"One listen to this guitarist's scorching command of the six-string and you'll understand why... Technically, Jerardi is flawless, but there's also plenty of emotion seeping from the guitar's tones and licks... Jerardi is a mesmerizing and powerful player in concert."

Never Second Guess Your Movements.

He thought things were flowing pretty well. Though he agonized over his decision, some new company had promised him the world and he dove in. When the gear showed up a day late, his world had already gone to pot...
Out of the can and into the fan.

He should have flushed the thought of another freight company out of his head and used Rock-It Cargo. With 20 years of project related freight experience and 24 hour personalized service, he could have been worrying about much more important issues like making sure he packed enough oat bran for the band.

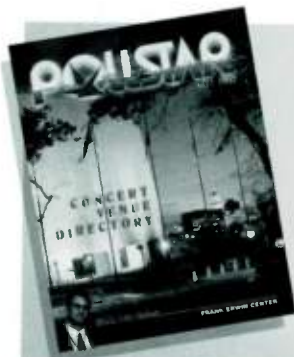

Whether your tour is headed around the globe or just around the corner, Rock-It Cargo can get you there with no chafing.

MARTY Diamond little big man booking

LITTLE BIG MAN BOOKING'S MARTY DIAMOND first realized he had a special interest in music while he was growing up on Long Island. He got a stereo for his 13th birthday and was off and running.

Growing up, Marty was known as the kid with the most tapes in his car. His high tech 8-track player was on constantly, fueling Diamond's passion for music.

After high school, Diamond went to the University of Delaware. One "curious" day, someone knocked on his door and asked if he wanted to work on an upcoming Pure Prairie League concert. Without hesitation, Diamond assumed his post as a truck loader for that show and then grew through the ranks of the college entertainment system until he was the head of the student programming committee.

Today, Diamond figuratively sits behind the big desk at Little Big Man Booking. His days are filled representing acts like Sarah McLachlan, Ashley MacIssac, Tricky, The Verve, the Chieftains and Kula Shaker. And he is a partner in the highly successful Lilith Fair tour. Those accomplishments are meaningful but his early days in the music business set the tone, pace and mentality for his future.

How did you break into the concert business?

I went to a relatively conservative school. My predecessor would book things like Dan Fogelberg and I booked things like the Ramones and the B-52's. I constantly had a rebellious streak in me. I felt some moral responsibility — or some bent desire — to turn people on to new music.

I came out of college and I worked at a small agency called Cricket Talent. It was owned by a large English agency and booked things like Echo & The Bunnymen, Selector, Madness, Haircut 100 and Teardrop Explodes — basically what was, I think, the front curve of new wave music.

When I left there, I went to be a talent buyer at what was probably the best club in the country at the time, The Ritz in New York.

I worked there for several years and then went on to work for Bill Graham Management in New York. Then I worked in the record business at PolyGram and at Arista. My last job at a label was as a vice president of artist development at Arista.

What inspired your move back to the agency side of the business?

I found myself distanced from live music, which was something that was always really important to me. So I took the leap and went back into the agency business and did a stint at ITG.

My initial goal was to be more than an agent because I had an extensive marketing and artist development background. My job was originally set for that kind of role but I don't think it was fully realized.

Then when the ITG partnership of Wayne Forte and Mike Farrell split up, I finished out my term there and said to Tammy Shin, who's my right arm here today, "I'm gonna try to go off on my own. Will you join me and help me do this?"

So off we went. We actually moved into a friend's office space and the comic irony is — and I wish I had documented this with a photo — we started in what was Vernon Reid's guitar closet. It was literally a closet.

I remember when the phone guy came to the office. He said, "This is where you want me to put the phone system? In the closet?"

It wasn't long after that I brought Larry Webman on. Soon, the people who leased the office space the closet was in parted company so we were once again on the fly.

Where did you go from there?

I'm not one to love high rise elevator buildings so I always envisioned transforming the apartment next to my home into an office space. It had become vacant and I thought working there would have a much more homey vibe.

There was this basement full of junk and I convinced my landlord to duplex this little space. And so there we were, in an office with people cutting the floor with a chain saw while we're working. We've always been in this gentle growth process — always worked in kind of a state of flux.

Now, we've finally, in my mind, realized what this space is. The terminology that I use is that it's a very user-friendly office. There's a murphy desk in the office for a tour manager to come in and work. There's a pull-out sofa bed. The intention is much more informal — family style.

The downstairs where everybody works is sectioned into three little rooms. It's all open. There are no doors. I think it contributes to a creative melting pot environment.

Is there anything else unusual about the way you've structured Little Big Man?

Yes. I don't book territorial. I don't believe in it. Part of the reason I don't believe in it is that an act has a vision. It may be a vision for a particular album cycle or for a particular tour. And it's kind of like the game telephone, where you start in a circle and the first person says, "The sky is blue." And by the time it reaches around the rest of the circle, it's "I think I see a fiery plane crash across the blue sky." So it loses the vision. It loses its focus.

I don't mean to be slanderous towards anyone but the person who's booking the Southeast for some other agency, who's booking four and five and six things at once, is no different than when a radio promotion person gets to a programmer's ear for three minutes and tries to plow through three or four records at a time.

What are your day-to-day responsibilities at Little Big Man?

The lion's share of the talent here I have signed so everything crosses my desk. Because we're on top of one another, we hear each other's phone conversations and we're intimately involved. Like Nat's working on the Sarah McLachlan tour but I'm her responsible agent. Nat and I liaise but it's a singular focus.

If there's a particular nature to the type of deals that you try to carve, one person's doing it. For Kula Shaker, I booked a leg, Larry booked a leg, Nat booked a leg. I think that allows people to develop a relationship because God forbid someone gets sick for awhile.

It's really important to me that the character of the company comes through. Much of the character of the company is me. The character of the company also is Larry Webman; it's Nat Farnham; it's Tammy Shin.

Also, because of the fact that I'm an ex-marketing person, I approach the job with a wider mind set than, "Here's the tour." I would be really bored doing this every day if it was: route the tour, give us our dates and oh, you gotta get us more money.

Do you listen to music every day?

In a casual manner, I probably do. It might not be me actively putting the stereo on or putting a disc in my computer to listen while I'm sitting at my desk but I hear music every day. I hear it in my head. I walk down the street singing. I'm the standing joke in the neighborhood. It's like, "Oh, the guy's singing again." And that's the mind set here at Little Big Man.

I do this because I love it. I do it because the only instrument I play is the stereo. And I do this from a place of friendship.

I've seen management teams come and go with some of my clients, and I still remain in place. I really pride myself on the relationships.

It isn't about how quick can we make money. I think if you're true to the spirit of what you're doing, the riches come. My weekly draw is considerably less than I've ever made and I'm happier than I've ever been. And I think the people that work for me really enjoy what they do and I give them a lot of latitude to do it.

You can look at business like choosing a box of crayons. At a lot of places, people get the little eight pack with red, brown, green, blue, and so on. I feel like someone gave me the box of 64 Crayolas with the sharpener in the back.

How do you develop a client's career?

We take on a responsibility for someone's livelihood. We have to protect and nurture and fight for someone's livelihood in a way that will perpetuate a career. It's not always a financial fight.

I've been really blessed. Most managers of my clients see and share the collective vision. To nurture an act that doesn't have, for example, record company tour support, you have to get six or seven or eight really, really strong heartbeats and then do a little bit of cardio massage and build it.

I never have felt handcuffed creatively. I've had moments as a manager, and as an agent, that feel like it's a test of moral fortitude but I know how bad I want it.

I don't think I have anybody that's dictatorial to me, that says, "Book the tour. Do it this way. Do it that way." They hired me and they hired Little Big Man because they want my input.

Tell me more about your relationship with Sam Feldman.

My partnership with Sam Feldman in Canada is the most incredible experience I've ever had in my life. When I opened Little Big Man, I did it from my own pocket. We're a little over three years old now, but when I opened it, I emptied my bank account.

In the process, I realized that I'd looked after several Canadian clients including Sarah McLachlan. I've never quite understood why an agency in Canada, like S.L. Feldman which represents the lion's share of Canadian talent, loses the talent as soon as it crosses the border.

So I approached Sam saying, "Look, I have this idea that maybe we create some sort of participatory situation where we selectively book each other's roster, me in the U.S., you in Canada.” It’s hard enough to know what the right room is in Lawrence, Kansas, let alone for me to pretend that I know the right place for my band to play in Guelph, Ontario. That would be deceptive.

So we created a relationship and Sam’s allowed me to have the vision. He has helped carry the vision by being committed to artist development. He’s as passionate about music as I am. He is somebody who has given me the box of 64 Crayolas.

How do you determine which acts you want to represent?

You feel it in your gut. Richard Ashcroft, who fronts the Verve, he’s a star. He radiates sitting at a dinner table, let alone sitting on stage. Crispian Mills from Kula Shaker just radiates. Tricky is a creative of acts that want to win. You see somebody who has it in their eyes. I hate to keep going back to the Verve but Richard Ashcroft has it. You can’t not feel him radiate. And it’s not because he does it with a lot of bravado. He’s a star. And Sarah McLachlan, she’s the warmest, most incredible, approachable person I know and I think that’s where her success lies. She has the voice of an angel.

What do you think is wrong with the business?

We’re playing at kids a lot and we’re not playing to them. We’re not figuring out creative ways for them to participate in the whole process. Buying a concert ticket does not yield participation. It doesn’t. Sarah, for example, allows people to participate.

A lot of the mind set behind bility that we took on with Lilith. We wanted to find a way to at least get new music out to people and we wanted to have a record store on the road and we wanted to do in-stores — nurture participation.

I sat in a meeting recently with a potential sponsor for next year’s Lilith Fair and they said, “Well, do you really have to go down this mamby pambly politically correct, clean sponsor path?” And I was like, “You know what? Yeah.” There are a lot of really socially conscious companies out there that are committed in the same way that we are to making this a better place to live in the future. That’s important.

Lilith donated over $700,000 to charity. It’s funny to me at times because we were lampooned by a couple of people saying, “Oh it wasn’t rock enough and it wasn’t urban enough.” It’s easy when something’s successful for people to take shots at it. But there wasn’t a lot of attention drawn to the fact that we gave $700,000 to charity. There are women’s shelters out there that we paid for beds for an entire year. It’s always easy to focus on the negative.

When you see a flower growing on the side of the road, it’s amazing how quick we tread on it. And that’s not the spirit of this place.

The spirit of it is my relationships. My relationship with Terry McBride is one example. We’re partners on Lilith and I look after several of his clients including Sarah, Moist, the Devlins and the Barenaked Ladies.

I’ve been fortunate. Once people work with us, and they have more than one client, they ask me to book their other clients. They love the people here. It’s really warm and fuzzy.

I know these are all buzz words of some granola munchin’ dreamer, but that’s where I opened this place from. I opened it from a passionate, dreamy kind of vision of “How do we build a place that I would want to work at?”

Have you ever thought of selling Little Big Man?

I have been approached by nearly every major agency in terms of them getting me or getting Little Big Man. I’m incredibly flattered, because I didn’t start Little Big Man with the intent of building this boutique agency for someone to buy.

The intent was to do this because I believe in the talent and I want to fight everyday for it.

I want to go home excited and I want to smile when I get on the phone with a promoter.

It’s about Nick Miller being excited about his Verve date. It’s about Rich Levy going, “I think you’re over stepping, but you’ve never been wrong yet Marty and the deal’s a fair deal. I’m there with ya.” And it’s him calling me up after the first week saying, “We’re at 500 tickets. It’s outselling every other show I have.”

Can you talk more about the spirit of the deal?

The spirit of the deal is really, really important. The question is: What’s our emotional investment? The financial investment — I’m willing to make that. I’m willing to take three to five years to help an act become an earner.

Most record companies aren’t willing to do that anymore. Most record companies are whacking the first single out there and if it doesn’t fly, that’s it.

I went to see a band last night that was opening for Letters To Cleo. There were five people from ICM there. Barry Bell from Premier was there. There were people from Pinnacle there. The band was good but they weren’t for me.

I closed my eyes and I tried to think about where would I take it fucking whirling dervish. You can tell. Ron Sexsmith is one of the best living songwriters around. My management client, Peter Stuart of Dogs Eye View, is just a mind blowing songwriter. He’s a passionate performer but the words — they’re incredible.

Another part of it is, I have a lot

Lilith was participation. Obviously, we have a responsibility to put a great package together each night that’s gonna put buns in seats. But part of the beauty of putting those buns in seats is turning them on to Madeleine Peyroux or turning them on to Kim Fox.

And there was a moral responsinext. I was having a hard time realizing it beyond its potential at radio. Radio will play the first single, we'll get one tour and then when the second single doesn't go on the radio, it hits a wall. I can't take something on that I don't know what the third step in the process is. It just doesn't work for me or anybody in my office.

There are bands that can play to 1,000 people each night and it's their livelihood. It's their job. And then there are other bands that, because we've put all these things under the grow lights and they've got to grow really fast, have an unrealistic idea of what their career is.

It's the mentality of: "We have a big hit single. We've got to play bigger places for more money." Well, the kid's involvement was with the song. They don't even know the band. Why don't we let them know the band first.

That's the spirit of Little Big Man. It's the little train that could. It's a lot of me and Nat and Tammy and Larry and Marnie going, "I think I can. I think I can." It's spending four days looking for a date for Beth Orton that's the right date, because I think I can. It's standing there in the wings when

Sarah does "Angel," crying. It's going to the press conference at Lilith and having Emily from the Indigo Girls afterwards come over and say, "I needed to figure out who you were 'cause I saw you crying during the check presentation."

And it's because of the music. When it's not about music anymore, I suspect that I won't do it anymore. Sam does it because of music. Larry Webman, every day of his life, does it because of music. He doesn't do it because we're making a lot of money. You know what, hopefully that happens. Hopefully, the dividends of being sincere and real are that we make money and that we can make a livelihood and perpetuate a career for ourselves.

But it's those moments, crying at a check donation, people working together, that are the spirit of the deal.

So, you're content with Little Big Man's progress?

Oh yeah. People have come to me and said, "You know, you're doing good with Little Big Man but you need a bigger stick. You need a big agency behind you." I scratch my head and say, "Why do I need to do what everyone else is doing? My path seems to be working. I'm helping build careers. My artists are garnering critical, emotional and financial success. So why do I need a big stick? So I can go beat a promoter up and hurt him? So I can take him out of the path of being a participant? I think not."

I like being able to pick up the phone and go, "You know, I'm sorry about last night. I know you lost $150." I've never had to make the phone call and say, "I'm sorry about last night that you lost 25 grand. Tough shit." I never want to be in that place, ever.

We had a date that didn't do very well and the promoter didn't even have to make the phone call to say, "Can you help?" Maybe $2,000 was lost and Nat and I had already called the manager saying, "You know, the guy got hurt. There was torrential rain that night and probably what ultimately did us in was the rain's effect on the walk up." And the manager wrote a check for $500.

Then, the promoter called me and said, "You know, it ain't all the way but it helps." There's a "fuck him" attitude that's pervasive in this business, an attitude I don't believe in. Most people believe "if promoter X is not there, someone else will buy it."

I like the people I work with and I don't treat them that way.

So it's important to nurture your relationship with the promoters?

"Oh yeah. They're friends. Nick Miller is my friend. Michael Belkin is my friend. Bob Roux and Louis Messina, I consider friends. Mitch Slater is a friend. Eric Herz at Metropolitan is my best friend. And it's no different than the nature of the relationships that I have with artists.

I'm passionate about my business associates, my clients, my life. I have no choice. I don't know any other way.

For a lot of years, I bumped around the path, trying to find my way, no differently than an artist going through the cycle of hit records and the downfall from a hit record, or the cycle of critical acclaim and the lack of success.

I've found my place. I've been offered a lot of money to leave my place, a lot more than I make, a lot more than I've ever made, but I ain't goin' anywhere. I might have to knock down the wall into my apartment for this place to grow, but I ain't goin' anywhere.

A few things the "Big Boys" don't want you to know...

- I Table Top Productions' roster includes groups that can out draw many of the big agency's so-called "headliners". Among those are: Hotel California (Eagles Tribute); Elvin Bishop; Those Darn Accordions; Sticky Fingers (Stones Tribute); John Staples' Tribute to John Lennon and the Rock for Real All-Stars featuring key members of The Gentrys, Brownsville Station, Badfinger and the Classics IV.
- II These acts are priced below many of the "Big Boys" higher priced "star attractions". (Are we beginning to make sense here?)
- III Table Top is a "boutique" operation, specializing in an eclectic, quality roster of acts designed for fairs, festivals, special events and casinos. We are not in New York, Beverly Hills or other "high rent districts". We are a low overhead operation passing those savings to the talent buyer! We appreciate your business and we care about each date we book!! (This is sounding better all the time!)

TO: ERIK THOMSEN - ET PROMOTION A/S
RE: MICHAEL JACKSON - SELL OUT SHOWS AT NATIONAL STADIUM

Dear Erik,

A big thank you to you and ET Promotion A/S, for using my company to handle production and logistics on the magical Michael Jackson sell out shows in Copenhagen!

After more than 25 years in the business, this was indeed, for me and my staff, crew and subcontractors, the most spectacular and exiting event ever!

Please communicate our sincere thanks and respect to Michael Jackson, Quinta Communications, Chris Lamb & Laura, Rick O'Brien, Roy Lamb and all of the very professional tour crew, for the outstanding performance that made these two shows so successful. Especially a big thank you for the amazing support they all gave to make the "birthday party" happen on stage, including fiftytwo Tivoli Guards playing "Happy Birthday To You", the big cake and fireworks! Absolute magic!

And finally, your enthusiasm and strong believe in your Artist, was crystal clear from the early discussion and planning we had back in September '96. Ninetysix thousand Danes proved you right! Congratulations!

All the best,

PADDY GYTHFELDT
