DENVER—Of the 56,000 mentally retarded residents of Colorado, an estimated 85% can achieve social and vocational independence, if given proper help.

Yet due to lack of public understanding, they are more often treated as objects of curiosity and need, than as responsible and useful citizens.

To help correct this perception, KBTV, the Gannett television station in Denver, turned its cameras on retarded adults who are marrying, living independently and holding regular jobs. In a documentary series entitled "Doing the Best We Can" these residents spoke for themselves and told their own stories to KBTV reporter Bertha Lynn and cameraman John Fosholt, revealing interests and aspirations similar to those of their fellow citizens who are not handicapped.

KBTV was applauded for furthering public awareness of the facts about mental retardation by the Association for Retarded Citizens with its Excellence Award for Community Television. The series was also recognized by the One to One Foundation, a national organization concerned with the needs of the developmentally disabled.

The real reward came, however, in doing the best we can to help others do the best they can.

At Gannett, we recognize the responsibility our newspapers and broadcasting services have to the needs of the entire community. And from Denver to Detroit, Tucson to Tarrytown, Pensacola to Port Huron, each Gannett member is free to serve those needs in its own way.

For more information about Gannett, write: Gannett Co., Inc.; Corporate Communications; Lincoln Tower; Rochester, N.Y. 14604, or call (716) 546-8600.
7-7-7 to ??-??

FCC Chairman Mark S. Fowler today (Monday) fires major salvo in what has been growing campaign for repeal or modification of commission’s rule limiting ownership of stations to seven AM, seven FM and seven TV. In speech at NATPE convention, in Las Vegas, he will say he does not support bans on ownership when only justifications are “vague” statements as to how they contribute to diversity. He will also say 7-7-7 rule lacks logic (same limits are applied regardless of market size) and leads to inefficiencies. He also notes that permitting multiple owners to grow in size could have public interest payoff in enabling them to compete with networks.

Fowler won’t ignore prime-time access rule; in brief section of speech, he will restate his opposition to it.

Decoded

All that’s left of National Association of Broadcasters’ radio and television codes is preamble, after last week’s suspension of all advertising standards (see page 45). Other halves of codes, program standards, have been suspended since late 1976, when U.S. District Court Judge Warren J. Ferguson ruled family-viewing provisions in TV code violated First Amendment (Broadcasting, Nov. 15, 1976).

In spite of predictions that code is gone forever, Code Authority staffs in New York, Washington and Hollywood will “remain in place,” pending outcome of latest case, according to John Summers, NAB executive vice president, general.

Bowling out

This week’s NATPE International convention could be last with networks as major participants. Network sources say there’s growing feeling that, as one put it, “NATPE is getting out of hand” as far as networks are concerned. “Not that we’re against NATPE,” he said, “but their scenario calls for big meetings between the networks and their affiliates at a time when the networks have nothing to tell affiliates.”

At NATPE meetings, he noted, affiliates always want to know about such things as new programs, program strategy and promotion plans, although networks themselves have not reached final decisions and usually don’t until time for their own big affiliate meetings two months later—which is when and where they’d prefer to make such disclosures anyway. Result could be substantial reduction in number of network people at future NATPE’s.

Ready market

If high-definition television is to have future, it must appeal to TV viewers. According to study commissioned by CBS and conducted by Eric Marder Associates, it does. Nearly 600 randomly selected “heads of households” were invited to CBS-demonstrations of HDTV in New York and Washington last month. Eighty-four percent of 292 who were asked whether they would pay extra 25% on purchase of next television set for HDTV said they would. Eighty percent of another 298 said they would be willing to pay 50% premium for HDTV. Study also suggested HDTV would have impact on viewing habits. Consumers said they would watch 10% more TV on weekdays and 14% more on weekends.

What’s in a name?

Poesy aside, it’ll at least mean new stationery when Teleprompter Corp., acquired by Westinghouse last year for $646 million, becomes Group W Cable in next few weeks.

Cable defended

J. Walter Thompson, number-two agency in broadcast billings (with $851.7 million in 1981) has sided with Cabietelevision Advertising Bureau in its dispute with Television Advertising Bureau over letter sent to cable advertisers by TVB suggesting elimination of cable and budgets for 1982 (Broadcasting, Feb. 15, et seq.). TVB advice was based on what it perceived as almost nonexistent cable viewing as evidenced by analysis of Arbitron November sweeps. In internal memo distributed to JWT’s branches around nation, Ronald Kaatz, senior vice president and director of media relations, said TVB action was “serious misuse of data.”

Kaatz said cable advertisers realize medium is still in its “infancy” and “see it in the value of providing a unique environment for targeting a selective message against a rather selective audience and in delivering supplementary weight in cable households.”

Allbritton’s aims

Rumors that Joe L. Allbritton would sell channel 7 WJLA-TV Washington if he succeeds in acquiring troubled New York Daily News can be discounted. Allbritton, who has made media history since his first newspaper acquisition (Washington Star, later sold to Time Inc.), regards WJLA-TV as crown jewel. Washington Post reported last week that Allbritton had offered Tribune Co., Chicago, $100 million for its New York News.

No price has ever been placed on WJLA-TV, Washington’s ABC-TV outlet, but new yardstick on station values is pending sale of channel 5 WCVB-TV Boston, also ABC affiliate, to Metromedia, Inc. for $220 million. Markets are comparable (Boston number six, Washington number eight).

Dereg hearings set

House Telecommunications Subcommittee hearings on pending broadcast deregulation legislation are projected for mid or late April, following meeting last week between Subcommittee Chairman Timothy E. Wirth (D-Colo.) and Representative Al Ski (D-Wash.). To be considered are variety of proposals ranging from Swift’s bill to eliminate comparative renewal proceedings (see page 180) to far more sweeping package (H.R. 5584-5585), advanced by Representative James Broyhill (R-N.C.), that would remove all content controls including political broadcasting rules.

Chipping in Group W (Westinghouse Broadcasting) pledged $100,000 for Broadcast Pioneers Education Fund, Inc., according to Ward L. Quaal, fund president. This is second contribution of that amount (first was from Hubbard Broadcasting Inc).

Sleeper

It’s belatedly discovered that agreement reached on AM broadcasting at western hemisphere conference in Rio de Janeiro last year may contain new problem in U.S.-Cuban radio dispute. State Department official, William Jahn, who was vice chairman of U.S. delegation to Rio, is studying whether Cuba—because it did not sign Final Acts of conference—would benefit from Article 12 of International Telecommunication Union convention, dealing with notification and registration of AM assignments. Article says stations not causing interference are entitled to protection, and Jahn says that might mean some low-power Cuban stations are entitled to protection from U.S. stations that are interfering with them.

As result, U.S. may not be in as solid legal position as it thought when Rio conference ended. Jahn has come up with intriguing thesis: It might be in U.S. interest not to ratify Rio agreement and thus avoid obligations it imposes. FCC officials do not endorse Jahn’s tentative findings, but neither have they studied implications of Article 12.

Larger than life. Geer DuBois, New York, has created first TV commercial for new cosmetic line. Colorplus, that starts this month on ABC's Night of 100 Stars and Academy Awards, with spot to follow nationally. Illustrating "color" aspect of product, spot features dancers accompanied by giant-sized lipstick, nail polish and other cosmetics.

Healthy 7-Up. Seven-Up Co. has embarked on new ad campaign that takes away emphasis on taste of soft drink and instead stresses health. In new broadcast and print campaign, side-by-side comparisons are made between 7-Up and other leading soft drinks to isolate those not containing caffeine. New slogan is ... "No caffeine. Never had it. Never will." Philadelphia Philips pitcher Tug McGraw is featured in TV spots.

Heavy spending, Scripto Inc., through ad agency, Barton-Campbell, Atlanta, has put finishing touches on $7-million ad campaign set to peak in August and September for back to school rush. Largest percentage of campaign is earmarked for network TV. Scripto's 30-second spots are designed to show erasable pens as product that is no longer novelty. Spots will run on prime-time shows including: WKRP in Cincinnati, Real People, That's Incredible and Incredible Hulk. Other writing instruments promoted by Scripto will be mechanical pencil cards, value packs combining pens and pencils and leads. Also included in campaign are rebate incentives.

Silverman's salvo. InterMedia Entertainment Inc., New York and Los Angeles, headed by former NBC President Fred Silverman, has appointed Shapiro/Budrow & Associates, New York, as its advertising agency. Initial advertisements for new firm are being prepared to break in trade publications in mid-March. S/B also is creating on-air promotion, graphics and related material for InterMedia, which will be involved in programming for television, motion pictures and new media.

Western road show. ABC-TV's Western client/sales presentation moved to WABC-TV New York, after a stop at KGO-TV San Francisco (Broadcasting, March 8). Dick O'Leary, (above) president of ABC-TV's Owned Television Stations Division, tips his hat to the crowd inside Waldorf-Astoria hotel in New York. The event attracted over 1,200 media buyers and corporate representatives.

ot something for everyone!
Tracking a decline in sports viewing

America has quit watching sports. Actually that's a little strong, but during 1981 people watched less auto racing, baseball, football, bowling, tennis, horse racing and Wide World of Sports-type shows than they did in 1980. These are the top-line findings of a report from the N W Ayer media research department that looked at the first half of 1981 versus the first half of 1980.

Auto Racing: The jewel of the auto racing season is suffering. In 1977 the delayed broadcast of the Indianapolis 500 drew a 15.6 rating and a healthy 32% share of audience. By 1980 these figures had slipped to 13.8 (down 12%) and 27 share. In 1981 the erosion continued, reaching a five-year low of 12.8 rating (down another 7%) and 24 share. Much of the loss in audience to this event is attributable to the 55-plus age group. While total viewing of the race is off 10% from 1980, the older segment of the audience is down by 18%. In comparison, the 18-24 age group has actually shown an increase of 4% in its audience.

Baseball: Even before the players' strike, the fans were turning away from the national pastime. Weekend baseball through June, which averaged a 7.0 rating in 1980, dipped to 6.7 in 1981 (down 4%). Total audience, however, crashed by 12%. While teen-agers increased their viewing and 55-plus showed no decline, the all-important 18-49-year-old segment fell by an incredible 23%. It seems clear that all the complaining about money and the idea of millionaire baseball players going on strike is most repugnant to the people in the work force.

Football: The Ayer study looked at only the January-June time period so the regular football season was not covered. The college bowl games and the professional championship games are, however, included. Even these long-time favorites have suffered significant audience erosion. The college bowl games were hit hardest as the Rose, Cotton, Hula, Senior and Sun Bowls in 1981 recorded their lowest ratings over the last five years. The Rose Bowl was off 11%, the Cotton Bowl off 20%, the Sun Bowl off an incredible 34%. The main loss in the bowl game viewing was women in the 35-49 age group (35% decline) and teen-agers who were off by 15%. Men were off a consistent 10% in all age categories.

The pros were not so damaged but even their showcase events fell off in 1981. The two championship games, which in 1980 averaged 33.8, were off slightly to 33.2. But the big story is the continuing slide of the Super Bowl as it has fallen from a 47 rating in 1978 and 1979 to 46 in 1980 to 44 in 1981. While both sexes showed viewing losses to the Super Bowl in 1981 versus 1980, women dropped 18% while men were down only 8%. The 55-plus age group, however, was the big loser as it shrank by nearly 20%.

Even the relatively minor sports have suffered audience losses.

Bowling: The Pro Bowlers Tour reached an all-time high rating in 1979 of 8.8, dipped slightly in 1980 to 8.5 and held its 8.5 in 1981. Despite holding its household ratings, the number of viewers dropped from an average of 9.7 million to 9.5 million.

Tennis: Yet another dismal showing. Grand Prix Tennis, down 9%; Grand Slam Tennis, down 13%; Tournament of Champions, down 18%; first weekend of Wimbledon, down 25% (second weekend occurred in July, outside the study period). Women, especially younger women, absorbed the majority of this loss.

While total adults were off by 13%, women fell by 20% and women 18-34 dropped by 29%.

Anthropologies: Sports anthropologies, as a category, have not suffered badly. They were down to an average 8.3 rating in 1981 versus an 8.5 in 1980. The flagship of the category, Wide World of Sports, is, however, off by 5% in 1981 (10.4 versus 10.9).

The superstars: This made-for-TV event, where athletes compete (often ineptly) in sports other than their own, is on a greased track sliding into oblivion. From a healthy 10.5 rating in 1977 this hyped feature has dropped steadily every year, reaching an 8.8 in 1980 and plummeting again in 1981 to 7.3 (down 30% in four years).

The slide in homes viewing sports is an alarming observation for the networks, but equally as depressing is the loss in number of viewers per household. In all sports for 1981 (except basketball), the number of viewers per viewing household was down from 1980. For example, the Super Bowl dropped 10% from 2.0 viewers per viewing household in 1980 to 1.8 in 1981. A seemingly insignificant decline per household, but when spread across some 30-million homes, a major loss. Other examples show baseball viewers per viewing household -10% tennis, -6%; anthologies, -5%; college bowl games and Indy 500, -4%, and bowling and horse racing, -3%.

From this information several industry conclusions can be drawn.

The impact of cable television is being felt. The availability of cable allows a wider range of viewing options. With more options available, the viewer does not have to "settle" for the sports offerings of the networks. Other sports or other viewing fare become a real alternative. This could help explain the drop-off of female viewers of many sports.

Television is becoming an individualized medium. With more multiple set households and a shrinking family size, the ratio of viewers to sets is declining. Thus, rather than gathering around the set in a familial way, people now tend to view what they individually desire while other members of the family adjourn to other rooms to view their own programs.

Sports viewing is being spread out. ESPN (24-hour sports), the superstation, the USA and Madison Square Garden networks, increased local coverage of base ball, basketball and hockey, have all contributed to the increased number of hours of sports programming that are telecast. Viewers may be watching as much sports as ever, but spreading it over different hours and different events.

In Tampa and St. Petersburg, the weather takes on a special importance. Because when the sun comes out, the tourists will follow.

At Gaylord Broadcasting, we realize just how significant the weather can be. And that's why more television viewers tune in the WTVT forecast than any other station.

You see, at WTVT we're the only station in the country with our very own weather satellite terminal. Which means we're the only station with direct, 24-hour access to satellite weather pictures.

What's more, we were also the first in Tampa/St. Pete to utilize the mini-cam for live news broadcasts. And when it comes to sports, we're the home station for the Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

So it's no secret why our weather, news and sports programs are watched more than any others. We've simply made ourselves heard.

Requiem for a heavyweight

EDITOR: It was sad to read about the demise and change of format for one of the world’s greatest radio stations—WABC(AM) New York.

Growing up on Long Island was a pleasure listening to WABC. Music Radio 77 and Dan Ingram, Cousin Brucie, Harry Harrison, Ron Lundy. “The superhit sounds of, WABC strikes gold, It’s now number one on 77 WABC,” etc.

And what a high attending college in Tennessee and picking up WABC at night almost 800 miles away.

Probably my biggest thrill though was during Easter vacation in Fort Lauderdale in the mid 1970’s when a black convertible pulled up next to me at a red light. Blaring away some 1,600 miles away was WABC. It was thumbs up for my new-found friend in that car.

In the mid to late 1970’s, WABC’s audience declined, suggesting a new direction for the station. And now, in 1982, the talk bandwagon has been jumped on once again. Ironic, but WABC in New York has increased its audience share with a format similar to WABC’s during the past couple of years.

In conclusion, broadcasters and listeners alike must step back, reminiscence for a few seconds, and offer thanks to the former president of ABC Radio, the late Hal Neal, who pioneered much of WABC’s traditions. Radio will never be the same.—William Williams, account executive, ABC-TV Spot Sales, Detroit, Mich.

Bell reply

EDITOR: While your March 1 editorial (“Belling Bell”) adds to the rhetoric accompanying our agreement with the Department of Justice, it does not contribute to an understanding of the issues.

Real competition for intercity phone business exists today. We and others have estimated that our share of long distance market revenues will be less than 50% by the mid-eighties.

Alternate distribution systems exist now. As you well know, all one has to do is notice the satellite receivers mushrooming up along interstate highways and on urban business rooftops to realize that.

This means that for publishers and others who don’t want Bell to carry their information, there are and will be other vendors to serve them. While they may refuse us, we cannot and will not be able to refuse them, since we are and will continue to be regulated.

As to the cross-subsidy question, as you know, we already are compelled to establish a fully separate subsidiary to offer competitive services, except basic long distance service. So despite the cries of our competitors to the contrary, the possibility for cross-subsidies does not exist.

Your Jan. 18 editorial cited “new dynamics of competition in the communications marketplace.” Many do not seem too eager to have the Bell System as part of that competition. We seek to compete on a fair and equal basis. Nothing more. But nothing less, either.—William P. Mullane Jr., assistant vice president, AT&T, New York.

CBS complaint

EDITOR: CBS News’s evident anxieties about its reputation for fairness (BROADCASTING, Feb. 8 and 15) [in its interview with General Westmoreland] are understandable. Accuracy in Media has—among the first time—demonstrated how CBS edited out certain responses (and certain people altogether) that did not quite square with the “conspiracy theory” it was peddling. In addition, AIM depicted all the sordid details of the network’s penchant for “trial by television” and the “ambush interviewing” as practiced by that nonpareil of the news business, Mr. Mike Wallace.

I suppose one cannot do anything about CBS News except to hope that their deliverance from the network news business is close at hand, (i.e., cable television).—Anthony B. Cavender, Houston.

Suspensions

EDITOR: I wonder if David Gergen’s calling the current crop of White House reporters “one of the finest ever” (BROADCASTING, March 1) is reason for concern? Does it mean he is happy reporters are swallowing what’s being spoon-fed?

It sounds as though Sara Fritz knows what should have been known much earlier . . . perhaps even during the campaign. I’m pleased her comments were included in the article.—Tom Sorensen, news director, KSKO/AM, Sioux Falls, S.D.

Connoisseur

EDITOR: Like fine wine and cheese, BROADCASTING gets better, as evidenced by the new graphics. Continuing best wishes.—Skip Finley, president, Sheridan Broadcasting Network, New York.

PTAR: Coming back in from the cold

Threatened access rule looks like a winner at the FCC as other program possibilities—financial interests and return to syndication—begin to get networks' attention

For an organization grown to imposing strength at least in part on the basis of the FCC's prime-time access rule, the presence at its convention this week of six members of an FCC with a reputation for de—un—regulation suggests a handful of Christians in a stadium full of lions. But it's likely that before the last gavel falls at the NATPE International convention in Las Vegas this week, programmers and commission members will be on friendlier terms.

For the question of repeal of PTAR, the rule adopted in 1970 that bars networks from offering affiliates in the top 50 markets more than three hours of prime-time programing, is receding as an issue at the commission. The vigorous opposition of affiliates to network proposals for repeal or modification had pretty much persuaded commission officials that the time is not ripe for taking up the issue. More than that, there has been a change in the strategy of at least two of the networks, and it seems to be working.

NBC, and to a lesser extent ABC, are focusing their lobbying at the commission on repeal of two collateral rules—those barring networks from acquiring any financial interest in programing they purchase, other than the rights to two network runs, and from engaging in domestic syndication of programing. NBC and ABC representatives, at least, appear to be conceding the virtual impossibility any time soon of persuading a majority of the commissioners to vote their way. The only commissioner regarded as certain to vote for repeal is Chairman Mark S. Fowler.

On the other hand, chances for eliminating the collateral rules seem promising. Not only would repeal be in keeping with the commission's interest in leaving such regulation to the marketplace, those rules lack the same constituency as PTAR; important affiliates do not stand to lose the money they now make in the prime-time slot the networks want returned. The struggle would be with the nonindustry program producers, principally in Hollywood. What's more, the hardship argument that NBC officials are now making rings with more credibility than it did in the late 1960's.

Commission repeal of the two rules would not end the matter, however. The consent decrees the networks signed with the Justice Department to end its antitrust suit against them contain restrictions on the networks that are virtually identical to the provisions of those rules.

Nevertheless, it was not surprising last week when a commission official, in a background briefing for reporters, talked of severing the financial interest and syndication rules from PTAR. The latter, he said, "has a low priority." The others, however, are likely to be considered "soon"—in May, according to some sources.

The rules were adopted at the conclusion of a lengthy inquiry into the networks' alleged dominance of the television programing market. Producers were found to be at a disadvantage in dealing with the networks, the only market they had at the time. The rules, particularly PTAR, were designed to promote the program production market and to stimulate diversity of programing. (Initially, the commission had proposed limiting networks to filling 50% of prime time. PTAR was a recommendation of Westinghouse Broadcasting Co., now the most vigorous defender of the rule.)

Times have changed since the late 1960's. The market for programing has expanded, with pay cable, subscription television, videocassettes and videodisks creating new demand. And, indeed, the special staff inquiry into commission regulation of the networks conducted during the tenure of Chairman Charles D. Ferris concluded in 1980 with sharply critical comments of all three.

It called the financial interest and syn-

Corvo's the one for NATPE

Phil Corvo, director of program operations for KSTV(TV) San Diego, was named last Thursday to be executive director of NATPE International, succeeding George Back, who's leaving May 31 to return to the syndication business fulltime (Broadcasting, March 1).

The choice of Corvo was announced Thursday night at a news conference in Las Vegas, where NATPE was opening its 19th annual conference (see page 82). He was nominated by a search committee headed by Charles Larsen, WABC-TV New York, and was approved by the NATPE board Wednesday night. Larsen said the committee had considered "a lot of people" and held "serious interviews" with several. "It was a hard decision," he said, "but we feel good about [the choice of Corvo]."

Corvo will move to New York and take up his new post there May 1, giving him a month's overlap with Back in which to break in. Several NATPE insiders—aside from Corvo, who is second vice president and was scheduled to move up to first after this convention—reportedly were among those considered for post, which is said to carry an annual salary of about $85,000.

Corvo has been with KSTV(TV), a McGraw-Hill station, for about nine years. He formerly was program and news director of KIRO-TV Seattle, and before that was production manager and program director at KSTV(TV) Sacramento, Calif.
dication rules “misguided at best,” and said that “at the cost of disrupting an efficient risk-sharing arrangement between networks and program suppliers and increasing concentration in network supply, the rules diverted business from the existing networks’ syndicated distribution arms.” The staff said the rules did little to further the goals of diversity or competition in the program supply market. And as for PTAR, the staff said it reduced network dominance in the sense of mandating a reduction in the networks’ prime-time schedules, and added, “The assertion that a reduction in ‘network dominance,’ thus defined, could be in the public interest . . . is wholly at odds with elementary First Amendment principles.” The First Amendment aspect of the dispute is known to disturb Fowler, as well as other commissioners. In addition, he has made no secret of his distaste for a rule that interferes with the normal workings of the marketplace. But as nose counters among the networks have discovered, there are no other commissioners who appear prepared to vote for repeal of PTAR.

Anne P. Jones, the only commissioner who won’t be at NATPE, at one time seemed likely to vote for repeal. She says she regards those on both sides of the network-affiliation relationship as “big boys” who should be able to negotiate a business deal without FCC intervention. But last week, she said she had been hearing “from people like Taft Broadcasting” offering counter arguments. She indicated she is reconsidering issues of “localism” and network “leverage” in dealing with affiliates that proponents of the rule have raised.

Commissioners Mimi Weyforth Dawson and Henry Rivera, the newest members of the commission, also indicated their visceral feeling is for repeal. “If it’s a question of government inserting itself in a contractual relationship between two parties, I’m reluctant to do it,” Rivera said. Dawson said, “These are the kinds of restrictions I feel we should be doing away with.”

But they both added qualifications. Rivera said he would want to review the reasons the rule was adopted, whether it is achieving its aims and what the consequences of repeal would be. Dawson said she would be going to NATPE with “an open mind.” She was also talking of a structural approach that would, among other things, obviate the need for rules designed to reduce network “dominance” of the programming market. She said elimination of the multiple ownership rules would permit entities to grow in size sufficient to compete with the networks. Then, she said, “perhaps PTAR and financial interest rules wouldn’t seem so critical.”

Among those favoring retention, Commissioner Joseph Fogarty is a convert. Three years ago, he made it clear at a NATPE convention he favored repeal. But now, he is understood to be “favorably disposed” to the rule, as an aide put it—though he would make some modifications. Fogarty will detail his suggested changes today (March 15), at the convention’s first general session, “PTAR Forum.” His proposed changes are understanded to be designed to permit the networks to be more competitive in providing prime-time programming, while protecting the affiliates’ ability to make independent judgments.

Commissioners James H. Quello and Abbott Washburn are firm supporters of PTAR. “I felt all along that PTAR is a good thing, and I still do,” Washburn said the other day. “It has resulted in diversity of television fare.” Quello agrees, and makes the point that is of supreme importance to affiliates: The half hour from which networks are barred “is a very important revenue source for television stations in larger markets.” The networks are free to fill a half hour with news programming.

On the other hand, the financial interest and syndication rules seem to be the soft underbelly of commission regulation of television program supply. And NBC is doing what it can to penetrate it with high-level lobbying. Over the past month, Robert Mulholland, NBC president and chief operating officer; Irwin Segelstein, NBC vice chairman, and Corydon Dunham, executive vice president and general counsel, along with Peter Kenney, Washington vice president, visited each of the seven commissioners to argue that the rules, whose validity the networks never conceded, are now working an undue hardship on them. (NBC, which had not been a major syndicator, has no interest in getting back into that business, according to Kenney. But he said repeal of both rules is necessary because they “overlap.”)

Kenney, in his office last week, reviewed some of the points. He said pay cable programmers like Time Inc.’s Home Box Office are free to obtain not only exhibition but additional rights in programming they acquire while post-exhibition rights are denied the networks. “Let us compete fairly and without regulation in the marketplace,” he said. And networks, he added, assume the risk of production—paying up to 100% of the suppliers’ costs—without being able to gain from the post-exhibition rights to a show that is a hit. He said the networks “eat losses” on four out of five shows they finance, and added: “The basic theory should be that the person who takes the upfront risk should enjoy a share of the program’s success.” He also stated the truism that, “as profits decrease”—as NBC’s are—“the ability to absorb losses decreases.” One of the most dramatic changes in the programming market over the past 10 years that Kenney cited was the fact that networks are by no means the major source of revenue for motion picture producers. He cited published reports that, while the networks paid the studios $30 million last year, pay television paid $40 million—a figure likely to increase to $80 million this year—and that videocassettes accounted for $30 million last year and are likely to outpace sales to the television networks this year.

What of PTAR? NBC, Kenney said, is not seeking repeal. “Repeal would be desirable, but this is not our position.” He conceded that affiliates’ opposition was controlling. “The affiliates are not happy with rescinding PTAR, and I don’t think we’ll argue. We’ll set it aside.”

NBC is not alone in the new strategy. ABC’s Washington vice president, Gene Cowen, is also said to be shifting attention from PTAR to the financial interest and syndication rules. CBS is following NBC’s activities with interest but is continuing to focus on PTAR; its petition for waiver to permit its affiliates to carry an hour of network news is still pending before the commission. NBC seems to have little chance of winning commission approval any time soon, if at all.

(The FCC staff has been preparing an item proposing rejection of the CBS petition on the ground that the commission does not intend to deal with PTAR on a piecemeal basis. That was the ground the commission advanced in September in rejecting the proposal of KRON-TV San Francisco for modification of PTAR to permit affiliates to carry off-network programming in excess time from which it, along with network material, is barred. In rejecting that petition, the commission disposed of a pleading by NBC to expand the proceeding to include consideration of repeal of the entire rule.)

The arguments for repeal of the financial interest and syndication rules are not going unheeded. Fowler is said to be "sympathetic"—to feel that the regulations have been a "dissincentive" to the production of more programming. And Quello said that, while he favors retention of PTAR, he would "go along" with repeal of the collateral rules. At least, he feels the burden of proof is on those who argue they should be retained. "The network situation has changed drastically," he said last week. The other commissioners have not yet focused on the arguments.

Of course, the backers of those two rules have yet to make their arguments. "We will fight to the bitter end any attempt to relax or eliminate" those rules, Fritz Attaway, of the Motion Picture Association of America, said on Tuesday. He said MPAA feels the commission has already been "too lax" in enforcing them.

He also noted that, even if the FCC repealed the rules, the networks would be barred from negotiating with suppliers for anything but exhibition rights to their programs. The consent decrees—signed in the last couple of years—would remain a barrier. And MPAA would fight to retain them, too, Attaway said. Kenney, in effect, says the networks will have to take the hurdles one at a time and that the second will be easier if the FCC repeals the rules. "It won't happen overnight," he said. "It will be several years before we see the benefit of repeal—by which time there will be a diversity of sources, and costs will be skyrocketing."

TOP OF THE WEEK

IT'S BEGINNING TO LOOK LIKE THE END OF AN ERA

NAB lifts TV, radio advertising codes

In wake of Judge Greene's ruling, association's regulations are suspended pending outcome of Justice Department lawsuit

The National Association of Broadcasters suspended enforcement of all advertising provisions in its TV and radio codes last Wednesday (March 10). The move, made a week after a U.S. District Court ruled that part of the television code is illegal, eliminates advertising time standards, prohibitions in effect for years against the advertising of hard liquor, contraceptives, lottery information and program-length commercials and a long list of restrictions on how products may be presented to the public.

In suspending enforcement of its advertising standards, the NAB announced it plans to appeal a summary judgment by U.S. District Court Judge Harold Greene that the television code's multiple product standard violates antitrust laws. The standard, which prohibits the advertising of more than one product in commercials of less than 60 seconds, has caused some advertisers to pay more than they would have for advertising and, therefore, has increased the price of some products, according to Greene's decision (Broadcasting, March 8).

Two other TV standards, one limiting the commercial time that may be broadcast in an hour and another limiting the number of commercial interruptions in each program, have been designated for trial before Greene. That trial will now be delayed until NAB's appeal has been completed.

Cancellation of the code is meant to be temporary, according to Erwin Krasnow, NAB senior vice president and general counsel. In announcing it had "canceled and terminated" enforcement of the standards, NAB said it was doing so "until termination of the litigation or until further notice." Krasnow said an appeal could take "six months to two years."

Krasnow predicted it would be "easy for NAB to reinstate the standards once the antitrust case has come to a settlement or decision," but other NAB leaders predicted the opposite. "The code is dead," said one member of NAB's TV board, who said that because Judge Greene has ruled part of the code illegal, NAB will be reluctant to reinstate any part of it.

Advertising standards form the bulk of NAB's 30-year-old TV and radio codes. With their elimination go restrictions on the advertising of beer, wine, firearms and "personal products," such as hemorrhoid remedies, tampons and douches. Also gone is an outright prohibition on the advertising of "fortune-telling, occultism, astrology, phrenology, palm-reading, numerology, mind-reading, character reading or subjects of like nature," as well as a prohibition on the advertising of "tip sheets and other publications seeking to advertise for the purpose of giving odds or promoting betting."

Strict standards on the advertising of medical products are gone, including a prohibition on using "physicians, dentists, or nurses or actors representing" them. "Pitchman" and "bait and switch" tactics have been forbidden and the use of personal endorsements have been carefully controlled.

The practical effect of NAB's action on the advertising that is seen on the screen was not immediately clear. What did seem clear was that the networks would use NAB's move as an opportunity to take a fresh look at their own standards—presumably with an eye toward the feasibility of loosening them, since in most cases the networks claim their own are stricter than the NAB's. In official statements otherwise non-committal about future plans, ABC and CBS said they were reviewing their own standards. NBC officials said informally that review was "a good possibility." All three said advertising would still have to meet their standards.

ABC included a statement of its policy on multiple-product announcements, subject of the NAB code section specifically shot down by the court. ABC officials said it was "new wording" but reflected existing ABC policy on multiple-product announcements. In general, it seemed to contain substantially the same provisions as the court-invalidated code rule, except that it contained no reference to commercial length. Whether this is a relaxation of standards or not, officials said, would depend on how it is implemented.

There was speculation that at least some advertisers and agencies would begin pushing for liberties formerly prohibited by the code. "I'm waiting for the phone calls," said one network standards executive. But as of last Wednesday, he said, the phone hadn't started ringing.

Another network source speculated that networks would not lower their standards significantly below those in the code, if only because "if the NAB is allowed to reinstate its code, what would they do then?," if it's all left to the marketplace, he conceded. "Whatever one network does, the other networks will be doing by that afternoon."

Among other reactions:

M.S. Keliner, managing director of the Station Representatives Association, said it was "not in the public interest" to remove restrictions on the amount of commercial material that can be carried. He hastened to say he believes the vast majority of television stations will limit themselves to the amount that existed under the code.

"But there are always some weak links in the chain that may not live up to the restrictions that were in the code," he maintained.

He also suggested that the NAB might apply to Congress for relief to permit a voluntary code as has existed.

Roger Rice, president of the Television Bureau of Advertising, said: "It's ironic that the government talks about getting out of regulation and here we have a situation where there is industry self-regulation to benefit the public and the government is interfering."

Rice said he was "delighted" to learn that the NAB is going to appeal. It's important, he continued, that clutter be kept to a minimum if television is to grow.

NAB decided to appeal its case "because we think it was a wrong decision," said Krasnow.

A member of the NAB executive committee, however, said the appeal is a legal maneuver that could strengthen NAB's bargaining position in trying to reach an out-of-court settlement in the case. Krasnow confirmed that NAB is "talking with the Justice Department."

However, the appeal does not remove NAB or any of its code subscribers from the possibility of law suits over enforcement of the multiple products advertising standard. Although NAB spokesmen say they know of no suits being contemplated, there is said to be real concern over this possibility. "Any station could be liable if it followed the code," said one NAB television board member.

When the Justice Department first filed its antitrust suit against the advertising standards, NAB was warned of this outcome. Then FCC Common Carrier Chief Philip Verveer, formerly an antitrust lawyer at the Justice Department, told the NAB board the government "had a good case" and that if the industry fought and lost, "code members could be sued for treble damages by anyone who thought he had been hurt" by the standards.

Krasnow said last week, however, that it would be "difficult for anyone to prove damages" and that "our lawyers tell us we have a good case." The Washington firm of Howrey & Simon has been counseling NAB on the antitrust case.

ABC's Pierce says it isn't so to cable

Past and present opposition to wired medium has come back to haunt broadcaster as it seeks to market its own services to operators; letter to NCTA and MSO's seeks to differentiate company from its TV affiliates

Charges that ABC is "anti-cable" drew a reply last week from Fred Pierce, in his capacity as executive vice president of American Broadcasting Companies. In a letter to board members of the National Cable Television Association and some 80 other cable industry leaders, Pierce said he wanted to "clarify ABC's position toward the cable industry because there has been some misinformation concerning where ABC stands."

It doesn't take much to figure that ABC officials feel Ted Turner is responsible for some of what they see as "misinformation." Turner's Cable News Network is battling, as Turner has put it, "to the death" with the Satellite News Channels service to come from Group W and ABC, and Turner has accused ABC of trying to "torpedo" cable operators. A favorite Turner target: the Viewer Information and Education Committee (VIE) that ABC affiliates, with a boost from the network, started last summer.

Pierce, in his letter, speaks of "a period of major change" in the communications industry, saying ABC intends to be part of the change, and "a leader in the telecommunications industry in its broadest sense." That, he says, led to ABC's decision to enter cable programming. "We feel our belief in the future of the cable industry is underscored by the clear financial commitment we've made and will continue to make in the development and production of programming for cable."

"That is not to say," the letter adds, that "support for our existing businesses...has diminished. Growth in one area need not be counterproductive to another."

Pierce then cites the VIE campaign (with its message "Don't let them pull the plug on free TV") as "an example of support for an existing business." Saying that VIE broadcast spots "were produced and aired by individual stations," he cites his local station determined its own policy on this and other issues and that "we do not control our affiliates' activities, nor should we, since their business perceptions may be somewhat different from ours.

"The ABC Television Network," Pierce said, "has not utilized these spots," although he admits that the network occasionally uses a "made possible 'by advertiser-supported television'" tag on some "specially produced programs." Pierce termed that a "response to those who are negative about the quality of commercial broadcasting."

One person who's not buying that line is Geri Duckworth, one of the leaders in the effort to establish a cable affiliates association. Duckworth is with Cable TV of Puget Sound out of Tacoma, Wash.; just so happens that John Behnke, president of Fisher Broadcasting, which owns ABC affiliate KOMO-TV Seattle, is chairman of the VIE committee. "Behnke's doing everything he can to ruin us," Duckworth asserts, and with KOMO-TV one of the stations that will be providing feeds to Satellite News Channels, Duckworth vows there's no chance News Channels will appear on her system.

Although she had not yet received a copy of the Pierce letter, Duckworth said she had been told to expect one. Informed of its contents last week, she said of Pierce's effort to draw a distinction between ABC and its affiliates actions: "I refuse to allow that distinction to go down."

Late Thursday, Pierce said he hadn't yet received any formal responses, but cited recent conversations with major MSO's as indicative of ABC's acceptance within the cable industry.

Whatever response Pierce's letter generates in the rest of the cable industry, he's sure to find out first hand. He closed by saying, "I will be on the agenda at the NCTA convention in May and look forward to seeing you there."

More slack in the reins: FCC drops financial reporting form

In unanimous vote, commission drops financial reporting rule saying burdens outweigh benefits; proposal to move FCC headquarters also bites dust, at least for now

Again affirming its deregulatory bent, the FCC last week dropped its rule requiring broadcasters to file annual financial data with the commission.

In a unanimous vote (with Commissioners Joseph Fogarty and Henry Rivera concurring), the commission, at an open meeting, agreed to drop the requirement immediately. As a result, broadcasters won't be required to file form 324 for 1981. The forms otherwise would have been due April 1.

In a closed meeting, the commission also agreed to drop its effort to consolidate its Washington employees into one headquarters building, rejecting a General Services Administration proposal to move it to Alexandria, Va., eight miles from its current location ("Closed Circuit," March 8).

For the time being, the FCC will stay at its current building at 1919 M Street. Although the lease for the building expires this October, FCC sources said GSA and the FCC would probably negotiate with the owner of the building for a new lease.

The commission's move on the financial reporting requirement stemmed from an action last year, when the FCC unanimously proposed to streamline the reporting requirement or eliminate it altogether (Broadcasting, Oct. 5, 1981).

At the meeting last week, however, the FCC staff, agreeing with the majority of the broadcasters commenting in the proceeding (Broadcasting, Dec. 7, 1981), recommended that the requirement be dropped. According to the staff, the burdens imposed on the FCC and broadcasters by the requirement outweighed its benefits.

The staff also said that, when and if the need arose to collect such financial information, there were "more cost-efficient" ways such as ad hoc surveys, to get it.

Commissioners Abbott Washburn and Joseph Fogarty questioned why the commission shouldn't continue to collect the forms, perhaps through this year, to provide a "transition period," but the staff was opposed.

Larry Harris, chief of the Broadcast Bureau objected, contending that with its "limited resources," the bureau shouldn't be required to devote 4,500 "person hours" to processing the 1981 forms.

Although Washburn also questioned why the commission couldn't simply modify the form to require the filing of only gross revenues, the staff said that, because it wouldn’t be able to insure that broadcasters would calculate “gross revenues” the same way, the information gleaned from such a filing might not be valid anyway.

Although Fogarty expressed concern about the effect dropping the requirement would have on current and future proceedings that were based on economic arguments, Chairman Mark Fowler said the commission could always request financial information, if it was needed, on an ad hoc basis. He added that if the industry wanted that sort of information, “it can get it by other means.”

Commissioner Mimi Dawson said she supported the item, but asked why the commission hadn’t moved to eliminate the form 326 annual financial reporting requirement for cable operators.

Fowler said an item addressing the cable reporting requirement would “come up soon.”

The commission rejected the proposed move, contending that although the Hoffman-Center building recommended by GSA was only 1.7 miles outside Washington, a 30-minute subway ride from downtown, the location was too remote. The FCC said moving there would impose too great a traveling burden on FCC staffers, the downtown law firms and interest groups that regularly dealt with the FCC, and the public.

By remaining at its current building, the commission could save about $1 million in rent in 1983, and another $500,000 in 1984. However, the FCC will also have to postpone its hopes of consolidating its operations into one building, since the current headquarters won’t be able to house personnel lodged at 2025 M Street, where the lease will expire in November 1983.

FCC, Justice hand in glove on AT&T deal

Background briefing points way commission is heading on major policy issues coming up in near future

The FCC plans to have “full input” into the Justice Department’s approval of AT&T’s divestiture agreement, a top FCC official said last week. To that end, the FCC has been holding discussions with Justice, the official said.

And although the FCC would prefer to insure that its interests in the divestiture plan were addressed as early in the process as possible, the FCC would always be able to help say if AT&T, like any common carrier, had to apply to the FCC for approval to discontinue or modify services to affect the terms of the agreement, the official said.

Of special interest to broadcasters, the official, who asked not to be identified by name, indicated that the financial interest and syndication rules—that barring networks from acquiring any financial interest in programming they purchase, other than the rights to two network runs, and from engaging in domestic syndication of programming—were being separated from the prime-time access rules and were likely to be “coming up soon.”

The same official also indicated that the commission’s VHF drop-in proceeding, although not currently scheduled to be addressed, might find itself facing a receptive commission. According to the official, “our general philosophy” is that the FCC should introduce new services to create competition “if they don’t cause technical interference” to existing ones.

Although another official in attendance indicated the VHF proceeding had been lying dormant because FCC engineers had been concentrating on such items as the Regional Administrative Radio Conference and the low-power television proceeding, some should be returning to the drop-in proceeding.

The top official also indicated that he thought the FCC would be able to fulfill its responsibilities with the leaner, $74.5-million budget the Office of Management and Budget has approved for it for fiscal 1983 (BROADCASTING, March 8).

“We won’t have a cop on every block, but we will have a cop on every 20th block,” the official said.

Although the official said the FCC had “costed out” its program needs to meet the 1983 budget as it stands, the official also said there were “lots of areas” where the FCC could still cut back.

One major area for cutting would be filing requirements, the official said. Specific filing requirements the official mentioned were broadcasters’ annual financial reports and network affiliation agreements.

Other FCC actions, such as leaving the selection of a standard for AM stereo up to the marketplace, and “maybe” letting the marketplace set the standard for teletext, could also assure that FCC personnel would be freed to work on other projects.

The official also indicated that a major argument for permitting all parties to own cable systems is that cable may prove to be the only competitor for local telephone companies for the “local loop.” Although the telephone companies would be divested, they would still be enormous companies, and larger cable operators might “be able to compete better” with the telcos, the official said.

The official added that it might be for the best for Congress to hold off on communications legislation until it found out what the new consent decree finally means. To attempt to write legislation now is to “invite some ill-advised legislation,” the official said.

Another official said the FCC was experiencing more attrition now than it had in the past. Instead of eight persons leaving every pay period, now 10 are leaving, the official said.

Trying for another cable compromise

NAB-NCTA working on new provisions of copyright legislation; latest version would require cable systems with up to 36 channels to carry new local signals for at least full rating period

The National Association of Broadcasters executive committee has referred to its full TV board the decision of whether to approve a new compromise on pending cable copyright legislation. Support for the proposal appears tentative both within NAB and the National Cable Television Association, the other party to the compromise. But if agreement is reached, Representative Robert W. Kastenmeier (D-Wis.), copyright subcommittee chairman, has indicated he will sponsor most of its provisions in an amendment to the bill (H.R. 3560).

At issue in the copyright compromise are new provisions on mandated carriage of local broadcast systems that, if agreed to, could be added to a cable copyright bill scheduled for markup by the House Judiciary Committee on Wednesday (March 17). The NAB and NCTA had previously agreed to must-carry provisions for the bill but opposition from public broadcasters led to changes in the provisions just before the copyright subcommittee passed them (BROADCASTING, Dec. 21, 1981). That and opposition from UHF and other broadcasters to the must-carry compromise led NAB to withdraw support for the bill, which had gone through numerous other changes since first drafted last fall.

The newest compromise proposal would require cable systems with 36 or fewer channels to carry new local broadcast signals for a full Nielsen rating period (about 15 months) before dropping them for lack of sufficient viewership. New stations would not have been eligible for must-carry protection. A cable system of 36 channels or less would be permitted to drop permanently any station previously protected by must-carry rules if it had lost its necessary share of local viewership. Larger cable systems would be subject to the FCC’s present must-carry rules. The previous provisions, agreed to by NAB, would have permitted cable systems with 36 or fewer channels to drop any station that received less than a 1% share of viewership in noncable homes or a 2% share in all TV homes in its area.

Cable systems with 36 or fewer channels would be required to carry at least two public broadcasting channels under the old compromise proposal and, if saturated, could make茂e to those channels by dropping duplicated network affiliates of the operator’s choice. Under the new proposal, a system would have to retain affiliates most local to its area of service in... choosing which duplicated television signals to drop.

Although NAB and NCTA have agreed to support required carriage of two public broadcasting signals, Kastenmeier is said to favor raising the limit to three signals. Whatever the Judiciary Committee decides, however, will be subject to review by the Energy and Commerce Committee, which will review provisions in the bill affecting communications law.

Another section of the proposed compromise would codify the FCC’s rule on carriage of subscription TV signals—that is, cable systems would not be required to carry local broadcast signals that are “predominantly” STV. It would modify the rule, however, by exempting cable systems with 12 or fewer channels. Those systems could drop a station that carried any subscription programming. A spokesman for ABC said the network is vigorously opposed to this exemption and will lobby for its removal from the bill. “The exemption would cover 70% of all cable systems,” he said.

Gene Cowen, ABC vice president, Washington, said the network opposes both the new STV provision and one passed by the copyright subcommittee that would forbid the FCC from requiring cable systems to carry “any other audio or video services.” There is likely to be more subscription programming in the future of broadcasting, said Cowen, and there will be more broadcasters marketing programming to a variety of media outlets. A copyright law prohibiting the FCC from requiring carriage of any new services could give the cable industry a tool for resisting broadcasters who want to lease channels, said Cowen.

In exchange for these amendments to the must-carry provisions, NCTA would like to include in the copyright bill codification of the FCC’s ban on local television-cable crossownership.

Both ABC and CBS have expressed “serious reservations” about this provision, but some members of the NAB executive committee appear willing to seriously consider it. “We wouldn’t be losing something we already have,” said TV board chairman Mark Smith, vice president, KLAS(TV) Las Vegas, but “the bill would fly in the face of a campaign at the FCC” to eliminate the crossownership ban.

Neither Smith nor John Summers, NAB executive vice president, general manager, could predict how the board will rule on the new compromise but both indicated negotiations with NCTA are continuing and that further compromise is likely. Smith said NAB hopes for agreement by today (March 15).

At NCTA, the uncertainty lies primarily with provisions requiring cable systems to carry new TV stations for at least one rating period. “There’s misunderstanding on this,” said James Popham, NAB senior vice president, congressional liaison, who said NCTA has assumed systems with 12 channels or fewer would be exempt from the requirement.

CBS survey finds affiliates firmly against longer evening news

Out of 123 respondents, 61% oppose network’s plan; greatest percentage of objectors are stations in top 25 markets

The widely held notion that big group owners are the chief opponents of expanded network TV evening newscasts may be dispelled, if not dispelled, by results of an independent survey conducted for the CBS-TV affiliates board.

The survey, among all CBS-TV affiliates, found opponents outnumbering supporters by more than two to one.

Opposition predominated, sometimes by overwhelming margins, in markets of all sizes and in all time zones.

James Babb of WAVY-TV Charlotte, N.C., chairman of the affiliates board, said the survey was conducted by Media Research, San Antonio, Tex., during the first two weeks of February. Questionnaires were sent to the general managers of all CBS-TV affiliates except the CBS-owned stations, asking for their positions on the plan for a one-hour evening newscast that CBS wants to put into effect in the first quarter of 1983.

A total of 123 affiliates responded before the coast date. Babb said, for a 62.8% rate of return. That response rate, considered unusually high for a survey, was interpreted by observers as a reflection of strong affiliate feelings on the issue or, among those said who said they were undecided, an appreciation of its importance.

Of the 123 respondents, Babb said, about one-fourth (25.2%) favored the CBS plan, while three out of five (61.5%) opposed it. Somewhat more than one out of 10 (13.8%) said they were undecided.

In the top 100 markets, where CBS presumably would need a strong base of support to make its plan work, opposition was even higher: 77% against, 16.4% for, 6.6% undecided.

In the top 25 markets, the opposition rate was higher still, with 88.9% of the respondents against the plan and 11.1%—a single station—favoring it.

In markets 26 through 50, the opposition rate approached three to one, with 63.6% opposed, 22.7% for and 13.6% undecided.

In markets 51 through 75, 93.3% were opposed, 6.7% in favor. In markets 76 through 100, the vote was 73.3% against, 20% for and 6.7% undecided.

The highest level of support and the lowest rate of opposition were found among affiliates in markets above 100, but the nays still led: 45.2% against, 33.9% for, 20.9% undecided.

One of the key arguments by stations against evening news expansion by any network is that expansion would almost inevitably intrude on station time protected by the FCC’s prime time access rule—a rule whose future they feel, apart from other considerations, is shaky enough even without tampering for any network purpose.

CBS’s plan, revealed to the affiliates board last fall and made public in more detail in a subsequent FCC filing, seeks to minimize that problem by scheduling its one-hour news prior to prime access time in all time zones except Eastern (Broadcasting, Nov. 23, 1981, et seq.). In the Eastern zone, 15 CBS affiliates in top 50 markets—the only markets technically bound by the access rule—already meet the FCC’s local news requirements for an automatic waiver of the rule. The purpose of the filing was to seek an FCC waiver for 13 other Eastern zone affiliates that are also in top-50 markets but whose local news patterns do not qualify for an automatic waiver (Broadcasting, Jan. 18).

In its petition to the FCC, CBS said it did not know whether the 13 affiliates involved would carry the expanded news even if the waiver was granted. The affiliates board’s survey suggests that most of them probably wouldn’t want to. While not tied to these stations specifically, the results showed that Eastern zone respondents as a whole were against the news expansion by about three to one over supporters: 66.7% opposed, 22.9% in favor, 10.4% undecided.

In the central time zone, 59.2% were against, 32.7% for and 8.1% undecided. In the mountain zone, it was 53.8% against, 7.7% for and 38.5% undecided. And in the Pacific zone it was 63.6% against, 9.1% for and 27.3% undecided.

Babb, who submitted the survey results to CBS officials before releasing them to Broadcasting, did not seem particularly startled by the findings. By and large, he said, they confirmed the findings of two prior, but more informal, surveys conducted by the affiliates board.

Washington starts ball rolling on cable franchising

City council OK’s legislation setting up design commission to draw up requirements and issue request for proposal

The nation’s capital has taken the first step toward bringing cable television to its 245,700 TV households and 638,000 residents. The Washington city council last week gave preliminary approval to legislation that would set up the machinery for awarding a cable franchise, establish minimum requirements for cable service and provide the foundation for its future regulation.

Without prompt action, Washington will become the hole in a metropolitan cable donut. Most Washington suburban cities and counties either have cable or are well on their way to being wired. Arlington county and Alexandria, both Virginia, have up and running systems. And within the last few months, Prince George's county, Md., awarded two franchises and Montgomery county, Md., and Fairfax county, Va., accepted bids.

The bill authorizes a 28-member "design commission" that will have 90 days from the effective date of the bill to decide what services the city needs and prepare a request for proposal (RFP).

Once the bids are received the commission will evaluate them and make recommendations to the city council that will make the actual grant. And once the award is made, the commission will stick around and help make sure the cable operator fulfills its promises.

The bill also creates an Office of Cable Television. Its primary jobs will be to mandate a minimum number of access channels and oversee their use and to report each year to the city council on the development of new cable services and on the city's cut of the cable revenues. The existing Public Service Commission will regulate cable rates.

The bill lays out some stiff penalties for the cable system if it breaches its agreements with the city, goes bankrupt or defrauds any of its subscribers. "The council may either suspend for a time certain, or terminate the franchise or exercise the right of first refusal to purchase the assets of the . . . system at a cost not to exceed fair market value," the bill says.

The city is asking for at least 5% of the gross cable revenues each year as a franchise fee and is requiring that the cable system have two-way capability. Although specifics will be included in the RFP, the bill also requires a minimum of six access channels and, when subscribership reaches 3,500 homes, at least two studios capable of producing and distributing programming throughout the system. A public access board will be set up to manage the access channels and studios.

The original bill, as reported to the council by the consumer affairs committee of councilwoman Wilhelmina J. Rolark, contained rigid ex parte rules that would have required everyone—councilmen, their staff members and cable officials—to keep detailed records of private conversations. The guidelines, however, were apparently too rigid for the majority of the council and were excised from the bill. The full council also weakened some of its original bill's affirmative-action provisions.

Robert Johnson, president of District Cablevision Inc., which is after the franchise and which has been urging the city to move forward on cable, was generally pleased by the bill. He said he was glad to see that the period for getting out an RFP was reduced from one year to 90 days and noted that "the bill still has a strong legislative intent for minority owners." What bothered Johnson most was the "tough language" which permits the city to take over the cable system if it fails to meet its franchise obligation, he said. DCI is a partnership of Tele-Communications Inc. (20%) and a group of local investors (80%) that includes Johnson, who is also president of Black Entertainment Television, and Tyrone Brown, a former FCC commissioner.

Washington goes Hollywood—or vice versa

Film crews and promo teams convened in Washington last week to tape segments of Capitol, the new CBS soap opera to be launched Friday, March 26, with a one-hour prime time special from 10 to 11 p.m. The new daytime drama portrays the fates of fortunes of two prominent political families, the McClandlesses and the Cleggs, who have been enemies for generations and now face new rivalry on the Washington battlefield of political and personal affairs.

To herald the new series, camera crews representing 16 CBS affiliates followed the Hollywood set to the nation's capital for a week of on-location scenes, socializing, press conferences, dinners and an elaborate reception at the Phillips Collection.

The show stars veteran actor Rory Calhoun, along with Carolyn Jones, Ed Nelson and Constance Towers. It is produced by John Conboy, winner of eight Emmy awards and producer of The Young and the Restless. The special one-hour introduction was directed by Corey Allen.

After its March 26 prime-time launch, Capitol will air every weekday from 2:30 to 3 p.m.

Radio Marti options

Presidential commission is examining ways to fight any Cuban jamming of new AM service

The Presidential Commission on Broadcasting to Cuba is concerned not only with problems of establishing Radio Marti, which is to be the administration's voice for telling Cuba news of that country (see page 134). The commission is also considering options available for dealing with Cuban jamming of the station.

According to minutes of a closed meeting on March 2, released last week, the commission discussed four options: 1. purchasing time on private stations in Florida, Louisiana and perhaps Texas to transmit evening programming from a variety of geographical sites and frequencies; 2. using high-powered stations in the Caribbean to broadcast several hours a day: 3. using shortwave transmissions, employing Voice of America transmitters at different sites in the U.S., and 4. using VOA's AM transmitter on Marathon Key, which signs off at 10 p.m.

There were several other developments last week related to what has become the U.S.'s broadcasting war with Cuba. Representative Dante Fascell (D-Fla.), chairman of the House Subcommittee on International Operations, held a hearing on the outcome of the western hemisphere conference on AM broadcasting, in Rio de Janeiro, last fall, and took the occasion to restate his view that Florida broadcasters should not be expected to bear the brunt of Cuban-caused interference, particularly if it increases after Radio Marti goes on the air. He feels they should be compensated by the government for costs involved in recouping service area lost to the interference. But in spite of his concern about the Florida broadcasters, Fascell complimented delegation members who testified on their work in Rio and the commission for its effort to help the Florida broadcasters. Delegation members showered praise on their chairman, Kalmann Schaefer, assistant to the FCC on international communications matters, for his leadership at the conference.

Meanwhile, it was evident that the U.S. has not resolved technical problems involved with Radio Marti. Wilson LaFollette, chief of the FCC's technical and international branch and a vice chairman of the delegation, said Radio Marti would cause interference to stations in Cuba and several other countries. That indicated the U.S. still plans to operate the station on 1040 kHz. But observers noted that would be foolhardy in the face of Cuban plans to establish a 500 kw station on the frequency. They also noted that the U.S. officials have said repeatedly that Radio Marti would be engineered to avoid interference to anyone; the aim, he noted, is to put a listenable signal over Cuba.

Winding up the words on common carrier rewrite

Wirth subcommittee completes hearings on H.R. 5158; AT&T argues for less rehn, others would tighten restrictions on that major telephone company; markup anticipated this month

The House Telecommunications Subcommittee completed hearings last week on the AT&T antitrust settlement and a major rewrite of common carrier sections of the Communications Act (H.R. 5158). As in previous hearings, testimony offered broadly opposing views on whether Congress should try to modify the settlement by further restructuring AT&T, restricting its entry into unregulated markets and permitting AT&T's divested local operating companies to offer competitive as well as monopoly-regulated services. At issue among subcommittee members is whether the post-settlement AT&T will be able to cross-subsidize its unregulated ventures with revenues guaranteed by regulated, long-distance rates. An even greater concern is whether divested local companies, stripped of all but their regulated local telephone networks, will be able to survive in a changing telecommunications marketplace in which vertically integrated competitors could offer competing local services via wire, microwave or satellite.

The subcommittee has not yet resolved how it will deal with these issues in its bill, which it hopes to mark up later this month, but a spokesman for the subcommittee said they appear to be reaching a consensus that local companies should retain ownership of installed wiring and the Yellow Pages. Such assets, and revenues from newly-defined access fees paid by long distance carriers to connect locally, could prevent precipitous increases in local phone rates, according to some members and subcommittee staffers.

Morris Tannenbaum, executive vice president of AT&T, urged the subcommittee first to test the waters in two weeks to avoid restructuring AT&T or its local operating companies in their legislation. Restrictions being contemplated, such as partial outside ownership of AT&T's unregulated subsidiary, total outside financing of any new subsidiaries and a prohibition on AT&T's ability to construct and operate local and long-distance transmission facilities that could compete with regulated local and long distance networks, would prevent AT&T, Western Electric and Bell Labs from "delivering the services they need most, much less entering new fields, in which most of its competitors would be foreign entities." The subcommittee has not held adequate hearings on some of the restrictions in its legislation, said Tannenbaum, including those that would impose procurement quotas on AT&T and Long Lines, force sale of installed customer premises equipment by AT&T at the time of divestiture, continued publishing of patents owned by AT&T and the need for broad separation between AT&T and its unregulated activities.

William Baxter, assistant attorney general for antitrust, also reappeared before the subcommittee and continued to

TOP OF THE WEEK

Sympathetic Wirth airs financial plight of public broadcasting

Neither advertising nor increased support from the private sector will fill the gap created by reduced federal support of public broadcasting. That was the conclusion of celebrities (including Pearl Bailey), station managers and officials from both commercial and public broadcasting who argued against proposed cuts during roughly four hours before the House Telecommunications Subcommittee last Thursday (March 11). Chairman Timothy Wirth (D-Colo.), who asked for the oversight hearing, called the proposed federal cuts "draconian" and said that the medium confronts a "potentially devastating financial crisis." Wirth also seized the opportunity to attack administration plans to kill the National Telecommunications and Information Administration's Public Telecommunications Facilities Program, and accused the President of not caring about the 30% of the U.S. not still served by public radio and the 10% not served by public TV—noting that the Public Broadcasting Act encourages development of public telecommunications facilities. NTIA Director Bernard Wunder responded that lack of support, not of money, is the problem, and added that cable ultimately will take care of the unserved TV homes.

Representative Al Swift (D-Wash.), a subcommittee member who sits on the Temporary Commission on Alternative Financing for Public Telecommunications (which oversees the experiment), said that when and if advertising on public stations becomes a reality, it might take years before a profit was realized and it still may not subsidize an entire operation.

Cullie Tarleton, senior vice president of radio's Jefferson Pilot Broadcasting, Charlotte, N.C., urged that public broadcasting receive "adequate" levels of funding and that funds be appropriated far enough in advance. He noted that public broadcasting is exploring a number of alternative funding methods, but needs federal funding to help it through a "transition period," while it explores the alternatives. Tarleton is chairman of the radio board of directors of the National Association of Broadcasters and a member of the NAB Task Force on Public Broadcasting Funding.

urge, as have other officials of the Reagan administration, that legislation be restricted to narrow issues—preventing "surges in local telephone rates," allowing for national defense and security planning and defining state and federal jurisdiction over a post-settlement telephone industry.

Joining Baxter in urging a limited approach was William McGowan, chairman of MCI, who predicted Congress would not pass "another distressingly controversial bill" and urged the subcommittee not to "intervene in the settlement."

A group of other long-distance competitors disagreed with McGowan and argued that local operating companies be permitted to offer unregulated services, to assure reasonable access fees. All concurred, however, that a National Telecommunications Fund to be created in H.R. 5158 to subsidize local telephone rates would likely backfire. Such a fund, meant to supplement revenues from local access fees, should subsidize only needy and rural telephone users, said James Devlin, president and chairman of U.S. Telephone Communications.

It is not necessary to subsidize all local rates, as would H.R. 5158, said McGowan, because most local rates are not now subsidized, even though AT&T in the past argued that such an action would have the effect of subsidizing business users and the local operating companies, said McGowan and George Knapp, chief executive officer of ITT Communications Operation Companies.

State public utility commissioners present at the hearings urged the subcommittee to guarantee through legislation that diverted local operating companies be able to continue offering customer premises equipment, the Yellow Pages and other competitive services. Cost-based access fees, as provided for in the AT&T settlement, would not be enough of a subsidy to keep local rates from escalating and network services from declining, according to Louise McCarren, chairman of the Vermont Public Service Commission.

Spokesmen for the Communications Workers of America and the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers also urged that local companies provide those services, arguing that consumers should be able to go to one supplier for their telephone needs.

CWA President Glenn Watts urged the subcommittee, however, to scrap its legislation as presently drafted and start over with a completely new bill. Provisions in H.R. 5158 could harm job stability for workers already facing massive change as a result of the settlement, he said. Outside ownership of separate subsidiaries, equipment procurement quotas and mandated patent publishing are not in the interest of communications workers or consumers, he said.

Jockeying for position at the starting gate

Initial field of four American companies and possible entries from Japan would all like to start from position on the rail; other manufacturers also in act; broadcasters on the fence

The FCC's decision not to decide which AM stereo broadcasting system should be the national standard has produced all the confusion many predicted it would. Since the FCC's action (or inaction) two weeks ago, broadcasters and equipment manufacturers have been warily surveying the marketplace, looking for signs of which system will ultimately emerge as the de facto standard.

By not establishing a standard the FCC has instigated a marketplace battle for acceptance among at least four systems, proposed by Harris, Magnavox, Motorola and Kahn Communications. (Belar Electronics, which proposed a fifth system, has already quit the fight.) Each feels that an initial surge of interest in its system could snowball into nationwide acceptance by the industry and public. Consequently, the four are out in the marketplace aggressively promoting their systems to broadcasters and receiver manufacturers.

Despite the five-year delay in authorizing stereo broadcasting, there is still widespread interest in it. Many AM broadcasters see it as a tool for competing more effectively with FM stereo stations. Receiver manufacturers think stereo will be a new inducement for consumers to buy millions of new radio sets. And broadcast equipment manufacturers are excited by the prospects of selling stereo studio equipment, exciters and monitors and new transmitters to broadcast the stereo signal with full fidelity. (Harris said outfitting of many of the nation's 4,650 AM stations for stereo will generate $100 million in revenues for the equipment manufacturers.)

At stake in this marketplace fight are the royalties the winning company will earn from the sale of each receiver built to its standard. Over the lifetime of some of the stereo patents, royalties could add up to tens of millions of dollars. As receiver manufacturers, either Magnavox or Motorola would benefit additionally by coming out on top since it would not have to pay royalties.

The industry should not look to its associations to sort out the competing systems for it. The National Association of Broadcasters and the Electronic Industries Association have tried to help the industry reach a consensus on the standard, but the attempts have been fruitless. Because of the antitrust laws, the associations must now shy away from influencing the decisions of broadcasters and manufacturers. Those same laws also make it difficult for broadcasters in a particular market or a group of receiver manufacturers to get together and pick a system without running into antitrust problems.

There are as many opinions about how it will all shake out in the end as players. Kahn, for instance, believes it will be the broadcasters who make the decision and that the receiver manufacturers will follow. Others believe that it will be the major receiver manufacturers who will set the standard by simply flooding the market with a specific set. The Japanese manufacturers, unencumbered by antitrust laws, could get together, decide what the standard should be and go full speed ahead in producing and marketing receivers. Belar's Arno Meyer even suggested they could give away the relatively expensive exciters to key broadcasters in major markets to insure a signal in each for the standard they select.

It is far too early to perceive any sort of marketplace trend at this point, but Kahn and Magnavox seem to have more going for them than the other two. Leonard Kahn, president of Kahn, has been working for the acceptance of his system for two decades and when the FCC gave AM stereo the nod, he was ready with a list of nearly four dozen stations in the U.S., Canada and Mexico that he says were ready to begin service with his system. (The most the other companies can say is that they have a number of "contingent orders.")

Moreover, Kahn's system can be received immediately by using two monaural receivers spaced apart and slightly detuned to pick up the left and right channels. In response to criticism that that is a "sham" or a "novelty that will soon wear off," Kahn conceded that the two-receiver set-up is an interim arrangement but insisted it bears having no receiver at all. He added that there is some evidence in the FCC's AM stereo dockets indicating that his signal received on two monaural sets "works better than one of the systems with its special receiver."

Magnavox, which except for a brief statement two weeks ago has remained silent on its market plan, may profit from the FCC's tentatively picking it as the stereo standard in April 1980. Although the FCC reneged on the selection to gather more information on the attributes of all the proposed systems, many receiver and integrated circuit manufacturers began the design of Magnavox stereo decoder chips.

and receivers. Panasonic, a subsidiary of the world's largest manufacturer of radio receivers, Matsushita, said the company is ready to go any way the marketplace does, but that it is best prepared to make Magnavox receivers. National Semiconductors, one of the nation's leading makers of integrated circuits, has a Magnavox decoder chip (the LM1981) and Dan Shockey, linear consumer product marketing manager, will even quote a price of $2 each and promise immediate delivery. Shockey notes, however, that "by happenstance" the chip can be used to decode the Motorola and Belar systems and possibly the Kahn and Harris systems as well. The universality of the chip, Shockey said, stems from the fact that it is based on rudimentary FM technology—"an FM detector followed by an integrator"—and that it is without some of the "embellishments" of pilot decoders that distinguish the systems. Being a subsidiary of North American Philips also doesn't hurt Magnavox's chances. According to Shockey, North American Philips is second only to Matsushita as a worldwide maker of radio sets.

Before they can think of winning over broadcasters in large numbers, the system proponents have to make sure exciters are available. An exciter is the initial transmitter stage that creates the two-channel stereo signal; the additional transmitter stages merely amplify the first. All the proponents expect to have exciters available within six months. To maintain quality control, Kahn has decided to fabricate all the units himself. He put the price at about $12,000 but said it will fall when he begins making them in quantity.

Harris has an early-bird special. Any broadcaster that orders an exciter and monitor (a device for monitoring signal levels) between now and the end of the National Association of Broadcasters convention gets them both for $9,000. After that, the set will cost $12,000.

Although not a broadcast equipment manufacturer, Motorola has decided to build both exciter and monitor and sell them for $10,000 each.

Magnavox has taken a different tack. It has licensed Belar to build the monitors and is negotiating an arrangement with Continental Electronics, a major manufacturer of radio transmitters, to build the exciter. Vernon Collins, vice president for domestic broadcast marketing, Continental, said he won't have a price on the exciter until the deal with Magnavox is set. Collins said Continental's relationship with Magnavox goes back two or three years but should not at this time be interpreted as a whole-hearted endorsement of the Magnavox system. He said he may try to sell the Magnavox system to broadcasters, but that he won't push too hard. If a customer needs help in hooking up a Continental transmitter to, say, a Kahn exciter, Continental will gladly help, he said.

Other major exciter manufacturers aren't quite sure what to make of the situation. For the present, RCA and McMartin Industries plan to do nothing. "Once the dust settles," said RCA's Wally Warren, "maybe we will have a little bit better idea of which way to go." Bob Anderson, director of marketing for McMartin, is more concerned that the AM stereo could be to transmitter sales than he is about making exciters. Old transmitters have "too much carrier shift and are not linear enough," he said, to deliver a quality AM stereo signal to homes. Many broadcasters who want to go AM stereo may have to shop for a new transmitter first, he said.

Many AM stereo proponents are hoping that a hint at the ultimate standard will emerge at the NAB convention, which begins April 4 in Dallas. All the system proponents will have exciters and receivers there and the convention organization is providing a forum for discussion of the service. The NAB's Chris Payne said all the system proponents and major receiver and integrated circuit manufacturers have been invited to speak at two consecutive Tuesday (April 6) sessions. It's hoped that either from the dais or from the audience, broadcasters and receiver manufacturers will make their intentions known.

AM broadcasters interest in stereo stems from their belief that it will halt the continuing loss of listentship to FM stations, a phenomenon that is changing the nature of AM. More and more, AM broadcasters are avoiding the head-to-head competition with FM stereo music by turning to news and talk. The most conspicuous example is WABC New York. That station, which for many years was synonymous with top 40 radio, announced three weeks ago that it will switch to an all-talk format in May.

The biggest AM stereo enthusiasts seem to be those broadcasters that have been sold on the Kahn system. Three of the NBC-owned and operated stations—WABC New York, WMQA Chicago and KNBR San Francisco—hope to be pumping Kahn stereo to their listeners within five months. Dom Fioravanti, vice president and general manager of KNBC, said stereo is a "guarantee of music on AM" and predicted that it would "allow us to grow and compete with FM." Joseph Dorton, president of Gannett Broadcasting Group's radio division, which plans to switch on the Kahn system at KSDK St. Louis and WDAY Fargo, said that "there will be rapid acceptance of AM stereo because of consumers' familiarity with FM stereo. "There is no need for an education process."

Outside the Kahn proponents, however, most AM broadcasters seem to be willing to wait—some forever. "Until we see what system would appear to be most appropriate, until we see it has value," said James Arcara, executive vice president for radio, Capital Cities Communications, the decision to broadcast stereo can't be made.

And although ABC is equipped to broadcast stereo with Kahn exciters at WLS Chicago and WMAL Washington, it is not ready to say when it will begin broadcasting with them. A spokesman said ABC will not make a decision until it has had a chance to study the FCC order, due for release this week. Multimedia was indicating last week that it may not broadcast stereo, regardless of how quickly a de facto standard emerges. Paul Fiddick, vice president and general manager of its radio division, said what audience an AM broadcaster gains by going stereo, he may lose because of a smaller coverage area. It would be particularly foolish for an AM station to invest in AM stereo, he suggested, before the standard is settled on. A station could spend a lot of money on the wrong system and be in worse competitive shape than when it started, he said.

Charles Morgan, chief engineer for Susquehanna Broadcasting, does not believe AM stereo will ever stack up against FM because of the "inherent limitations of amplitude modulation. AM stereo will have particular problems at night, when the band is plagued by adjacent channel interference, he said. But Morgan is not ruling out the possibility that Susquehanna might someday broadcast stereo. "We will be competitive," he said, "and if AM stereo is the thing, we will be AM stereo."

NATPE International's 1982 television programing conference opened last Thursday (March 11) to a projected 3,400 paid registrants and 4,500 conventioneers overall.

Speeches and panels are being held at the Sahara. The marketplace site—hospitality suites and exhibition-hall floor—is the Las Vegas Hilton.

At both locations, the threat to the prime-time access rule is being felt. This year's agenda, running through Tuesday, finds NATPE with its most regulatory-oriented sessions ever and PTAR the central issue. And in the marketplace, access piloting is conspicuous in its decline compared to previous years.

A full "PTAR Day" has been scheduled on Monday, with all panels at least touching on the issue and some directly tied to it. Subjects range from "The Syndicator's Dilemma: To Develop or Not to Develop" to "The Bottom Line Syndrome: Amortizing Either Way."

The day's Washington emphasis also includes a luncheon address from FCC Chairman Mark Fowler as well as taped remarks from President Ronald Reagan.

On hand during the conference will be members of Congress and communications attorneys. And as of last week, in addition to Chairman Fowler, NATPE was expecting FCC Commissioners Mimi Dawson, Joseph Fogarty, James Quello, Henry Rivera and Abbott Washburn.

NATPE will take up its traditional concerns in panels such as "Programming the Sweep." But continuing its open-door policy to all TV media, other topics to be included are "Is Cable Networking?" and "The Aftermarkets ... and an Afterword about Copyright."

This year's keynoter represents both broadcast and cable: William F. Baker, president of Group W Television Group and chairman of Group W Satellite Communications.

Elsewhere on the NATPE agenda, there are the ABC, CBS and NBC affiliate meetings (where prime-time access and network news expansion are expected to be focal points) as well as sessions for independents, Public Broadcasting Service members, cable programers and international broadcasters.

Other sessions will run the gamut of "The Communications Year Ahead," "The Sixth Estate: Time Banking and Barter" and "Import-Export."

In the Hilton marketplace, many syndicators have taken a wait-and-see approach on access before committing their dollars to new pilots for that time period. As a result, other dayparts—primarily early-fringe and late-night—are expected to draw the lion's share of attention. Major programing genres this year include court shows and soap-opera magazines, as well as programs with a psychological bent. Game shows are expected to be fewer than in past years. And as usual, the off-network properties continue to enter the syndication marketplace.

NATPE last week was expecting 247 firms to be participating in its marketplace. About 70 will be on the exhibition-hall floor as NATPE continues to phase in that format through 1984.

The state of NATPE, according to Back

Association's first executive director, nearing end of two years in post, reflects on past, present and future of NATPE

Two years ago at NATPE International's San Francisco conference, George Back, syndicator and former board member, was introduced in his new role as the association's first executive director. This week at NATPE '82 in Las Vegas, his successor may be named.

With Back having decided to return full time to the syndication business once his contract expires May 31, a NATPE search committee last week was interviewing final candidates for the job. The committee, led by the slated incoming NATPE President Charles Larsen from WABC-TV New York, has been hoping to have its choice up for board approval by convention time. However, it isn't taking that as an absolute deadline and the selection could come later.

While the committee has kept a tight lid on those being eyed for the post, believed to come with a yearly salary in the $85,000 range, several candidates are understood to be NATPE insiders (Broadcasting, March 1).

Once his successor is in place, Back's main attention will be on his own firm, George Back & Associates. His NATPE contract has allowed him to continue working in program development and distribution, but only as a part-time consultant. Come June, Back is expected to reverse roles and become full-time syndicator and part-time NATPE consultant.

Shortly before heading for Las Vegas for final conference preparations, NATPE's exiting executive director took time with Broadcasting to reflect on the association, present and future.

Back reports NATPE as "financially stable" and with a solid membership base of more than 1,500—organizationally on a "good solid base to grow if it wants to grow." It's an important "if" for Back, who believes that NATPE, while remaining open to a diverse membership, doesn't necessarily have to consider itself "an organization for everybody."

"I'm not sure as I leave," he explained, referring specifically to the NATPE marketplace, "that there is a one-for-all forum." That, he says, would mean routinely accepting that growth is improvement. Furthermore, he noted that both cable and independent television groups now have their own marketplaces.

At the same time, however, Back warns other organizations to "think about what you're doing" and avoid the "duplicative nature of a lot of conventions." More conventioneering, he says, can be a "detriment to management," considering the time invested outside the office and the dollars spent participating.

Back recommended that NATPE and other organizations make a concerted effort to "clean up the growth" in conventioneering and perhaps find "a better way to go" in certain cases. Back said that "we don't use our own technology... We're not using the satellite."

While Back acknowledged that it remains necessary "to press the flesh" at times during the year, he suggests that teleconferencing might be a way to cut down on all the traveling.

NATPE itself has experimented with teleconferencing. Last June it held its first meeting by satellite, with two two-hour sessions on advocacy advertising and program director accountability originating from WDCA-TV Washington and available to anyone with access to Westar I.

As for lobbying—a new function NATPE took on for the first time when it found the prime-time access rule in jeopardy—Back strongly believes it should continue and go beyond PTAR. "Don't fold the tent and run away" after the access issue is settled, Back said, claiming that "NATPE's potential voice on other issues is too important to lose."

Back doesn't think NATPE should go as far as to hire a full-time lobbyist or open a

Washington office. But he advises taking action and holding counsel on individual issues. And while he admits the suggestion would bring "heated debate" on the NATPE board, Back is in favor of NATPE raising its voice now on another issue: copyright.

On the prime-time access front, Back says that "we got heard" and that the organization has put its message across in Washington about "what is capricious regulation and what is not." In future years, Back expects the rule to continue in some form. "I don't know if it will be 7:30 p.m. (NYT) every night on everybody's station," he says, "but I think I understand that access to the majority prime-time audience by local broadcasters is necessary."

In coming years Back expects NATPE to become more of a resource and information center for the programming community at large.

One idea being explored now "at the very preliminary stages and on a low-key basis," he says, is using NATPE as a clearinghouse-of-sorts. Given NATPE's membership and contacts, Back explains, the organization "in the best position" to match up companies in the programming process. And here his thoughts clearly extend beyond just broadcasting.

Back gives the example of a cable system looking for "male-oriented weekend programming." He says that NATPE then could suggest suppliers with available programing and even advertisers wanting to reach that market. Back stresses that this doesn't mean NATPE would be going into the programming business itself but rather would charge a service fee for the introduction.

Back also sees NATPE taking a greater educational role for its members, with special NATPE-initiated courses, for example, at Harvard Business School or other institutions. Overall, as program directors' responsibilities increase, Back said, NATPE must take on more information and advisory activities. One area he brings up in this regard would be NATPE training on how to deal with the recent proliferation of pressure groups.

As for the actual running of NATPE, now through a combination of full-time staff and volunteers on the board, Back suggested a sharper delineation of responsibilities. Simply, Back believes the programming areas should be handled by volunteers, leaving "the business of NATPE" to the staff.

With NATPE officers and board members changing every year, Back says the exhibition-hall marketplace—to be in full force by 1984 and "ultimately a multimillion-dollar commitment"—can't be run by volunteers. The full-time staff, he says, is best at taking care of such things as "storage, unions, lighting, trucking and hotel negotiations."

This week, NATPE moves into the second stage of its phased in exhibition-hall format, with about 70 of the projected 250 firms now out of hospitality suites. In two years, NATPE expects the transition to be complete and by then Back believes an "industrywise design," state-of-the-art exhibition model will show itself.

IN THE SHADOW OF PTAR

Programers come to NATPE with downbeat expectations

Anyone looking for innovation and variety should not expect too much from this year's NATPE conference in Las Vegas. That's the consensus of a random selection of program directors and managers from around the country asked about their reaction to offerings from program producers and distributors.

The nonnetwork production community has "a severe case of the jitters" over possible repeal of the prime-time access rule, believes Alan Bell, vice president and general manager of KTUV(TV) Oakland/San Francisco. As a result, he and other program executives contacted by Broadcasting last week view the marketplace as narrower and less adventurous than in years past. Tighter budgets, on the part of producers as well as program buyers, are also contributing to the trend. In addition, the observers see inroads made by cable and home video services affecting their choices more than they have in the past.

"There are lots of courtroom shows, plenty of shows related to soap operas, and fewer movie packages, talk shows and magazine programs," declared David Simon, director of programming for KTLA(TV) Los Angeles. Like KTUV, KTLA is an independent VHF station that has become more competitive during recent years offering old movies, off-network series, and a nightly, one-hour news block. "I'm disappointed by what's being offered to us," said Simon. "It's very bleak."

The obvious genre trends at this year's NATPE are courtroom shows, spinning off from the successful introduction of People's Court last year, and "soap programs," which Simon sees "borrowing from the success of the soap operas themselves." The public's fascination with ABC's General Hospital in daytime and CBS's Dallas and Falcon Crest in prime time is apparently fueling the interest among producers in soap-related shows.

"There isn't a hell of a lot out there in terms of production," Simon contends. He sees the emphasis on low-budget, single-camera shows, linking the trend with the nation's sluggish economy and PTAR's uncertain future. "I think the economy is affecting the other side [producers] more than it is us. Programs like the courtroom shows, for example, are not very expensive to produce.

The feeling shared by Simon and other show promoters is that only a few of the new programs will survive. That's not surprising, of course. But what has surprised a number of programers is the overall quality of what's being offered.

"I saw some of the new programming at the INTV [Association of Independent Television Stations] convention here last January," recalls Sandra Pastoor, program director for WTTG(TV) Washington. "I didn't see anything that I'd want to write home about. I hope that some of the productions have been upgraded for NATPE because there were some things that were downright terrible. I saw nothing that excited me."

Pastoor feels that many producers are essentially pitching concepts or treatments. The high cost of production, she says, has made them reluctant to do much more than turn a camera on. "The representatives seems to me to appear to be way down. This makes it a lot harder to buy, especially for an independent. There is life beyond M*A*S*H reruns. There had better be, or we're all in trouble."

She cites the off-network comedy series as an example of a strong performer that has done consistently well for WTTG in the 7:30 p.m. (PTAR) time period. So far, Pastoor hasn't seen anything that she feels can outdistance M*A*S*H in the early evening slot.

"I seriously doubt we would ever remove M*A*S*H from 7:30 p.m., whether there is a prime-time access rule or not," she continued, underscoring her observation that this year's NATPE holds little in the way of programming charm for the Metromedia outlet.

A bigger issue than PTAR for Pastoor is the increasing incurrence of cash/barter sales among syndicators and distributors. She sees a definite trend toward insistence on stations giving up a minute or more of advertising availability for insertion of national spots.

"I'm very disturbed by the trend—which is possibly understandable—toward attaching very high price tags and adding barter minutes inside the property. I realize this is probably done so that the prices won't go crazy, but those minutes are golden. Our station is in a sell-out position and [the practice] is killing us," Pastoor explains.

Some of the cash/barter deals can be negotiated, she notes, but it's often the case that sponsors demand clearance of a spot in top markets before they'll agree to support a new program.

The risks and costs of first-run are so high, many of the new shows would probably not start up without the barter arrangement," believes KTUV's Bell. Although not Brings the message of freedom and love to our communities.

This highly-acclaimed dramatic series of inspirational half-hour programs from Paulist Productions features such top performers as Ed Asner, Carol Burnett, Walter Matthau, Jack Klugman, Della Reese, Bob Newhart, Flip Wilson and Martin Sheen.

Superbly produced by some of the entertainment industry's finest writers and directors, Insight presents stories of contemporary man's search for meaning, freedom and love.

These programs are the perfect combination of entertainment and inspiration. Indeed, one critic wrote, "...they often remind you of the half-hour plays of TV's Golden Age."

happy about the situation, he feels resigned to it, "because we could not get those shows any other way."

Linda Rios, program director of KENS-TV San Antonio, Tex., says it's "too early" to tell if the cash/barter trend is permanent and therefore she's reluctant to make any generalizations about it. Some risk is also taken by the program's distributor, she points out. "If it is a big hit, of course we want all the time we can get to advertise. But if it's not, they may be helping us by selling that spot."

Rios remembers that Hour Magazine was introduced two years ago with a one-minute barter availability at a time when "no one felt that it would become a trend. Syndicators see it as an alternative to lower cash prices—and maybe that's a good thing."

Former NATPE president and WSB-TV Atlanta program manager A.R. Van Cantfort, however, is emphatically opposed to the idea.

"When you add up the numbers, you wind up paying through the nose for some of these [cash/barter] programs. When you're giving away a 30-second spot at 7:30 p.m. on a station like ours, you're talking about a lot of money."

Van Cantfort has gone along with barter minutes in order to obtain some product, but he is "not happy about it." He points out that WSB-TV likes to keep its commercial load light in prime-time access, creating another conflict with bartered programming.

In Seattle, KING-TV program director Keith Lollis feels the barter approach is "OK, as long as the cash deal is negotiable ... it could get out of hand, but at this point I think [cash/barter] is pretty much under control." He warns that there is some danger in the fact that the approach now has "its foot in the door. Next year, they may want more."

Steve Currie, NATPE president and operations manager of KOIN-TV Portland, Ore., believes barter and time banking are "a very big problem" for many program executives and he feels they will be seriously discussed at the convention.

"Stations are very leery of it. They are afraid of losing money through it or getting caught as a participant in something that isn't quite right," he says, citing recent disclosures of fictitious financial entries involving time banking made by JWT Syndication (BROADCASTING, March 8).

Currie echoed an assessment heard often last week that the 1982 NATPE gathering would be geared more to the advantage of late-night and daytime program buyers than prime-time access and early evening, primarily as a result of uncertainty over PTAR's future.

"As a businessman, I don't blame the syndicators for not doing much with access this year," Currie said. "If I were in their shoes I'd be doing the same thing. That's why NATPE has taken such a strong stand on this issue in favor of PTAR retention." He points out that six FCC commissioners, all except Anne P. Jones, will travel to Las Vegas to participate in the conference program. Currie feels there is "a good chance" that the encounter could sway commission opinion in favor of keeping the rule.

"I honestly believe the network television lobby got to the new chairman and some of the new commissioners soon after they arrived and managed to convince them that no one wanted the prime-time access rule," says Currie. "That's not true."

Currie maintains that PTAR has helped boost local service to the point where it now accounts for about 30% of the television broadcast schedule overall, in non-network hours.

"Stations are definitely headed for more localism because of the dearth of product as well as the competitive factor posed by the new technologies," he says. "If a change in PTAR results in PM Magazine going off a Portland TV station, you can bet that show won't be picked up by a local cable channel."

In Los Angeles, for example, localism has bred two PTAR competitors among network-owned stations that both enjoy respectable ratings with head-to-head magazine shows.

The high cost of obtaining syndicated product in a major market was a prime motive in KNXT(TV)'s decision several years ago to develop Two on the Town, a nightly strip that eventually edged out syndicated competition in local ratings. Last year KABC(TV) expanded its own magazine, Eye on L.A., from weekends to week-

Rios sees a big shift in emphasis at this year’s NATPE from access to late night, attributed, again, to the nervousness over PTAR’s future. She senses a growing acceptance of the idea that late-night network fare, among affiliates, might be worth delaying or pre-empting in favor of syndicated shows or old movies.

"Our station would prefer to delay the CBS network’s late-night programming, but that is not allowed. So we pre-empt it in favor of movies, and are doing better than we did with the network in our ratings," Rios reports. If the trend continues, she says, late night could become the next big battleground over network control. Several program executives see late night as one of the few areas in which new program concepts are being tried out.

They note the availability of shows that explore adult-oriented themes, in sexuality, humor and language. Another bright spot seems to be the continued acceptance and success of program series and specials produced in joint or co-venture agreements for syndication, particularly among independent stations.

"Budgets for local programming produced on a local level are very limited," said KTUU’s Bell. "The economic situation isn’t helping us any." By combining the budgets from many stations, productions such as Operation Prime Time, Solid Gold and Entertainment Tonight have become realities.

"When you get into anything that involves props and location shooting and multiple cameras, you’re into a magnitude in budgets that is beyond the grasp of any one of us," Bell explained. "We can only do it by working together."

Pooling resources may indirectly help stations with other types of local programming. Success during earlier prime-time periods, says Bell, helps KTUU maintain a strong one-hour newscast at 10 p.m. Without the opportunities afforded by prime-time access, for example, the station revenue needed to mount that new program might be unavailable.

Bell was less critical than several others contacted last week about product availability at this year’s NATPE. He sees inflation and tight money resulting in a marketplace that "concentrates more on product and less on the novelties and giveaways."

"The stakes have risen to a point where program directors need more time to examine the goods. We’re becoming more businesslike, and moving away from the carnival atmosphere. Our model is more similar to MIP or INTV now." In short, he said, "the risks are higher now."

Some stations have felt the financial squeeze in a different way. Several program directors said they were going to NATPE alone or with fewer associates than in the past. Some stations opted out of attending altogether, citing lack of interest in what they felt would be available or lack of station resources to warrant the trip. At least one entire station group is known to have stayed home this year.

"Price has always been a factor and still is," confides KING’s Lollis, the only representative from his station who will be attending NATPE in 1982. "I’d say money is as big a problem for buyers as it is for producers this year." In spite of that, Lollis says his station is willing to take a risk if he sees a good show.

Lollis is especially interested in obtaining new movie packages, pointing out KING-TV runs "about 900" motion pictures per year. "My sense is that the movie packages are drying up," he says. "We seem to be losing a lot to pay cable, which has a great impact on a station like ours."

That sentiment is expressed also in Los Angeles, where KTLA’s Simon says availability and prices of feature films have been negatively affected by new video options. The days when he could count on all the major studios to come out with new packages for independent television stations at NATPE time appear to be over, Simon laments.

Simon is also looking for a daytime replacement for The John Davidson Show, which has been discontinued. "We’re disappointed that Davidson went under," he said. "He’s worked well for us." Simon sees the demise of talk shows as an unfortunate trend, that may or may not be replaced by successful courtroom, soap-related, or locally produced shows. He noted that KTLA, in association with its affiliated Golden West Television, has started production of Couples, a new half-hour show that follows on radio’s recent success with psychotherapy talk shows.

Another Los Angeles independent, Metromedia’s KTTV(TV), is helping to develop a series called Singles Magazine, one of several new programs exploring life styles of the nation’s 60 million single people. Group W Productions is mining a similar vein with its Getting Personal strip on the subject of interpersonal relationships.

But it’s the "sameness" that disappoints many program buyers this year. "In looking at what’s being offered, I must ask, ‘Where’s the creative community?’", ventured William Frank, vice president and station manager of independent KCOP(TV) Los Angeles.

The disappointment is tempered by the realization that things could get worse, however. If the threat of repeal of the prime-time access rule has already caused such an impact in the production community, many are wondering when the situation might improve.

"If PTAR goes away, we may have more programing and producers to choose from, or we may have many producers who simply stop producing programs," explained Simon. "We’ll have to adopt a wait-and-see attitude for now."

Sandra Pastoor of WTG Washington terms PTAR’s repeal "a double-edged sword.

"On the one hand, I’d rather program against network news than entertainment programing. But if the networks gobble up the time, the market for that [access] kind of product will be reduced. And that’s going to hurt us."

KING-TV’s Lollis said his station’s parent company is on the record in support of network news expansion, though he personally is "not convinced that doing news in access is the right thing to do." He pointed out that local news has done very well for KING.

Van Cantfort conceded that the deregulatory tone of the current FCC suggests that prime-time access may be doomed, but he feels such a move would be a grave error. PTAR has increased the impetus at his station, already a strong locally originating station at the time the rule went into effect, for production of a wide range of local programs, including children’s series, public affairs, and news. The threat of PTAR’s withdrawal, he said, has forced WBTV to move faster on its plans for new local productions to take the place of programing that no longer seems to be available through syndicators.

"There’s no question that buyers are going to have to look harder and deeper to find what they want and need this year," Currie concluded. "But I think you will find today’s program director has a lot of options today that he or she didn’t have before. I think we have a lot to offer."

The greatest group of stars on earth.
We redesigned it for prime time. From the original 360 ninety-minute episodes, the very best has been streamlined into one-hour, broad appeal shows. And year 1 of this exciting new edition is available now.

Every episode packed with marquee power. Your audience will see a Who's-Who of contemporary music, including Barry Manilow, Kenny Rogers, Rod Stewart, Dolly Parton, Elton John, Willie Nelson, the Rolling Stones...and hundreds more of the tops in Pop, Country, Rock, Disco and Soul...plus Comics like Steve Martin and Richard Pryor. Every single show gives you giant names to promote.

Now five times more people will watch it. The original Midnight Special, airing 1:00 to 2:30AM, pulled the highest concentration of adults 18-34 and 18-49 of all network programs. (Over 90% of this audience was retained in its second run.) Now your station can reach five times more viewers with this new version in weekend prime time/prime access periods.

- Curtis Beckmann, WCCO Radio News.

Only a handful of journalists ever get to close an interview with those words, "Thank you, Mr. President."

And whether you’re Dan Rather or a rank-and-file member of the Washington Press Corps, recognition by the President of the United States is recognition of excellence in broadcast journalism.

On February 8, 1982, WCCO Television and Radio News were both selected to broadcast a live interview with the President upon his visit to the Twin Cities. It was an exclusive.

Jack Lord's elite Five-0 force takes command of time periods in 3 key dayparts:
early fringe, late fringe and prime time.

EARLY FRINGE
"Hawaii Five-0" can build early fringe audiences by more than doubling the number of adults who watch lead-in programs. Los Angeles (KCOP-TV): rating up 20% over "Good Times" lead-in, women up 127% and men up 274%. Tampa (WTSP-TV): rating up 100% over "Laverne & Shirley" lead-in, women up 141% and men up 307%. Fresno (KSEE): rating up 133% over "Charlie's Angels" lead-in, women up 106% and men up 136%.

LATE FRINGE
"Hawaii Five-0" is the highest rated dramatic hour in late night television, topping "Kojak," "Bonanza," "Starsky & Hutch," "Rockford Files" and all others. It's a late-night Number One in Boston (WBZ) with a 34 share, in Baltimore (WJZ) with a 28 share and in Salt Lake City (KSL) with a 49 share.
Against “Tonight Show” competition in Hartford, Kansas City, Tulsa and Peoria, “Hawaii Five-0” scores an average 2-point share advantage and wins 50% more women 18-49 and 33% more men 18-49.

PRIME TIME
“Hawaii Five-0” is the highest rated syndicated dramatic hour in prime time, ranking above “Battlestar Galactica,” “The Waltons,” “Rockford Files,” “Star Trek” and “Kojak.” Its average prime-time rating also tops such other shows as “Entertainment Tonight,” “Saturday Night” and “Sanford and Son.”

Compared with year-ago programming in prime-time periods, “Hawaii Five-0” draws 450% more women and 263% more men in Detroit (CBET), 33% more women and 22% more men in Phoenix (KPHO) and 27% more women and 5% more men in San Diego (XETV).

Increased market shares for stations after switching to Harris CP* TV antennas

TV stations broadcasting with Harris circularly polarized (CP) transmitting systems have shown steady market share gains, relative to competition, in all parts of the day, according to a recent research study.

Only TV stations that had been on air for at least four successive rating periods with Harris CP systems were analyzed, to compensate for seasonal variations. The average of four Nielsen market shares, in each time slot, for the four successive periods prior to CP were compared to the average of four successive periods after CP. The performance of each CP station was then compared with the performance of its competitors over the same time periods.

The figures speak for themselves—and show a pattern of improved shares after switching to CP regardless of the time period studied. The stations’ locations ranged from flat to mountainous areas—and again, there was share improvement regardless of terrain.

When you consider that one market share point is worth about $100,000 in the 100th ranked market, and over $3,000,000 in the top ranked market, you can see that Harris CP can be one of the smartest investments you ever made. And you can see why the number of U.S. TV stations broadcasting a CP signal has grown from one to approximately forty-five in just six years.

Will Radio Marti worsen the Cuban interference problem?

That's question raised in hearings on new government service; Florida broadcasters, others want negotiations to avoid harm to their signals, also lessening of U.S. rules to allow fighting back.

The fate of American AM broadcasting and U.S. foreign policy as it affects Cuba were closely linked as the House Foreign Affairs Committee held hearings on the Reagan administration's proposal to create Radio Marti. The 50 kw station on 1040 kHz would be the U.S.'s chosen instrument for breaking what the administration says is the Castro government's monopoly on information reaching the Cuban people. But some industry representatives who testified expressed concern that establishment of the station would simply aggravate the problem—already serious—of Cuban-caused interference to U.S. stations. They called for negotiations with Cuba. But others talked of a kind of electronic warfare.

With some reservations—including those of Chairman Clement J. Zablocki (D-Wis.), who wondered whether the government couldn't do the same programming by way of the Voice of America's AM outlet on Marathon Key, Florida, or by private stations—the committee seems sure to approve the administration bill (H.R. 5427) authorizing the station and providing $10 million in State Department funds for first-year costs. Indeed, Representative Dante Fascell (D-Fla.), chairman of the subcommittee on International Operations, said in effect that approval was a foregone conclusion. "The policy decision [by the administration] has already been made," he said. "Asking Congress to put a brake on this is unrealistic."

Assistant Secretary of State for Interamerican Affairs Thomas O. Enders said the purpose of Radio Marti—named after a 19th century Cuban patriot—is to give Cubans the means they now lack to know what kind of society has been imposed on them, to have a source of news and entertainment that is not manipulated by the state, to find out what is really happening in their country, why so many have to go off to foreign military duty not always to return, and what the state does with the wealth of the Cuban people."

But what would be the cost to American broadcasting? The administration is well aware of Cuban-caused interference. The National Association of Broadcasters two weeks ago released a study documenting the problem (Broadcasting, March 8). It shows that, if Cuba implemented plans for the 187 stations—existing and proposed—in its inventory, the results for American broadcasting could be devastating. And Enders, in response to a question, said "there is no question" that the Cubans will use Radio Marti as an excuse for raising the level of interference.

But Enders made it clear he does not think Radio Marti would be the real cause. He noted that Cuban stations have been the source of interference to U.S. outlets since the 1960's and that, in 1979, "when the U.S. was trying hard to improve relations with Cuba," Havana announced plans for building a number of new transmitters, including two 500 kw stations. State Department officials say there is no indication, based on past dealings the interference problem would cease if Radio Marti did not go on the air.

The only remedial action Enders discussed in his statement involved defensive measures—"fast-track" regulatory procedures to enable affected stations to increase power or change frequencies when targeted (a tactic already being applied by the FCC, with the commission responding within 24 to 48 hours) or possible congressional action to compensate stations affected by "additional, aggressive interference should all else fail."

But in response to questions from Rep-
Cuban interference which resulted in jamming Cuban radio signals. Levin noted that the south Florida radio broadcasters adopted a resolution supporting the concept of Radio Marti.

Representatives of national organizations, however, took a more measured view. The National Association of Broadcasters, the Clear Channel Broadcasting Service and the Association of Broadcast Engineering Standards called for negotiations with Cuba as a means of resolving the interference problem. And while Vincent Wasilewski, president of NAB, avoided mentioning Radio Marti, he said that the industry had not taken a position on it—David E. Hilliard, speaking for CBBS, and Walter Johnson, the executive director of ABES, expressed concern that Radio Marti would aggravate the problem.

Wasilewski said, “The solution lies with the federal government. Broadcasters implore Capitol Hill and the administration to work together with the Cuban government on this serious issue. While we fully recognize the political sensitivity of the Cuban interference problem, we urge you to carefully consider all means of solving this problem and their consequences which may affect each and every American.”

Wasilewski said Cuba, which walked out of the western hemisphere conference on AM broadcasting in Rio de Janeiro last December and did not sign the Final Acts, “operates its facilities as an outlaw nation, ignoring international restrictions.” And he said the implications for American radio stations throughout the country, not just in the Southeast, are “alarming.” He cited the results of the NAB study on Cuban interference which shows that, if Cuba proceeds with its inventory of stations, over 200 AM stations in 32 states and the District of Columbia would suffer interference and reduced listening areas.

Hilliard, who is a partner in the law firm of Kirkland & Ellis and counsel for the CCBS and Johnson, who served on the U.S. delegation to the Rio conference, did not stop with urging the committee to consider negotiations as a way out of the interference problem. They said the presumed value of Radio Marti should be weighed against the possible loss in domestic service that could result. Radio Marti, Hilliard said, “has the potential for making a bad situation worse.”

Such arguments did not seem to make much of an impression on the committee. Fascell described Radio Marti as an “irrelevance” in connection with the interference problem. And Ireland, in response to a plea from Johnson to be sensitive to the danger to the U.S. system of broadcasting, called him “a Neville Chamberlain.”

However, some support for the possibility that Cuba herself might initiate bilateral talks came from Kalmann Schaefer, assistant to the FCC chairman on international communications and head of the delegation to Rio. He noted that the success of the International Telecommunication Union is based on the self-interest of the members. Such self-interest, he said, raises the possibility that “Cuba may yet initiate another attempt to develop a scheme of AM broadcast allocations under which both Cuba and the United States would—in the main, at least—shelter their AM services from each other’s interference.”

Short of such talks—or their failure if held—Hilliard had another suggestion. He said the U.S. should go beyond its present policy of permitting stations to increase power to recoup service lost to Cuban interference. He said it should permit such increases above the 50 kw limit now imposed on American broadcasting. He noted that the present policy discriminates against Class I clear channel stations which now operate with 50 kw and in some cases are suffering from Cuban interference.

Harriet A. (Sis) Kaplan, president of the National Radio Broadcasters Association, went a step further—to the delight of Fascell. She said it is “unfair that the Florida broadcasters should have to bear the brunt of the interference which has resulted from a political problem affecting the entire nation.” She recommended that Congress suggest to the commission that it relax rules governing interference, “much of which interference is highly theoretical.” She said the relaxation could be in the form of allowing affected stations to increase power—even above 50 kw—to overcome interference. She would grant such cases unless the interference to U.S. stations was “substantial.” Such a plan, she said, would “result in a sharing of the burden of the Cuban problem” now experienced in Florida with stations outside of the state.

Fascell throughout the hearing had called for such an approach. And he chided the broadcasting industry for ignoring the problem while only Florida stations were affected. But he said the time has come for the industry “to stick together in this thing and do whatever is required to force a long-term agreement and help the industry people who are in difficulty.”

But Wasilewski, in his testimony, cast doubt on the wisdom of an effort at sharing the burden, or even of attempting to counter Cuban interference by authorizing higher power for affected stations. Cuban interference patterns, he noted, changed daily. “It takes nothing more than the turn of a screw in Cuba to give U.S. broadcasters a whole new set of problems.”

Common cause. F. Clifton White, chairman of the Presidential Commission on Broadcasting to Cuba, told that group’s first public meeting that he “strongly supports” the concept of Radio Marti, the administration’s proposal for broadcasting news of Cuba to that country. The meeting was attended by 14 broadcasters from Florida, concerned about interference being received from Cuba. Harold Frank, vice president of radio for the Florida Association of Broadcasters, and Herbert Levin, president of the South Florida Radio Broadcasters Association, discussed the interference problems both at the commission meeting and at hearings of the House Foreign Affairs Committee on Radio Marti.
The FCC should proceed gradually in any effort to expand satellite capacity. Or that seemed to be the consensus of the mixed comments the FCC received last week.

The comments came in response to an FCC proposal to reduce orbital spacing in the 4/6 ghz (C) and 12/14 ghz (K) bands last year (BROADCASTING, Oct. 5, 1981). In an effort to insure open entry and assure that demand for transponders didn’t outstrip supply, the commission proposed to reduce spacing for satellites on the C band from four degrees to two. It also proposed to reduce the spacing on the K band from three degrees to two.

While some commenters argued for leaving the spacing alone, and others endorsed dropping both bands to two degrees, most appeared to agree that the FCC shouldn’t reduce the spacing on either band below three degrees—at least for the near term.

The Department of Commerce, for example, said it supported the FCC’s proposals. “The growing demand, along with construction and launching costs already invested by the industry, require the commission to institute the space reduction proposals expeditiously,” it said. “The commission’s proposals represent the best opportunity for accommodating new entrants, thereby increasing the diversity of services and maintaining a competitive marketplace.”

Satellite Syndicated Systems Inc. said the FCC’s proposals were all for the good. “If the two degree spacing proposal is adopted, the supply of transponders will finally equal or even exceed the demand,” it said. “This will result in less pressure on program suppliers to obtain transponders on a specific ‘cable satellite’ and thus prevent carriers and other domsats from exacting excessive prices and imposing restrictive conditions. With the development of more cable satellites, more programers will emerge to fill the demand for diverse and specialized programing and the marketplace will finally normalize,” SSS said.

The FCC’s proposals may require “some upgrading of existing receive-only earth stations utilized by cable television operators and other receivers of satellite programing,” it said. “However, the public-interest benefits of an abundance of inexpensive satellite services far outweigh the costs of adopting earth stations to the new two degree spacing,” SSS said.

United Press International, however, said it was opposed to any decrease in the orbital spacing on the C band. According to UPI, it wouldn’t be fair “to impose the economic and technical costs associated with small orbital spacing on customers who, in reliance on existing commission rules and policies, have made sizable investments in their existing systems and equipment.”

Mutual Broadcasting System Inc. said that reduced orbital spacing would result in less transponder bandwidth. As a result, the six-foot antennas that Mutual uses would not meet interference objectives, Mutual said.

Although Mutual said it shared the commission’s view that additional spacing would ultimately benefit all users and the American public, it also noted that a reduced spacing would create “major operational and financial consequences” for those having to retool and called for phasing in any, space reductions “under a carefully developed plan which, among other things, includes implementation of the new policies on those points in the orbit which would have the least impact on existing users.”

Westinghouse Broadcasting Co. Inc. said it supported the concept of reducing orbital spacing between C-band satellites to three degrees. “However, before implementation of any such reduction, the commission must assure itself that relatively inexpensive 4.5 meter antenna technology is available that provides adequate quality reception of video programing,” Westinghouse said.

Southern Pacific Communications Co. said it “clearly” recognized the need for increased orbital capacity. But, “because of problems inherent in two-degree spacing at this time, the commission should at the very least consider a gradual phasing in of this plan, affording minimum disruption to systems currently proposed. In the interim, until such time as two-degree spacing is more technically feasible, a variable spacing plan comprising some combination of different spacing could be implemented which considers the variations in currently planned or operational systems and accommodates them accordingly,” Southern Pacific said.

The National Cable Television Association said it thought a three-degree spacing would be less disruptive than a two-degree one.

NCTA questioned the commission’s conclusions regarding the ability of existing earth station equipment to deliver television to cable systems at acceptable or tolerable levels of interference. At the two-degree spacing, the receive-only dishes the cable industry uses now would be rendered obsolete, NCTA said.

Instead, NCTA recommended that satellites launched in the near term be three degrees apart in the C band and two degrees apart in the K band. It recommended that two-degree spacing in the C band be authorized only after alternatives were considered and practical ground facilities were available.

NCTA said that a separate notice of inquiry should be launched on earth station antennas, after which “reasonable and practical rules or guidelines which would tolerable spacing of satellites could be adopted.”

If the study were completed in time, new facilities could be made to meet the new rules or guidelines, perhaps in 1985. Existing facilities shouldn’t be made to meet the new standards until 1995, so that “present earth station investments can be sensibly amortized,” NCTA said.

RCA Americom said it thinks three-degree spacing is “practical with current satellite and terrestrial systems.” A further reduction to two-degree spacing is possible, but would be dependent upon establishing stiff technical standards for transmit and receive earth station antennas, polarization standardization and interleaving of satellites; standardization of the satellite’s signal strength on the ground and effective means of intersatellite traffic coordination, RCA said.

Home Box Office Inc. said the FCC should be able to effect a shift to two-degree spacing on the K band “in relatively short order,” causing only an “acceptable amount of dislocation.” However, it said, reducing to two degrees the C band would “degrade the quality of cable television signals to a point that would be significantly below acceptable standards for those cable subscribers now served by 4.5 meter earth stations. Because the number of such earth stations is substantial and the impact upon the viewing public is unacceptable, it would be contrary to the public interest for C band satellites to be spaced at two degrees,” HBO said.

“In the meantime, HBO urges the commission also to pursue expeditiously and vigorously alternative means of increasing in-orbit transponder capacity, including the use of reverse frequencies in the C band, and to explore the possibility of reverse frequencies in the K band as well,” HBO said.

Hughes Communications Inc. said it favors an “immediate” reduction of C-band spacing to three degrees. “The additional orbital locations resulting from further reducing orbital spacings would unquestionably create benefits, but there would also be significant costs,” Hughes said. “In assessing the cost-benefit tradeoff, the commission should consider the impact on earth station owners and on innovation with regard to new services, and it should give satellite operators and itself the flexibility to respond to the dynamics of a constantly changing market. By continuing its evolutionary policies to foster both innovations and competition, the commission can improve the efficiency of orbital and frequency usage without creating prematurely and artificially rigid constraint on the future,” Hughes said.

Music to Particular Ears

One of cable TV’s many charms is its ability to serve up specific audiences for advertisers, much as specialized magazines do. This is called “narrowcasting,” and the purest example to date is Music Television, from Warner Amex Satellite Entertainment Co. Launched in August, MTV beams out 24 hours a day a stream of performances by recording stars popular with the 12-to-34 age group. Over 300 U.S. cable systems offer the MTV channel to their 2.5 million subscribers for nothing, which is close to what the music costs Warner Amex. It consists almost exclusively of videotapes made by record companies and passed along free to MTV, just as records are to radio stations.

MTV’s special audience has attracted such advertisers as Pepsi, 7-Up, Dentyne, and the U.S. Navy. Cable operators make money by selling two minutes an hour to local advertisers, and from renting a device (optional but irresistible) that delivers the sound through the subscriber’s stereo.
Of the countless products and services introduced in 1981, FORTUNE magazine chose just 10 that deserved special attention. And one of them was MTV: Music Television. MTV was singled out for providing a unique and innovative contribution to the American marketplace.

MTV: MUSIC TELEVISION

If MTV is that important to the general business community, think how important it can be to you. Although it’s offered free to your basic subscribers, MTV can substantially increase your profits. With stereo hookups. Second-set charges. And, MTV allows you to sell two minutes of local advertising every hour.

What’s more, it’s also free to you. You don’t have to be in the FORTUNE 500 to know that’s a great deal.
routed the FCC proposals but thought the "goal must be implemented on a phased and flexible basis which will accommodate both user and carrier requirements."

That, SBS said, means "allowing current antennas which do not meet the proposed standard ... to continue in use for the remainder of their lifetimes.... This should not frustrate the commission's ability to implement a reduced satellite deployment plan, particularly if it is able to assign adjacent orbital slots to homogenous satellites."

Scientific-Atlanta Inc. said it thought the "commission is premature and optimistic in its expectation of going to less than three-degree spacing between satellites."

As an alternative, the FCC should use the orbital arc from 55 degrees west longitude to 70 degrees west longitude for "immediate expansion," reduce satellite spacing to three degrees in the C band in 1985, but continue three-degree spacing in the K band, Scientific-Atlanta said.

Western Union Telegraph Co said it recognized the "virtual inevitability of spacing reduction at C band," but it didn't endorse the plan to go to two degrees.

"The spacing standard could become three degrees and evolve toward two degrees as improvements occur in the satellite technology," Western Union said. "We believe that matters such as these would best be resolved through the deliberations of an industry-wide committee, with commission representatives included," Western Union said.

AT&T said even though it could modify its satellite services to accommodate two-degree spacing, "we believe that a 2.5-degree satellite spacing with a real 3 db improvement in each station antenna sidelobes is the most cost-effective means of significantly increasing the number of orbital slots."

The satellite telecommunications section of the Electronic Industries Association recommended that the FCC reduce spacing in the C band only to three degrees, continue three-degree spacing in the K band, and use the orbital arc from 55 degrees west longitude to 70 degrees west longitude for immediate expansion.

"Any further reduction of satellite spacing in the 4/6 ghz or 12/14 ghz band need not be considered until most or all the orbital arc is saturated with three-degree spaced satellites," EIA said. Further reductions should be considered only "after sufficient measured data can be gathered for the interference at this state," EIA said.

M/A Com Inc. said two-degree spacing could be implemented for most domsats by the end of the decade, as "long as domestic satellite operators are required to coordinate RF carrier plans, and transponder channel plans from one satellite to the next are required to coordinate the areas of polarization so as to achieve the benefits of cross-polarization isolation, and are required to publish actual measured transponder power levels."

M/A Com also thought "earth station manufacturers will have little difficulty designing and manufacturing transmit/receive earth stations that, coupled with the above requirements on the space segment, will provide acceptable performance for most domestic satellite services."

Cable teletext service will be fed by satellite

Field-SSS joint venture will use Satcom III-R to distribute text material in WTBS signal

Although teletext is seen primarily as a broadcast service, millions of homes around the country might get their first look at teletext on cable television. Field Electronic Publishing Inc. and Satellite Syndicated Systems Inc. last week that they are discussing a joint venture to offer a national teletext service via satellite and cable systems.

Teletext is a system for sending information—text and graphics—to home television screens during the vertical blanking interval of a television signal. The "pages" of information are sent cyclically; a decoder attached to the television receiver is instructed by the viewer to "grab" a page and display it on the screen. Broadcasters have been experimenting with such systems in the United States for the past few years, and are now waiting for the FCC to sanction the service.

Under the contemplated deal, FEP would supply SSS with a national teletext magazine comprising 120 pages of news, sports and weather. SSS would then insert the pages in the VBI of WTBS(TV) Atlanta and deliver the superstation along with the teletext magazine via Satcom III-R to more than 4,000 cable systems and 18.5 million homes.

According to SSS spokesman Bill Sullivan, SSS would market the service to cable operators, who would offer the teletext service to their subscribers the "same way they would a pay tier." Consumers would have to pay a one-time installation charge, which would include the cost of the decoder, and a monthly subscription fee. Sullivan said no determination has been made on what SSS would charge cable operators for the service or guess what operators might charge consumers.

FEP is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Field Enterprises Inc., a Chicago-based company with interests in cable, broadcasting and publishing and is well prepared to enter into the new venture. It has been experimenting with broadcast teletext since April 1981 and has been offering a variation of teletext—a late-night (early morning) full-channel service in which the sequentially broadcast teletext pages can be watched without a decoder—since last September.

The new teletext service would share WTBS's VBI with SSS's current CableText services: UPI Cable News Wire, Reuters Newsview, View Weather and Dow Jones. The CableText pages, which are transmitted about once every 20 seconds, are taken out of the VBI at the cable headend and sent to homes on a full cable channel. SSS also will continue using the VBI for downloading of the Quotader commodity reports to Apple computer users.

SSS and FEP have used the British Ceefax teletext technology for their various services and, according to Sullivan, will continue to use it in the new venture. SSS is negotiating with Zenith Radio, which has been supplying Ceefax decoding equipment to SSS and FEP, to manufacture the home decoders.

STC sets specs for DBS earth stations

Satellite Television Corp. last week released specifications for the satellite earth stations subscribers will need to receive the three channels of pay television from its direct broadcast satellite service beginning in late 1985 or early 1986.

According to STC President Irving Goldstein, the release of the specifications is intended to encourage marketplace competition and development of the best, lowest-priced home equipment possible. All interested manufacturers, STC said, are invited to develop and build prototypes of earth stations and deliver them to STC by July 15, 1982.

STC says it would prefer to "stimulate" the market without making a purchase of earth stations, but there is a strong possibility it will be forced to. One industry source said it is unlikely that any manufacturer will make the enormous investment necessary to tool up for DBS earth station production without a sizable contract from STC in hand. According to one manufacturer, STC's initial order, which might come as soon as this summer, will ask for 50,000 earth stations.

The specifications, which are available from STC's David Durand, cover the two-and-a-half foot antenna, the outdoor microwave unit that downconverts the 12-ghz DBS frequency to an intermediate, a frequency more immune to interference, and the indoor unit that demodulates the signal and remodulates it at an open VHF frequency.

There are a number of companies interested in the DBS market, which could require several million units by the end of the decade. Among them are General Instrument, Scientific-Atlanta, Satcom Inc., NEC America, Panasonic, Microdyne and California Microwave.

At start-up, STC will have only one operational satellite in place to deliver its service to the Eastern time zone, but assuming it finds a partner to share the expense of final operational burden of the system, three additional operational satellites to serve the rest of the country could be launched within a year after service is inaugurated.

Time banking: casting a wary eye on a common practice

In wake of JWT debacle, opponents and proponents of time banking have begun assessing value of program bartering in exchange for future commercial air time

The spotlight on time banking in television program syndication as a result of J. Walter Thompson's financial problems and its ensuing decision to discontinue this practice (BROADCASTING, March 8) has split some advertising agencies and media buying services into widely opposing camps.

On the one side are the opponents of time banking (the bartering of programing to local stations in exchange for future commercial air time) who contend the procedure is complex and difficult to control and manage; often locks a client into certain stations irrespective of their programing; provides stations with programing of questionable quality and enables some agencies with large spot TV dollars to use that leverage to persuade stations to accept less-than-desirable programs.

Its proponents insist that time banking, with proper controls, can be beneficial to both stations and advertisers. They concede the procedure must be carefully monitored. They say the station should be provided with a suitable program and the agency should "cut" a satisfactory deal, generating time worth at least 20% more than the value of the program in the market and often considerably more than that. This approach, they say, can help stations recoup funds during slack periods. When the time actually is used, they continue, the agency or the buying service should be certain the spots are run off in a satisfactory period.

The Thompson debacle erupted last month when the agency revealed its syndication unit had made fictitious accounting entries of $24.5 million over a four-year period (BROADCASTING, Feb. 8 et seq.). This led to the suspension without pay of Marie Luisi, senior vice president and director of communications services, who headed the program syndication activities. Ten days ago Thompson announced it would withdraw from general time banking but not from barter syndication, when it involves in-show commercials or a single client time bank (BROADCASTING, March 1). Without being explicit, Thompson indicated that time banking may have been tied to its financial woes in syndication.

Agencies and station representatives canvassed by BROADCASTING pointed to some diminution of time banking in the immediate future although there was no immediate consensus. Stations, agencies and media services may be slightly wary now, officials say, but the practice seems too firmly embedded to disappear. They agree time banking can be a boon for stations in a period of rising program costs and recessionary pressures but stress that stations should guard against accepting low-quality shows.

Television station interest in the Thompson gambit was underscored by Roger Rice, president of the Television Bureau of Advertising. He said eight TV stations of varying sizes have called him since the Thompson announcement.

"They said they were glad to hear about the action," Rice reports. "Mind you, stations are not against barter. They want time to be bought and sold on merit and programs to be bought and sold on merit. Too many times some agencies and buying services use the 'carrot-and-stick' approach—in other words, take the program and we'll take care of you when it comes to buying spot television in your market."

A spokesman for J. Walter Thompson said last week the agency always had a firm policy against so-called "tie-in" barter and added that "more than a year ago we separated the buying function from syndication, so that the same people were not involved in buying as were involved in syndication, although Marie Luisi still headed both units."

Five other agencies are known to be active in program syndication. Doyle Dane Bernbach, Cunningham & Walsh and Lexington Broadcast Services, independent subsidiary of Grey Advertising, do not operate time banks, but function along the lines of the new Thompson set-up. The time bank route is still in effect at Ted Bates & Co. and Dancer Fitzgerald Sample.

Walter E. Reichel, senior vice president and executive director of media and programs for Bates, says the agency intends to continue with its time bank. He notes that the Bates approach is different from Thompson's in that Bates does not buy the programming but locates programs it believes stations need. The stations provide Bates with time, he adds, and after selling the time to its clients for 80% of the market price, Bates pays the program supplier.

Peggy Green, senior vice president and director of local broadcast for Dancer and president of its Program Syndication Services subsidiary, says the agency has gone on record as retaining time banks since there are sufficient controls. Her unit, she maintains, provides stations with programs they can use and the arrangement can be useful for all parties concerned.

Stan Moger, executive vice president of SFM Media Corp., New York, confides he has long been uncomfortable with time banks. He said SFM had only one experience with the procedure about a year and a half ago and it was "a disaster." He claims time banking is difficult to manage and control, particularly in view of changing personnel at stations. He says it often locks clients into stations irrespective of the programs they are carrying. And, he says, it paves the way for some agencies to use their clout in spot spending to force stations to take lackluster programing.

Dean McCarthy, vice president and director of Harrington, Righter and Parsons, thinks both stations and distributors are making "a mistake." In the long run, he believes, the straight cash transaction will turn out to be the best approach.

"But I have no illusions that barter and time banks will go away," he agrees. "There's always the inducement that your out-of-pocket costs are being reduced. But more and more the advertiser is controlling the station's spot inventory. We all know that tie-in barter exists and there will be stations willing to deal."

A media buying official who asked not to be identified said barter and time banking are not new phenomena. They have existed and flourished many years, he said, pointing out that the legendary film promoter, Matthew Fox, was putting together multimillion-dollar barter deals for feature films more than 25 years ago. "They barter like there's no tomorrow. Not only for television programs, station

SONY® Broadcast

Sony is a registered trademark of Sony Corp.
Moreton Binn, board chairman of Atwood Richards Inc., New York, pointed out his company has been in operation since 1958 and adds: "Do you think we could or should trust us?"

The firm, which he refers to as a 'reciprocal trade organization,' functions in all media but is particularly heavy in broadcast. He indicates that program syndication is one facet of his business but not the leader in generating the time banks established at stations throughout the country.

He does not believe the JWT experience has a deleterious effect on barter syndication or time banking. He points out that several media service organizations and at least one major advertising agency, Lennen & Newell, have gone bankrupt in recent years but other organizations have thrived.

Binn says there are no hard rules in "cutting a barter deal." It depends on the urgency of the need, either on the part of the station or the barter house. He has completed some transactions in which the time was only slightly below the market price and in others where the ratio was considerably higher.

"Barter is at its peak today," Binn asserts. "The economy is faltering, unemployment is high, bankruptcies are growing. As long as we continue to deliver on our promises to stations and other customers, our business will continue to thrive."

Bates sees good news in annual media costs survey
Study shows that lower-price trend will continue this year

Ted Bates Advertising, New York, has a positive message about media costs for 1982: it expects the "dis-inflation" trend in advertising that began in 1981 to continue this year.

In its annual analysis of media cost trends, released last week, Bates projects that the increases in network TV, spot TV, network radio and spot radio should be parallel or only slightly higher or lower in 1982 than the Conference Board's estimate of a 7% growth in the consumer price index.

"We anticipate [a] moderate C-P-M increase in network TV—5% for daytime and 8% for evening," the Bates report says. "Spot TV should increase at the same rate as in 1981—5%. Network radio (9%) and spot radio (7%) should experience similar increases in C-P-M's that occurred in 1981. Magazines (6%) and outdoor (7%) should parallel the Conference Board's estimate of 7% CPI growth, while newspapers and supplements should exceed the CPI growth rate with a 9% C-P-M increase."

The analysis, prepared by the media information and analysis division of Bates's media program department, tracks trends in unit costs, audience, national expenditures and C-P-M's for nine media segments over the past 12 years (see page 154).

The report estimates that between 1970 and 1981, unit costs climbed by 188% in daytime network TV, 206% in evening network TV, 88% in spot TV, 134% in spot radio, 132% in network radio, 69% in magazines, 150% in newspapers, 120% in supplements and 162% in outdoor.

During the same 12 years, according to Bates, audiences grew by 21% in daytime network TV, 23% in evening network TV, 25% in spot TV, 31% in spot radio, 66% in network radio, 2% in newspapers and 13% in supplements. The magazine audience dropped by 3%.

In a section devoted to cost-per-thousand trends, Bates says the rise in C-P-M's during the 12-year period was 139% for daytime network TV, 148% for evening network TV, 59% for spot TV, 78% for spot radio, 9% for network radio, 74% for magazines, 14% for newspapers, 95% for supplements and 128% for outdoor.

The Bates report underlines that the "boom years" were 1976-78 when there were dramatic increases in C-P-M's, especially in television. During that period, according to Bates, there were annual average percent increases of 17% for daytime TV, 14% for evening network TV and 10% for spot TV. Bates stresses that these increases outpaced the CPI, which climbed at an 8% annual rate. Bates comments that all other media showed increases that closely paralleled the CPI increases during 1976-79.

Turning to advertising volume performance, Bates observes that during those "boom years" the growth in total annual advertising investment exceeded growth in the GNP (gross national product) 12% to 15%. Bates adds that a similar trend occurred in 1980 and 1981, with advertising volume rising by an annual average of 11.5% while GNP climbed by 10%.

Impressing 1981, Bates hails the return of single-digit C-P-M increases—the first time this has happened since the early 1970's. The agency points out that television (both network and spot) C-P-M's increased at roughly half the rates exhibited during the "boom years" and 1980.

"Network radio, however, exhibits a unique pattern in that it experienced an 8% C-P-M increase in 1981 compared to a 5% increase in the previous year. We believe there are two major contributing factors for this rise: network radio has traditionally operated with a "limited" advertising base and the development of new, narrowly targeted networks has escalated demand for this medium."

The agency concludes that 1982 media costs will still rise in spite of economic pressures, including high unemployment and a stagnating GNP. But Bates says if the government is successful in holding down inflation, the moderating trend in media prices might be a sustained one, “bringing with it welcome relief to advertisers.”

Ayer cable study: still rural-oriented

Ad agency says that penetration is not high enough in most major ADI's for targeted media buys now, but that, it says, will change

“Rural/small town cable with a sprinkling of suburbs may be just the thing for some marketers—a kind of Grid of the airwaves...” but marketers talk of the need to reach “any target group with a high degree of concentration in large metropolitan areas, like trend-setting young women, wine consumers or PM’s (professionals/managers) may be barking up the wrong tree with cable.”

That assessment of cable advertising comes from a study by Ayer Media, a unit of ad agency NW Ayer. The report maintains that “with the advertising interest in cable, its future looks very rosy...in all this hubbub, however, we shouldn’t forget that the future is really not here yet.”

Ayer focused on the disparities in cable penetration, stressing that cable today remains “in most instances ... a small market/rural market phenomenon.” Moreover, “in 22 of the top 50 markets, cable penetration is less than 5% in the center city and its immediate suburbs.” Philadelphia is used as an example. Ayer noted it is the country’s fourth largest ADI with 25% cable penetration, “equal to the national average.” But a close look at the market, Ayer suggests, shows cable would not be a good vehicle in the ADI “for reaching selective affluent targets.” PM’s, says Ayer, are concentrated in seven suburban counties, none of which have higher than 15% cable penetration. “Cable does remarkably well in the south Jersey pine barrens and the Pennsylvania Dutch farm country where the PM’s of the area do not reside in great numbers.” Ayer suggests that means cable might be a consideration for “an advertiser like J.C. Penney or John Deere,” which would want to reach the outlying areas of the Philadelphia ADI, but not for others.

In a few markets, Ayer says, cable’s future has already arrived: San Francisco, San Diego and Pittsburgh. But in most major markets, according to the agency, cable still has a long way to go.

“This is not meant to dampen the spirits of those who are catering full tilt into cable television,” the report states. “Its real purpose is to advise you that unlike network television, cable is not available in equal numbers throughout the nation. An advertiser must overlay his geographic and demographic needs with what cable has to offer at this time: otherwise a national advertiser who is seeking groups concentrated in the urban/suburban core of major cities, buying cable television today may be just eating the hole in the donut.”

COLUMBIA PICTURES TELEVISION
"Incredible opportunities are coming for the local programmer!"

Steve Currie. 1981 President of the National Association of Television Program Executives, is Manager of Broadcast Operations, KOIN-TV, Portland, Oregon.

"NATPE does quite a bit to help improve local programming. Sponsoring the IRIS Awards, for example. They're only for local programming, and there's no question that they've become a major award in the TV industry. NATPE-sponsored workshops and general sessions deal with the problems of local stations and those of the local programmer. The exchange of ideas and information from around the country helps us all.

"The role of Program Director is difficult: even for NATPE to define, because responsibilities vary from station to station. It started out, in many cases, that the Program Director was merely an operations clerk who shuffled paper, took the network schedule, and filled in the half-hour hole on Saturday or Sunday. Most of the actual program decisions were made by the General Manager, Sales Manager, or a combination thereof. As Program Director here, I have responsibility for the on-air look of the station. I don't control the journalistic aspect of the news, but I am involved in how the product looks on the air. Attitudes toward the Program Director are changing, too. There is a great realization that if you have a good programmer who is doing a good job, you're going to get your ratings.

"I think that as our industry develops, the local station with local studio, talent, and expertise is going to become a major supplier to other groups, whether they be a low-powered station in our own market, a cable channel, the video market, whatever.

"Right now it's easier to go out and buy a syndicated series than it is to create your own local programs, but it's not necessarily better. We have a program here called Northwest Illustrated, which precedes 60 Minutes on our station. It's a magazine half-hour similar to 60 Minutes —on a local level—and has won a number of awards, including a DuPont Columbia award. This show is, to a great extent, produced on film. We shoot on Kodak film, because we want a clean, finished look—one that sets it apart from some other news programming you see on the air. It's our showpiece and has to have the right look. Kodak film gives that to us. I'm very proud of the show, because the station is not only providing a service—we're doing something of quality.

"If I see any coming trend, it's that of more news and informational shows done on a local basis. This will help local stations maintain their local affinity. And it's a great opportunity for us. Look, it's seldom that a local station can go out and do a dramatic presentation, a sitcom, or a movie. It's just not in the cards. But here is the chance to have something truly unique for our market. It's where we have our expertise. It's where we have the ability to really excel. There's a lot of opportunity coming for the local station, and I think that's something we all need to keep in mind."

On first anniversary of ABC/Hearst joint venture startup, theme weeks have become element nights on schedule

Last night (March 14) marked the start of the second year for ARTS, the cultural program service that was ABC's first entry into the cable programing field, and with the new schedule, ARTS brought out a new look. (To be correct, ARTS is now a presentation of Hearst/ABC Video Services, carried on Warner-Amex Satellite Entertainment Company's Nickelodeon Channel transponder.) Gone are the guest-hosted "theme weeks" that were originally intended to provide a measure of continuity to the service's programs; in their stead is a schedule built around "element nights," with each day of the week devoted to a specific performing art.

That's the major change noted by Jack Healy, ABC Video Enterprises vice president, product development and acquisitions, in talking about the service in which he's heavily involved. With the exception of an increase in dramatic productions, Healy says, ARTS will be no different in content in this second season. Among upcoming dramatic productions are director Robert Altman's cable television directorial debut, "Rattlesnake in a Cooler" (the subject of a Kennedy Center reception and screening in Washington last week); a one-act play by Frank South; two plays by noted playwright and author David Mamet, and two productions by Joseph Papp.

Healy thinks one thing viewers will notice about this year's ARTS is "much more of a network look," something that includes "a lot more on-air promotion." The promotion push reflects a common problem for the cable programer—with the multiplicity of services, how can a programer get viewers know what's going to be on the channel in the coming nights. There's also a direct tie-in between the disappearance of ARTS's former hosts, and the on-location shooting of the host segments that marked the old theme-weeks, and the upshift in promotional spots.

Along with the promotion, the element nights are supposed to make it easier for cable subscribers to know they'll at least get the genre they're interested in if they tune to ARTS on a given night: Sunday's will feature musical performances, Monday's dance, Tuesday drama, with Wednesday devoted to the Mobil Showcase programing on various arts. Thursday, Friday and Saturday repeat the first three days of each week.

The repeat pattern is something ARTS is maintaining from its first year; according to Healy the pre-launch research ABC conducted, which suggested a repeat pattern would be an asset with the viewers ABC was hoping to attract, has been validated by the response ARTS is receiving from its audience.

Quantifying that audience, Healy says ARTS has been drawing an average rating of 1 to 1.5 in the 6.5 million homes it reaches, for an average houry audience of about 600,000.

Advertisers haven't exactly been falling over themselves trying to reach those 600,000. Polaroid is the only sponsor to come on board since ARTS announced Mobil back in October. But Healy says that in part is due to ARTS being "a new business in a new industry in a depressed economy." He reports "a lot of interest from major advertisers," now that "we have some facts, not just suppositions." One vehicle he says a number of advertisers have expressed interest in sponsoring are the ARTS Minutes, short investigations of art-related topics that along with similarly timed ARTS Quiz, the service hopes to use as pacing elements between programs in the coming year.

Let's Come Down to Earth about Satellite Radio Programming
Straight facts from the people who offer you programming and profits instead of just promises.

There's a lot of static in the air today concerning satellite radio programming. Some people are promoting themselves as our competitors. But just how competitive are they?

The fact is, there is one live, multi-format 24-hour satellite radio network on the air today. And only one.

The same network that pioneered space station programming in August of last year and today has over 125 affiliates.

The one and only network that combines top notch on-air talent and programming with flexible formats that allow ample local I.D. The network whose technology is in place today, and whose proven financial benefits for subscribers are as solid as the future of satellite broadcasting itself.

That lone satellite radio pioneer is us — Satellite Music Network. And we have five questions you should ask our "competition" before deciding whether they really are.

1. Are they on the air now?
2. Are they really a 24-hour, live satellite network?
3. How many formats do they have now?
4. Do they provide the flexibility to maintain your local identity?
5. How much do they cost?

If you can't get down to earth answers from them, call us toll free at 1-800-527-4892. (In Texas, call 214-343-9205)

Instead of pie-in-the-sky promises, you'll get satellite in the sky results. Ask any of our affiliates.
Klein calls for new conscience

Klein & president says programing possibilities for new media should go beyond offerings now on conventional television

"My greatest fear is that this variegated new world of home video we are in the process of creating may simply turn out to be future schlock." That was the message delivered by Bob Klein, president of the Los Angeles creative consulting firm of Klein & of the nonprofit Satellite Education Services, to a meeting of Town Hall of California in Los Angeles.

Klein said he welcomes the production boom created by new technologies but warned that greed and a failure to take new risks would waste the expanded opportunities.

"If the new media offer merely more of the same," he argued, "we will pander rather than elucidate ... we will downgrade rather than lift. We can be a promised land where the new technologies grow and offer a legacy ... or we can, through greed, fail to grasp this incredible opportunity ... leaving behind nothing.

"The decision on how to program these new channels of communication should not be the choice of 'Alligator's Island,' The Dukes of Hazzard and 50% annual profit. It must be the choice of intellectual growth, quality, diversity and reasonable profit."

Klein emphasized that the blue sky promise of cable, DBS, and other means of delivering programs may be enormous, "but in practice there's very little profit yet." He estimated that no more than half of the new services are likely to survive. Klein is hopeful that success will come with diversification and innovation, but expressed anxiety about the fact there are so many "old faces" involved in the new technologies.

"The president of Warner Amex used to be president of CBS. The Cable News Network is being run by another former president of CBS. The Rockefeller/RCA Entertainment Channel is being run by another former president of CBS. If Bill Paley hadn't fired so many presidents, I don't know where cable would have gone for its executives." Commenting on what he sees as the impact of new technologies on older entertainment vehicles, Klein predicted that within "the next decade, we will see virtually the entire record business go video."

"I have now, and the music industry has now, a chance to use the power of home video to market music."

"The music industry has a chance to create a new world and that world will be a variegated world with new choices and opportunities." By the mid-1990's, said Klein, "the new media will also become the motion picture industry's main source of revenue ... Two or three times as many films will be made, filmmakers will be able to explore a much wider spectrum of themes, films [will be] made on smaller budgets for smaller audiences and still make a profit."

In the final analysis, Klein believes, "we are dealing with a fight for the leisure dollar. The competition for CBS Cable is not ABC ARTS or Bravo. It is vacation travel. The competition for videocassettes is not videodisks. It is video games."

Klein concluded with the observation that "there is great dissatisfaction with [broadcast] network programing ... For the future of this society, for the future of our most valuable resource—children—we must offer high quality entertainment and information that can be available throughout the landscape, so that when people thirst for knowledge and stimulation, they can drink from the new electronic well and be satisfied and not poisoned. We're asking people to pay for it now, and I don't believe they will accept what they've accepted in the past."

NBC Talknet expands to weekends

Seven-hour, late-night block of talk adds new programing

NBC Radio has become more loquacious late at night and affiliates are taking notice. NBC Radio's Talknet, a series of phone-in talk shows fed to more than 60 affiliates from 10 p.m. (NYT) to 5 a.m. weekends, will expand to weekends beginning in April.

According to Morrie Trumble, director, programs, NBC Radio Network: "We respond pretty much to what our affiliates tell us. We saw the shift of the music audience to the FM band and we have a lot of powerhouse AM's who had always done well, but now wanted talk."

Dick Penn, vice president and general manager, NBC Radio Networks, added: "We've been hearing from affiliates for a long time that they were interested in long-form talk programming in the late evening. They couldn't do that kind of show themselves with the same quality and diversity a network can offer."

Trumble said the idea of initiating the Spending money on still another rating service may not seem like a good idea in these budget conscious times. But what if your sales people had a tool that could increase local sales to the tune of over twenty times what you paid for the service?

That's what KMBC-TV did in Kansas City. Using Viewer and Consumer data, they nailed down $300,000 in new local sales from July through December of last year. And, in Cleveland, WEWS-TV got six new advertisers, who spent over $100,000 in just three months, based on the data from VAC's first report.

If you want to see more astounding facts and figures on the amazing effectiveness of VAC, call Bill Morris or Ron Laufer. But act quickly. If you don't get in on the May Sweeps VAC data will be unavailable to you until early 1983.

talk blocks began three years ago, but only materialized last November after key personalities were secured. Bruce Williams, a former small-business man turned radio talk show host, is one of them. His program, fed live at 10 p.m. for two hours and then repeated at 3 a.m., deals with the “universal problems” of personal finances.

Also on the bill is Sally Jessy Raphael, whose three-hour show, fed live at midnight, incorporates a “close friend” approach in discussions on a plethora of topics centering on “emotional problems.” Trumble said Raphael, who doesn’t hold a degree in psychology, refrains from “psycho-babble” or terminology that is too clinical for radio.

Bernard Meltzer, formerly host of an advice program on WOR AM New York, will join Talknet early in April for two live, five-hour shows fed Saturday and Sunday evenings between 7 p.m. and midnight. Negotiations are still in the works for the remaining two hours. The slot may be filled by a Hollywood-based show “with a highly visible host” and celebrity guests, Trumble indicated. Another possibility is a New York-based “service” talk/phone-in show examining life styles and offering advice.

Further programming expansion is not anticipated “for quite a while,” said Trumble. After NBC Radio goes “full satellite,” as expected by 1983, it would be more likely, he said. In the meantime, NBC Radio plans to have an interim satellite system working to distribute Talknet.

Disney Channel picks Wagner of CBS as head

Program VP will be president of joint venture with Group W; he takes over March 21; service planned to start next year

Group W Satellite Communications and Walt Disney Productions, co-venturers in the planned cable programing service to be known as The Disney Channel, have tapped Alan Wagner, CBS Entertainment vice president, programs, New York, to be the Disney Channel’s first president. Wagner will assume that position on March 21. At press time, CBS had no replacement lined up for Wagner.

Wagner’s career with CBS has spanned 21 years, during which he was involved in the development of such programs as The Defenders, M*A*S*H and The Mary Tyler Moore Show. As vice president, programs, he has been responsible for the development of all CBS Entertainment programs emanating from New York and Europe. Before assuming that position, Wagner held three other posts with the rank of vice president (nighttime programs, program planning and development, and program development, Hollywood).

Among other things, Wagner will have responsibility for overseeing The Disney Channel’s initial four-year $100-million programing budget. The family-oriented service is scheduled for launch in early 1983 with 16 hours of programing a day.

In a Group W announcement of the appointment, Wagner was quoted as saying, “I’ve been here with CBS for 21 years—that’s a lifetime. And you don’t decide to leave lightly—that’s a tough one. But in deciding to join the Disney Channel, I felt that I could make a difference because this service is something so vitally important—and fun—to all of America and I want to be a part of this fascinating, exciting and exploding cable television industry.”

Jonathan Hayes, president of Group W Satellite Communications, said that Wagner was the first candidate to be approached by his company and Disney to fill the post. He explained that the co-venturers felt that Wagner would bring to the Disney Channel “a clear understanding of the importance for television to be better than it is,” and that Wagner could fulfill the medium’s “promise to combine successful and quality programing for the American family...”

NBC has second thoughts on captioning pull-out

For now, network’s support will continue but its concerns remain; those center on shortfalls in projected figures for decoder purchases

NBC is reconsidering its decision to pull out of the National Captioning Institute’s closed captioning program. Network officials announced last Monday (March 8) that “for the time being” NBC will continue with its four and one half hours of captioning each week, while it studies a proposal from NCI that would keep NBC involved on a limited basis until March 1983.

It is not known when the network will make a decision on the proposal. NBC’s concerns that prompted its announced pull-out have not diminished. In a Feb. 11 letter sent to NCI, Irwin Segelstein, NBC vice chairman, listed two reasons for withdrawing from the program: sagging caption decoder sales and the possibility the present captioning method will become obsolete. The NCI had predicted that 100,000 decoders would be sold within a year, but in two years only 43,000 have been purchased. NBC pays NCI $600,000 a year for the captioning service and $400,000 in transmission expenses.

NCI provides captioning services to ABC and PBS, neither of which have indicated a desire to pull out. CBS has refused to join the program, believing teletext is a better way to help the hearing impaired. Currently, 35 hours of captioned programming is available on the three networks. The NBC captioned programs are: Little House on the Prairie, Father Murphy, Diff’rent Strokes and NBC Sunday Night at the Movies.

The network’s decision to cancel its captioning service met with resistance from the hearing impaired. Roughly 200 demonstrators from two schools for the deaf picketed RCA headquarters last Monday (March 8) protesting NBC’s decision.

These advertisers can be shown that VAC can single out the people who would be their most likely audience. That's the experience of Ray Janz, local sales manager of KMBC-TV, who states emphatically that VAC adds invaluable consumer purchase information to the age/sex data provided by other services.

In addition, we can train your sales force to use the data properly and acquire specific information about who watches your station and what they buy. This will add to their professionalism and make them more effective.

For more information about how you can nail down additional local and national sales with Viewer and Consumer Ratings, contact Bill Morris or Ron Laufer at (212) 980-7117. But act quickly. If you don't get signed up by March 31st, this dynamite sales tool will be unavailable to you until next year.

Senate Republicans offer programing via satellite

The Senate Republican Conference hopes to enter the realm of regular TV programming on Saturday (March 20), when it offers the first of what could be a series of programs to broadcasters and cable TV operators.

Entitled Conference Reports, the series is to feature roundtable discussions by members of Congress and representatives of the print and broadcast press.

Senator James McClure (R-Idaho), who presently chairs the conference, will host the first installment. Accompanying him will be Senator William Roth (R-Del.); Representative Jack Kemp (R-N.Y.); Jerry Flint, Forbes magazine, and Daniel Schorr, Cable News Network. Participants will discuss supply-side economics and its chances for success.

The 30-minute program will be fed via Satcom III-R, transponder 16 between 3:30 and 4 p.m., EST. It will also go out over the Public Broadcasting Service on Westar 1, transponder 12, between 7:30 and 8 p.m., EST.

Each installment in the series is to be paid for from the campaign treasuries of its participants. The first segment cost $1,025, with $450 of that paid to rent a commercial transponder, $110, to rent a PBS transponder, $16 to cover the cost of tape and $60 for rental of Senate production studios.

Continuation of the series will depend on senators' willingness to pay for it, said Curtis Clews, communications director for the conference, and much of that will depend on how many stations and cable systems carry the programs.

The conference, which first ventured into TV programming by supplying actualities of senators commenting on President Reagan's State of the Union address (Broadcasting, Jan. 18) is presently surveying broadcasters and cable operators to gauge that effort's acceptance.

New public radio group formed to distribute shows

American Public Radio designed to complement NPR with more entertainment offerings

Representatives of four major public radio stations, along with one statewide public radio entity, have formed a new nonprofit organization "designed to assist stations which produce program series for the public radio system." American Public Radio Associates said it would serve producing stations in "marketing, co-production, coordination, scheduling, station relations and national fundraising."

Among the more than 20 programs the new group plans to distribute are A Prairie Home Companion, Festival, New York in Concert and the Los Angeles Philharmonic Concerts.

American Public Radio is intended to be "complementary, not competitive" toward National Public Radio, according to Wallace A. Smith, general manager of KUSC-FM Los Angeles and one of five founding board members of the organization. Other board members are John Beck of WNYC-FM New York, Al Hulsen of KOED-FM San Francisco, Walter Sheppard of WUCF-FM Cincinnati and William Kling of Minnesota Public Radio, St. Paul.

Acting as chairman of APR, Kling said the organization will emphasize development of specific program concepts and new services that have not previously been a part of the national programming agenda.

"It is the clear intention of all the directors of American Public Radio Associates to stay out of politics and to concentrate on the development and production of programs which will benefit their own stations as well as the stations of others who choose to participate in the American Public Radio Network," said Smith.

Smith told Broadcasting the group was formed in part as a response to a perceived shift at NPR away from arts and performance programing in favor of more news and public affairs coverage.

APR headquarters will be at 45 East Eighth Street, St. Paul.

Bendix takes a bite out of RCA

That doesn't sit well in chairman Bradshaw's office—company says it won't tolerate outside meddling; meanwhile annual earnings report shows plunging profit figures

RCA last week took the corporate approach to screaming bloody murder, but there wasn't much the company could do otherwise following the announcement by Bendix Corp. Chairman William M. Agee that his company had purchased more than a 5% interest in RCA, an interest Bendix seemed to suggest would likely increase to 9.9%.

Agee, who Bendix said "met with Mr. Thornton Bradshaw, chairman of RCA, on March 8 to inform him personally of Bendix's intent to file the disclosure statement and to assure him that Bendix's position is a friendly one," called the stock purchase "a statement of confidence in RCA's future."

"We are encouraged by the recent statements of [RCA's] management about its plans and directions and believe they could lead the company along a fine future path," the announcement quoted Agee as saying. Bendix also insisted its acquisition of RCA common stock is "for investment purposes only" and that Bendix "has no present plans for an acquisition, merger or reorganization of RCA."

But RCA wasn't buying that line for a minute: "Mr. Agee's actions, in secretly accumulating a block of RCA stock, show that his only purpose is to further his own ambitions and not the interests of RCA and its stockholders or even Bendix and its stockholders." The statement released by RCA quoted Bradshaw as saying: "We cannot and will not permit Mr. Agee to unilaterally exercise initiatives that may be counterproductive." Citing his efforts at forging a "strategic redirection" of RCA, Bradshaw said, "this is precisely the time in which the management must concentrate all of its resources and energies toward achieving its important business programs. Therefore, this is precisely not the time for us to permit anyone to attempt to meddle with or in any way destabilize the effort under way right now."

The vehemence of the RCA response was exemplified by the unattributed comment: "Mr. Agee has not demonstrated the ability to manage his own affairs, let alone someone else's!" An uncharacteristically personal remark to appear in a corporate communiqué, the comment was an apparent reference to the 1980 flap regarding Agee's handling of rumors of his romantic involvement with a top executive at Bendix, Mary Cunningham, who left and later joined Seagram.

The RCA announcement said the firm will take "all actions necessary to protect RCA and its stockholders," and listed the names of RCA's investment bankers and legal counsel for good measure.

Still, the essential problem RCA faces is that its poor financial performance—its stock dropped to a low of around $16.75 two weeks ago—has left the company in a vulnerable position, not necessarily for a takeover attempt but for strategies that would stop short of outright takeover. Agee engineered such a move previously for Bendix, buying 20% of Asarco which was later sold back to that company at a hefty premium over market value, netting Bendix $75 million after taxes.

RCA's poor performance was underscored in the release earlier last week of the company's 1981 annual report, and the proxy statement for this year's annual meeting. The report went beyond the previously released year-end earnings statement (BROADCASTING, Feb. 1), which had reported the drop in net profit from $315.3 million in 1980 to $54.0 million last year. By business segment, the profits of NBC dropped from $75.3 million in 1980 (they had been $152.6 million in 1977) to $48.1 million in 1981, helped by the write-off of $34 million in inventory for programs that NBC decided it wouldn't be able to run a second time.

Commercial products and services, which include picture tube manufacturing and broadcast and cable products, logged a $55.7-million loss for 1981 against $95.7 million in profits in 1980—chiefly because of a $130-million restructuring charge levied against the picture tube division. But sales and earnings for commercial products were also lower "reflecting reduced demand for RCA broadcast equipment as well as unanticipated costs associated with new product introductions."

Communications services showed a decline in profits to $83.1 million from $90.9 million, but the year-earlier figure had included $56.6 million in insurance costs covering the loss of Satcom III. Excluding that, earnings from communications services were a record in 1981.

In consumer products and services, profits climbed to $132.2 million from $99.6 million. Profits there were negatively affected by the introduction of the videodisk. In a later footnote, repeating one in last year's annual report, RCA said "the negative impact on profits" for the disk project was $106.8 million in 1981, $55.5 million in 1980 and $21.4 million in 1979. (Last year's report took those charges back to 1978's $8 million.) That totals $191.7 million spent over the four years, not counting what was recouped this year in player and disk sales, estimated outside the company to be some $60 million.

In RCA's review of its broadcast operations, it noted sales at the NBC Television Network increased a scant 6% last year, and that coupled with the program write-down, the network experienced "a sharp decline in profits." Owned television stations, however, were said to have logged "record sales and profits." The economics of NBC's radio operations were not directly addressed.

RCA's broadcast operations closed last year with $832.8 million in assets; capital expenditures for broadcast plant and equipment totaled $36.7 million and as of Dec. 31, NBC had $900 million in outstanding program commitments that will require payment over the next five years.

Among notes gleaned from the RCA proxy is that Grant Tinker, as chairman and CEO of NBC, draws a higher base salary ($500,000) than RCA Chairman Bradshaw ($450,000). But that base figure for Bradshaw gets some hefty additions: The proxy says Bradshaw's five-year contract, ending June 30, 1986, provides that if his incentive plan awards are less than $300,000 in a given year, the company will pay him the difference; that he'll be granted an option for 50,000 shares of RCA common stock (though at $24.25 per share), and that "promptly after" each June 30 for the contract term he'll get an amount equal to 6,500 shares multiplied...

Financial minds converge in St. Louis

Broadcast and cable panels bring industry heavyweights to discuss the business of business

The Financial Analysts Federation's March 3-4 conference on telecommunications and media in the 1980's drew 20 analysts to the Sheraton St. Louis hotel for two days of sessions that explored the electronic media from telephones to cable television.

Several panels were of direct concern to those involved in broadcast and cable-delivered communications: one session brought together James H. Rosenfield, group executive vice president of CBS; Joseph P. Dougherty, president of the broadcast division of Capital Cities Communications, and Walter E. Bartlett, president of Multimedia Inc. Another included Robert C. Wright, president of Cox Cable Communications; Daniel Aaron, president of Comcast; and Phil Petty, senior vice president, manager, Capital Cities Cable.

On the broadcast panel, Rosenfield addressed concerns about the future of network television, particularly two "misperceptions": that erosion of network viewing will mean "the present system will not be economically viable" and that "the proliferation of program sources will allow network affiliates to more profitable program with nonnetwork product." Audience isn't eroding, Rosenfield maintained, it's "burgeoning," with the number of households watching television up 7% over the last five years. Furthermore the types of program services cable is providing add to incremental viewing, Rosenfield claimed; they're not "competitive to our basic business," which is why, he suggested, CBS feels it can participate in their development.

Network programming has been affected by movies on pay networks, Rosenfield conceded—in both audience and costs. But Rosenfield insisted that the networks' response, made-for-television product, is both well-viewed and economical. Reviewing other steps CBS has or is taking, Rosenfield cited the planned introduction of the daytime drama, Capitol, in a daypart where "a one point improvement in ratings over a year... could increase our net revenue... by $47.5 million." Looking to CBS's own new media involvements, Rosenfield said the CBS/20th-Century-Fox joint venture will be active in both pay cable and ad supported cable.

CapCities Dougherty concentrated on the station business, noting that of the $12 billion in television billings in 1981, $3.7 million was in spot and $3.35 million in local. Dougherty walked the analysts through a review of ratings statistics in the 45% cabled Hartford-New Haven, Conn., market, where one of CapCities' stations is licensed. His analysis of the research is that locally produced programming, tailored to individual markets, offers a significant tool to stations to combat audience erosion.

Multimedia's Bartlett seconded Rosenfield's positive thoughts about the continued viewing dominance of commercial television, and its role as an advertising medium. Cable will continue to depend on monthly service charges and "is a long way from seriously challenging the efficiency or economy of television advertising." On the programing side, Bartlett said Multimedia gets $700,000 to $800,000 for prime network productions. He contrasted that with the $10,000 to $15,000 per hour some new cable services are offering producers. He thinks it's "difficult to imagine how the quality of programing at that price range can ever attract a large enough audience to sell to national advertisers or local clients."

The federation panel on cable television focused mainly on the questions of investment and returns.

Comcast's Aaron walked the analysts through a quick history of cable development, ending with the thesis that there are now three distinct classes of cable systems—urban, suburban and traditional. It's the latter, Aaron said, the sort of 12-channel system that still comprises 60% of the cable industry, that provides the best possibility of immediate investment returns. Aaron offered the case history of a "composite" Comcast system—bought for $5 million in 1976, it then passed 60,000 homes with 400 miles of cable, with 18,000 subscribers paying $5 a month for basic and 3,500 of them paying an additional $8.50 for a pay channel. Now, after franchising neighboring communities, upgrading to 23 channels, adding two pay services and boosting rates, the system passes 120,000 homes, has 60,000 subscribers, and 32,000 pay units; revenues grew from $1.7 million to $9 million a year, and operating cash flow from $350,000 to $3.6 million.

Petty of Capital Cities, early on in his presentation noted that his company has ceased most franchising activity, saying "the costs in urban areas don't make sense." CapCities is still pursuing some franchise adjacencies, but the primary emphasis of the operator is to invest in rebuilds of existing systems. Petty then discussed the varied factors CapCities uses to analyze what rebuild formulation is appropriate in a given instance. The target is a 10% to 15% return on invested capital—with Petty saying that a 10% return requires an operator to recoup 1.33% of the sum each month, a 15% return needing 2% each month.

Cox's Wright drew the spot as last speaker at the conference, and he reviewed a variety of statistical material illustrative of how large urban systems, such as those Cox operates, function economically. On the group level, Wright told the analysts that Cox invested $80 million in cable in 1980, $140 million last year, and is projected to invest $200 million in 1982.

Wright contrasted three distinct types of urban systems, an existing 35-channel model like Cox's San Diego operation, a 54-channel single cable new build such as Cox plans for Omaha, and then a larger new build, dual cable with 108 channels that Cox plans for Tucson, Ariz. The first he said represents an investment of $200 per subscriber; the second will see a plant total of $600 per sub, for an investment cost of $400 per sub, and the third $700 per sub in plant, for an investment of $550 per sub. Over 10 years, Cox expects the first to yield a 38% return on investment, the second a 28% and the last 22%

Wright also mentioned Cox's investment at the Spotlight pay channel started by Times Mirror, Cox, he said, expects Spotlight to be a very good business opportunity, marketed in combination with another pay channel. He expects $175,000 to 200,000 Spotlight subscribers on Cox systems by year end.

Commenters condemn RCA tariff filing for Satcom IV space

RCA proposal for transponder lease at $13 million on first-come, first-served basis draws ire of rejected auction bidders and companies on 1978 list for space on satellite

The FCC should reject, or at least suspend, RCA Americom's latest tariff proposing to lease transponders on Satcom IV (Cable Net II). That was the unanimous opinion of the parties commenting on the proposal at the FCC last week.

The tariff in question surfaced quickly, in the wake of the FCC's rejection of RCA's $90.1-million auction of seven transponders on Satcom IV (BROADCASTING, Feb. 13).

The new tariff proposes a fixed rate transponder service, under which RCA said it intended to make an undisclosed number of transponders on Cable Net II available for lease, charging customers $13 million for a fixed seven-year, nine-month period from the date Satcom IV is expected to be operational (April 1) through Dec. 31, 1989 (BROADCASTING, Feb. 22).

According to the tariff, the transponders would be allocated on a first-come, first-served basis, with RCA expecting to accept up-front payments for the transponders starting at 9 a.m. on March 25 at its Princeton, N.J., headquarters. In the tariff, RCA said that if demand for transponders exceeded supply, it would hold a lottery to allocate the transponders.

Inner City Broadcasting, however, which had placed a winning $10.7-million bid for a transponder in the rejected auction held last November, urged the commission to reject the new tariff—or at least to suspend it—"for the full five-month statutory period"—pending an investigation into its lawfulness.

Inner City said the new tariff employed "demand-based pricing principles so that the rates charged customers are grossly out of proportion with the carrier's costs. These disproportionate rates also permit RCA Americom to cross-subsidize in favor of its voice and data customers."

UTV Cable Network, which successfully had bid $11.2 million for a transponder in the rejected auction, protested the new tariff, alleging that if it were accepted, UTV would "lose access to a critical facility and will be forced to dissolve itself. This will result in millions of dollars of loss to UTV, a harm that will be irreparable."

In a petition filed jointly with Kentucky Educational Television, UTV, however, said its main concern wasn't the rejection of the auction but RCA's announced intention to ignore a long-standing first-come, first-served list it had proposed for allocating available transponders.

Although, according to UTV, there were 149 others on that list last summer, UTV said it had struck a deal with KET, which was high up on that list, to share the costs of a transponder.

UTV said its business plans required that it begin distribution of programs before the summer of 1982, and the "only satellite that will satisfy UTV's planned business needs is Cable Net II."

Although UTV said it had tried to secure $13 million to participate in the new tariff, it found that, "except in the case of large and well-established customers, banks and other lending sources require considerable time to make the necessary arrangements for a loan of that magnitude."

Satellite Syndicated Systems Inc. petitioned the FCC to suspend the tariff "for the full five-month statutory period in which to investigate" the new tariff proposal.

According to SSS, the "proposed revision is not lawful and has not cured any of the previous defects in RCA's tariff."

Although RCA maintains that the new tariff is nondiscriminatory, SSS said the new tariff "is based upon an underlying discrimination against those 100 or so potential customers who have been on RCA's 'waiting list' for the past five years. Those customers have been promised since 1978 that RCA's transponders would be allocated on a first-come, first-served basis. To now allow RCA to allocate these seven transponders on Satcom IV by what could be, in an entirely different context, a fair allocation procedure, would be a flagrant case of discrimination that should not be sanctioned by the commission," SSS said.

TM Communications Co. also urged the FCC to reject or suspend the tariff, contending that "contractual relationships have been established and relied upon in accordance with the first-come, first-served allocation method announced by RCA as early as 1979. TMC and other companies submitted orders to RCA Americom and were advised by RCA Americom that the orders had been accepted and a waiting list for assignment of additional transponders established. TMC considers its orders and RCA's acceptance thereof as a binding, contractual commitment."

Satellite Weather Service agreed, contending that "those representations should remain controlling, at the very least for those who have relied upon them and who have not received the service ordered."

Post-Newsweek Stations Inc. also urged that the tariff be rejected or suspended. "That the current RCA proposal is fatally flawed should not come as a surprise to anyone," Post-Newsweek said. "RCA has been striving mightily now for over a year to legally accomplish just such a do-it-yourself common carrier decertification for its Cable Net II satellite. This latest proposal again amounts to an effort to free itself completely from the confines of traditional cost-based, rate-of-return regulation and neutral facilities allocation principles."

The Appalachian Community Service Network urged the FCC to reject the tariff, contending that it resembled a sale more than a lease and should only be considered in the FCC's ongoing proceeding considering whether RCA and other common carriers may sell transponders lawfully.

United Press International said the tariff was RCA's "latest attempt to cast aside its existing three-year-old waiting list in favor of an alternative transponder assignment procedure which is designed to allow RCA to realize the highest possible price for transponders."

National Christian Network said the tariff was "nothing more than an attempt at 'price fixing' to further the carrier's own interest and, not incidentally, the interests of well-heeled business enterprises. The fact that all users will pay the same $13 million rate in no way neutralizes the discrimination that will result to public interest and not-for-profit communications companies which cannot afford such prices."

Wold Communications Inc. said the tariff represented "yet another effort by Americom to wield its dominant market power over scarce resources to maximize its profits without regard to the common carrier obligations which it assumed when it entered this market less than 10 years ago."

Wold added that RCA's rates were "patently unreasonable." According to Wold, assuming a 16% simple annual interest rate, RCA would realize an after-tax profit margin from the tariff of about 45%. "Americom's attempt to rationalize its effort to obtain excessive rates for its transponders has no lawful basis: A rate which produces an after-tax return of 45% is patently unreasonable, requiring rejection of the tariff," Wold said.

Hughes Television Network said the tariff was RCA's "latest attempt to extract monopoly rents from the shortage of Piracy bill moved. House Judiciary Committee has approved bill to increase penalties for counterfeiting and piracy of movies, records and tapes (H.R. 3530). Penalties of up to $250,000 fine or five years imprisonment would be permitted under bill, introduced by Representative Barney Frank (D-Mass.). Senate has passed comparable measure, sponsored by Judiciary Committee Chairman Strom Thurmond (R-S.C.).

UHF report. FCC Office of Plans and Policy has released staff report, “UHF Viewing and Television Channel Selector Type,” which concludes there is no systematic relationship between UHF viewing and channel selector type. Study, begun under auspices of FCC UHF Comparability Task Force, said analysis of data on total viewing to more than 3,800 television receivers also indicated that electronic channel selectors weren’t associated with higher levels of UHF viewing. Dick Block, chairman of UHF Broadcasting, said study was “false correlation that once again follows oversimplifying said study was “false correlation that once again follows oversimplifying ‘other obstructionist bureaucrats’ view.”

Land mobile study. Noting that growth of private land mobile radio use could lead to serious frequency congestion in future, FCC has launched inquiry to determine how to meet future needs of land mobile users. Among topics on which FCC has solicited comments is how best to provide land mobile users with additional spectrum. Comments are due June 9; reply comments are due July 9.

Depreciation fallout. FCC has moved to implement policy approved more than year ago by authorizing nation’s largest telephone companies to accelerate depreciation for much of their equipment and facilities. According to FCC staff, move is expected to cause telephone rate increases of more than $1 billion nationwide.

LeBoutillier on ICA. Representative John LeBoutillier (R-N.Y.), freshman congressman who is making name for himself for his outspokenness, has called for ouster of James Conkling as director of Voice of America. LeBoutillier, in press release, accused Conkling and “other obstructionist bureaucrats” at VOA of thwarting “implementation of the Reagan philosophy.” LeBoutillier has his own candidate to succeed Conkling—Philip Nicolaides, controversial figure in his own right. Nicolaides’s appointment in November to policy-making job at Voice created stir because of memorandum he had written urging “propaganda” role for Voice. Later, right-wing groups protested when Nicolaides was shifted, after two months, to staff of International Communication Agency, where he is now writing analyses of Soviet “disinformation” activities (Broadcasting, Jan. 25).

Swift introduces bill eliminating comparative renewal

Legislation mirrors Cannon measure where comparative renewal only would be used for “serious” violations of Communications Act

Saying it is “totally consistent” with his previous proposals to “deregulate broadcasting,” Representative Al Swift (D-Wash.) introduced a bill last Monday (March 3) to eliminate comparative renewal proceedings. Because the bill is narrowly drawn and has bipartisan support, said Swift, it will give the busy Telecommunications Subcommittee an opportunity “to move forward with some broadcast legislation this year.”

The new bill (H.R. 5752) would set renewal procedures similar to those proposed in a Senate deregulation bill (S. 1629) introduced by Senator Howard Cannon (D-Vt.). It would require the FCC to renew the license of any broadcaster it finds has operated “during the most recent period of license in a manner which serves the public interest, convenience and necessity and without serious violations of any provision” of the Communications Act “or any rules or regulation” of the FCC.

Only after the FCC had determined that a renewal applicant failed to meet those criteria and had denied renewal of its license could it consider applications for the vacated frequency.

The bill replaces a previous Swift proposal (H.R. 6228, H.R. 3475) that would have codified the FCC's crossownership rules and prohibited the FCC from considering multiple ownership or on-site management as criteria for license renewal. Since those bills were advanced in the 96th Congress and last year—the FCC has begun considering elimination of its multiple and crossownership rules.

Swift said his new proposal is "a more direct way of achieving the same purpose—to focus on actual performance of a licensee in determining whether to renew."

The new proposal is consistent with but is not a substitute for an earlier proposal to tie license renewal to a newly defined public interest standard quantified by a point system, said Swift. That bill (H.R. 4726) has received negative reviews from both broadcasters and public interest groups, but, according to Swift, it is still worthy of congressional consideration. "I still firmly believe that quantification will further streamline the regulation of broadcasting," he said, and "I believe it is in the best interest of both the public and the broadcaster to move away from the ephemeral standard now used by the commission to make determinations for renewal to a concrete and measurable standard."

Co-sponsoring Swift's new proposal are Representatives W.J. (Billy) Tauzin (D-La.), Thomas A. Luken (D-Ohio), Ronald Mott (D-Ohio), James Collins (R-Tex.), Thomas Bliley (R-Va.), Thomas Tauke (R-Iowa) and Carlos Moorhead (R-Calif.), all members of the Telecommunications Subcommittee.

"Our subcommittee has before it already a full plate of legislation which may probably keep us from considering a comprehensive bill," said Swift, referring to the subcommittee's plans to move major common carrier legislation soon, "but we're concerned that we move forward with some broadcast legislation this year."

The renewal bill "has bipartisan support on the subcommittee," said Swift, "and I look forward to working with my colleagues on it this year."

California bill would regulate cable as utility

A California state legislator who claims "cable services are increasingly being operated by giant businesses who have little accountability to the people they serve" has introduced legislation that would revamp statewide regulation of the cable TV industry. The bill, introduced by Assemblyman Richard Robinson (D-Santa Ana), would take programing decisions away from cable system owners and turn them over to local community agencies "who will arrange for universal access to cable operations. In addition, the measure includes special provisions establishing major consumer and personal privacy protections," according to a release from Robinson's office.

In the wake of Robinson's proposal, which also would regulate cable systems as public utilities, the California Cable Television Association has issued a "call to arms" that denounces the bill, A.B. 2742, as an attempt to "destroy cable in California's major markets."

The Cable Communications Act of 1982, as Robinson's proposal is called, would create a Division of Cable Communications within California's Public Utilities Commission "to guide and coordinate the development of cable communication systems on a statewide basis.

The PUC would serve as arbiter for complaints arising among cable operators, their subscribers and local community agencies. The measure would also do away with municipal franchise fees, and use higher licensing fees instead for "financing PUC operations and providing resources and facilities for community access to local systems." Franchising authority would also be transferred from the cities to the state.

A scorecard for WARC

Statistical chart by Colorado professor finds U.S., France first in overall influence

For those wondering how the United States or other countries performed at the World Administrative Radio Conference in 1979 and are frustrated by the complexities of getting an answer, a little-noted article in International Organization, published by the University of Wisconsin, may be of some help.

The article, "Influence in International Conferences," by George A. Coddington Jr., political science professor at the University of Colorado, concludes that the United States and France tied for first in the ranking of overall influence, with a score of 10, while the United Kingdom was third with the ranking of nine. Algeria, Australia, Canada, West Germany, India, Iran and the USSR were tied for fourth place, with rankings of seven.

The overall score was based on the ranking of their delegations in two other categories—"positional" and "behavioral"—combined with a third, "reputational." The first was identified by counting the conference offices held by members of the various delegations. The behavioral ranking represented the author's evaluation of the success of each delegation in the key committee (Committee 5), which worked on allocating frequencies. Reputational indicates the standing a delegation has among other delegates as an influential participant in the conference. (The author interviewed six delegates during the eighth week of the 11-week conference, and wrote six letters to the delegates immediately following the conference.)

CBS's latest attempt at an early morning victory

The network has revamped its breakfast offering, changing its name, the faces and the style to provide more information

This week, for the third time in six months, CBS News is launching a new weekday Morning newscast on CBS-TV, in a clear attempt to beef up ratings that for years have trailed those of NBC's Today and, in more recent years, ABC's Good Morning America. This time the changes are the most extensive yet, with CBS Morning News emerging more as a new model than as an overhaul of the old, just plain Morning.

"We're trying to be the information service of the mornings," Bill Kurtis said last week. He's CBS-owned WBBM-TV Chicago's star anchor who has been brought in to replace Charles Kuralt as the new newscast's co-anchor with correspondent Diane Sawyer. "It'll be speedier, faster-paced—almost like drive-time radio," he said, in that news headlines or summaries and weather will be presented frequently and on a regular schedule throughout the two hours (7-9 a.m. NYT).

Thus, to enable viewers to develop a more precise sense of what will be presented when, the format has been restructured and tightened, each of the four half-hours will start with 10 to 11 minutes of information—headlines and weather. The second quarter-hour of each 30 minutes will offer a combination of news and news features, including an "At Issue" segment with a guest or guests, newsmaker guests and reports on the entertainment field, health and science, the law, economics and personal finance.

The cast has been enlarged. Steve Deshler of ABC's WLS-TV Chicago has been signed—just last week—to handle the weather chores. Jim Kelly, most recently sports anchor at CBS's WCAU-TV Philadelphia and since 1974 also a sports anchor/reporter/commentator for the CBS Radio network (where he will continue in those roles), will handle sports.

Joining them in daily appearances will be CBS News correspondents Ray Brady and Jane Bryant Quinn with reports on business and the economy, and Pat Collins, formerly with ABC's GMA (1978-80) and before that with CBS-owned WCBS-TV New York (1974-78), with entertainment news and movie reviews.

Weekly features will include medical and science news by CBS News's Charles Crawford and reports on the law and how it may affect consumers by correspondent Fred Graham.

George Merlis, former executive producer of Good Morning America and now executive producer of the new CBS Morning News, says the basic idea is to "cater more to the habits of the early-morning viewer." Speculation about the lack of ratings success for Morning has been curtailed to 90 minutes last September, and again after it went to two hours in January, was that its pace was patterned too closely along the lines of the popular Sunday Morning and thus was too leisurely for viewers hustling to get ready for weekday work. The new format is intended to take care of that.

Merlis summarized the changes as being to "add things, tighten it a lot and impose a structure." But, he said, "the strongest thing about the new Morning News is still the reporting of the CBS News organization." Actually, he estimated, the broadcast will carry 50% more news summaries than even the newsmier of its morning competitors.

There'll be other changes. For one thing, Kurtis said, "Diane and I will be sort of talking to each other—which will be a first for [regularly scheduled] CBS News broadcasts." In that sense, he said, it may "look like Today and Good Morning America, but without the entertainment—we won't have any five-part interviews with Burt Reynolds."

Although the broadcast times are the same (Monday-Friday, 7-9 a.m. NYT), Kurtis and Sawyer will be coming to work later—around 5 a.m. rather than the 2:20 a.m. to which she and Kuralt had become accustomed. That, Kurtis says, will let the co-anchors work later each day, preparing their own takeouts and, they hope, getting into the field more. Sawyer is, for example, scheduled to go to Cape Canaveral, Fla., to report on the third space shuttle launch, scheduled for March 22, and Kurtis hopes to cover the Pope's visit to England in May.

More live coverage by other correspondents in the field is also planned.

In the studio there will be a new set. The newscast will move out of the Sunday Morning studio and into the NFL Today set, but with modifications said to be still in progress last week.

So what about the ratings? In the season to date, Mornings's have averaged about 2.2 by CBS's count, as compared with a 5.0 for Today and a 5.5 for GMA. Kurtis isn't concerned—yet. With a 2.2 start, he quipped, "I'm not afraid of dropping any," but he quickly added: "Who knows? Maybe we could."

"We don't expect to rush right in and be number one," he said, noting that it takes time for a program to shake down and its audience to build. But he conceded that there'll come a time "when you have to start worrying" if the ratings aren't moving up. He figures that crossroads will come to that, is about six months down the road.
You may not believe this, but you can get on the air...television or radio... and ask your audience questions...like, for instance:

- Are you for or against the E.R.A. amendment?
- Do you agree or disagree with the idea of capital punishment?
- Should the National League adopt the designated hitter rule? Yes or no.

Then give a phone number...and that's it!
The TELEPHONE POLL does the rest.

When your audience calls in (no 900 number, no special charges, just an ordinary phone call), the phone is answered automatically and a voice...NOT A TAPE RECORDED VOICE, A SYNTHESIZED VOICE...asks the caller to vote. The caller does. The vote is instantly registered. One phone can take up to 360 calls an hour! With four rotary lines you've got 1,440 calls! Have your audience call in from the early news to the late news and you can record as many as 7,200 responses on only four lines! (The machine can accommodate many more than four.)

And how big a staff will you need to answer all these calls? None! Zero! Just the TELEPHONE POLL!

On television, a flick of the switch will put the results on the screen! You can actually see the votes being recorded. A digital readout gives you the choice of displaying total votes or percentages.

On radio, when you flick the switch you hear the latest count and what you hear is all synthesized...no moving parts!

A state-of-the-art micro-processor makes the whole thing possible. Installed in your control room or at the hand of a newscaster or talk show personality it will put you closer than you have ever been to your audience.

The TELEPHONE POLL is a really remarkable new development for anyone interested in audience response. Use it for opinions, for surveys, during elections. There's no faster or easier way to take the public pulse.

As we said, you may not believe this, but Marv Kempner can show it to you!

said he said. "In that time-frame, he said, "all you can do is index, at best "Flash was the signal of Walter Winchell. Think was the summons of the journalist we honor tonight."
And, while Friendly suggested that television may be the most powerful, most preceptive medium in existence, he also contended that "it does not yet do an adequate job of providing a reliable picture of the world." He said television journalism is at its best during a crisis or when covering historic events. "But it falters when it comes to explaining nuclear dis- manent or supercorporate mergers and their impact on productivity or why Ruth Friendly [his wife] buys a Honda instead of a Ford. And in this day and age, what we don't know could kill us."
While there are a number of factors contributing to the inadequacies of television journalism, including high production costs and the inclination to pursue the sensational story, Friendly suggested that the "primary roadblock to excellence is that television has that 22- and-a-half minute handicap." In that time-frame, he said, "all you can do is index, at best a digest... (which is but) a faint shadow of what the news divisions are capable of." He pointed to current news programs such as Nightline, Sunday Morning, the MacNeil-Lehrer Report, 60 Minutes and the Today Show as "examples of what can be accomplished by dedicated journalists when there is sufficient air time..."
Noting the current confrontation between the networks and their affiliates over the hour-news concept, Friendly said "the battle has all the tensions and misunderstandings of the arms race—two powerful forces arrayed against each other, distrust vs. distrust, greed vs. greed, inventory vs. overkill, 'trojan horse' vs. network encroachment on local time] vs. 'the news as hostage,'" to use the rhetoric of the two ideological camps.
And the crucial of the issue, said Friendly, is money: "whether the networks will make more and whether the stations will lose any," He summed up affiliate resistance as due to the fear that "a trojan horse has been wheeled into their studios. Once they give up the half-hour, they are concerned that the network overtake one of the [three to five minutes in additional commercial time offered for expanded news] at contract renewal, invoking the high cost of production as rationale."
The networks, on the other hand, accuse the affiliates of greed, said Friendly. He quoted one network executive as saying, "We're going to allow them to sell three minutes in the expanded news. What do they want, all of it?"
Of the various solutions that have been proposed, Friendly said one "worth serious consideration," was that of Joel Chaseman, president of the Post-Newsweek stations, calling for one hour of network news to air between 7:30 and 8:30 p.m. NYT, "The failure and rapid turnover of new entertainment shows," said Friendly, "have reached ridiculous and extravagant expense—$800,000 and more for a single hour. An hour news, even with slightly lower ratings in the beginning, might turn out to be a more economical use of the time in the long haul," as the case was with 60 Minutes.
Networks, said Friendly, will have to "come up with a formula that will satisfy the financial needs of the affiliates and that formula will have to stick." He suggested that the FCC rule limiting the duration of contracts between networks and affiliates to a maximum two years should be waived.
"Let the networks level with the stations about the projected costs of the expanded news and the actual incremental costs after the first two years," he said. There should be a precise accounting of all the costs and benefits involved so that, "as they say in the trade, both sides are made whole."

Journalists get tongue lashing from news council chairman Isaacs

University of Hawaii holds first in series of lectures on ethics in journalism; National News Council head offers suggestions to fight journalistic malpractice

"What we are going through is a replay of the 'Front Page' era, decked out with minicams, unprincipled gung-ho reporters and backed by editorial chiefs more anxious to be popular with their staffs than with their own reputations for fair play and common sense," That was only one criticism leveled against the news media by Norman Isaacs, chairman of the National News Council, as he made a pitch for stronger ethics in journalism. Isaacs delivered the first in a series of annual lectures (March 3) sponsored by the University of Hawaii's Carol Burnett Fund Lecture on Journalism Ethics.

Isaacs charged, "Precious little progress has been made in developing genuine intellectual and ethical approaches to the practice of journalism." He noted that complaints brought against the profession today are not new.

Isaacs, who called himself a "new volunteer in an old cause," read a passage written 80 years ago that accused the media of being, "without any code of ethics or system of self-restraint or self-respect."

Isaacs said there are now major codes of ethics espoused by such organizations as the American Society of Newspaper Editors and the Society of Professional Journalists, Sigma Delta Chi. However, he argued, these ethics are not always honored.

The problem has been two-fold: "One has been trying to win acceptance of these honorable goals. The other is getting them implemented. The difficulties stem from journalism's in-bred unidiness," he said.

He lashed out at newspaper editors: "The passion of many of today's editors for gossip columns smacks of hypocrisy since many of them are critical, if not contemptuous, of what they see as TV's groveling for ratings. Are not the gossip columns an equivalent out-reach for circulation growth? Certainly names make news. But obviously, the information ought be be 'newsy' and not malicious trash that would fail any responsible checking or press-agent pap."

The former editorial director of the Louisville (Ky.) Courier-Journal (1962-71) said part of the problem facing editors today is they have little time to "exercise" teaching and guidance. To alleviate that problem, he presented a model for a four-person executive staff. The model calls for one directing editor with three deputy editors. The deputies would relieve the directing editor from day-to-day duties thus freeing him to "override all manner of department myopia." He said the end product "can be a staff with high morale along with an executive function that pays for itself many times over."

To help fend off public dissatisfaction with the press, Isaacs listed three goals imperative to fighting "journalistic malpractice":

- "That no consent to source immunity—confidentiality—can be given without direct grant of authority from the top editorial officer and that the same principal be communicated to the major wire services."
- "That news organizations adopt a rule that editorial opinion cannot be part of a news account of anything."
- "That there be a rule forbidding any instant response to a protest with the comment, 'We stand by our story.' Let the rule be: 'We shall double check.' And if the editor is convinced that the protest is without merit, any 'We stand by our story' statement should include a reason so valid that every rational reader can trust the assertion."

NBC News moves

Westerman, Midgley, Davis and Friedman leaving

A series of executive changes were in progress at NBC News last week, some apparently related to Bill Small's departure as president (Broadcasting, March 1), some apparently not.

NBC News spokesmen confirmed reports that Sylvia Westerman, who left CBS News-Small's one-time house base—to become NBC vice president and assistant to Small, had resigned. They also confirmed that Leslie Midgley, who retired from CBS News at age 65 and then joined Small at NBC News as vice president, special programs, is retiring again, at age 67. They said Midgley had been wanting to retire for some time.

In an action connected not so much with Small's leaving but with assumption of the top NBC News jobs by Reuven Frank and Tom Pettit, Sid Davis will turn over the Washington bureau chief job to Bob MacFarland, senior Washington producer for the NBC Nightly News. Davis, a respected White House correspondent and one-time Westinghouse Broadcasting bureau chief in Washington, had preceded Small to NBC, and his assignment to an as yet unspecified post is not considered part of the CBS "purge" at NBC. "Pettit and MacFarland had worked long and comfortably together here," Davis said last week, "and I felt they would make a good team for the future."

Paul Friedman, a long-time NBC newsman who formerly was executive producer of NBC's Today and NBC Magazine, was said to be leaving his current post as producer in the NBC News documentary unit, reportedly to join ABC.

Satellite-talk to preface NAB

IASU to hold second annual conference; Flaherty, Ferris and Wirth among speakers

With many "satellite" meetings planned to revolve around the National Association of Broadcasters convention next month, it’s only proper that one be dedicated to satellites. The International Association of Satellite Users will hold its second annual conference and show at the Dallas Hyatt Regency April 1-3.

The meeting about the NAB show that begins its four-day run in Dallas on April 1.

Because of its proximity to the NAB show and perhaps with the thought of attracting a few of the thousands of broadcasters who will be arriving in Dallas, the IASU has put the accent on broadcasting. There will be three panel sessions addressing broadcasters’ concern about satellites and one about direct broadcast satellites. Broadcasters might also profit by the conference’s workshop on how to find transponder time.

According to conference chairman Matt C. Nilson, of Nilson Research Corp., a Washington consulting firm, last year’s conference drew 200 to the Washington Hilton but this year’s conference is expected to attract between 400 and 500. He added that there will be about 20 exhibitors, including Scientific-Atlanta, Turner Cable, Satcom Inc. and Dalsat.

Most will feature 12 ghz earth station gear.

The exhibit hall opens Thursday (April 1) evening, but the conference does not get under way until the following morning when Senator John Glenn (D-Ohio) addresses the delegates from Washington via a live satellite hook-up. The former astronaut is expected to talk about future uses of satellites and some of the research and development that is going on. The conference will get a more political view of the future at the Saturday luncheon, where House Telecommunications Subcommittee Chairman Timothy Wirth (D-Colo.) will speak.

The impact of two-degree spacing will be discussed at a Friday morning panel session, featuring Gene Swanz, Mutual Broadcasting System; Donald Jansky, National Telecommunications and Information Administration; Joe Maguire, RKO Radio, and James Cuddihy, Teleprompter/Muzak.

How much of the limited satellite capacity of the 1980’s will be allocated to broadcasting is the subject of a Friday afternoon panel, including Earl Hilburn, former president of Western Union Corp., C. Gus Grant, Southern Pacific Communications, Mel Borer, Western Union, Thomas Gabrzeski, American Satellite; Harold Rice, RCA American, and Jacques Johnson, Hughes Communications.

Broadcasters are being promised “new opportunities” at a Saturday morning panel. It will include Stanley Hubbard, Hubbard Broadcasting and DBS applicant United States Satellite Broadcasting; Douglas Ruhe, Focus Communications; Daniel Gillum, Printer Terminal Communications, and Don Franco, Microband Corp. of America.

The DBS panel: Charles D. Ferris, former FCC chairman; Joseph Flaherty, CBS; Robert Dumke, Oak Satellite Corp.,

Holding back. A.C. Nielsen Co. is in danger of looking like “a shill for the cable industry,” William S. Rubens, NBC research vice president, has charged. He told Advertising Research Foundation conference that Nielsen releases “aggregate data for cable” purporting to show how much audience cable is siphoning away from networks, yet refuses to release data on individual services. Rubens said that several months ago he “accidentally saw” some Nielsen data for Cable News Network and ESPN and that, “as I recall,” each averaged “about one-tenth of a rating point in prime time.” Point is, he said, that “Nielsen has these ratings” but won’t release them even though advertising community—and broadcasters—need them. “Is Nielsen waiting for these systems to become customers before they publish the ratings?” he asked. “You can well imagine that CNN and ESPN might be reluctant to become subscribers and let the world know the size of their audience.” In addition, Rubens said, “when Nielsen does publish data on specific cable services,” such as subscribers of Home Box Office and audience of WSBTV Atlanta, “it manages to show them in the best possible light—not in terms of their real delivery but in terms of their potential.

Honoring service. Broadcast Education Association will award first annual Education Service Award to Harold F. Niven, vice president, planning and development, National Association of Broadcasters. Award, to be presented April 3 at Dallas Convention Center, prior to opening of annual NAB convention, honors “broadcaster or broadcast educator who has made a significant and lasting contribution to the American system of broadcast education by virtue of singular achievement or continuing service for or in behalf of broadcast education.”

Upmanship. CBS Cable announced increased count of subscriber base for its cultural program service. With addition of Warner Amex Cable Communications systems in Chicago suburbs, Dallas, Houston, St. Louis, Pittsburgh and Cincinnati, total of 250,000 subscribers, plus other system commitments, CBS Cable will be able to 4 million cable homes.

NPR grants. National Public Radio has received series of grants totaling $245,000 for its news and information fund. Four grants were awarded to fund that supports news and information programming; instead of underwriting, specific program services are purchased from fund. Full share of $250,000 entitles underwriters to at least 12 credits per week on all NPR news programs. German Marshall Fund of United States contributed $137,500. Other grants awarded are: Communications Workers of America, $137,500; Chubb Group of Insurance Companies, $100,000, and Jennifer and Edmund Stanley Jr. $100,000. NPR also received $298,000 grant from Pew Memorial Trust to establish history unit in News and Information department. Unit will specialize in events and issues in American history.

Valley bid. East San Fernando Valley Cable franchise, last of Los Angeles area’s unfranchised cable districts, would go to Valley Cable under recommendation by independent consultant to Los Angeles city council. Washington-based Cable Television Information Center concluded Valley Cable—which already has West San Fernando Valley franchise—made best offer for area’s 150,000 homes. Two companies, American Television & Communications and CommunicaCom, recently dropped out of bidding race.

Cable pacts. Multiple-system operator Sammons Communications Inc. has agreement in principle to offer Cinemax pay-TV service in 27 communities in 13 states. That’s said to amount to more than 417,000 homes passed. 211,000 from operating systems and 206,000 in new-build territory. In addition, Harte Hanks Cable, San Antonio, has signed agreement offering Showtime in all of its new-build systems and majority of its existing systems for total of 240,000 homes passed within next few months. Heritage Communications, Des Moines, Iowa, reported it has agreement with The Entertainment Channel and will offer that service initially to its system in Des Moines at 111,000 homes.

Gloria Steinem, women’s rights activist and an editor of Ms. magazine, brought both praise and complaints to a luncheon session of the Hollywood Radio and Television Society in Beverly Hills, Calif. In her address to more than 700 entertainment industry professionals, most of them women, Steinem indicated the “good news” about women in broadcasting is still outweighed by “bad news.”

First the good news.

More women are working as on-air news reporters and anchors, and are not restricted to soft, feature-type news. There are “intelligent talk shows” in the afternoon discussing controversial topics. The relationships among women portrayed on television has broadened, so that they are not always “in competition with each other.” There are fewer depictions of violence and crimes against women as being a “turn on” for them. More women-oriented programming, such as daytime soap operas, takes them seriously. There are increased depictions of women in a variety of life situations, such as divorce, single parents and young professionals. Sexitist language, according to Steinem, has also been reduced.

Now the bad news.

“There is some danger of cable replicating the dangers of early television,” Steinem warned, “by confining and categorizing something called ‘women’s TV.’” She also cited surveys indicating there are four times as many men in TV programs as women, but that 60% of the victims of violent crimes in TV dramas are women.

In news, Steinem claimed that “jockjacy is still ruling TV and radio news shows. Women are much younger on TV than in reality, especially on news shows.” She feels that certain news stories of special significance to women, such as the Equal Rights Amendment, have not been properly covered by broadcast news organizations. Steinem also finds too much sexism in programing and advertising.

“It’s rare that women who are complicated, competent, funny, outrageous and uncertain are shown on television,” Steinem concluded. “My message is simple: Give us more reality on television and radio.”

What do Xerox and Coke have in common?

A great name.
But that's only part of the answer.
In both cases, those great names are also great trademarks.
And great trademarks are as valuable to you as they are to the companies that own them.
That's because they ensure that when you ask for something, you get what you ask for.
The Xerox trademark identifies a range of products.

So it should always be followed by the name of the one to which it refers—"Xerox copier," "Xerox information processor" or "Xerox electronic printer."
Whether you want a certain soft drink or a certain copier, you want to be sure that what you get is the real thing.

XEROX

XEROX is a trademark of XEROX CORPORATION.
COKE is a registered trademark of THE COCA-COLA COMPANY.
Pulse width modulation in an efficient 1 kW package; efficiency and reliability of a tube-powered final; clear, crisp sound of transformerless modulation; ready for AM stereo. This switch-mode system allows maximum modulation level at all power levels while providing cost-effective operation.

"She was captivated immediately... standing there with tears in her eyes."

When you're a grown up, you tend to take "kids' shows" for granted. But Molly Malone, of Rolla, Missouri, could never hear and enjoy such programs as a child. That's why her husband was happy to write:

This Christmas, I purchased for my wife, Molly, a closed-captioned decoder for our TV. The Frosty the Snowman Christmas Special was on and captioned. Molly was captivated immediately... standing there with tears in her eyes because she was able to watch a cartoon show for the first time in her life and know what was going on.

Thousands of people, like Molly Malone, are grateful for closed-captioned programs. Through the efforts of so many, "television you can read" is now a reality. And a great joy.

It happens all the time. Our programming is known a lot better than we are. And, frankly, that's the way it should be.

Louis Rukeyser's Business Journal, co-produced with Viacom, is broadcast on the CBS, O & O's and other stations across the country to universal critical acclaim. Our Reader's Digest "Families" magazine series, "All About Zoos" with Cheryl Tiegs and the "Psychology Today" series are just a few of the exciting new concepts now under development.

For fresh, original programming, Gateway Productions has always stood alone. We have been an innovative leader in quality news documentaries, magazine shows, and sports specials. We are now taking that same innovative spirit into late-night comedy and children's shows.

Because Gateway Productions is part of Gannett, we are uniquely equipped to develop and create high level programming for commercial, cable and public television. Broadcast groups, cable networks, syndicators and corporate sponsors find that Gateway can be a fertile source of new ideas or a trustworthy partner for joint development.

Gateway offers clients and partners a powerful team of award-winning producers, directors, editors, writers, creative researchers, and production managers.

We have a complete in-house post-production capability. Our subsidiary, the Tapepower and Filmpower Post-Production Center, is manned by skilled professionals using state-of-the-art equipment.

If you haven't heard of Gateway, you've certainly heard of our work. Talk to Paul Galan, Dick Hubert or Allan Albert at NATPE this year. You'll find them at the Las Vegas Hilton in Suite 322. Or, give us a call in New York. Next year at this time, you can boast an exclusive Gateway Production.

Steve Currie's tenure as NATPE International president may well be remembered most not for what was gained but for what wasn't lost.

Months ago he recalls being told, "It's a shame that you're going to be the president who loses PTAR." That didn't happen.

While the FCC's prime-time access rule remains under siege and network news expansion efforts continue, Currie, 35, says to this week's annual conference in Las Vegas confident that PTAR is "safe for the time being" and that Washington has heard the voice of NATPE members.

However the PTAR issue eventually is resolved, NATPE won't be accused of standing idly by. With Currie leading the organizational effort, NATPE for the first time assumed a lobbyist role.

In addition to juggling the various duties of NATPE president with his full-time job as broadcast operations manager of KOIN-TV Portland, Ore., Currie himself took on much of the regulatory fight—be it arguing the case before government officials or drumming up support from NATPE members.

"Steve's done an excellent job, particularly with PTAR," says his NATPE predecessor, Lucie Sulhaney, Tait Broadcasting's vice president, television and cable programing. "He really spearheaded our movement."

Others in NATPE praise Currie for meeting the lobbying challenge—never before faced by a NATPE president.

It's no wonder therefore that Currie stresses the need for a "very good background in business and law" for programers. "It would be nice if all [we] had is worry about was being creative," he says, but adds that that isn't today's reality.

Like many who have found themselves behind the scenes in broadcasting, Currie was a kid who "knew myself as star." But after some early work as a news anchor and announcer, he set his sights on management.

While Currie may not have become a "star" to the public, he has built a considerable reputation in the business. Dean McCarthy, vice president, program services for the Harrington, Righter and Parsons rep firm, and one who has worked with Currie for years, calls him "one of the brightest, most capable programers I know," adding "and I've known a ton in my time."

Currie, originally a New Yorker whose family moved to South Carolina when he was 13, earned his journalism degree from the University of South Carolina in 1968 while holding his first broadcast management job, that of program/promotion manager at WOLO-TV Columbia, S.C. A short stint as assistant manager of promotion and publicity at WLW-TV Indianapolis, S.C. followed and Currie then headed back south as program/promotion manager at WSPA-TV Spartanburg, S.C.

A move to Charleston, S.C., as assistant general manager at WCBD-TV came in 1971. From his four-and-a-half years there, Currie takes particular pride in the station's pioneering with an "all-color videotape operation ... ahead of the pack."

From there Currie joined Cosmos Broadcasting, serving first as program/promotion manager at WSPA-TV Montgomery, Ala., and then at WDSU-TV New Orleans. He left there in 1979 for his current job in the Northwest with Lee Enterprises' KOIN-TV Portland.

Of his various production efforts over the years, Currie, when asked, points to KOIN-TV's half-hour Mount St. Helens: The Volcano Explodes as "one of the best in terms of taking a project and developing it all across the board." Aside from its Portland play about a week after the major eruption, the show was also syndicated here and abroad.

While Currie admits "we didn't make a fortune" on syndication, he believes it is indicative of the new avenues local stations are exploring. KOIN-TV also followed the documentary with other projects including a book.

Regarding local programing overall, Currie believes the "next cycle" could be the nurturing of "local entertainment talent"—as opposed to just local news names—in building a station's identity as media competition increases.

He also expects that more and more local broadcast stations will become production centers for cable systems—either in their regular syndication, filling certain hours on request or by being commissioned to produce programing.

Whatever the case, Currie believes the media future will bring good news for local programers who will be "more in demand than ever."

On NATPE business, aside from PTAR, Currie also has used his tenure to encourage all TV programers to work with the association. Continuing the official open-door policy for all TV media begun last year, Currie says, "NATPE is a programing organization not (just) a broadcast organization." As president, Currie also has sought increased international membership, with one step being the name change from the National Association of Television Program Executives to NATPE International.

Although the Association of Independent Television Stations and the National Cable Television Association have created their own program marketplaces, Currie still is hopeful that eventually "we will end up with one" program market "when it's all said and done." He claims there are too many program meetings both nationally and internationally and that they are too costly for all concerned.

To the question for NATPE, "Is bigger better?", Currie responds that "bigger isn't necessarily bad when there's proper planning. An example of "controlled growth," he says, is NATPE's marketplace. While larger this year than ever, he explains that it is becoming more manageable as NATPE continues to phase in its exhibition-hall format.

With Washington trips to talk PTAR, European conventioneering to build NATPE's name abroad, other NATPE meetings as well as his regular traveling for KOIN-TV, Currie estimates that he has spent about half the year on the road.

For a family man—he and his wife, Judith, supervisor of a birthing center at a community hospital, have three children—and from who claims not to be a workaholic by nature, Currie perhaps puts it mildly when he describes his past year as "unique."

RCA and Bendix appeared to have struck truce, issuing separate announcements last Wednesday that reinforced Bendix's initial claim that its purchase of RCA stock was "for investment purposes only" (see page 172). Bendix said Wednesday it had bought 5.5 million shares (7.3%) of RCA common and repeated that it has "no intention to acquire any additional shares," and "no plans for an acquisition, merger or reorganization of RCA." Investment "has good prospects," Bendix said, because it was "acquired below RCA book value" and "significantly under" estimates of "value of RCA's entities." Analysts figure RCA liquidation value approaches $40 per share—stock had been trading around $17 when Bendix apparently made its purchases. Price had risen slightly to $20.50 when some investors were interpreting Bendix move as acquisition attempt—with Wednesday's announcements RCA's price dipped next day—closing at $19.625. At that price, Bendix holding is worth $108 million. RCA's midweek comments were in contrast to vituperative statement issued Monday; on Wednesday RCA "expressed its appreciation" of Bendix's confirmation of its intentions and "confidence expressed in the future of RCA." Both said Bendix promises 48 hour notice if, after 30 days, it decides to acquire more shares of RCA.

CBS will launch its overnight network news and information service on CBS Television Network in September (Broadcasting, March 8) Gene F. Jankowski, president of CBS/Broadcast Group, said news service, which will originate from New York, will be offered from 2 a.m. to 5 a.m. Monday through Friday. He added that details of format and content are still being considered but said CBS News will be able to draw upon large flow of information arriving during day and on material breaking in evening, normally used on network's morning news. Format will permit "windows" for local station news inserts. Network moved to implement service, it said, after receiving positive response from affiliates at recent meeting in Phoenix and during polls of affiliates.

FCC last week released first low-power television cut-off list since authorizing new service two weeks ago (Broadcasting, March 8), accepting for filing 104 applications for LPTV service and another 92 for translator service. Deadline for filing petitions to deny and competing applications is April 23.

Cunningham & Walsh, New York, has been acquired by Newcourt Industries Inc., New York communications investment company, subject to stockholder approval. Financial details were not disclosed. C&W will operate as autonomous subsidiary with Carl W. Nichols, chairman and chief executive officer, and Anthony C. Chevins, president, continuing in their posts. Newcourt, 84% owned by Mickelberry Corp., New York, owns Nadler & Lerimer Advertising, New York, Landis & Landan, New York travel advertising agency and Sandy-Alexander, New York printing firm. Projected billings of C&W for 1982 are $320 million, of which about 50% is in broadcast.

Monroe M. Rifkin is leaving American Television & Communications, country's largest cable MSO, which he helped found in 1968. He goes to Denver oilman Marvin Davis, owner of 20th Century-Fox, in new partnership to be called Rifkin-Fox Communications, with intent of exploring "diverse oppor tunities in cable." Rifkin, chairman of ATC since 1974, stays with company following its 1978 purchase by Time Inc. and was named officer. Trygve E. Myhren, ATC president, has been named chairman and chief executive, with Joseph J. Collins, senior executive VP, assuming presidential post. Changes are effective March 31. Rifkin-Fox will remain separate from CBS Fox joint venture that encompasses cable programing and home video. Indeed, new partnership is separate from Fox Film.

U.S. public is not anxiously awaiting expansion of half-hour network news shows to one hour. That, at least, is conclusion that can be drawn from Roper Organization poll on issue. Shows that public opposes expansion of half-hour program by margin of 2 to 1. Findings were reported at NATPE convention in Las Vegas on Saturday (March 13) by Dr. William Bake president of Group W, which commissioned poll. Among other details: Nearly half of those opposed (or one in three, overall) would, if they had choice, switch from one-hour news to static presentations. Other fourth of those oppose (or one in six, overall) would switch to nonnews programming. Poll results also show that, among those who prefer one-hour news programming, only 25% (or one in four, overall) would switch from half-hour program to one-hour show on other channel.

Turner Broadcasting System, Atlanta, has budgeted $4 million for remainder of 1981 to print campaign in three newswelks and TV Guide to promote its Cable News Network. Advertisements will begin in Time, Newsweek and U.S. News and World Report in March 22 issues with five pages and in TV Guide in April 3 with four pages and continue at intervals throughout year. First wave will cost $1.5 million. Objective is to influence cable subscribers to persuade their systems to take CNN and increase awareness of CNN among subscribers of systems carrying 24-hour news service. Agency is McDonald & Little, Atlanta. CNN said it had tried to interest three TV networks in accepting "roadblock" commercials but were informed they did not accept advertising for cable, with exception of pay cable.

In letter to Morris Tarshis, cable franchise negotiating chief for city of New York, Cablevision Vice President Sheila Mahone has strongly suggested that company may withdraw bids to win all of Bronx and majority of Brooklyn if city does not make substantial concessions in final franchise contract. Proposed contract has been called most demanding ever proposed by city

Birds of a sweater. CBS newsmen Harry Reasoner and Mike Wallace came in sweaters to celebrate the one-year anniversary of Dan Rather's assuming the managing editorship of the CBS Evening News. The party was in New York's Harvey's Chelsea restaurant last Monday (March 8).
Plotting along, The National Cable Television Association's planning committee held its second programming convention met at Washington headquarters last week and brought the why and how of the conference more clearly into focus. Committee Chairman Edward Bennett, senior vice president, Viacom Communications, said this year's show, which will be held Nov. 13-15 at the Biltmore hotel in Los Angeles, will try to attract more program suppliers to give them a chance to do business with the growing number of satellite networks. Unlike last year's conference in New Orleans, the Los Angeles show will have no exhibit area. Instead suppliers and networks will be invited to show their programming product in suites reserved in the hotel.

The panel sessions are intended "to deal with the myths and bugaboos" program suppliers and cable operators have about programming, Bennett said. The convention was scheduled to permit delegates to attend the Western Cable Show, which starts on Nov. 17 in nearby Anaheim. Robert Wussler, president of Turner Broadcasting System and a committee member, said he would rather send an employee out six days once than three days twice. The show's glamour will be supplied by the presentation of the NCTA's ACE programming awards, which will be telecast live to cable subscribers via superstation WSBTV in Atlanta. Wussler said TBS and NCTA are still working out who will pay the production and distribution costs. A believer in ad-supported cable television, Wussler said TBS will sell advertising spots on the show. The committee (standing, l-r): Winston Cox, Home Box Office; Lenose; Afflony Plunkett, The Movie Channel; James Miller, Showtime; Char Beas, NCTA; Wussler, and Alex Papagan, Colony Communications. Seated l-r: Anne Herron, NCTA; Bennett; Martin Lafferty, Cox Cable Communications, and Jack Willis, CBS Cable. Not shown are William Fogarty, Daniels & Associates; Robert Gulkowski, ESPN; Gene Linder, American Television & Communications, and Thomas Willett, Continental Cablevision.

cable franchise negotiations (BROADCASTING, March 8). Cablevision also feels city was unfair in assigning it least affluent boroughs. Cablevision's current position in process is "virtually untenable," said Mahoney. "It therefore appears to us," she said, "that the only course open to us is to permit the negotiations with the other applicants to proceed and to hope that the negotiated contracts with them will not make the burdens which, if we were required to match them," so unfavorable as to "prevent us from agreeing to them." Mahoney and John Flatta, president of Cablevision, met last week with Tarshis to discuss company's position.

Copyright Royalty Tribunal announced last week it has completed final phase of 1979 cable copyright royalty distribution. Tribunal completed first phase last December, allocating percentages of $28.6-million fund among categories of claimants (BROADCASTING, Dec. 7, 1981). In second phase, tribunal has located funds among individual parties within categories that weren't able to agree among themselves on split. As result, of 0% of fund awarded program syndicators, Motion Picture Association of America will receive 99.8%, Multimedia Program Productions Inc., 1.6%, National Association of Broadcasters, 0.8%, Spanish International Network, 0.7%. Mutual of Omaha, 0.1%. Christian Broadcasting Network, PTL, Television Network and Old Times Gospel Hour received none. NAB had argued that TV broadcasters deserved 5% of syndication award, contending that broadcasters produced hundreds of hours of original programming and deserved share of royalties awarded for syndicated programs (BROADCASTING, Feb. 8). U.S. commercial TV roadcasters were awarded 4.5% of full fund.

Today (March 15) marks premiere of Deadline, new women's cable service from Hearst/ABC Video Services. In preparation for lunch (and in honor of second year of ARTS programming, see age 162), Hearst/ABC President Jim Perkins last Thursday hosted gala bash at New York's Windows On The World restaurant.

egislation has been introduced in Senate that would end statutory ban on use of industry representatives as spokespers for U.S. at international telecommunications conferences. Senator Barry Goldwater (R-Ariz.), chairman of Senate Communications Subcommittee, in introducing bill (S.2181), said its purpose is to enable State Department to draw on expertise of private sector in staffing delegations. He noted that U.S. has "many" international conferences on telecommunications scheduled in 1980's--there are 14--and said use of industry representatives in major roles at World Administrative Radio Conference, in 1979--use made possible granting of special exemption--"demonstrated the value of their inclusion." Bill also authorizes $12,400,000 for National Telecommunications and Information Administration for fiscal 1983. Amount, which represents 30% cut from $16,483,000 provided for agency in 1982, follows recommendation in President Reagan's budget (BROADCASTING, Feb. 15). Goldwater said sharp cut reflects view that "most of NTIA's participation in regulatory proceedings is not needed."

Richard W. Sonnenfeldt, former executive VP, operations and technical services, NBC-TV, was named to newly created position of staff VP, business resource planning for NBC's parent, RCA Corp., last week. Sonnenfeldt, who will report to Rocco M. Liginestra, senior VP, RCA, will be responsible for "reviewing the long- and short-term strategic plans, including resource allocations of RCA's businesses and participation in corporate strategic planning projects." Prior to his work at NBC-TV, Sonnenfeldt headed team responsible for development of RCA's SelectaVision system.

In Las Vegas: NATPE's 19th annual conference continues at Las Vegas Hilton today and Tuesday (see page 62).
Pour the champagne

When the planners drew up the agenda of NATPE International's annual conference that is under way this week, they devoted a day to discussions of the role and probable fate of the prime-time access rule, then on the list of endangered species. The program is presumably going on as planned, with PTAR the subject of examination today (March 15). But among NATPE delegates there is less reason for concern than for celebration. PTAR is alive and well and off the FCC's priority hit list.

NATPE can take a good deal of the credit for countering the movement for repeal of the prime-time access rule. The credit must be shared with the organized affiliates of the television networks. Together they have turned aside, for the time being at least, the accommodation wanted by the networks: an extension of their evening news into the access half hour now occupied by all that programing that is on display this week in Las Vegas.

As veteran readers know, this page has historically opposed the access rule as a matter of regulatory principle. The rule put the government deeper into programing than it should be allowed to go. Worse, it led to a court decision that is cited today in behalf of further deprivations of First Amendment rights.

But network affiliates, which at first opposed the rule with vigor, have learned to love it. PTAR has made a lot of money for station operators who seem untroubled by the sacrifice of constitutional principles to the P&L statement. Beyond that, PTAR has provided an opportunity, accepted by some stations, to develop local programing for broadcast in prime time.

The guess here is that if PTAR were repealed, the actions of affiliates in the marketplace would keep the networks out of the disputed half hour. That guess, however, will be put to no test soon. Las Vegas is visited this week by a winner.

Rough and tumble

If it were a tidy world, an AM stereo broadcasting system fitting specifications issued by the FCC would be at the takeoff point right now. It is not a tidy world, and AM stereo will be subject to the exceedingly untidy process of choice by competition in the marketplace.

Most broadcasters and manufacturers wanted the FCC to do the picking. The agency demurred when confronted by rival systems that presented no clear winner. As Commissioner Joseph Fogarty noted, no member who was there at the time can forget the criticism the FCC attracted in April 1980 when it voted to approve the Magnavox system above the other four. Thinking they had done broadcasters a favor, commissioners went to the National Association of Broadcasters convention a couple of weeks later and, as Fogarty says, "the engineers took us apart."

It has been almost two years since the FCC submitted AM stereo to reconsideration. In that time FM stereo has asserted music leadership in many markets. The discrepancy can only be magnified as long as AM is confined to monaural sound.

The question is whether the conversion to stereo in AM would have been faster with the FCC's adoption of a single engineering standard or with competing systems vying for acceptance by broadcasters and the buyers of receiving sets. The FCC may be proved right in judging that its process would take longer.

Losers would surely have taken the FCC to court to dispute its choice, a guarantee of a delay of years in the ultimate decision. Now it becomes a contest among marketers. Broadcasters will be watching to determine which system is embraced by the most aggressive builders and sellers of both transmission and receiving gear. The natural process of selection could lead to choices sooner than some pessimists think.

Clash of titans

William M. Agee keeps rolling his eyes heavenward and swearing that his Bendix Corp. intends no take-over of RCA, into which it has bought 7.4%. Thornton Bradshaw assigns two of the country's biggest investment houses and one of its biggest law firms to prevent the take-over that Agee denies wanting. In the background, incorporated by oblique reference in an RCA press release, is Mary Cunningham, whose social consorting with Agee cost her a big job at Bendix and has been the talk of board rooms ever since. If Freddie Silverman were still at NBC, he would already be casting a soap opera as the script was being written upstairs at 30 Rock.

It may play like a soap opera, but it is considerably more than that. The last thing RCA needs now is, as Bradshaw put it neatly, a "destabilizing" by outside pressures on its corporate planners. The company has been destabilized enough by its own management in recent years. Its NBC has reposed so long in third place among the television networks in ratings, revenues and profits that the condition has begun to look habitual. Its C.I.T subsidiary is troubled by high interest rates, its Hertz by those and a decline in travel. The once-productive David Sarnoff Laboratories have been trailing instead of leading in the development of technology. Its manufacturing and marketing operations reflect the letdown in the labs.

In the nine months that he has been on the job as chairman and chief executive, Bradshaw has acted decisively in changing key personnel and setting corporate goals. But neither the inertia of the company nor the decline in the general economy has been on his side. It will take a while to turn RCA around in an environment that isn't helping anybody. RCA's two biggest competitors in broadcasting are also having troubled times.

Whatever Agee's plans, it is clear that Bradshaw is committed to resist incursions. With luck and steadfast adherence to the course he has set, Bradshaw will emerge with his company prospering, and Agee will make a capital gain off his RCA stock.
