my little Casio keyboard." —GARY TRUST

MIGOS, NICKI MINAJ & CARDI B
MotorSport

Migos, Nicki Minaj and Cardi B's "MotorSport" vrooms 15-6 on the Hot 100, as it charges 9-5 on Streaming Songs following the Dec. 7 arrival of its official video (31.7 million U.S. streams, up 40 percent, according to Nielsen Music). Migos earn their second Hot 100 top 10; Minaj tallies her 15th, extending her record for the most among female rappers; and Cardi B becomes the first female MC to send her first three Hot 100 entries to the top 10, following "Bodak Yellow (Money Moves)" (currently at No. 11) and "No Limit" (No. 10). —G.T.

As the world reeled from one of the most divisive elections in political history, artists spent 2017 adapting to the changing times. International music stormed the charts as Luis Fonsi and Daddy Yankee's "Despacito" tied Mariah Carey's record for most weeks at No. 1 on the Billboard Hot 100, Ariana Grande triumphed in the face of tragedy, Logic and JAY-Z helped bring mental health into the conversation, and the members of One Direction went, well, in different directions

THE TAKEOVER: HOW RAP RULED POPULAR MUSIC

As more fans started streaming, Cardi B, Post Malone and Drake helped hip-hop become the predominant genre

AS RECENTLY AS LAST DECEMBER, rapper Post Malone was at risk of becoming a one-hit wonder. His breakout single, “White Iverson,” had made fans of Wiz Khalifa and Mac Miller and sent him on tour with Justin Bieber, but with the release of his debut album, Stoney, fast approaching and no new songs connecting with listeners, the future looked uncertain.

Then came “Congratulations,” the LP’s fifth single that, when officially released in January, began to explode on streaming services. By July, the Quavo-featuring song had peaked at No. 8 on the Billboard Hot 100, and to date it has been streamed over 1 billion times across all platforms. It also cemented Malone as a legitimate force in hip-hop — so much so that in September, when he released “Rockstar,” the first single from his forthcoming album, Beerbongs and Bentley’s, the track (featuring 21 Savage) reached No. 1 on the Hot 100, where it remained for eight weeks.

“The future is streaming,” says Malone. “Millennials in this day and age enjoy that easy and quick access — and streaming gives them what they want.”

In 2017, R&B/hip-hop established itself as the leading genre in the industry for the first time since Nielsen started tracking sales in 1991, outperforming all other genres, claiming 25.1 percent of total consumption and 30.3 percent of all on-demand audio streams. (The No. 2 genre, rock, accounted for 18.1 percent.)

It’s streaming that has increased the music industry’s revenue by double-digit percentage points for the first time in nearly 20 years: Seven of the 10 most-streamed songs in the United States in 2017 were rap songs, according to Nielsen Music, and they accounted for nearly 65 percent of the roughly 8.2 billion on-demand total streams.

For Apple Music head of artist curation Carl Chery, the latest metrics are an eye-opener to those in the industry who had once doubted hip-hop’s ability to move the needle. “My reaction when those conversations started happening was like, ‘Duh,’” he says. “Hip-hop has been the most influential genre arguably in the last 20 years.”

The genre’s streaming success has helped mint a slew of new superstars: Cardi B’s “Bodak Yellow (Money Moves)” reached No. 1 on the Hot 100, becoming the first song by a solo female rapper to top the chart in 19 years, while 21 Savage’s debut LP, ISSA Album, landed at No. 2 on the Billboard 200. Also, Lil Pump’s “Gucci Gang” reached No. 3 on the Hot 100, and Lil Uzi Vert’s “XO Tour Llif3” peaked at No. 7.

The established stars played their parts in a major way as well: Drake and Kendrick

Lamar, two of the industry's most-streamed artists, accounted for the five biggest streaming weeks for albums in 2017, with Drake's More Life logging 384.8 million streams for its songs in its debut week (the most in one week for an album's songs), and Lamar's DAMN. notching 340.6 million. Streaming has also catapulted unconventional artists like Uzi and Lil Pump into the spotlight. "They weren't the norm of what was being played at radio," says John Fleckenstein, executive vp at their label, RCA Records. "But now there is this massive audience [through streaming] that can find stuff and take tests of it so easily."

Hip-hop and R&B had long generated large streaming numbers, but "there used to be a much bigger gap between what was considered a streaming and traditional hit," says Apple Music's Beats 1 DJ Zane Lowe. "It's why I say that 2017 is the year that streaming really arrived."

In many ways, hip-hop fans were primed to stream. Free online mixtapes have long played a crucial role in a rapper's fan base — by 2006, the RIAA estimated the mixtape economy was responsible for 30 million to 50 million sales a year. Tuma Basa, Spotify's global programming head of hip-hop and curator of its influential Rap Caviar playlist, says, "Hip-hop has been the dominant culture for many years, but streaming has helped us measure it. A lot of those hidden markets are coming to the surface."

Like many rap artists now seeing mainstream success, Malone began his career by posting music to SoundCloud. "The kids live online, so I knew that would be the best way to start, and plus, it's free," he says. The streaming service's CEO, Kerry Trainor, says hip-hop culture yielded SoundCloud rap, because "it's all about that incredible democratization where you can reach fans directly."

"What you've got now is a distribution platform in streaming that can move as fast as these artists move," adds Lowe. "There are no rules, and right now streaming is best built to handle a no-rules future."

Maintaining hip-hop's prominence on streaming into 2018, however, will require fresh thinking and continued diligence by the respective platforms. This past summer, Spotify launched a RapCaviar concert series hosting performances in the United States by top acts including Gucci Mane, Lil Uzi Vert and Playboi Carti. And in October, TIDAL held a large-scale benefit show at Brooklyn's Barclays Center, with one stage exclusively dedicated to breaking new artists.

Of course, everything boils down to one essential approach, says Basa: "It's all about staying on top of what's hot." —DAN HYMAN

Three's Company

Migos were the only group of any genre to rise to No. 1 on the Billboard Hot 100 in 2017 — and two members scored pop hits on their own. Here are all the times each member appeared on the chart this year

OFFSET

23 APPEARANCES

Outside of Migos, Offset had eight hits on the Hot 100, most frequently with contributions to Without Warning, his project with 21 Savage and Metro Boomin.

QUAVO

24 APPEARANCES

Of Quavo's nine Hot 100 entries apart from his Migos brethren, four made the top 10, with DJ Khaled's "I'm the One" debuting at No. 1.

TAKEOFF

15 APPEARANCES

Though Takeoff's Hot 100 presence was limited to Migos' songs, he still had solo offerings, appearing on Calvin Harris' album with John Legend and Snoop Dogg.

SHORT & SWEET

This year, Billboard Hot 100 songs slimmed down: The average length of tracks in the top 10 was 3:42, down seven seconds compared with the 2016 average. Meanwhile, Lil Pump's "Gucci Gang" became the shortest Hot 100 top 10 in 42 years.

On Feb. 12, Adele won the Grammy for album of the year with 25 — then argued in her acceptance speech that Beyoncé's Lemonade deserved it.

THE 5 DIRECTIONS OF ONE DIRECTION

This year, 1D's alumni each forged ahead as solo artists, hitting highs and lows along the way

- Louis Tomlinson performs "Just Hold On" with Steve Aoki for his late-night solo debut on The Tonight Show Starring Jimmy Fallon.
- Zayn Malik and Taylor Swift's "I Don't Want to Live Forever" hits No. 2 on the Billboard Hot 100.
- Harry Styles' debut solo single, "Sign of the Times," enters the Hot 100 at No. 4.
- Styles releases self-titled debut LP, while Niall Horan drops his single "Slow Hands."
- Liam Payne shares video for "Strip That Down" (featuring Quavo), which has over 200 million views on YouTube.
- Malik wins an MTV Video Music Award for "Forever"; Tomlinson performs "Back to You" on Fallon.
- Horan's debut LP, Flicker, bows at No. 1 on the Billboard 200; Payne's "Strip That Down" tops Pop Songs.
- Horan wins new artist of the year at the American Music Awards.
- Styles drops his "Kiwi" video, plays the Victoria's Secret Fashion Show.

Beyoncé's Insta-Slay

Queen Bey knows how to make an announcement. On Feb. 1, she revealed her pregnancy with twins on Instagram, and in seven hours, it became the most-liked photo in the history of the app with around 6.4 million likes. (It now boasts 11.1 million and counting.)

MORE CAUSES, GREATER EFFECTS

After the shock of the 2016 election, artists from Chance the Rapper to Kesha found ways to advocate for urgent issues

AS THE DRAMA OF THE PRESIDENTIAL election played out in 2016, musicians were a constant presence on the campaign trail. Vampire Weekend, Grizzly Bear and Killer Mike drummed up support for Sen. Bernie Sanders during the Democratic primary, while Katy Perry, Lady Gaga, JAY-Z and Beyoncé all stumped for Hillary Clinton in the general election. “We were fully engulfed just trying to keep Donald Trump out,” recalls rapper Pusha T, who sat with vice presidential candidate Tim Kaine to discuss criminal justice reform at an October 2016 event.

Trump’s victory last November created an unexpected quandary. “People were in shock,” continues Pusha T. “It put everybody on pause.” Some stars seemed to turn away from politics, with Perry, for instance, shifting to a broader narrative of emotional healing for the release of her Witness album in June. But others have doubled down on using their platforms for social change — often sharpening their focus on key policy issues like criminal justice reform, immigrant rights and climate change instead of the president himself.

While there wasn’t one singular, high-profile anti-Trump anthem in 2017 to match YG and Nipsey Hussle’s searing 2016 song, “FDT,” many artists found more direct ways to advocate for the causes they support. “You see Chance the Rapper talk about racial injustice and the inequities in public education, donating to schools and showing up at city council [in Chicago],” says Carolyn

After mysterious “4:44” banners popped up across New York’s subway system in June, fans suspected the numbers would title JAY-Z’s next album. (They were right.)

DeWitt, president of Rock the Vote. “You have Keshha on her album [Rainbow] talking about sexual harassment, misogyny and the power that women have to create change. JAY-Z authored an op-ed [in The New York Times] getting into criminal justice reform. You’re seeing a lot of artists step up.”

Activists say issue-oriented efforts can help lay groundwork for long-term political engagement — something that’s crucial in America, where voter turnout remains relatively low, particularly outside of presidential races. “If you’re just working to elect a candidate, a lot of times the momentum is over after Election Day,” says Jessica George, executive director of the nonprofit group Revolutions Per Minute, which helps strategize artists’ activism and philanthropy. “If I’m organizing around an issue, I can inform people where candidates stand; after Election Day, we can follow pieces of legislation. That’s a pathway to be involved throughout the entire process.”

One obstacle to action is the constant drumbeat of bad news. “Artists understand that now is a climate that you have to clap back at,” says Public Enemy’s Chuck D. “This is not a time when it’s fun and games and nothing to say.” But with so many headlines competing for attention, choosing which issue to engage with can be overwhelming for artists and fans alike.

“There’s a general [sense of] not knowing what to do because there are so many uphill battles right now and unhinged, very direct racism, sexism and classism at every level,” says Victoria Ruiz, lead singer of the firebrand punk group Downtown Boys. She would like to see individual efforts from artists lead toward more effective collective action, but, she acknowledges, “It’s hard to figure out how to collectively mobilize when you are dealing with family members being in unsafe situations, or you are in unsafe situations when it comes to immigration or wages being cut or sexism in the workplace.”

After the horrific mass shooting at a Las Vegas country music festival in October, many looked to artists from that genre to advocate for some form of gun control. Pop artists like Lady Gaga used social media to voice support for gun regulations, but with the notable exceptions of Tim McGraw and Faith Hill, few name-brand, commercially successful country acts have been willing to take a public stance on the issue. Raul Malo — lead singer of long-running country outfit The Mavericks and an outspoken critic of Trump’s anti-Muslim travel bans — sees this as another sign that the music community has work left to do to improve its capacity for collective action.

“I’m really disappointed that more

Music Takes A Knee

After former San Francisco 49ers quarterback Colin Kaepernick knelt during the national anthem in 2016 as a way to protest systemic oppression, artists followed his lead, using their respective platforms to show solidarity with his message.

country artists that were there that night have not come out in favor of sensible gun control,” says Malo. “That might ruffle some feathers. But if they all do it, that’s a different thing.”

Malo acknowledges the importance of considering one’s audience: “If you’re badgering [listeners] with political opinions [and] that wall goes up, we’re back to square one,” he says. But he nonetheless views ruffling at least a few feathers as a crucial part of an artist’s mandate. “One of the things I hate the most is when people tell me, ‘You’re a singer, just shut up and sing,’” he says. “Really? Everybody else has an opinion; why not me? Artists traditionally have always kept the conversation going, whether they upset fans or not.

“At this point,” he adds, “I’m not going to keep quiet, no matter what.” —ELIAS LEIGHT

MY YEAR IN MUSIC

Becky G

■ 2017 is going to be a year that I really remember. I did a lot of things for the first time. As an artist, it was my reset button for my musical career. Everything in the past happened for a reason, and I learned a lot from it, but this year was the year to re-establish my artistry and create a new foundation for it.

It all started with [my co-starring role in] Power Rangers. I learned so much from filming the movie that it re-inspired me on an artistic level, and it’s really what made me go into Spanish music. I figured, “What the hell? I’m trying something completely new in the acting world, my first feature film.” So it gave me the balls to try something new in my music.

Although I’m very proud to be Latina and I’m proud of where I come from, [singing in Spanish] was always one of my biggest fears. It might be because I watched the movie Selena too many times — when her dad says, “You’re either too Mexican for the Americans or too American for the Mexicans. You can’t be in the middle.” That part stuck with me, because I’ve lived my whole life in the middle. When people say, “I’m going to cross over,” I realized, “No, I am the crossover. I’m one foot on one side, and one foot on the other.” It’s scary to walk that bridge, because you never know if you’re going to be accepted into the community as an artist the way you would hope.

When I recorded my first song in Spanish, “Sola,” it felt so right, and I realized that I found myself in my Spanish music. People were like, “Finally! This sound makes sense to who you are!” It felt like everything fell into place. As much as it felt right, it was very challenging, and it pushed me to want to be better.

[My single] “Mayores” was also a coming-of-age moment. I think it was the moment when everyone was like, “Oh, wow, she can be sexy.” The topic of the song felt very empowering. I feel so proud. This year is the revival for me of my life as an artist — a new life.

—AS TOLD TO TATIANA CIRISANO

In June, 49 million people watched Katy Perry sleep, do yoga and host a dinner party during a 96-hour livestream promoting her album Witness.

"I am the greatest rapper alive/So damn great, motherfucker, I've died/ What you're hearing now is a paranormal vibe."
—Kendrick Lamar, "The Heart Pt. 4"

"If we're talking about right now, it's Kendrick, easy. Not even close."
—Vince Staples, in an interview with KPWR (Power 106) Los Angeles

"I definitely think Kendrick is one of the greatest rappers of our time."
—Mary J. Blige

"Absolutely. Because he has something to say. His metaphors are out of this world. He's like a Shakespeare. He's timeless."
—Taraji P. Henson

"To have a song with Kendrick Lamar in this generation is like, back in the days, having a song with 2Pac. It's legendary."
—Zacari, on singing on Kendrick's "LOVE."

"He's my favorite rapper — he's able to carry that conscious message but still make music you want to dance to."
—Kehlani

IS KENDRICK THE GREATEST MC OF THIS GENERATION?

DAMN. went double-platinum, with a No. 1 Hot 100 hit ("HUMBLE.") and two more in the top 20 ("LOYALTY.," "LOVE."). But the highest measure of his success in 2017 is his peers' respect

"I haven't stopped listening to [DAMN.] since he sent it to me... His wordplay in his lyrics is unbelievable."
—LeBron James, at an NBA post-game press conference

"Kendrick is the greatest of our time, but that doesn't need to be restated by me."
—Brother Ali on Twitter

"Even if I didn't know him, I would still tell you he is, for sure, one of the greatest of our generation. I don't know who could top him."
—Ty Dolla $ign

"He's a game-changer... He sent me the rap and said, 'Can you get this down?' I was like, 'Are you fucking crazy? Do you know how you rap?'"
—Don Cheadle, on starring in the "DNA." video

"Yes."
—DRAM

"I believe he has entered the conversation."

POP GOES GLOBAL (FOR REAL)

From "Despacito" and "Mi Gente" to "Havana" and "DNA," 2017 broke the mold for international sounds in pop

WHEN ESHY GAZIT BEGAN WORKING with the Korean boy band BTS in 2016, the group was seen by some as a long shot for crossover success. "Early on, many people in the industry mocked my attempts to break BTS," says Gazit, the CEO of the boutique PR, A&R and management agency Gramophone Media. "They thought that it was never going to happen in the U.S."

Prior to this year, the most notable K-pop success story in the United States happened in 2012, when PSY's "Gangnam Style" rocketed to No. 2 on the Billboard Hot 100. But where that song's success felt like lightning in a bottle, BTS is bigger than just one song. The seven-member, socially conscious group has spent 2017 collaborating with EDM stars like The Chainsmokers and Steve Aoki, eliciting screaming fans at the American Music Awards and making history on the charts. In September, the album Love Yourself: Her became the first Korean-language top 10 on the Billboard 200, and the single "DNA" reached No. 67 on the Hot 100, the highest peak on that chart for a K-pop group — until BTS' "MIC Drop" remix with Aoki and Designer debuted at No. 28 in December, breaking the group's own record.

Recently, Gazit has helped arrange full-band interviews for BTS with James Corden and E! News, even though only one member is fluent in English. "[Interviewers] see the charm, the smile, their humanity," he says. "The talent doesn't need language."

That has been the defining story of pop music in 2017: English is no longer a requirement for mainstream U.S. success. When Luis Fonsi, Daddy Yankee and Justin Bieber's summer smash "Despacito" ruled the Hot 100 for 16 weeks (tying a record set by Mariah Carey and Boyz II Men's "One Sweet Day"), it became the first Spanish-language song to reach No. 1 since "Macarena" two decades earlier. And unlike that novelty smash, “Despacito” was a no-joke blockbuster. By the end of the year, 17 Latin songs had reached the Hot 100, including J Balvin, Willy William and Beyoncé’s top 10 hit, “Mi Gente,” and Camila Cabello’s No. 2 single, “Havana,” in an unmistakably huge upswing from 2016, when only two Spanish-language songs made the chart. It has been a growth year for K-pop, too, with veteran acts like Exo and G-Dragon cracking the Billboard 200 and girl group Blackpink (which appeared on the Bubbling Under Hot 100 in July) following close on BTS’ heels.

An eight-year hot streak: Drake dropped off the Billboard Hot 100 for the first time since 2009 in August, setting a record of 431 consecutive weeks on the chart.

What’s behind the change? According to Jesus Lopez, chairman/CEO of Universal Music’s Latin America and Iberian Peninsula division, which released both “Despacito” and “Mi Gente,” the answer is simple. “Streaming has democratized the consumption of music,” he says. “As a consequence, the barriers that existed previously — particularly the language — have been lowered.” Video is another piece of the puzzle (“Despacito” has 4.5 billion YouTube views). “Latinos have a video consumption average higher than other communities,” he adds.

The streaming boom was a major factor in the stateside success of BTS, which soared to 11.4 million U.S. streams in the week of Sept. 28 after “DNA” was featured as the first track on Spotify’s 2.4 million-follower New Music Friday playlist. Streaming was similarly key to the rise of Cabello’s “Havana.” “Latin Spotify playlists are some of the biggest in the world, and they’re only going to get bigger,” says Syco Music managing director Tyler Brown, whose label also saw high streaming numbers for CNCO’s Latin American hit “Reggaetón Lento” and its Spanglish remix featuring U.K. girl group Little Mix.

Brown believes 2017 reflects a deeper shift. “Latin music became part of pop music,” he says. “When a Little Mix fan or an Ed Sheeran fan listens to a Latin beat, they don’t think, ‘That’s a Latin record.’ They just think it’s a pop record.”

Of course, it helps when a superstar like Bieber or Beyoncé hops on a track, as happened with “Despacito” and “Mi Gente,” respectively. But BTS’ breakthrough suggests this is no longer a must. In 2018, the band is planning to go even bigger, releasing new music and launching an arena tour that expands on its 2017 run.

“The U.S. has been accepting many more different [kinds of] music and cultures than ever before,” says Gazit. “I believe that 2018 will be full of surprises.” —JEFF BENJAMIN

No Days Off

Neither Justin Bieber nor Rihanna released an album (or even a solo single) in 2017, but both continued to lord over the pop world — and manage to stay on the charts

FEB. 24 Future’s second album of 2017, HNDRXX features Rihanna on “Selfish,” the full-length’s first single.

MARCH 25 Rihanna’s “Love on the Brain,” off 2016’s ANTI, peaks at No. 5 on the Billboard Hot 100 more than six months after its debut.

APRIL 14 Kendrick Lamar drops DAMN. with Rihanna offering verses on “Loyalty,” which hits No. 2 on R&B/Hip-Hop Airplay.

APRIL 17 Bieber jumps on a bilingual remix of Luis Fonsi and Daddy Yankee’s “Despacito” that tops the Hot 100 for 16 weeks.

APRIL 28 Bieber guests on DJ Khaled’s Hot 100 chart-topper “I’m the One,” alongside Quavo, Chance the Rapper and Lil Wayne.

JUNE 16 Khaled’s follow-up, “Wild Thoughts,” features Rihanna with Bryson Tiller. The song goes on to hit No. 2 on the Hot 100.

JUNE 29 Bieber’s third feature of 2017 comes courtesy of EDM star David Guetta’s “2U.” It debuts at No. 16 on the Hot 100.

AUG. 17 The first co-lead of Bieber’s 2017 is with producer BloodPop for “Friends,” which bows at No. 5 on Digital Song Sales.

NOV. 1 Rihanna raps! Her N.E.R.D collaboration “Lemon” becomes the trio’s first Hot 100 hit, bowing at No. 63. —ANDREW UNTERBERGER

After a five-year hiatus due to a legal battle with producer Dr. Luke, Kesha scored a No. 1 album, and her first Grammy noms, with Rainbow.

MY YEAR IN MUSIC

Bebe Rexha

It's all a blur. This year meant the world to me, because I got to release part one and part two of my album All Your Fault. So many of my favorite memories of 2017 revolve around these songs, from watching the "I Got You" video grow starting in the first week of January to performing "Meant to Be" in the Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade in my hometown of New York.

"Meant to Be" is a cool pivoting moment for me, because now I get to [be] more of a raw, real Bebe. It's going back to my roots; it's exciting. I grew up in Staten Island with two immigrant parents, and I expected so much from my career. You think a hit song or fame will bring you something, or that finding love will bring you something. Growing up, we expect [certain] things, but the best thing to do is go in open-minded and just see what happens.

Even though I was a little scared about the session [for "Meant to Be" with Florida Georgia Line], I didn't say no, because I like being disruptive and doing different things. That's what music is about; if you follow the rules it's really boring. I want to have fun and try to change what people are used to. I want more pop artists to do country collaborations, and I bet that will happen a lot more in the next five to six months. I want to pave the way.

I think "Meant to Be" is [one of] my highest-charting songs right now – it feels really good. It's a testament to the music, to writing great songs and never stopping. All the success helps push me to do even better and even more.

I try to make the most of every moment. I want to enjoy every little thing, especially when I'm on the road, because you can get caught up in the motions – then you lose perspective. In this industry, you get caught up watching the charts, but it's really about being grateful, and any little success you should celebrate. I know it has been a tough year in this country and the world for so many people, and I hope that I brought some light into it through the music.

ROCK'S BIG COMMERCIAL BREAKS

Getting your song placed in an ad can still yield huge results, as shown by a handful of alt-rock crossover smashes and resurfaced radio staples

ELECTRIC LIGHT ORCHESTRA

"LIVIN' THING" (VOLKSWAGEN)

Over 40 years after its initial release, Jeff Lynne's ebullient pop-rock tune became one of the fall's most-heard tracks after Volkswagen tapped it for a series of commercials. The synch helped the song debut at No. 23 on the Rock Digital Song Sales chart dated Sept. 23. "You're really starting to see the power of synchs," says Sony/ATV president/global chief marketing officer Brian Monaco. "[It puts] the song in people's laps, and they run to streaming services to play it."

IMAGINE DRAGONS

"BELIEVER" (NINTENDO), "THUNDER" (MICROSOFT, JEEP)

Imagine Dragons' anthemic "Believer" soundtracked Nintendo's Super Bowl spot in February, while follow-up "Thunder" topped the Hot Rock Songs chart on the strength of its use in campaigns for Microsoft and Jeep. "Their lyrics are generally positive and uplifting, and those are things that brands key in on when trying to sell a product," says Tom Eaton, senior vp music for advertising at Universal Music Publishing Group.

PORTUGAL. THE MAN

"FEEL IT STILL" (VITAMINWATER, APPLE)

Portugal. The Man became this year's most unlikely mainstream crossover after Vitaminwater selected its breakthrough single for its spring campaign (starring Breaking Bad vet Aaron Paul), followed by Apple, which chose the same track for its coveted iPad trailer slot. Rich Holtzman, the band's manager, credits the synch exposure for the song's record-breaking 20-week streak at No. 1 on Alternative Songs: "It helped open the door to other formats."

THE WHITE STRIPES

"SEVEN NATION ARMY" (BEATS)

The go-to stadium-rock anthem of the 2000s had a resurgence in 2017 after Beats licensed the riff-heavy track for the brand's inspirational "Be Heard" campaign featuring all-star athletes like Serena Williams and Conor McGregor. "Seven Nation Army" totaled 33,000 Shazam tags, 40,000 downloads and 9.6 million U.S. streams during its first use last December, according to Nielsen Music, and this year hit No. 1 on the Top Commercials chart.

MULTIPLATINUM, OFF THE CHARTS

From Kanye to Katy, several of music's biggest stars had one thing in common in 2017: They chopped off their locks and went radically blonde. While Perry's boldest 'do to date was partly motivated by damage to her hair from overbleaching, as she explained on The Ellen DeGeneres Show in May, Zoe Kravitz took the plunge for a simpler reason: "Evolution!" says stylist Nikki Nelms, who cut the singer-actress' braids before the Met Gala in May. "She doesn't let herself get stuck on things like hair. The look was the perfect blend of sweet and street." —BROOKE MAZUREK

Biggest Style Reinvention: Miley Cyrus

Her sixth album was titled Younger Now, yet Miley Cyrus re-emerged with a noticeably grown-up, tinsel-wig-free look in 2017. Known for doing her own makeup, Cyrus found a strikingly laid-back way to let her inner "happy hippie" shine through.

The singer added down-to-earth vintage touches to her subtly patterned wrap dress when she visited New York's WHZT (Z100) on May 16.

Cyrus went ethereal in a ruffled tulle Alessandra Rich coatdress at the Billboard Music Awards in Las Vegas on May 21.

With white RE/DONE cutoff shorts and a bohemian blouse, the "Malibu" singer looked ultra-beachy on The Voice on May 23.

For a Tom Petty tribute on The Tonight Show on Oct. 5, Cyrus opted for an elegant blush strapless gown with minimal accessories.

Live from New York, Cyrus performed "Die for You" on Saturday Night Live in November in a sweet, off-the-shoulder look. —B.M.

WHAT A GIRL WANTS? SOLIDARITY

Pop culture has a history of pitting women against one another, but this year, faux feuds were rejected, and these chart-topping artists rallied their support for one another

1 Nicki Minaj may hold the record for most entries on the Billboard Hot 100 by a female artist, but she has yet to top the chart. When rumored rival Cardi B hit No. 1 with "Bodak Yellow (Money Moves)," Minaj congratulated the rising star on Twitter, and the pair later teamed up on Migos' "Motorsport."

2 Though "Bodak Yellow" booted Taylor Swift's "Look What You Made Me Do" from its No. 1 spot on the Hot 100, Swift gifted Cardi B with flowers as a congrats. In return, the rapper thanked Swift for the arrangement on Instagram: "I freaking love your music."

3 In 2016, Swift gave Kesha $250,000 during the height of her legal battle with Dr. Luke. The two still keep in touch, and in October, Kesha said the Reputation artist picks up the phone every time she calls.

4 Kelly Clarkson was among the supporters during Kesha's dispute with Luke, and she didn't mince words about why she declined a writing credit on her 2009 hit, "My Life Would Suck Without You": "I was like, 'I don't want my name near his. I want to pretend this didn't happen in my life.'"

5 "If I did a song with Kelly Clarkson, I would get outsung," P!nk said in October, before the powerhouse pop stars were set to share the stage at the American Music Awards. Clarkson returned the compliment at Billboard's Women in Music event in November, calling her "one of my favorites."

6 When a meme circulated implying that P!nk didn't enjoy Christina Aguilera's tribute to Whitney Houston at the AMAs, P!nk clapped back on Twitter: "Christina fucking killed it tonight for one of our favorite singers ever. Show the clip where I'm in tears, you negative Nancy's."

7 Demi Lovato name-checked Aguilera as an influence for her latest album, which prompted Aguilera to post Lovato's Tell Me You Love Me album cover on Instagram with a congratulatory caption: "You are killing it girl."

8 Selena Gomez supported Lovato's Simply Complicated documentary by commenting on a teaser Lovato shared on Instagram. "You always continue to [be] bold and real. I wish more people were like you," Gomez wrote of her longtime friend. Lovato responded: "This means the world to me and more."

MUSIC FIGHTS THE STIGMA

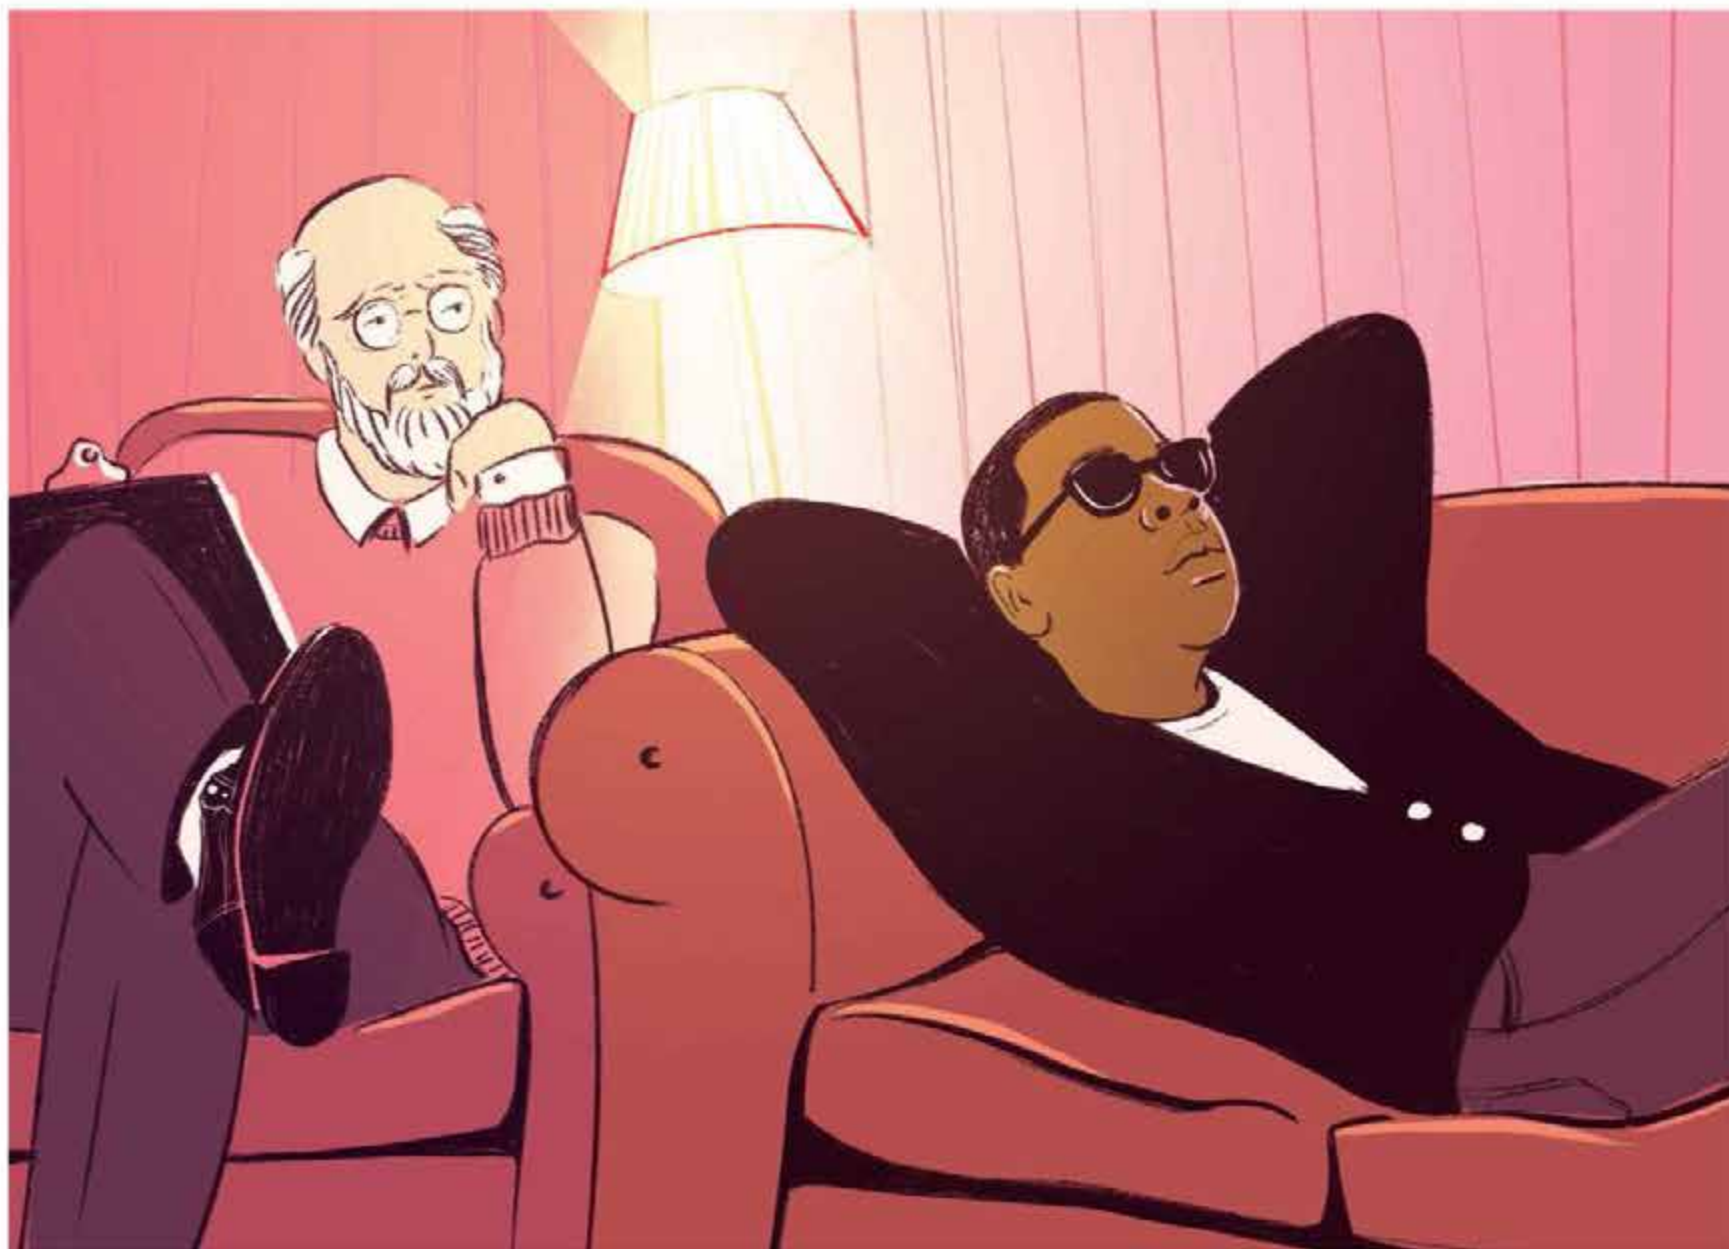

More than ever, artists are speaking out about their emotional well-being — and getting proactive with mental health

TAKING CARE OF YOURSELF DOESN'T typically go hand in hand with the rock star fantasy of nonstop partying, but in 2017, that changed. In July, Justin Bieber canceled the remaining dates of his Purpose Tour in a move toward stability, taking to Instagram to explain his decision: "I want my mind, heart and soul to be sustainable... Me taking this time right now is me saying I want to be sustainable."

It's a sharp turn from the norm. Canceled tours are usually caused by "exhaustion," but instead of invoking his privacy, Bieber and his team were forthcoming. He wasn't alone: This year saw artists like Demi Lovato, Selena Gomez and Logic candidly express their own issues with depression and anxiety. Lovato's February documentary, Beyond Silence, laid bare her own mental health struggles and gave a platform to people suffering from schizophrenia, bipolar and other mental health disorders, while Gomez spoke openly about her own depression and anxiety in the media. Logic's "1-800-273-8255," named after the Suicide Prevention Lifeline's phone number, kindled a relationship with the helpline organization, and the track, which features Khalid and Alessia Cara, went to No. 3 on the Billboard Hot 100 and secured a Grammy Award nomination for song of the year.

Why did it take so long for musicians to become vocal about mental health? "It's everywhere, but people don't want to talk about it," says Chris Zarou, Logic's manager. "Being forced to talk about it by having this song that's so in your face and open, it has opened my eyes, and it's great to see that people are talking about it. It's Gucci Mane and Keyshia Ka'oir threw a $1.7 million wedding in Miami on Oct. 17 with a 10-foot-tall cake, and documented the elegant bash on BET reality show The Mane Event.

healthy to have a conversation.”

Logic's fans were the impetus for making both the song and Everybody, the revealing album that contains the track. “[My song] allowed artists to see that there can be a home for all this great music and all this great messaging, and actually great music prevails and great artistry prevails,” says Logic. “Seeing that [Everybody became a] No. 1 album showed me that people are actually taking notice and taking stock.”

Adds Zarou, “He has had so many interactions with his fans who’ve told him that his music has saved their lives.” A responsibility to be honest with fans has become more common during the past year. JAY-Z’s critically acclaimed 4:44 features casual mentions of his experience in therapy. The ease with which he raps about it is key to helping reduce the stigma around mental health care.

Linkin Park’s Chester Bennington, who died of suicide by hanging in July, had long used music to channel his depression. In May, Soundgarden frontman Chris Cornell was found dead in a Detroit hotel room following a concert at the Fox Theatre. Cornell had suffered from addiction and depression. These tragedies underscore the importance of support systems, from managers to label executives, who are understanding of their clients’ mental health needs — and the importance of artists speaking out and shining a light on these struggles.

“I’m proud of Logic for being brave enough to speak about something that may have been a little taboo,” says Zarou. “We’ve been working with the National Suicide Prevention Lifeline, and the data that they’ve been feeding us to show the actual difference that this song has made throughout the campaign has been unbelievable.” Frances Gonzalez, director of communications for the National Suicide Prevention Lifeline, adds: “We believe this is a great example of how it is possible for artists and the media to address suicide thoughtfully and creatively, alongside people in the field. Logic’s song is an opportunity to make the conversation about suicide a conversation about how people can find hope.” —CLAIRE LOBENFELD

THEY WRITE THE SONGS: 2017'S BREAKOUT HITMAKERS

How “Havana” got its beat, and “Attention” got paid

Maroon 5's Adam Levine

JACOB “J KASH” KASHER

ON THE CHARTS Maroon 5's “Cold” (No. 16), Charlie Puth's “Attention” (No. 5) and “How Long” (No. 26) are among Kasher's 10 appearances in 2017 on the Hot 100, where he was the chart's 13th-ranked songwriter this year.

HIS STORY The Virginia native thanks the “smorgasbord” of genres on this year's pop charts for pushing him to expand his comfort zone. “Country and Latin music got really big,” says Kasher. “Nothing is off-limits, and there's no wrong way to create.”

Cabello

ALI TAMPOSI

ON THE CHARTS Tamposi co-wrote a pair of top 10 Hot 100 hits — Camila Cabello's “Havana” (No. 2) and Kygo & Selena Gomez's “It Ain't Me” (No. 10) — and dominated even more on the Hot Dance/Electronic Songs chart, where she was the year's third-biggest songwriter.

HER STORY “I don't necessarily know what makes a hit, but I know what feels like a special song,” says the 28-year-old Florida native. “Artists are expressing their vulnerabilities in a way that resonates with listeners. Honest lyrics always win.”

Michaels (left)

MATTMAN & ROBIN

ON THE CHARTS During the past few years, the duo crafted singles for DNCE and Julia Michaels. Now, the two are also a force on the Hot Rock Songs chart (where they were the seventh most-credited team of the year), co-writing much of Imagine Dragons' Evolve LP including the band's Hot 100 No. 4 hit, “Believer.”

THEIR STORY The famously reclusive Swedish duo — Robin Fredriksson and Mattias Larsson — is part of hitmaker Max Martin and Tom Talamma's Wolf Cousins production entity.

Pardi

ASHLEY GORLEY

ON THE CHARTS The year's top-ranked songwriter on the Hot Country Songs chart, Gorley penned hits like Jon Pardi's “Dirt on My Boots” (No. 2) and Brad Paisley's “Today” (No. 7).

HIS STORY “I've always been restless,” says Gorley, who heads up Tape Room, the Nashville publishing company that released Sam Hunt's record-setting, chart-topping smash, “Body Like a Back Road.” “[Hunt] is following Rihanna and DJ Khaled on my pop station. I love being part of that.” —TATIANA CIRISANO

MY YEAR IN MUSIC

Ty Dolla $ign

■ This year [I grew] lyrically, I grew my fan base; I came up with the name “Team Dolla.” I just came back from Nairobi, Kenya, where I had 5,000 of my own fans singing every single fucking song from [October album] Beach House 3 and all my hits. I performed for two hours and was only supposed to do one; they just let me go. It was love on another level.

I finally got to do Lollapalooza — that was dope as fuck. It rained, but I appreciated the opportunity and the energy. I also did Governors Ball with Chance [the Rapper]. He brought me out and I did “Blessings” with him but with no Auto-Tune, just me singing and doing gospel runs — people didn't even know I could do that.

[But] the best part about 2017 was releasing Beach House 3. I started it at the end of 2016, so it was dope to be able to finish that and get it out to the people and show them that I'm not Ty Dolla $ign the rapper, I'm Ty Dolla $ign the singer. That release, to me, means the completion, it means the conclusion. At the time Beach House 1 came out, I had a way smaller fan base, so now I really got to show people what Beach House meant to me, which is that it's possible. It's a metaphor for success.

The biggest lesson I learned this year was organization. I figured out that I needed to make everything work together, so I'm making Beach House 3 an experience, from the artwork to the music to the visuals to the [Don't Judge Me] tour that's coming up next year. It's all one now. Don't Judge Me came from noticing now how everybody's looking at me and telling me I'm this or that, and I'm like, “No, don't judge me, you don't know me. You haven't done the research.” I have so many different friends from different cultures and backgrounds, and when you come to a Ty Dolla show or party, you never know what you might get, but we all have something to offer. Whoever can come through, no matter who they love or what they love. —AS TOLD TO LYNDSY HAVENS

COUNTRY'S MANY CROSSOVERS

In 2017, country spread its wings further than ever before with artists collaborating across genre lines. The surprising duets were plenty – as were the hits

MY YEAR IN MUSIC

Charlie Puth

« [This year] was life-changing. I gained all the popularity I needed from the first album, [2016's Nine Track Mind], but the music wasn't representing me 100 percent. I have a weird obsession with wanting people to know things about me. This new music mirrors my life more than the previous records – these new songs are a more transparent look into my lifestyle.

I had never had my heart broken until a year ago. I knew what it was like to lose my best friend before having a girl fuck me over. At 25, I felt feelings I was supposed to feel at 14. It was such a dramatic change in my life, I thought, "Why not have a dramatic sonic change [too]?"

The most amazing thing is the amount of people that know me for my music now. I was touring with Shawn Mendes, and I would come out to a room of almost 25,000 people every night that would sing along with [my songs]. It makes me very happy that the music has such long legs – I feel like I'm doing something right.

I just got a new house in Los Angeles too, and it's not what you would expect a 26-year-old who has a bit of money to get in L.A. – it reminds me of my grandma's house. My whole family lives out in California now; I surround myself with family to keep me grounded – I'm never going to be alone, to quote my own song.

It is very easy in this industry to become [cocky] with all these yes men and women around you all the time telling you how great you are, but I always remind myself that I'm not always going to nail it, there are going to be times where I'm going to have a song that's not going to do as well as another song, and that's totally fine – that's what is supposed to happen.

My mind-set going into next year is to continue meeting and being inspired by people. What kind of record is going to play in the background for someone who's saying goodbye to someone they will see again in another life? What is the record going to be for somebody who gets their heart lacerated? Everybody's life is a movie for me, and I'm just writing the soundtrack. —AS TOLD TO TAYLOR WEATHERBY

The Cost Of Security

In the wake of 2017's live-music tragedies, the industry started considering how much safety is really worth

Promoter John Meglen can't reveal exactly how much The Rolling Stones spent on security for their 15-show No Filter European tour in 2017, but it's "more money than any of us have ever spent before," he says.

It's no surprise that amid tragic events at Ariana Grande's show in Manchester, England, in May and the Route 91 Harvest festival in Las Vegas in October, security costs for promoters are rising fast, with record spending on security staffing and police, as well as new anti-terror tools like facial-recognition software and vapor-wake dogs trained to detect explosives on the move.

"It's something we all have to take very seriously on every single show," says Meglen, noting that despite the increased spending, he still finds himself "praying to God that nothing happens."

The past year has put the concert industry on high alert. On May 22, a suicide bomber detonated an explosive at Manchester Arena as patrons exited Grande's concert, killing 23 people and injuring over 500. Months later, a shooter fired more than 1,100 rounds from the Mandalay Bay Resort & Casino at Route 91 attendees, claiming 58 lives and leaving 546 injured. A number of promoters say that security expenses increased as much as 20 percent following Grande's concert and that costs are rising another 10 to 15 percent in 2018. That includes new expenditures for sniper towers and lookout posts as a reaction to the Vegas shooting.

"You'll see promoters look at terrain and elevation differently, and engage in intelligence-gathering around online chatter," says former Los Angeles Police Department counterterrorism chief Michael Downing, who now serves as chief security officer at Prevent Advisors, which provides security consulting for live events.

"The margins are so thin, we're getting to a point where it's not worth the risk," adds Vans Warped Tour founder Kevin Lyman, who announced in November that he was ending the traveling punk-rock tour in 2018, after 25 years. He says that he has been keeping track of the survivor lawsuits filed in the wake of the Route 91 attack to get an idea of what types of liability show organizers could face in the future. "You hate to watch litigation like this set a precedent, but if the risks of putting on these events start to outweigh the rewards, then you'll either see less shows, or more move inside to secured buildings and less outdoor events." —DAVE BROOKS

'FEAR WILL NEVER DIVIDE US'

This year, tragedies at concerts and festivals were met with unifying and rallying benefit shows fronted by the biggest names in music, starting with Ariana Grande's One Love Manchester, organized soon after the deadly explosion at her tour stop in the U.K. city. At the benefit show, her manager, Scooter Braun, delivered a midconcert address, saying, "Hatred will never win – fear will never divide us." The sentiment has since been echoed as the industry staged A-list concerts to ensure that live shows will always remain a safe space – and that music remains a healing force.

THE No. 1s

In 2017, chart-toppers didn't embody the mainstream so much as transform it, as Billboard's annual portfolio shows:

Luis Fonsi and Daddy Yankee had the masses singing in Spanish, Lil Uzi Vert brought an emo approach to hip-hop, and Lana Del Rey found her political voice. As Cardi B, rap's charismatic new superstar, puts it, "It felt like I was doing it for the culture"

Cardi B wears a Balmain jacket, Christian Louboutin boots and Versace necklace.

Cardi B

By Chris Martins

The first female rapper to top the Hot 100 with a solo single since 1998 is a bilingual reality-TV star with zero filter, a personality that goes to 11 — and a powerful drive to spare her future children from struggle

CARDI B SHOULD BE on top of the world. If her Instagram account, TV appearances and recent magazine profiles are to be believed, she should literally be on top of a pile of money on top of a table on top of a neon bearskin rug. It has been just over a month since her surprise hit, “Bodak Yellow (Money Moves),” gave up its three-week reign atop the Billboard Hot 100, and in that time she has turned 25; played the Barclays Center arena (twice) alongside rap’s biggest stars; taken home five BET awards, including best new hip-hop artist and Hustler of the Year; killed a verse alongside Nicki Minaj on Migos’ “MotorSport” (which cracked the top 10 on the Hot 100); and gotten engaged to Migos’ Offset, who gave her a $550,000 ring with an enormous custom-cut raindrop diamond. (A few weeks after this interview, she’ll also pick up two Grammy nods — best rap performance and best rap song — for “Bodak Yellow.”)

So when I find Cardi in a quiet, book- and brick-lined nook at Los Angeles’ Carondolet House — an Italian villa-turned-events venue where she has been posing for photos all day — I’m surprised to see that she looks, well, miserable. When I ask her how she’s doing, Cardi looks up from the sandwich she has been poking at and squints until I come into focus.

“Oh, terrible,” she says, her expressive face gone hangdog. “I have such a bad headache. Oh, my God. It’s pounding.”

For all of her social-media antics and quotable crudity, Cardi B is not a cartoon. She’s just really real. And whatever stress-induced, wages-of-fame pain she’s suffering from at the moment, Cardi’s eager to say how happy she is to be here and enthusiastically answers my questions (in between, that is, long pauses to knead her temples). She says topping the Hot 100 was “like winning the lottery.” She claims the strip club-themed surprise party her label Atlantic threw her was “more special than my birthday.” She’s so humbled by the fact that airport employees have been congratulating her that she mentions it twice. “And it’s not like a congratulation everybody has had,” adds Cardi. “Like, ‘Oh, you had a baby,’ or, ‘you graduated.’ It’s No. 1 in Billboard.”

The first solo female MC to top the chart since Lauryn Hill did with “Doo Wop (That Thing)” in 1998, Cardi is also quick to praise her predecessor: “Lauryn Hill is like a goddess. For me to be in the same sentence with her, and one day a new female rapper to be in the same sentence with me...” She throws her hands up and slaps them down on her chartreuse tuxedo dress. She’s also proud of “Bodak” unseating Taylor Swift’s “Look What You Made Me Do,” though she flatters Swift as she expresses the sentiment. “I really like that song, but it do make me feel good because Taylor Swift is freaking Taylor Swift — [being on top] is what she’s known for, and it felt like I was doing it for the culture.” (Swift, for her part, sent flowers to her conqueror.)

“Cardi is the people’s champion,” says Atlantic president of black music Michael Kyser. “She doesn’t know how to play industry games — she’s six months removed from the Bronx projects.”

Actually, Cardi has rented a condo in suburban Edgewater, N.J., for about the last two years. But she arrived there after a boot-strappy rise from those Bronx projects, parlaying a lucrative stripping career into social media fame, then reality-TV stardom, then club appearances where she could kick back with her clothes on and make far more than she did disrobing. (Hence the “Bodak” hook: “I don’t got to dance, I make money moves.”)

Cardi had trouble getting artists, DJs and labels to take her seriously as an MC when she left VH1’s Love & Hip Hop: New York at the end of 2016, but Atlantic’s executives were surprised, and thrilled, to learn her onscreen persona wasn’t a front. “When I met her,” recalls Atlantic chairman/COO Julie Greenwald, “she was the same person you saw on social media and TV. There was no sugarcoating or ‘I’m taking a major meeting, let me become someone else.’ She walked in as Cardi B, completely in control of her own destiny, a definitive boss. As a woman who is also a boss of a big company, I was so impressed by her.”

Cardi’s gift of gab, combined with to do welfare. I don’t.”

That’s a sentiment any proud 9-to-5-er can identify with, and “Bodak Yellow” gives it a glamorous sheen — which is why, apart from it being a bona fide banger, it became so much more than just a novelty song. Cardi, who is of Dominican and Trinidadian descent, says she has never been a “YOLO person,” and that making a better future for her eventual children motivated her even at 19, when balancing community college with full-time employment at an Amish Market deli became untenable and she started dancing. Being an entertainer wasn’t new to her. She went to the Renaissance High School for Musical Theater & Technology, where she did talent shows and was cast in musicals, though she’d get dropped for neglecting her grades in favor of socializing — which is when she would rap over popular songs for laughs from her peers.

“I don’t want to live in a small Bronx apartment. I don’t want my kids to go to school and get gang-affiliated.”

These days, one of her favorite things to do is check the Billboard charts with her fiancé. Offset climbed a few with Migos in 2017, of course, but also scored a Billboard 200 top five with his 21 Savage-Metro Boomin collaboration, Without Warning. Along with “Bodak,” Cardi’s G-Eazy/A$AP Rocky team-up, “No Limit,” hit No. 7 on the Hot 100. (She’ll also be competing with Offset for best rap performance at the Grammys — Migos were nominated for “Bad and Boujee.”)

Despite being an inveterate New Yorker — “I have 100 percent Bronx pride, like it’s a country, like I am the Bronx” — Cardi thinks she and Offset will move to Atlanta, because “guys from down south don’t move here.” And, besides, they want a “big crazy” house. And despite having washed her hands of reality TV, she’d consider the potentially bountiful offers from various cable channels to show their wedding:

“BODAK YELLOW (MONEY MOVES)”

Billboard Hot 100 (three weeks), Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs (six weeks), R&B/Hip-Hop Airplay (10 weeks), Streaming Songs (two weeks)

“Why not? Money talks.”

As for her longtime plan to have a baby at 25, the age that she is now, that will have to wait. She’s too addicted to making hits. After watching “Despacito” dominate this year, she feels emboldened to pursue a sound inspired by her background: hard-boiled East Coast hip-hop mixed with Caribbean rhythms and Spanish lyrics. She has a collaboration coming, “La Modelo,” with Puerto Rican singer Ozuna, a Latin trap luminary.

In the meantime, she’s still adjusting to stardom. She’s shocked, she says, “when women come up to me like, ‘I am a freaking senator,’ or, ‘I’m a doctor.’ It’s like, ‘Damn, y’all like me? I look up to y’all!’” Giving it some more thought, she adds, “It’s not that people want to be like me, but some want to say the things I say and can’t, because they’re afraid. I say it for them.”

For example, her take on the fashionable destination city of Dubai, in the United Arab Emirates, where she filmed the “Bodak” video in May: “Shit. America right now is a mess, but you still got to love it due to certain freedoms they give us. It be so strict in other countries. I had to be covered up all the time and...” Her thigh-high boots creak as she leans forward. “Do you know you can’t watch porn in Dubai?” How do they control that? “I don’t know, but they do,” she says in a whisper, as if Dubai itself might be listening.

As her headache rears up, Cardi’s thoughts turn to the “bad energy” that comes with fame: “a lot of fake people, a lot of people throwing you hate, trying to discredit your work, a lot of men always talking shit, the drama, the pain, the tears, the sweat, the stress. It’s annoying. I suck it up. I cry sometimes. I get very upset.”

When that happens, she visits her grandmother’s Washington Heights apartment, where the woman has lived for 30 years. She comes from a family of “jokesters,” and her humor carries her through frustrating moments. Like this afternoon’s press obligations — when a friend in her entourage catches Cardi using her long, sparkling fingernails to pop a zit on her forehead, she makes as if she’s dropping it in her mouth, just to gross her girl out. How do you sum up a woman like Cardi? She, at least, has a fittingly original coinage to describe her brand: “genuine-tivity.” ●

During the last five years, Tyler, The Creator has gone from maverick rapper and producer to interdisciplinary star: He oversees the annual Camp Flog Gnaw festival, a destination for trend-savvy millennials; designs streetwear for his own label, Golf Wang; and executive-produces The Jellies, an animated sitcom on Adult Swim. With each of these ventures, Tyler, 26, has grown his fan base and laid the foundation for a leap from hip-hop's periphery to its center — which he achieved with this summer's "Who Dat Boy." Boosted by a characteristically bold video with a cameo by featured artist A$AP Rocky as a mad surgeon who sews a new face on Tyler, the song became Tyler's highest-charting entry yet on Hot R&B/Hip-Hop Songs. That momentum carried through to Tyler's fourth studio album, Flower Boy, which in August topped the Top R&B/Hip-Hop Albums chart, and just scored a best rap album Grammy nod.

TYLER, THE CREATOR You don't want to put the soft shit out first. Nobody wants to hear that in the middle of summer. I thought "Who Dat Boy" surely will get people to listen to whatever's next.

WILLIAMS Tyler knows exactly how to reach and speak to his audience. When he said [to release] "Who Dat Boy," I was like, "Let's go."

KLAIMAN It's a hit record for today: It has never seen mainstream radio, but you hear that song everywhere, whether you're in a coffee shop or a clothing store.

SCHUMER We launched with that extraordinary video that could've only come from Tyler's brain. [During] release week, we kept the momentum building, rolling out offers on the Golf Wang site that were album-centric.

CLANCY A lot of people outside of his bubble were more into the idea of Tyler than they were into Tyler the musician. Without trying to play to them, he made a record that spoke to them. Now they have something to hang their hat on: "This is really fucking good."

SCHUMER Tyler ended up doing double what he had done first week on the previous record.

TYLER I just do my damn thing. People like it, and I'm grateful. —ELIAS LEIGHT

"I used to think that having a No. 1 album was the most important thing," says rapper Logic, whose The Incredible True Story hit No. 3 on the Billboard 200 in 2015. "Then I realized I was trying to attain [that] for a happiness that was not deep-rooted. When you stop giving a shit what people think, it sets you free." It was that freedom that actually secured him his No. 1, Everybody. On the album, Logic, 27, confronts bigotry, his biracial background and mental health, and it was his powerfully uplifting take on the lattermost topic — "1-800-273-8255," named for the National Suicide Prevention Lifeline and featuring Alessia Cara and Khalid — that earned him a wider audience (and, recently, a song of the year Grammy nom). A performance at the 2017 MTV Video Music Awards, alongside 50 suicide-attempt survivors, fueled the song's climb to No. 1 on the R&B/Hip-Hop Digital Song Sales chart — and, soon after, to No. 3 on the Hot 100.

LOGIC I'm not the first person to talk about [mental health]. But nobody has been able to do it on such a mainstream, in-your-face level. I'm happy I can be that guy.

BARTELS I had no concerns about pushing that single. It's like bringing it into market. It already had resonance.

PRESTON When you see someone work as hard as [Logic] did, you often see them compromise in the journey to get there. The best part is seeing him make it with the exact same routine that was there from day one.

LOGIC So many people told me, "This isn't going to work; it's too positive." Freeing myself of others' expectations made me super happy.

Dance Club Songs (one week each)

In 2017, British singer-songwriter Dua Lipa made the leap from European sensation to global pop star. "Be the One" was a hit throughout her home continent in 2016, but it wasn't until this year that Lipa, 22, caught on with American audiences. "Be the One," "Blow Your Mind (Mwah)" and "New Rules" all topped Billboard's Dance Club Songs airplay chart, with the lattermost track ultimately crossing over to the top 15 of the Billboard Hot 100 — where it is still climbing. "She's got the balance between something that's commercial, but which also maintains credibility, edge and personality," says Ben Dawson, Lipa's manager.

KIRDIS POSTELLE, senior vp marketing, Warner Bros. Records I remember hearing

"Blow Your Mind" and thinking, "This is one of the best songs I've heard this year." The hook, the sassiness of the song, that kiss [sound] in there.

LIPA A lot of [my] songs are songs to dance to, but if you really listen to the lyric, you can cry to them, too. I quite often refer to my music as "dance-crying."

DAWSON While we didn't have a global smash before, we had 100 million streams on Spotify. We were creating a base from which to have the big hit we're now having ["New Rules"].

POSTELLE The U.S. was sort of out of step with the rest of the world. We tried to get in step with everybody else on "New Rules."

LIPA I feel like releasing music the way that I have has helped me get to where I am. It's a lot harder for a new artist to break through, and it has been really cool to see it grow the way that it has, by releasing lots of songs and videos.

When Jesus Lopez first heard Luis Fonsi's "Despacito" demo, he had an inkling the song had potential. After reggaetón star Daddy Yankee jumped on the track, the chairman/CEO of Universal Music Latin America & Iberian Peninsula was convinced it could be a hit. "I wanted it to be the [label's] first single released in 2017," says Lopez. "Despacito" topped Billboard's Hot Latin Songs chart just three weeks after its Jan. 13 release and rose to No. 3 on Spotify's global tally, unprecedented at the time for a Spanish-language track. Then, in April, Justin Bieber lent his voice to the remix. The song exploded — hitting No. 1 on the Billboard Hot 100 within a month, generating the most-viewed music video of all time on YouTube (over 4 billion views) and scoring three Grammy noms, including record and song of the year.

FONSI I woke up with "Des... pa... cito" in my head so clear, I had to research if this was a song I'd heard before. I had the blueprint of the chorus before my morning coffee. [My co-writer] Erika Ender and I felt that if a strong urban voice came in on that second verse, the song could grow even more.

DADDY YANKEE Fonsi emailed me: "Yo, I have this crazy song." But something was missing. I came to the studio and did the verse and the pre-hook, "Pasito a pasito" — that was my creation.

LOPEZ Radio really wasn't waiting for a Luis Fonsi track. Yankee's contribution was crucial.

FONSI I realized that this was going to be a game-changer: Instantly I was doing promo in markets where my music had never been played before.

LOPEZ We always had a remix in mind but failed in our initial efforts to find an Anglo artist. Then Justin Bieber heard the song at a club in Bogotá [Colombia].

MONTE LIPMAN We have a close relationship with Jesus and his team. When "Despacito" broke, we knew there was an opportunity to cross the record to English-language stations. [Bieber's manager] Scooter Braun called and said, "Bieber loves it, but he wants [the record] out in 48 hours." We flew someone to South America that day to record vocals.

LOPEZ I knew that would unleash a global domino effect.

LIPMAN What Fonsi and Yankee did was exceptional. Bieber was the hot sauce. It eliminated any excuses of anyone who said they couldn't play the record.

The 2016 mega-viral hit "Bad and Boujee," which topped the Billboard Hot 100 in January, didn't just catapult Migos to superstardom — it shone a spotlight on a singular Philadelphia rapper who used his first four featured bars to yelp, "Yah!" Lil Uzi Vert, 23, was already an underground star for his mixtapes, where he emotively sing-raps about love and fame over woozy beats, but he became a hitmaker in February with "XO Tour Llif3," a brooding track marked by the refrain, "Push me to the edge/All my friends are dead." In September, debut album Luv Is Rage 2 launched at No. 1 on the Billboard 200, cementing his place among rap's most vital new voices. For Atlantic chairman/COO Julie Greenwald, the allure is clear: "Whatever he's feeling, he takes you on the journey with him."

UZI I was on tour overseas with The Weeknd and Bryson Tiller and I put out these four songs on SoundCloud. They were just throwaways, and one of them, "XO Tour Llif3," started taking off.

GREENWALD All of a sudden we see a giant amount of streams coming in, so we raced to get the record out on the proper digital streaming platforms. It exploded. I mean, there was no one in here who said, "That song's going to stream 20-odd million times in the first week." We're good, but not that good.

CRAIG KALLMAN, chairman/CEO, Atlantic Records People are hungry for originality and honesty. Uzi was from the absolute beginning marching to his own drum, and through his music you're getting a peek into this enigmatic hip-hop figure. The mystery is attractive. Layer on a smash hit record and the results are explosive.

UZI I was speaking authentic on "XO Tour Llif3." Anyone can relate: I was in a dark space, so I went with it. That's how I made the album. I just got that feeling: These are the songs, that's it.

MICHAEL KYSER, president of black music, Atlantic Records Honestly, he creates his own paintings — this is one where we don't touch it. He has a point of view and it's our jobs to spread his word. This is Lil Uzi. This is a movement. He's a real rap rock star. —C.M.

"THE MAN"

Triple A (one week)

The stakes have never been higher for The Killers: After a five-year hiatus, the Las Vegas quartet, which sold millions of albums during the 2000s, needed to re-establish itself as a vital force in modern rock. In June, the band did exactly that, strutting back with "The Man," a plucky disco single partially inspired by Kool & The Gang, who are credited as songwriters. During the course of 13 weeks, "The Man" climbed to No. 1 on the Triple A (adult alternative songs) chart, giving The Killers their first airplay chart-topper in over a decade. New album Wonderful Wonderful followed suit, debuting atop the Billboard 200 — a feat The Killers had never before accomplished in their 13-year career.

VANNUCCI There was a little bit of a crazy, self-imposed pressure that we were all feeling. We all think of this as the start of a new chapter. Five years ago, I don't know if we would have been open to using a Kool & The Gang loop.

REYNOLDS This album began difficult, but once The Killers got into their stride and worked with [producer] Jacknife Lee, it became a lot easier.

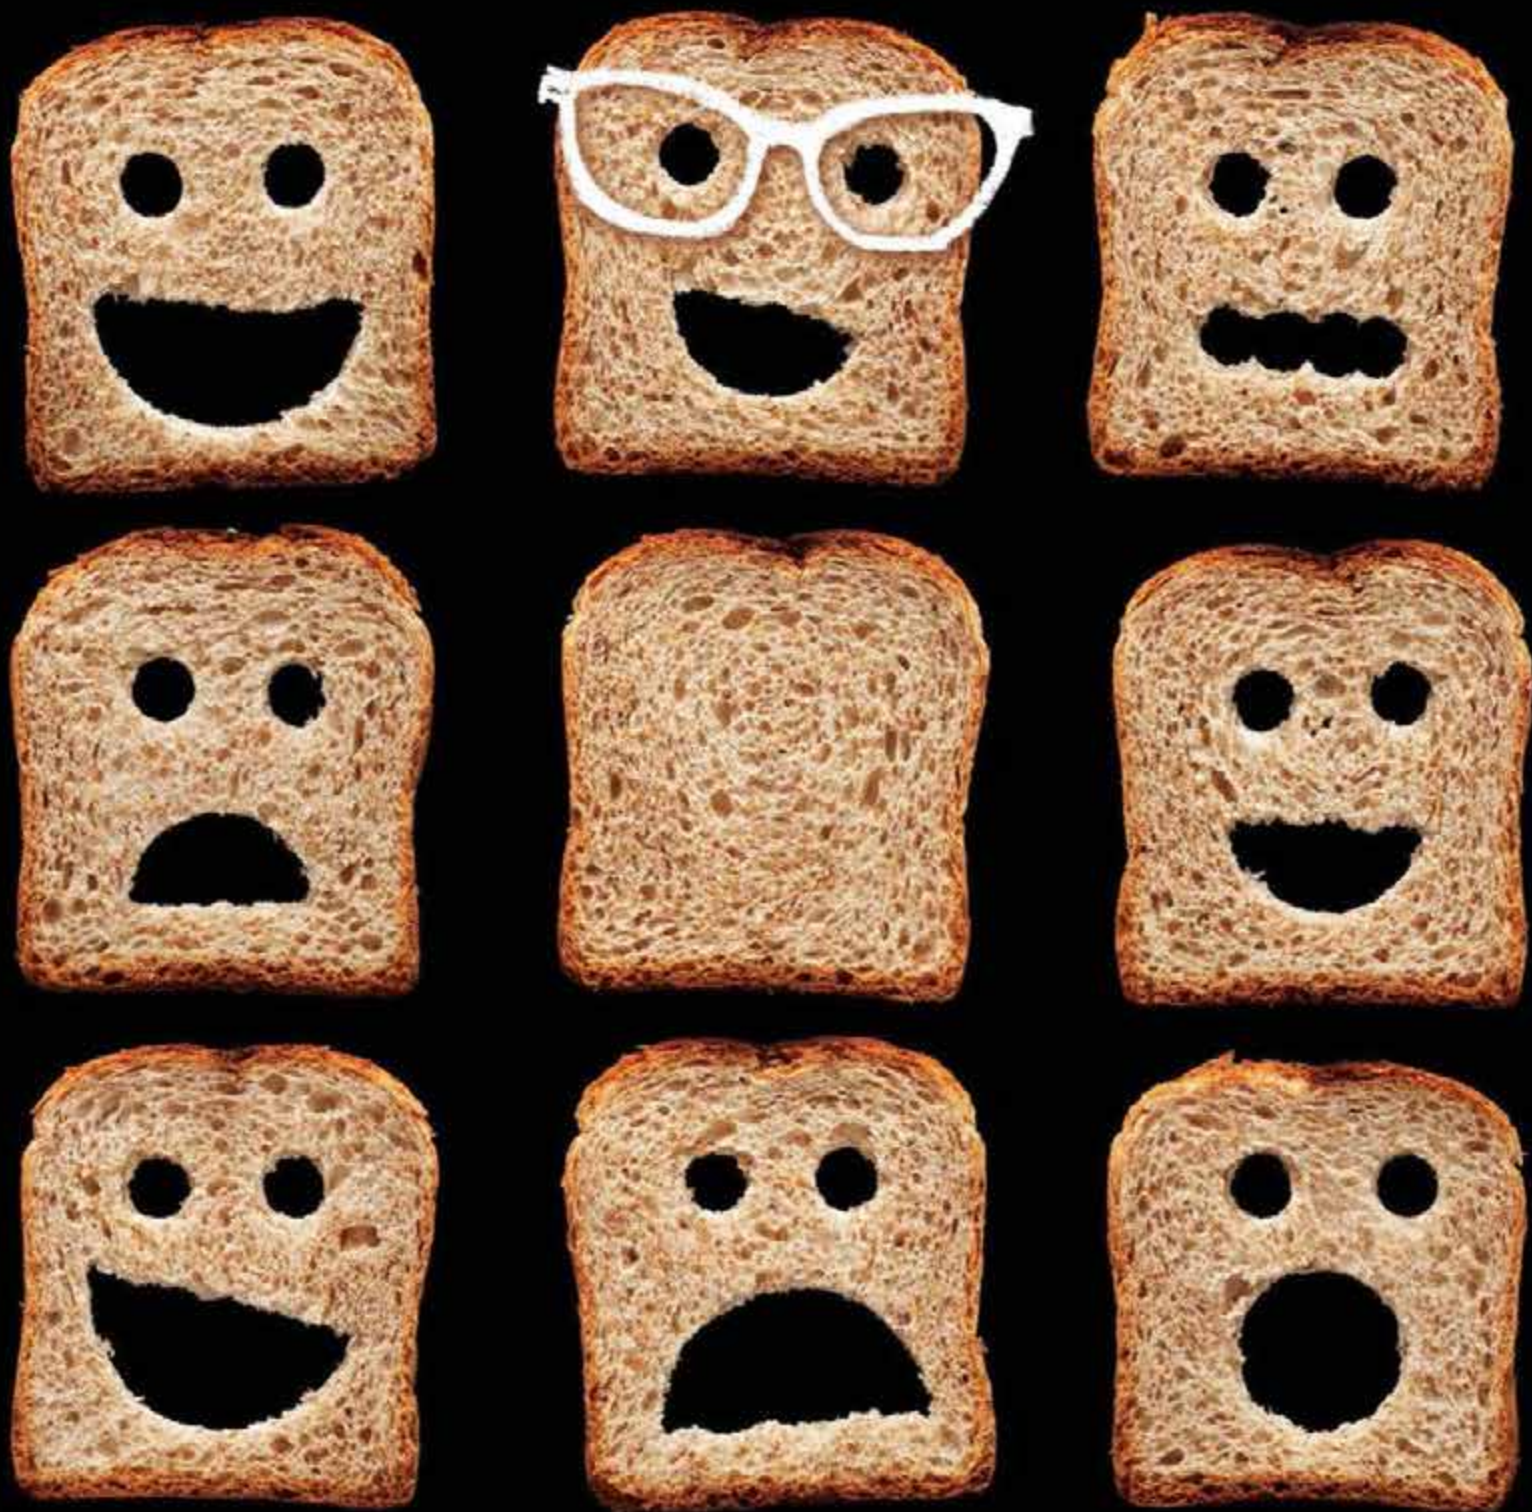

FLOWERS Every time we've made a record, rock radio has changed so much. So we just got to follow our own compass. We grew up with the Talking Heads, David Bowie, James Brown — that has always been there lurking, simmering. It came out fully realized as "The Man."

MASSEY I heard [the song] in its earliest incarnation quietly in a hotel lounge. It sounded really promising. I wanted something fresh for them.

WONG Scrolling through fan comments, people were responding not just to the single, but to all the tracks. That's what makes a great album.

THE POP PROPHET

Lana Del Rey

LUST FOR LIFE

Billboard 200 and Alternative Albums

"LOVE"

Rock Digital Song Sales (two weeks),
Alternative Digital Song Sales (one week)

When mysterious, melancholy Lana Del Rey announced her fifth album with a beaming smile and a lead single simply called "Love," it seemed change was in the wind. Coming on the heels of 2015's darkly introspective Honeymoon, a Billboard 200 No. 2 album, fans theorized that this would be Del Rey's "happy album." Instead, as the 2016 election worked its way into her writing process, Del Rey, 32, metabolized the surrounding chaos into a work both engaged and transportive. Along with her longtime collaborator, producer Rick Nowels, Del Rey wove '60s folk with stripped-down hip-hop percussion and, for the first time in her career, welcomed a thoughtfully eclectic guest roster (including Stevie Nicks, The Weeknd and Playboi Carti). For Del Rey, one of few album-oriented pop artists these days, tapping into the mood of the moment paid off: Lead single "Love" spent two weeks atop the Rock Digital Song Sales chart, and Lust for Life became Del Rey's second Billboard 200 No. 1.

DEL REY Honeymoon was like a vanity project, just for me. With this one, John [Janick] and the guys I work with loved "Love" and "Lust for Life," so those were really the only two singles we thought about. I'm saying "singles" with air quotes — for us, that just means the song's going to get a video.

JOHN JANICK, chairman/CEO, Interscope Geffen A&M Any project I've ever been involved in with her, she knows where she's going with everything: the idea, the look, the feel. And she had this far in advance [for Lust for Life].

DEL REY I think a good word [to describe Lust for Life's shift in mood] would be "present" — less from the outside looking in, and a more integrated perspective lyrically. I started writing the darker songs first: "Heroin," "Get Free," "13 Beaches." Then, once I got to be cathartic in that way, I thought, "All right, now I want to invite my friends in."

JANICK I remember going in the studio one day and her playing probably half of what's on the album now. Hearing "Love" for the first time — it was one of those goose-bump moments.

DEL REY It started as "Young and in Love," but I didn't really like that title; that wasn't the point of the song. Then I worked with Sean Lennon. The Lennon legacy is so tied in to that one word. So I thought, "You know what? I just want to go for it." The whole record is pointing its little nose in that direction.

BEN MAWSON, manager Most important to Lana is that her albums are a cohesive body of work. Her writing process is very natural, without directly thinking about radio or singles.

DEL REY I wanted to see if [Lust for Life] would be heard for what it was really saying. Overall, from what I read, it was interpreted correctly. Which is a good sign for me: It means I'm not seeing things one way and the culture is seeing things the other way. That means you need to check yourself, and I don't want to check myself. I want to stay in the flow.

Sam Hunt

"BODY LIKE A BACK ROAD"

Hot Country Songs and Country Streaming Songs (34 weeks each), Country Digital Song Sales (31 weeks); year-end Top Country Artist and Hot Country Song

Sam Hunt knew he needed something special. It was early 2017, nearly three years since his debut, Montevallo, and while the Top Country Albums No. 1 LP had sold over 1 million copies and spawned four Country Airplay No. 1s, Hunt was planning for a summer headlining tour without having released anything new. So the Georgia-raised 32-year-old pulled out a lighthearted jam he had penned with songwriters Zach Crowell, Shane McAnally and Josh Osborne. "Body Like a Back Road" dropped in February, became a crossover smash and, by the tour's end, much more than just a setlist addition: It broke the record for most weeks at No. 1 on Hot Country Songs, earned Hunt his highest Hot 100 spot yet (No. 6) and notched two Grammy nods.

BRAD BELANGER, manager To diffuse some of the pressure of Sam's follow-up to Montevallo, it was decided, "Let's put this fun song up right now." We didn't want to come with another heavy, dark-piece-of-art Sam Hunt song.

HUNT To be honest, I never really wanted to put it out — I was wanting to go in a different direction musically. Sometimes as songwriters, we take ourselves a little too seriously.

MIKE DUNGAN, chairman/CEO, Universal Music Group Nashville In Sam's biggest singles, his lyrics are rich in imagery and really tell a story. With "Body Like a Back Road," it felt like, "This will work, but it's the ditty side of Sam."

CROWELL, co-writer/producer It's probably about as far happy and silly as Sam can go or will go. But it was a good reminder of, "This is just music. We can play some simple chords and have fun."

DUNGAN Watching people sing it back to him in concert, it almost had a nursery-rhyme feel that made it really comfortable — [the song] got in their heads and would not get out. It surprised all of us, and I know it surprised Sam.

HUNT It did broaden the range of what I could potentially do in the future. I don't presume to know what country needs, but it's definitely what my 2017 career needed.

THE SINGLES SAVANT

21 Savage

"BANK ACCOUNT"
Rap Streaming Songs and On Demand Streaming Songs (one week each)

During a summer recording session close to the completion of his debut, Issa Album, rapper 21 Savage freestyled the hook that would anchor his biggest hit to date. Counting to eight over a guitar loop in an affectless cadence that sounded like a sinister nursery rhyme, the 25-year-old created "Bank Account" — and, without diluting his hard-core approach, scored his first solo top 40 entry on the Billboard Hot 100, where the track stayed for months. Ultimately racking up over 25 million streams, the track topped the Rap Streaming Songs and On Demand Streaming Songs charts, capping a year that also included a Rap Albums No. 1, Without Warning, with Offset and Metro Boomin, and a verse on Post Malone's Hot 100-topping "Rockstar" — another exceptional crossover hit, and a sure sign that the mainstream was ready for Savage.

WILLIAMS He was in Los Angeles when he recorded it, and I was in Atlanta. Metro [Boomin] made a snippet, and I saw it on DJ Akademiks' page. I called Savage, like, "What is this?" He's like, "Don't worry about it," and hung up.

JOSHUA It gets you in that first 20 seconds. You know you're going to have it on repeat.

21 SAVAGE I just create. I don't have expectations. I just make music.

JOSHUA That's 21's style: He'll drop the album and let the fans pick [the single]. Then we just add the fuel.

WILLIAMS I won't say I knew it was going to be his biggest hit, but whatever that shit I had just heard for 30 seconds was, it was crazy. If you bring up [making a single], you're going to piss [Savage] off and he is not going to record anything. Everything with Savage has been something that goes out and the people [choose it].

JOSHUA [Streaming is] a playground. Whether you're discovering him or you're already a fan, you're coming in on that song on Spotify. He is truly the artist for the streaming generation.

Halsey

HOPELESS FOUNTAIN KINGDOM

Billboard 200, Top Album Sales, Vinyl Albums, Digital Albums (one week each)

"BAD AT LOVE"

Dance Club Songs (one week)

Halsey may have become a household name last year thanks to "Closer," her ubiquitous No. 1 single with The Chainsmokers, but by the time that song broke, she was already selling out New York's Madison Square Garden on the back of her visceral 2015 debut, Badlands, a Billboard 200 No. 2. So in setting up her sophomore effort, hopeless fountain kingdom, the 23-year-old multihyphenate focused on strengthening her ferocious connection to fans — mostly through an immersive album backstory and interactive promotion, including fake Twitter accounts and scavenger hunts — and on widening her artistic net. Working with her Norwegian ex, Badlands producer Lido, along with Benny Blanco, Ricky Reed and Greg Kurstin, Halsey diversified her sound and lined up major hits of her own, like Mainstream Top 40 No. 3 "Now or Never" and Dance Club Songs No. 1 "Bad at Love" — and, ultimately, her first No. 1 album on the Billboard 200.

HALSEY I'm not a really decorated artist. I don't get nominations or awards. [Topping the Billboard 200] was my validation that I'm more normal than I thought I was.

JEREMY VUERNICK, vp A&R, Capitol Music Group I think "Closer" gave her the mindset of, "I can make big pop records. Let's fucking go."

GLENN MENDLINGER, senior vp/GM, Astralwerks If Badlands was a record for the fans, hopeless fountain kingdom is for the fans and the world. She pioneered incredible levels of social engagement.

VUERNICK Halsey executive-produced hopeless. She was able to take arguably the best producers in the world, with different sounds, and make music that still manages to feel cohesive.

HALSEY I'm a multimedia artist. "Closer" was the best thing that ever happened to me, but not in the way you think. I can have a big song on the radio and it literally will change nothing. It will still be about my fans.

A few months after breaking his leg on tour in mid-2015, Dave Grohl announced that the Foo Fighters were going on indefinite hiatus. Halfway through the following year, the 48-year-old frontman realized he couldn't keep his word. "When you're in the middle of touring, you start to blame the music for a lot of your problems," he says. "But the music helps you heal." To shake things up, after 2014's Sonic Highways — recorded in eight different cities and released with an HBO docuseries — Grohl decided to record at a proper commercial studio for the first time since 2002, working down the hall from Justin Timberlake and Lady Gaga. He also reached out to an unlikely collaborator: producer Greg Kurstin, the pop mastermind behind hits for Sia and Adele, who, says Grohl, lent some of the tracks a smoother, "Motörhead meets Pink Floyd" sound. Stalwart fans eager for a Foes comeback snapped up the resulting collection of raucous-yet-melodic anthems, Concrete and Gold, which became the second Foes album to debut at No. 1 on the Billboard 200. Prior to release, rock radio embraced thrashing first single "Run," which dropped without warning last June — proving the Foes are still plenty capable of surprises and garnering them a best rock performance Grammy nod.

FLECKENSTEIN I think fans wanted the Foes to come back and recenter themselves around that classic Foes sound, but in a more updated way.

GROHL I thought maybe the strangest thing we could do is go make a record like most bands do [in a commercial studio]. It's exciting when you're in a hive of activity where everybody is inspiring each other. That's the first time that has happened since the fucking '90s.

BLAIR Dave was sitting in my office explaining the record to me as Sgt. Pepper meets Slayer. Like, what? I couldn't fathom it. When you listen, you totally get it, but that was a challenge for radio. They hadn't heard that aggressiveness in a Foo Fighters song in a long time.

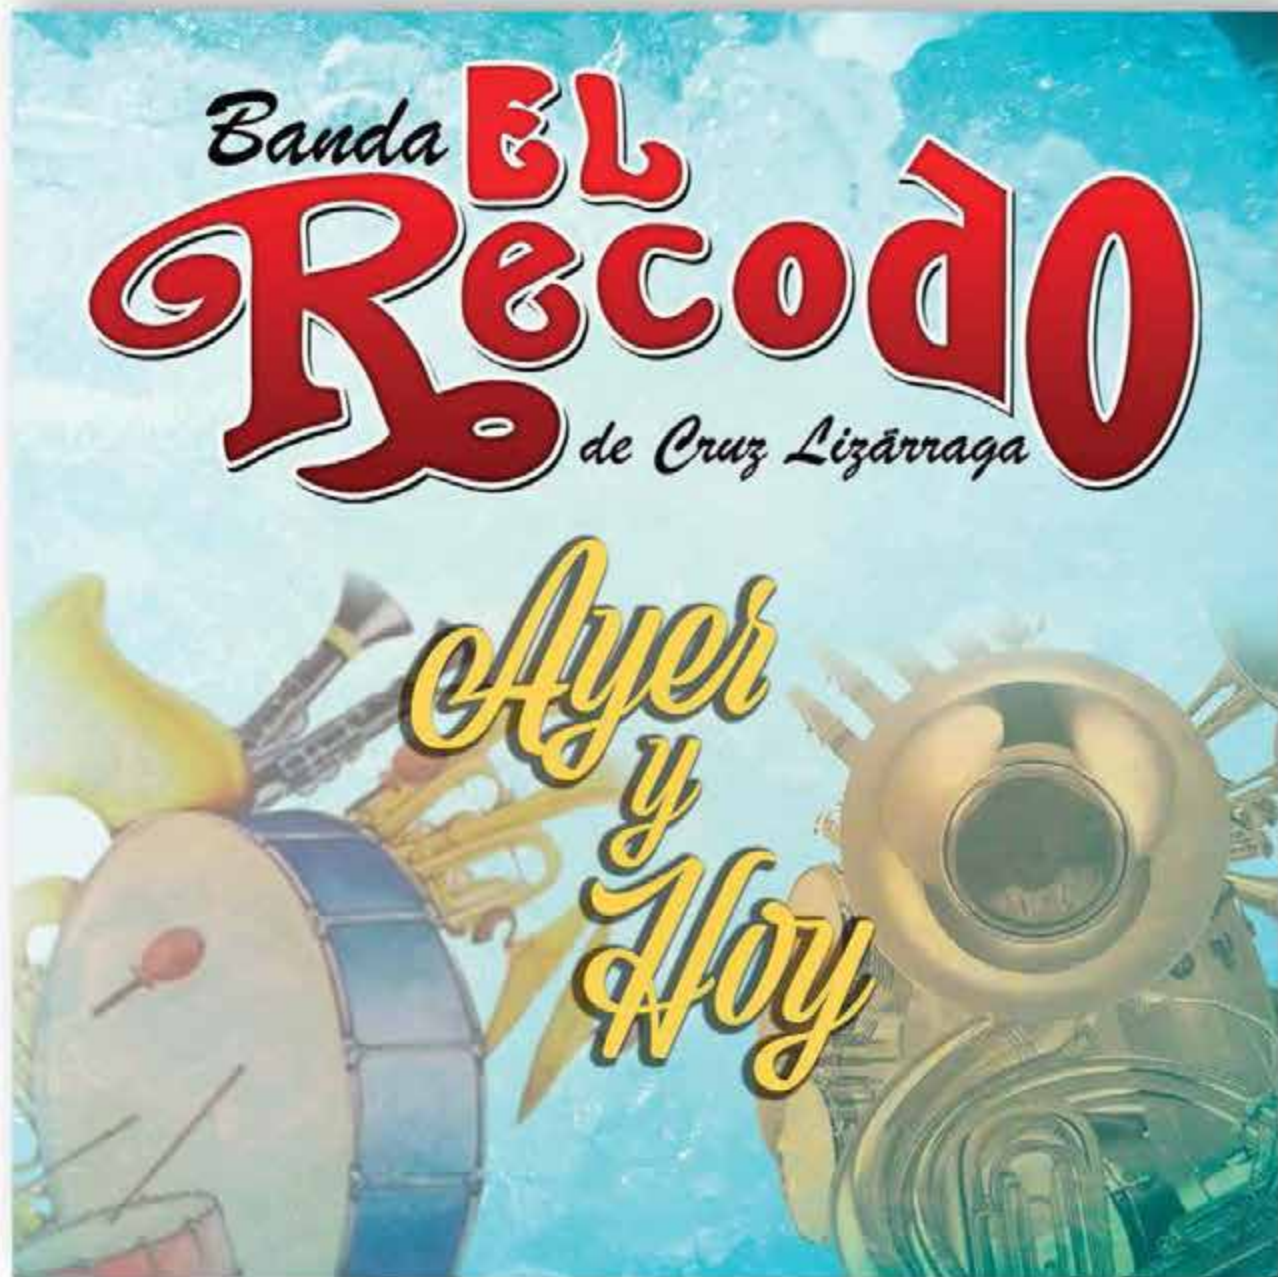

GROHL I couldn't even walk when I wrote "Run." There's some catharsis there, that I get to scream my brains out. I'm a huge fan of old-school thrash metal, so I was really excited, 22 years into being the Foo Fighters, to have a song that's probably the heaviest thing we've ever recorded.

MENDEL I knew that's how a year-and-a-half of shows were going to open — with that riff. The funny thing about "Run" is, it's got a reggaetón beat and we didn't really realize it.

GROHL I said, "What the fuck is a reggaetón beat?" And Greg played six songs on the radio right now by Justin Bieber and everyone else.

2017 CHARTS

Let's Hear It For The Boys

Ed Sheeran finishes 2017 on top — and as part of the mainstream male takeover, with the rankings of the year's top artists, albums and songs all dominated by men BY KEITH CAULFIELD

FOR THE FIRST TIME SINCE 1984, the entire top 10 of Billboard's 2017 year-end top-artist ranking is all men. Ed Sheeran closes out the year as the top artist following the success of his second Billboard 200 No. 1 album, ÷ (Divide), and its multiple hit singles, including the No. 1 Billboard Hot 100 song of the year, "Shape of You." It's the first time he has led either year-end list.

The 26-year-old singer-songwriter is the first British male soloist to be the year's top artist (and only second ever) since George Michael was tops in 1988. (Billboard began compiling a year-end top-artist list in 1981.)

Men so dominated Billboard's biggest tallies during the 2017 chart year (which ran from Dec. 3, 2016, to Nov. 25, 2017) that they crowd the top 10 of all three of the biggest year-end lists: Top Artists, Top Billboard 200 Albums and Top Billboard Hot 100 Songs. No woman in a lead role ranks in that region of the three charts.

Where did all the ladies go? In 2017, the top of the Billboard 200 and Hot 100 charts were flush with hip-hop acts (generally a male-dominated genre), thanks in part to the continued rise of rap on streaming services. Further, two of pop's biggest female stars, Adele and Taylor Swift, were between albums during most of the chart year. Adele was 2016's top artist, following the 2015 release of her 25 album. (She was also the top artist in both 2011 and 2012.) Swift, who was the top artist in 2009 and 2015, didn't release Reputation in time for the 2017 chart year, though her single "Look What You Made Me Do" did crown the weekly Hot 100 at the tail end of the period.

On the 2017 Top Artists list, the highest-ranking woman is Ariana Grande, at No. 15. In fact, only eight female soloists are among the top 40 artists of the year. Since Billboard began compiling an overall top-artist category for its year-end tallies in 1981, this is only the third time the entire top 10 have been solo men or all-male acts. It last happened in 1984, when Lionel Richie ruled the roost, while the top-ranked woman was Cyndi Lauper, at No. 11. Before that, 1983 was also a rough year for the ladies, as Laura Branigan was the champ for women at No. 15, while Michael Jackson was No. 1.

Not a single woman is in the top 10 on the 2017 year-end Billboard 200 albums and Hot 100 songs rankings as a lead act. Kendrick Lamar's DAMN. is the top album. The highest-ranked year-end Billboard 200 album by a woman is Rihanna's 2016 release, ANTI, at No. 23. During the 2017 chart year, just six of the 39 No. 1 albums on the Billboard 200 were by women.

On the year-end Hot 100 recap, chart-ruler "Shape of You" spent 12 weeks atop the list and broke the record for the longest run ever in the top 10: 33 weeks. The track debuted at No. 1 on the Jan. 28 list and didn't leave the top 10 until the Sept. 16 tally.

Meanwhile, Halsey (as a featured artist) is the lone representative for women in the year-end Hot 100 top 10, as the guest artist on The Chainsmokers' 2016 chart-topping "Closer," at No. 7. The first lead woman on the Hot 100 tally ranks at No. 17: the co-billed Zedd and Alessia Cara duet "Stay." Only two of the Hot 100's 11 No. 1 singles in 2017 were by women: Swift's "Look What You Made Me Do" and Cardi B's "Bodak Yellow (Money Moves)."

On the Top New Artists year-end list, breakthrough rapper Cardi B is the highest-ranked woman, at No. 7. Topping the chart is rapper Lil Uzi Vert, who notched a No. 1 album on the Billboard 200 with Luv Is Rage 2 and four top 40 hits on the weekly Hot 100, including a featured turn on Migos' No. 1 "Bad and Boujee."

Billboard's year-end music recaps are based on chart performance during the span of Dec. 3, 2016, to Nov. 25, 2017. The year-end Top Artists category ranks the best-performing acts of the year based on activity on the Billboard 200 albums tally and the Billboard Hot 100 singles list, as well as streaming, social media and Billboard Boxscore data. Data registered before or after a title's chart run is not considered in these standings. That methodology detail, and the December-to-November time period, account for some of the differences between these lists and the calendar-year recaps that are independently compiled by Nielsen Music.

CHRISTOPHER POLK/GETTY IMAGES

Sheeran rules as the Top Artist for the first time. He's just the second British solo male to lead the year-end list, following George Michael in 1988.

'1-800-273-8255' And Other Numbers That Defined The Charts In 2017

20 Portugal. The Man's "Feel It Still" became the first track to top the Alternative airplay chart for 20 weeks, surpassing Muse's "Madness" (19 weeks, 2012-13).

34 Total weeks for Sam Hunt's "Body Like a Back Road" atop Hot Country Songs, the most in the chart's history. The song sped past Florida Georgia Line's "Cruise" (24 weeks, 2012-13).

3 One Direction became the first group to spin off three soloists each with No. 1s on the Pop Songs airplay chart when Liam Payne's "Strip That Down" (featuring Quavo) reigned in October, dethroning Niall Horan's "Slow Hands." The pair followed former 1D bandmate Zayn Malik, who led in 2016 with "Pillowtalk."

431 Consecutive weeks on the Hot 100 linked by Drake, an astounding eight-year-plus streak that lasted through the Aug. 19 chart. The record run began when he made his first Hot 100 appearance with "Best I Ever Had" on May 23, 2009.

'1-800-273-8255' Highest-peaking Hot 100 hit whose title dials up a phone number. Logic's No. 3 track (featuring Alessia Cara and Khalid) passed Tommy Tutone's No. 4-peaking 1982 classic, "867-5309/Jenny."

74

Nicki Minaj earned her 74th Billboard Hot 100 entry (and her 75th and 76th) on the April 1 Hot 100, passing Aretha Franklin (73) for the most among women in the Hot 100's archives. Franklin had held the record for nearly 40 years.

61

Consecutive weeks in the Hot 100's top 10 by The Chainsmokers, the longest streak ever by a duo or group. Four top 10s contributed to the run, through "Something Just Like This" (with Coldplay) in July.

'ONE'

When DJ Khaled's "I'm the One" debuted atop the May 20 Hot 100 and Luis Fonsi and Daddy Yankee's "Despacito" supplanted it at the summit the following frame, Justin Bieber — featured on both songs — became the first act in the chart's history to notch new No. 1s in back-to-back weeks. "Despacito" would go on to a record-tying 16-week rule.

2 On the Jan. 28 Hot 100, Ed Sheeran became the first artist to debut two entries in the top 10 simultaneously: "Shape of You" launched at No. 1 for its first of 12 weeks on top, and "Castle on the Hill" bowed at its No. 6 peak.

Years (plus two months) that Coldplay waited from its first appearance on Pop Songs until its first No. 1, its team-up with The Chainsmokers on "Something Just Like This." Coldplay first reached the list with "Yellow" in 2001.

'Despacito' Dominated

After Justin Bieber jumped on a remix of Luis Fonsi and Daddy Yankee's "Despacito," the song became one of the biggest hits in the history of the Hot 100

- "Despacito" — then credited to Luis Fonsi featuring Daddy Yankee — debuted on the Feb. 4 Hot Latin Songs chart, and quickly reached No. 1. The track had already led for 11 weeks before Justin Bieber's remix arrived.

- On the Billboard Hot 100, the song had been performing modestly, hovering in the 40s and 50s for two months. But Bieber's redux sent the track straight to the top 10: It vaulted from No. 48 to No. 9 on the May 6 list and shot to No. 1 three weeks later.

- "Despacito" ultimately ruled the Hot 100 for 16 weeks, tying the record for the most weeks at No. 1 in the chart's 59-year history. It matched Mariah Carey & Boyz II Men's "One Sweet Day," which crowned the list for four months in 1995 and 1996.

- After the success of the "Despacito" remix, other English-speaking pop stars were joining Latin acts for reworkings of established hits. Beyoncé partnered with J Balvin and Willy William on a remix of "Mi Gente," sending the track to a new peak of No. 3. Two months earlier, CNCO's hit "Reggaeton Lento (Bailemos)" got a fresh take with U.K. girl group Little Mix's guest spot on a new version. —KEITH CAULFIELD

ED SHEERAN IS THE FIRST PERSON TO HAVE WRITTEN THE HOT 100'S TOP YEAR-END HIT TWO YEARS IN A ROW. HE CO-PENNEDED THE 2017 CHAMP, HIS OWN "SHAPE OF YOU," AND JUSTIN BIEBER'S "LOVE YOURSELF" IN 2016.

All five members of One Direction hit the Hot 100's top 40 in 2017, with Zayn Malik rising highest: His "I Don't Wanna Live Forever (Fifty Shades Darker)," with Taylor Swift, reached No. 2 in March.

Bronx MC Cardi B became just the second female rapper to send a debut Hot 100 entry to No. 1. Lauryn Hill arrived with the two-week chart-topper "Doo Wop (That Thing)" in 1998.

In April, Lauren Alaina's sixth chart entry on Country Airplay, "Road Less Traveled," became her first No. 1.

Carly Pearce's "Every Little Thing" became just the third debut country single by a solo woman to top Country Airplay, following hits by Carrie Underwood in 2006 and Kelsea Ballerini in 2015.

WOMEN
IN MUSIC 2017

NOV. 30 | LOS ANGELES

Billboard's Women in Music event, held in L.A. for the first time this year at the Ray Dolby Ballroom, honored 2017's most powerful female artists and executives in the industry who have used their voices to inspire, motivate and lead through their achievements and individual platforms.

The event was livestreamed on Twitter, providing fans everywhere an inside look at one of Billboard's biggest events. Selena Gomez was named Woman of the Year alongside an exceptional list of honorees that included Mary J. Blige, Kelly Clarkson, Camila Cabello, Kehlani and Grace VanderWaal. The 2017 Executive of the Year was Atlantic Records chairman/COO Julie Greenwald.

Thank you to all of our 2017 sponsors: American Airlines, American Express, FIJI Water, Iron Mountain Entertainment Services and Nielsen Music.

2017 TOURING

U2 achieves the No. 1 tour of the year for the fifth time since 2000, the most of any act. Bon Jovi is second with three titles in that span, followed by Madonna and The Rolling Stones (two each).

The Price Is Right

As attendance starts to level out, promoters are getting better at finding ways to cut out the secondary market, extracting more money from fans along the way By Dave Brooks

JAY-Z HAS ALREADY CANCELED TWO DATES ON his 4:44 Tour, seen very few of his shows actually sell out and been mocked on social media for tickets selling as low as $5 on secondary sites like StubHub. Should Hov be worried about what this means for his future career prospects?

No way — in fact, he's making more money off this run than ever.

"This is the biggest headline tour of Jay's career," explains Live Nation vp touring Omar Al-Joulani, who says that because JAY-Z has already made so much money pricing up the best tickets on the tour, he's going to bank big regardless of whether or not he sells out the upper seating section.

Welcome to the new normal in the concert industry, where gross ticket sales are outpacing attendance because of better pricing, often aggressively valued and sold in direct competition against the secondary ticket market. For 2017, gross ticket sales are up 10 percent over 2016, from $5.8 billion in 2016 to $6.4 billion this year. Reported attendance grew half as fast, up to 83 million worldwide in 2017, a 4 percent increase over the previous year, while the reported show count has jumped from 15,854 in 2016 to 17,129 in 2017, an increase of 8 percent.

Much of the growth is concentrated overseas; in the United States, gross ticket sales are up a more conservative 3.1 percent while total attendance is actually down 4.7 percent, dropping from 54 million in 2016 to 51.5 million in 2017.

The U.S. attendance dip is the only drop in Billboard's year-end report that otherwise shows sales up for the top 10 reporting amphitheaters, theaters and promoters on the planet, with both Live Nation and AEG Presents seeing substantial increases in gross attendance and the number of shows. While seven of the top 10 tours of the year were stadium tours, arenas did some of their best business ever, with the top 10 arenas reporting $986.9 million in sales, up an eye-opening 28 percent over 2016.

"Concert sales have increased because of the increase in access to music and consumption," says Marc Geiger, partner and co-head of music at WME. He believes that the growing adoption of paid streaming services, coupled with increased global awareness of touring pop acts and the rapid integration of ticketing and

With sales already topping $475 million since its 2016 launch and more shows booked in 2018, Guns N' Roses' 'Not in This Lifetime... Tour' is on track to rank among the highest-grossing treks of all time.

McGraw (right) and Hill's three Soul2Soul Tours have grossed over $270 million.

streaming apps ("Pandora and Ticketfly were just the start," he says), are key to paving the infrastructure of the music economy. Growth happens, says Geiger, with better pricing.

"We are a little closer to where we should be, but there's still much more we can do to get closer" to the actual value consumers are willing to pay for tickets, adds Geiger, noting that the concert industry has to end its addiction to instant sellouts and move to a slow ticket model.

One group that gets it right: WME-backed UFC, co-promoter of Conor McGregor and Floyd Mayweather's boxing match in August, which took months to sell out but netted $55.4 million, a record for 2017 that helped T-Mobile Arena in Las Vegas achieve a nine-digit year-end gross. T-Mobile won arena of the year at the Billboard Touring Awards in November, but the celebration was dampened by a feeling of shell shock by many at the MGM-owned arena, who just six weeks earlier had witnessed one of the worst mass shootings in U.S. history at the MGM-co-owned Route 91 Harvest festival that left 58 dead and hundreds injured.

The attack showed the vulnerability of outdoor events, especially in urban areas. But the shooting, coupled with other recent attacks at venues during the past two years in Manchester, England; Orlando, Fla.; and Paris, seems to have had no impact on attendance. "So far, nothing has really changed from an attendance perspective, but I'm watching the lawsuits" filed against MGM and Live Nation, says Kevin Lyman from 4Fini Productions, which is promoting the 25th and final Vans Warped Tour in 2018. "We'll never get to a point where there are no events, but we might see less take place outside. Some promoters will just say it's not worth it and move events indoors to arenas."

For years, the music industry wrung its hands about the lack of headliner talent to replace the big stadium acts of previous decades. In 2017, that generational gap is disappearing fast. Three of the top 10 tours this year are from artists whose first album was released after 2008, while 11 of the top 25 released their first album after 2000.

Even the chart's second-highest-grossing tour, Guns N' Roses' Not in This Lifetime... Tour, is by a band that hasn't toured since 1993, making it another relative newcomer to the circuit. After a run of high-profile reunion shows in 2016, the band is doing some of its best business, with plans to hit the road in 2018 for a third year of touring.

"I was blown away by how many people in their 50s and 60s are still out all night long going to shows," says Jodi Goodman, president of Live Nation Northern California. "People who started going to shows in their youth never really stop. And in big cities like San Francisco, there really are music fans everywhere."

Couple that with optimism for emerging headliners like Eric Church, The Weeknd and Florida Georgia Line, and the worries about a lack of headliner talent have dissipated, although the lack of female headliners has some scratching their heads. Only four women are listed on the 2017 Top Tours chart — Ariana Grande, Céline Dion, Lady Gaga and Faith Hill (who tours with husband Tim McGraw). With Adele, Beyoncé and Taylor Swift all taking the year off from touring, there aren't many women among the top 25 tours.

The past year was also a watershed one for Combined attendance at London's O2 Arena and the AccorHotels Arena in Paris, just two of the 16 European venues that Dion played in 2017, topped 100,000 from eight shows in June and July.

major festival brands like Coachella, which for the first time passed the nine-digit mark, grossing $114 million after boosting attendance by 25,000 each weekend. But the biggest festival story of 2017 did not take place anywhere near California. The doomed Fyre Festival, scheduled for two springtime weekends in the Bahamas, was a high-profile disaster that led to criminal charges for founder Billy McFarland, over a dozen lawsuits ranging from fraud to negligence and, now, an attempt by a court-appointed trustee to threaten McFarland and rapper and event co-founder Ja Rule with subpoenas and jail time if they don't turn over documents in the case.

The implosion of Fyre foreshadowed more festival meltdowns this year. Canada's Pemberton Festival was unexpectedly canceled and placed into bankruptcy after fans had already shelled out $6 million in ticket sales. The fallout has tightened the credit and capitalization requirements for new festivals. "It will hurt independents, no question," says Geiger. "There's a higher awareness, like when stages kept getting blown down by wind and people hired better engineers."

This was also the first year the Federal Trade Commission and state attorneys had the ability to bust scalpers under the 2016 Better Online Ticket Sales Act, signed into law in the final days of Barack Obama's presidency. And Ticketmaster has rolled out its Verified Fan program, reducing the number of tickets sold to scalpers by 90 percent, according to the company's head of music, David Marcus. Ed Sheeran, Bruce Springsteen, U2 and now Taylor Swift have used Verified Fan, which is set for a wider deployment in 2018.

"The Bruce program was a monster, but what's ahead multiplies that," says Marcus. "We're now engaging fans one by one, allowing us to offer a variety of tickets at all pricing levels that [Swift's] fans can buy from her and not the secondary market." ●

30 Years Ago 'A VERY SPECIAL' ALBUM RANG IN THE HOLIDAYS

Music mogul Jimmy Iovine rounded up the top music stars of the '80s to record a hit Christmas compilation in tribute to his late father Clockwise from top left: Adam Clayton, John Mellencamp, Larry Mullen Jr., Jason "Jam Master Jay" Mizell, Bono, Springsteen, Annie Lennox, The Edge, Joseph "Rev. Run" Simmons, Seger and Darryl "D.M.C." McDaniels (center) photographed in 1987 for the release of A Very Special Christmas.

"I'M GOING TO MAKE A CHRISTMAS album for my dad." In 2014, Jimmy Iovine told Billboard that the idea to make the benefit holiday compilation album A Very Special Christmas came to him on the day of the funeral for his father, Vincent "Jimmy" Iovine, in January 1985. A Brooklyn longshoreman, the elder Iovine "loved Christmas," his son recalled, adding, "His passing was bigger than I could have imagined."

When Bruce Springsteen called to offer his condolences, Iovine, then 31, who had engineered Born to Run and Darkness on the Edge of Town and produced Tom Petty & The Heartbreakers' Damn the Torpedoes, among other classic albums, told the rocker, "The only thing I know how to do in life, Bruce, is make music." Shortly thereafter, Iovine set about honoring his father's memory by recording some of the biggest artists of that era for the LP.

The first act to lay down a track for the compilation was Chrissie Hynde and The Pretenders, who delivered a spare and melancholy "Have Yourself a Merry Little Christmas." Springsteen recorded a live version of Lou Baxter and Johnny Moore's "Merry Christmas Baby," Madonna contributed a cover of "Santa Baby" (originally sung by Eartha Kitt), and "Bob Seger sang my father's favorite song: 'The Little Drummer Boy,'" said Iovine, who produced seven of the album's 15 tracks.

The compilation topped the Top Holiday Albums chart on Dec. 12, 1987, and jingled all the way to No. 20 on the Dec. 26 Billboard 200. It has since sold an estimated 4.6 million copies (when its Nielsen Music-era sales are combined with pre-Nielsen RIAA certifications). The success of the album spawned nine more releases, which, all told, have raised over $100 million for the Special Olympics.

Iovine went on to co-found Interscope Records and, with hip-hop mogul Dr. Dre, Beats Electronics. In 2014, Apple purchased the latter company in a $3 billion deal, and Iovine took charge of Apple Music. Despite these rarefied accomplishments, he said that A Very Special Christmas remains "the purest thing I've ever done." —FRANK DIGIACOMO
