In largest radio deal ever, Infinity buys 12 stations for $410 million, raising its total to 46; Clear Channel picks up 13 for $140 million, giving it 52 stations

By Donna Petrozzello and Elizabeth Rathbun

Radio’s rush to consolidate set new records last week, when more than a half-billion dollars changed hands in just two station deals.

Infinity Broadcasting Corp. made the largest-ever radio-only deal, buying 12 stations owned by Granum Holdings LP. The $410 million price supersedes the record radio-only purchase, set last year: Chancellor Broadcasting Co.’s $395 million merger with Shamrock Broadcasting Inc. (see “Special Report,” page 40).

Also last week, Clear Channel Communications Inc. paid $140 million for U.S. Radio’s 13 stations, plus options to purchase five others. Counting several recent deals it has made, Clear Channel’s portfolio would balloon from 39 radio stations to 52. Including local marketing and joint sales agreements, the company actually would have 64 stations, spokesman Randall Mays says. That’s more than any other group, “but you never know [how long that record will last] with how things are proceeding,” he says.

Together, the Clear Channel and Infinity deals add up to $550 million. Both are subject to FCC approval.

Infinity’s purchase would vault it from 34 stations to 46, including six FMs (from four) in Dallas; four FMs (from three) in Baltimore/Washington; four FMs (from two) in Boston (see chart, page 8), and two FMs (from one) in Atlanta.

Infinity’s and Clear Channel’s records beg to be broken. With the Telecommunications Act of 1996 in place, radio groups are buying each other at a rapid—and costly—pace. They’re taking advantage of the lifting of national ownership caps and the easing of local caps. Now, a broadcaster can own up to eight stations in large markets, but no more than five of a kind, FM or AM.

Other radio mega-deals inspired by the Telecommunications Act were Jacor’s $774 million acquisition of Citicasters Inc. on Feb. 12 and its Feb. 5 buy of Noble Broadcast Group Inc. The Noble buy, Jacob became the first company to hit the new limit of eight holdings, in Denver.

Infinity’s purchase of Granum illustrates the consolidation trend that deregulation has inspired, says media analyst Drew Marcus of Alex. Brown & Sons. Dallas and Boston will go “from a competitive [market] model to an oligopolistic one,” he says.

Or as Granum President/CEO Herb McCord says: “It’s really become impossible for [Granum] to compete against the largely publicly traded radio companies for buying stations.” Granum is a privately owned subsidiary of investment partnerships Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co. L.P and Granite Equity Partners.

Upon completing the acquisition of U.S. Radio’s 18 stations, San Antonio, Tex.–based Clear Channel will become the nation’s largest radio group. It also owns 10 TV stations and six TV translators.

Radio, however, does little to advance the San Antonio-based group's station clusters. Clear Channel has no existing radio holdings in seven of U.S. Radio's eight markets. Clear Channel adds stations only in Houston, where it grows to three FMs and three AMs.

"Clear Channel['s deal] makes a little less sense," one radio broker says. "It's more random." Infinity/Granum, however, is a "real good fit.... It lines 'em right up" for market consolidation.

With radio and TV prices running high, industry analysts and brokers say Infinity got a good deal, even though it paid 16-17 times Granum's estimated 1995 cash flow of $25 million.

The deal will be financed with Infinity's debt, which is about three times the company's earnings before interest, depreciation, taxes and amortization.

"His debt-equity ratios are high, but nobody seems to care," the radio broker says of Infinity President/CEO Mel Karmazin. "They have basically made money on everything they've bought." Infinity's buying spree is expected to continue.

Marcus calls the Infinity/Granum marriage "a perfect fit." He points to Infinity's strong presence in Dallas and Boston. The company now could command up to 30% of radio ad revenue in Dallas and 25% in Boston, he says.

News of the deals also pleased the stock market. Infinity's stock rose from trading at 41 7/8 last Monday (March 4) to 43 3/4 last Friday, a 52-week high. Clear Channel's price rose from 52 last Monday to 55 1/8, another 52-week high.

Speculation was that Infinity would sell its three new stations in Orlando, which Arbitron ranks as the nation's 39th market. And the company may divest itself of one of its six FMs in Dallas to meet the new cap of five-of-a-kind per market.

Meanwhile, FCC commissioners adopted two orders easing their radio and TV ownership rules to comply with the deregulation law. Besides owning up to eight stations in the largest market, the law allows a broadcaster to own seven radio stations (four of a kind) in markets with 30-44 radio stations: six stations (four of a kind) in markets with 15-29 stations, and five (three of a kind) in markets with 14 or fewer stations. In any case, no broadcaster may own more than half the stations in a market.

U.S. Radio Chairman/CEO Ragan Henry had been cast for a new owner for U.S. Radio since last September. The diversity of U.S. Radio's holdings meant that Henry "had a lot of trouble selling that company," the broker says. Reached Feb. 16 for an update on his... plans, Henry said he had pulled the stations off the market: "We decided we should be a buyer, not a seller." He did not return a telephone call seeking comment on the sale of his stations.

Clear Channel sees U.S. Radio "as an excellent complement to our existing station group," President/CEO Lowry Mays said in a statement. "It gives us the ability to get into a lot of new, good markets [with stations] that already have exciting strategic positions and fantastic local management in place," Randall Mays adds.

Also alluring was the price for the group: It amounts to less than 10 times trailing cash flow, he says. Clear Channel plans to remain "acquisitive in all of our markets," as long as prices are right, he says.

Henry will stay on as chairman of U.S. Radio.

Infinity, Stern renew their vows

Although busy adding radio stations, Infinity Broadcasting's Mel Karmazin also has locked in what he may consider his company's number-one asset—talk show mega-star Howard Stern.

Infinity signed Stern to a new five-year contract that calls for the company to continue syndicating his show and lend support to his efforts to expand his radio empire. The company is expected to help launch "The Howard Stern Radio Network," 24 hours a day of syndicated radio talk that Stern intends to assemble and introduce later this year.

Infinity will back the 42-year-old talk show host in a national campaign to sign new affiliates for his weekday show, says Stern's agent, Don Buchwald. Sources say Infinity and Stern hope to air in no fewer than 200 markets nationally; the show is now syndicated to 22 markets.

Stern said he would "love to be on in every market in the country. My philosophy is [that], if you're not with me, then you're against me, and to be against me is not a real good idea because I think we've got a successful show here."

Network upfront may be slow

A correction may be in the cards for the upcoming advertising buying season

By Steve McClellan

The two most recent network prime time upfront markets, during which the bulk of advertising dollars are committed for the upcoming television season, have been good for broadcast networks and costly for advertisers.

This year, ad agency executives say, expect a correction. And network sales executives do not rule out a softer upfront market.

The form a correction would take, if it were to occur, remains to be seen and may not affect the money available for network advertising during the 1996-97 season. For the current season, upfront and scatter; markets combined will bring in almost $6.6 billion.

Almost all buyers and sellers of advertising time agree that the networks will not achieve or even approach the average 25% cost-per-thousand (CPM) viewer price increases of last year's upfront, which totaled $5.5 billion-$5.6 billion.

Many in the business also think that advertisers will spend less in the upfront and more in the scatter market in the 1996-97 season. This season, advertisers put more money than usual (a little over 80%, by most accounts) in the upfront market, after being stung by 40%-50% increases in the scatter market for the 1994-95 season.

Typically, advertisers place some 70% of their network dollars in the upfront and reserve 30% for scatter; agency executives say the split next season may be closer to those norms. "This year clients were looking for a hedge against inflation, but next year I think you're going to see a lot of clients play it more cautiously," says Helen Tocheff, of Zenith Media.

Media buyer Paul Schulman agrees. "It looks like it will be well below where it was a year ago," he says of the pool of money for the coming upfront. And more money will be put in scatter. CPM rates, he says, will depend on how much smaller the upfront pool is: "If it's a billion dollars smaller, there could be no increase at all or a decrease. If it's a few hundred million, there could be a single-digit increase."

At NBC-TV, Larry Hoffner, president of advertising sales, says that no one can predict the size of the market. "It wouldn't surprise me," he says, if advertisers react to this year's results by holding back more dollars for the scatter market. Hoffner does not expect the huge CPM increases seen this year, but given NBC's performance this season, he expects an uptick.

ABC-TV's Marvin Goldsmith, president, advertising sales, told an audience at a forum held last week by the Association of National Advertisers in New York that this year's network upfront could surpass last year's record-setting $5.5 billion market. He pointed to the healthy national economy and strong scatter market this season (although it was not as strong as last year's) as good signs.

BBDO media buying chief Arnie Semskey said historical patterns for markets following Olympics/election years and years with huge CPM hikes suggest an upcoming upfront that will post no better than a 5% increase and could decline. Adding to the downward pressure will be a slowing economy and a disappointing network season with few hits and continued ratings erosion, he said.

TCI boosts rates 15%-20%

Increases will affect half its systems; 'one-shot' deal to cover improvements, inflation

By Jim McConville

Cable giant Tele-Communications Inc. is raising rates at about half of its systems around the country, averaging 15%-20% hikes in some of its key clusters.

"TCI, the nation’s largest MSO (13.3 million subscribers), plans to impose the hikes starting June 1. TCI executives last week would not say exactly how many subscribers would be affected by the latest round of rate hikes or what impact the added revenue is expected to have on the company’s bottom line. Wall Streeters say the company likely will provide estimates at a scheduled meeting with analysts next month.

"Basically, its a one-shot aberration," says TCI spokeswoman LaRae Marsek. She says the hike covers "two years of programming improvements and up to three years of inflation that TCI has not included in its rates."

Monthly rate hikes in TCI’s home state—Colorado—will run as high as $5.50 (from $20.75 to $26.25) for subscribers in certain areas who choose an "expanded basic" package of channels that includes most of America’s most-watched cable networks.

Expanded basic customers, which make up the bulk of TCI’s subscribers, will pay an average extra $3 per month for the package. On the low end of the scale, "basic" subscribers who receive just a handful of broadcast stations and less popular cable networks will see their monthly bill increase an average $1.14 a month.

The rest of TCI’s systems, typically unregulated systems in small rural markets, already passed on rate increases to consumers last February.

TCI’s latest round of rate hikes comes in the wake of rate increases by other top multiple system cable operators. Time Warner and Continental, the nation’s second- and third-largest MSOs, on Jan. 1 introduced rate hikes under their so-called social contracts with the FCC.

Time Warner’s increases typically ranged from roughly $2 per subscriber per month to about $3; the company’s 1 million New York City customers saw their monthly standard cable service fee rise from $12.10 to $15.32.

TCI, with cable systems in 48 states, has major franchise clusters in Denver,

TCI: Raising prices by the book

TCI will take advantage of the FCC’s new rate adjustment forms to implement its pricing plan.

The company last week filed about 500 of the “1240 forms” with local franchising authorities. Instituted by the commission last fall, the forms allow cable companies to adjust their rates once a year to reflect inflation and increases in “external costs,” including programing costs, copyright fees and FCC regulatory fees.

The forms permit cable companies to estimate cost increases that will occur during the year ahead, a system the FCC implemented to allow the firms to recover costs more quickly. If the companies guess wrong in estimating their costs, a “true up” clause requires them to later decrease their rates for overestimations and increase them for underestimations.

TCI filed the forms with local franchising authorities to increase rates on the basic service tier. Local franchising authorities will be able to review and reject the proposed increases if they find them unreasonable, FCC officials say. Commission rules require cable operators to file the forms 90 days before the planned rate change.

To raise rates on the extended basic tier (which generally includes such channels as ESPN, MTV and CNN), operators can file 1240 forms with the FCC, which regulates the cable programming tier. Those forms are not due until 30 days before a planned rate increase on the extended basic tier, and TCI has not yet filed them with the FCC.

Any cable subscribers wanting to complain will have to wait until the FCC iron out its new cable rules. Subscribers previously could file complaints with the FCC, but the 1996 Telecommunications Act bars the commission from accepting rate complaints directly from subscribers.

The commission instead can accept the complaints only from the franchising authorities, which in turn may not file them unless they receive subscriber complaints within 90 days of a rate increase.

Just how many complaints the franchising authority must receive before complaining to the commission is unclear. Commission officials say they may address the issue in a cable reform rulemaking slated for this quarter.

"For the average consumer, there’s not a whole lot that can be done," says Bradley Stillman, telecommunications policy director for the Consumer Federation of America. "This is the reason we were unhappy with eliminating the consumer’s ability to complain." —CM

San Francisco, Chicago, Dallas, Houston, Pittsburgh, Seattle, St. Louis and Washington. TCI plans to change its rates yearly, rather than quarterly.

For most industry experts, TCI's rate hikes come as no surprise. "They're taking whatever room they have to raise the rates within the FCC guidelines," says John Aronson, analyst for the Yankee Group.

"Rate hikes will be very much heavily loaded toward the second half of the year," says analyst Melissa Cook of Prudential Securities. "TCI and every cable operator out there has to think like a regular utility, and if there is an allowed rate hike they should take it. At some point, we will get to the situation where there is enough competition that the whole issue of rates will be governed more by what the consumer is willing to pay than by what the FCC tells them they can charge."

Sharon Ambrust, analyst for Paul Kagan & Associates, says the rate increase may also be a case of TCI taking advantage of its current lack of price competition.

TCI isn't the lone MSO raising system rates, says Ambrust, who cites Time Warner, Continental and Cox as having recently gained FCC rate increases under the 1992 Cable Act.

"What they're doing is getting inside a window where the competition isn't as keen," Ambrust says. "The only competition right this minute is direct broadcast satellite [DBS], which hasn't really underpriced cable services by any stretch."

Two major regions impacted by TCI's rate hikes are Northern California and TCI's own corporate backyard, Denver.

In the San Francisco Bay area, where a TCI cable bill now averages $24-$30, rates will climb an average 15%, or $3-$5 more each month. Increases will affect about 500,000 subscribers in Northern California, where TCI operates some 100 cable franchises.

In Denver, where TCI recently completed an estimated $150 million system rebuild, TCI of Colorado rates are set to increase an average 21% and up to 26% on one system. Subscriber bills will rise between $4 and $5.50 a month. The increase comes on top of a 5% hike in basic rates last January.

TCI's rate increases may give DBS makers impetus to go after cable subscribers in those markets. "It obviously gives [DBS] a stronger position," says Ambrust.

Scrambling rules on hold
Court issues restraining order, allowing Playboy and Spice to challenge provisions

By Chris McConnell

Cable operators last week won temporary relief from the Telecommunications Act's adult-channel scrambling provisions days before the new rules were to take effect.

A U.S. District Court in Delaware placed a temporary restraining order on the new scrambling rules. The rules, adopted by the FCC earlier in the week, require cable operators to scramble the audio and video of "sexually explicit" programming channels so that nonsubscribers cannot receive them. Failing that, the operators would be barred from delivering the adult channels between 6 a.m. and 10 p.m.

The commission adopted the 6 a.m.-10 p.m. ban as an interim measure while it sought comment on a permanent rule. The commission based the interim rule on the 6 a.m.-10 p.m. indecency "safe harbor" rules in broadcasting.

The new scrambling rules were to have taken effect March 9, but Playboy Entertainment Group and Spice Networks convinced the Delaware court to put the rules on hold while they challenge the provisions. The companies maintain that the rule singles them out while allowing other cable programing channels to occasionally run similar fare.

"Playboy doesn't oppose scrambling," says Robert Corn-Revere, a communications lawyer representing Playboy Entertainment Group. "Let's just do it on the same basis as everyone else."

Corn-Revere and others also point to the cost of compliance. Because the law calls for audio scrambling as well as video scrambling, cable operators would have to replace customer set-top units with boxes carrying the audio-scrambling capability to comply.

"There's really no way to get that technical capability in place in 30 days," says Wesley Heppler, a Washington cable lawyer.

The case next goes before a three-judge panel of the Delaware court, which will hear arguments on granting a preliminary injunction. The court last week had not set a date for the arguments, but sources following the case predict that judges will hear the case within a month. The Telecommunications Act provides that any decisions by a three-judge district court that the scrambling provisions are unconstitutional will be directly appealable to the Supreme Court.
Rysher calls halt to 'George & Alana'

Cites time period squeeze; new talk show failures mount

By Cynthia Littleton

A nother talk show bit the dust last week as Rysher Entertainment gave up the fight to renew its low-rated morning strip George & Alana for a second year.

George & Alana will stop production at the end of the month, but original episodes will run through the end of May. The hour strip, co-hosted by actor George Hamilton and his ex-wife Alana Stewart, has averaged a 1.4 national Nielsen household rating since its premiere last September.

Rysher officials blamed the show's demise on the time period squeeze in top markets brought on by the growing number of alliances between syndicators and major station groups.

"While there continues to be strong demand for George & Alana in markets 50 and below, we are caught in a marketplace that is being driven by group deals in the larger markets," said Ira Bernstein, Rysher's president of domestic distribution.

George & Alana was designed to compete for a slice of the Live with Regis & Kathie Lee audience, but viewers never warmed up to the "happily divorced" Hollywood couple. The show averaged a .6 rating with women 18-49 and a .8 with women 25-54.

Nonetheless, Hamilton is said to have scored high marks in focus group tests and other market research. Sources close to Hamilton, whose production company owned a stake in George & Alana, say the actor may reteam with Rysher on a new TV project, possibly a late-night vehicle.

With the departure of George & Alana, this season's tally of fallen freshman talkers has hit the half-dozen mark: Buena Vista Television's Danny Bonaduce and Stephanie Miller, Twentieth Television's Gabrielle, Tribune Entertainment's Charles Perez and Warner Bros.' Carrie.

The end of Hamilton and Stewart's TV union heightens the scrutiny of the three struggling survivors—New World Entertainment's Mark Walberg, Columbia TriStar Television Distribution's Tempestt and Turner Program Services' Lauren Hutton And.... Distributors of the three low-rated shows say they will decide about year two after examining the national results from the February sweeps.

While George & Alana was an exception, industry observers blame this season's high casualty rate on the sheer glut of new talk shows trying to capitalize on Ricki Lake's success with young adults. But the February sweeps indicate that the established shows were buoyed by the flood of new faces in daytime.

Oprah Winfrey remains the queen of talk, enjoying a 90% lead over its nearest competitors, Jenny Jones and Montel Williams, both of which averaged a 4.7 Nielsen household rating in the first four weeks of the February sweeps. Rounding out the top five were Lake, with a 4.2, and Sally Jessy Raphael, with a 4.1.

White House hosts kids TV rally

Hundt joins Al and Tipper Gore, Hillary Clinton and public interest groups at V-chip victory celebration

By Christopher Stern

The White House held a pep rally last Monday for approximately 100 children's TV advocates, who celebrated the television industry's decision to implement a content ratings system and encouraged public interest groups to keep up the pressure on broadcasters to produce more educational programming for kids.

The meeting was hosted by Vice President Gore; his wife, Tipper, and First Lady Hillary Clinton. Also attending was FCC Chairman Reed Hundt.

The White House urged the kids TV advocates to keep the issue of children's television programming at the forefront of the public agenda, according to several sources who attended the meeting. "It was really part of [the Clinton administration's] ongoing effort to put this issue out there," said one source.

The March 4 meeting came on the heels of the Feb. 29 white House summit attended by 30 of the most powerful executives in the entertainment world. The media moguls also announced on Feb. 29 that the television industry would adopt a content ratings code based on the system now used by the movie industry.

Among the 80 groups invited to last week's White House meeting were Action for Children's Television, American Center for Children's Television, Casey Journalism for Children and Families, Center for Media Education, Center for Research on the Influences of Television on Children, Center for Study of Commercialism, Children's Television Workshop, National Alliance for Non-Violent Programming, National Coalition on Television Violence and National Foundation to Improve Television.

Senate Budget Committee co-opts auction issue

Steals thunder from Commerce; schedules hearing this week

By Christopher Stern

A turf war is brewing between the Senate Budget and Commerce committees over spectrum auctions.

The Budget Committee has scheduled a hearing on broadcast spectrum auctions for this Thursday, jumping the gun on plans by both the House and the Senate commerce committees to hold a series of spectrum hearings of their own.

"The fact that the Senate Budget Committee is holding a hearing is a concern to us," said Democratic Senate Commerce Committee staffer John Windhausen, adding: "We cannot let a backdoor deal take place that we are not part of." Windhausen was speaking as a panelist at a congressional forum last Monday hosted by the National Association of Broadcasters.

Windhausen’s remarks echo statements made last month by senators Trent Lott (R-Miss.) and John Breaux (D-La.), who said that any decision on spectrum auctions should be delayed until after the Commerce Committee holds hearings on broadcast spectrum auctions.

The FCC has estimated that the spectrum now set aside for digital television could be worth as much as $70 billion on the open market. The spectrum’s high retail value has some budget writers clamoring to put it on the auction block. But broadcasters and some members of the Commerce Committee insist that a digital spectrum sale could lead to the end of free over-the-air television.

The Commerce Committee spectrum hearings were scheduled after Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole (R-Kan.) threatened to hold up the telecommunications bill over the issue of broadcast spectrum auctions. Dole let the bill proceed after receiving a promise from the FCC that it would not grant any advanced television licenses until after Congress had revisited the issue.

Broadcast lobbyists had expected a reprieve until the Commerce Committee.

Speakers offer range of suggestions during en banc hearing

By Chris McConnell

FCC commissioners heard more calls for advanced TV spectrum payments last week as they examined their spectrum management polices.

Speaking at an FCC en banc hearing on spectrum policies, AT&T Wireless Services Vice Chairman Wayne Perry said he sees no reason that the spectrum should not be auctioned, and The Annenberg Washington Program’s Henry Geller said the FCC should at least replace broadcasting’s public interest obligations with payments similar to cable franchise fees.

"You’ve really out to let go of it," Geller said of the public interest regime.

But talk turned to ATV auctions when FCC Chairman Reed Hundt opened the day’s final session by asking panelists whether the government should auction the digital TV channels.

Arguing against such a prospect was Association for Maximum Service Television (MSTV) representative Jonathan Blake, who predicted that analog broadcasters could “wither away” in 12 years if they are not allowed to shift to the digital channels. Blake also said that an auction of the digital channels might raise only $1 billion, depending on the conditions placed on the licenses.

Perry countered that spectrum appears to be attracting more money in

Wireless, wired clash over completing the connection

By Chris McConnell

Cable and telephone companies last week battled over FCC plans to promote wireless competitors to the telcos.

The commission in December proposed requiring local phone companies and commercial mobile radio service (CMRS) providers to terminate each other's calls at no charge on an interim basis. The "bill-and-keep" system would require telephone companies to deliver at no charge to the wireless provider calls made from wireless phones to wired phones and also would require the wireless systems to reciprocate by delivering at no charge calls made from wired phones to wireless units.

The commission proposed setting the policy as an interim rule while it examines interconnection issues and establishes a long-term policy.

Cable companies and others interested in competing with the telephone companies like the idea. Comcast Corp., which in December welcomed the proposal as "the single biggest step the FCC has taken so far to promote local telephone competition." last week said the proposed interconnection system will allow the cellular and PCS providers to compete with local exchange carriers.

"Continuation of the status quo will only stifle the emergence of robust wireless competition," Comcast said.

"Bill-and-keep is the most appropriate interim model for mutual compensation," said Time Warner Telecommunications Holdings. American Personal Communications said the commission should extend the policy to all elements of the communications networks.

Telephone companies countered that they carry more traffic than do the wireless providers and that the proposal is unfair. "An FCC-imposed bill-and-keep policy would unlawfully require [local exchange carriers] to dedicate their property to the termination of CMRS traffic without compensation," BellSouth told the FCC. ■

The FCC and Continental Cablevision have proposed amending the social contract that the commission approved last summer. The amendment, which would incorporate cable systems with some 987,000 subscribers that Continental has acquired since the contract's approval, calls for Continental to pay about $1.7 million in subscriber refunds and would resolve 165 rate complaints. Continental has pledged to invest another $350 million in domestic system upgrades during the next five years, bringing its total commitment to $1.7 billion.

The amendment also calls for Continental to provide a free cable connection to public schools located within 200 feet of the activated plant of its cable systems. Comments on the proposed amendment are due April 22.

The FCC's Audio Services Division has almost cleared the decks of license transfer applications that accumulated during the government shutdown earlier this year. Speaking at the NAB's State Leadership Conference last week, the division's Linda Blair said that Audio Services acted on 486 applications in February and has disposed of 618 since the shutdown. Also, Mass Media Bureau Chief Roy Stewart said that Blair will be the division's next chief. Blair has been serving as acting chief since October.

A research group working for the National Association of Broadcasters has been hired after allegedly offering congressional staffers $150 each to participate in a private discussion of broadcast spectrum auctions. The NAB says it fired Shugoll Research Corp. after hearing about the payment offers. Spectrum auction advocate Senator John McCain (R-Ariz.) told Associated Press last week that the payment went "way over the line." According to McCain, broadcasting industry officials told him "they were glad it was brought to their attention and it was never intended, blah, blah, blah."

The FCC has launched a series of streamlining procedures as part of its efforts to implement the 1996 Telecommunications Act. Among the time-saving steps: shorter comment and reply periods, a presumption against comment extension requests except "in the most extraordinary circumstances" and a suggestion that parties sharing the same view file joint comments. The commission also said it may impose page limitations on the comments and suggested that those expressing views do so in the written comments rather than relying on ex parte presentations. ■
MT&R in Beverly Hills
An Attic to Die For

For 21 years the history of the Museum of Television & Radio has been one milestone after another. Or one monument after another, if you look at it in architectural terms. Next week the museum will dedicate its new West Coast edifice in Los Angeles, a $14 million, 23,000-square-foot structure designed by Richard Meier that completes a bridge between the creative and business communities on both coasts. MT&R President Robert Batscha describes the ever-renewing vision behind that institution in this interview with BROADCASTING & CABLE editor Don West.

How much of the past is within these walls?
Well, we have a collection of television and radio programming dating from 1928. The first radio program we have is Franklin Delano Roosevelt campaigning for vice president; the earliest television program is 1938—six minutes of a program called Poverty Is Not a Crime on the Streets of New York. Somebody just picked up a camera at home and took it off the screen, so there’s no sound. Our first official television program was a Toscanini concert in 1949.

The other way to answer your question is to say that whether it be news coverage, beginning with Franklin Roosevelt, to the present, or entertainment, sports or culture in general, the past century has been documented by our collection of 75,000 programs.

So if you study the Second World War, you have to come to the museum because the public heard about the war, and listened to it, through radio. Likewise, if you want to learn about the Vietnam War, you’ve got to come and see our coverage from the networks. Or the Korean War. And obviously the Gulf War is all here. All the space flights are here. Since we began our collection, all the inaugural addresses are here; all the State of the Union addresses are here.

And then there are all of the comedy programs and the dramatic programs. So when you ask “how much,” it’s 75,000 hours. Within the bigger picture, it’s the 20th century that’s here—and how people saw and learned or participated.

How is radio represented? How is over-the-air television represented? And how is cable represented? Which is the largest collection? And what does the collection tell us about each medium?

The largest part of the collection is television. We have about 20,000 radio programs, from the beginning to the present. Radio is a very important part of our collection and, particularly in the past several years, we’ve given a lot of attention to it.

There are two parts of radio that are important to us. One is radio before television; the other is radio after television. We’re trying to represent both. We’re trying to show people how early radio developed many of the formats you see on television now; how it was a very exciting form of communication; how it was at the core of American society, and things like that. We’re also trying to demonstrate how vital radio has continued to be. And we did this two years ago when we did an opening series called “Rock and Roll Radio.” We showed how, over five decades, radio and rock and roll found each other, helped each other develop, and became a very exciting format. We’ve done this with talk radio as well.

What it tells you is that these media are continually changing. Radio was predicted to die after television came, but it’s incredibly vital. What it will be like 25 years from now, who knows?

Television will certainly be different. It isn’t what it was 25 years ago. Cable has had an effect on it. It, too, is a dynamic medium. What it tells you is that programming is at the core. Nobody listens to technology or watches technology.

I find cable a completely different kind of medium than broadcast. There are 24-hour networks. To the extent that there is sex and violence on television, it’s principally on...
How much more can you chronicle before you can't take any more?

It's not an issue. Let me answer it in a different perspective. I always compare the development of television and radio to the Gutenberg printing press. As you know, that fundamentally changed society, the way we communicate with each other and the way literature was created. And it created a different kind of secular literature.

At some point, 550 years ago, somebody said, "Let's create a public library to preserve all of this material that is being created so that (1) it's preserved and (2) the public continues to have access." In 1976 Bill Paley said, "Let's create a public library for television and radio so that the then-50-year history of those media [will] be preserved and open to the public." So we are effectively the first public library for these electronic media. And the answer is, it doesn't stop. No library, in 550 years, has stopped collecting books, and we will not stop collecting television and radio programs.

The question of storage is really solving itself. I mean, we used to put our tapes on three-quarter-inch stock. Now they're on digital and are stored outside, or we have these little eight-millimeter cassettes. And we have storage in this building, we estimate, for the next 35 years. But in five years, what is now on 12 shelves is going to be on one shelf.

We estimate that there's somewhere between two and a half and three million hours of television. Can you imagine, then, how many hours of radio there are as well? There's no way that we, as an institution, could collect that amount of material. And within that universe of television plus radio, we have 75,000. That sounds like an enormous amount, given what's available. However, what that 75,000 represents is, hopefully, a thorough collection of the best.

We want to take advantage of your overview of television and radio to talk about the media. For example, do you feel the best has been done, or the best is yet to be?

That's a fair question, and it's really part of the core of my philosophy about this institution. Since I've been here, no one in this institution has been permitted to use the phrase "The Golden Age of Television." I find it the most ludicrous phrase imaginable. It was the exciting, creative beginning of television, but it certainly can't have been television's Golden Age. I mean, if you go back to Gutenberg, we have 550 years of the book, and it has yet to have its Golden Age.

Frankly, I think television is getting better and it will continue to get better. What you're seeing is the maturing of this medium. You're seeing more really talented and creative people going into the media. The difficulty is that we are at a point where television has yet to be recognized for its artistic achievements. But every creative form has at some point been unrecognized.

You know, snapshots became photography because people began to focus on what was really excellent and what was creative. And television is in very much the same early mode. When you think about it, it’s one of the few modes of creative expression where people focus on what’s bad as opposed to what’s good.

I mean, if 10% of the books published each year are good, we’re lucky. But nobody questions whether or not the book is a creative form. At best, 10% of the plays written each year are good, but nobody questions whether theater is a creative form, or a vital form, or a great form of expression. Or that it isn’t going to have a great creative future.

Yet in television, most of the critics, the press and society focus on the 90% that’s terrible, not on the 10% that’s excellent. And a significant number of people talk about television, never having watched it.

There’s a game I play with those who say, “I don’t watch any television” or “There’s nothing good on television.” I’ll tell them, “Take your TV Guide or your weekend supplement and, no matter what you’re interested in, I guarantee that you will find six hours of programing that you will want to watch every week.” Now, it may not be at 8 o’clock on Tuesday. But I guarantee you, whatever your interest, you’ll find six hours a week, every week of the year for 52 weeks. That’s 24 hours of programing a month. A feature film is two hours long. That’s 12 feature films a month. That’s 144 feature films a year. I guarantee you, you can’t find 12 films, let alone 144, that you want to watch. Yet nobody questions that film is a distinguished, creative medium.

Take NYPD Blue. Steve Bochco does 26 hours a year. That’s 13 feature films a year. You tell me who does 13 films. And let’s suppose only 10 of those feature films are great. Tell me who else does 10 feature films a year. And they say this isn’t a creative medium. This is a brilliant creative medium, and I think that’s the message that has to get out.

And if you look at the new people coming into television and radio, it’s very exciting. When I was in college, I wanted to write the great American novel. Today, they want to write the great American television series.

At what point do you become electronic? When do you put this online so that I can tap into the collection anywhere?

The day there are no copyright issues. You see, we don’t own any of the programs. The copyright holders give us the programs for use in both New York and Los Angeles and for traveling exhibitions and things like that. But they do not give us copyright.

And does that mean that it will never happen? You will never be able to do it?

Ultimately, I think we’ll be able to. But let me answer your question in a different way. It’s very important for us to have a base in Los Angeles, and to have this museum in Los Angeles, because television’s creative community is in both New York and Los Angeles.

When I came here the big challenge was to get the public—and the industry—to understand what a museum is all about. Then the challenge became to add life to the subject and to the institution, and not just be a passive institution.

A second thing we wanted to do was make this a place where the creative community was very much involved. I think it’s critical for any institution in the arts to involve its creative people. We did that by doing seminars—some 60 seminars a year here in New York. We do a similar amount in Los Angeles. And then the next step, of course, was—having spent a number of years in the other facility—to create this building and make the collection more accessible.

Then, as soon as we built this facility, it became evident that it would be very valuable to have two facilities: one that was in the heart of this creative community; one that was in the heart of the Los Angeles community.

We opened the doors here a little more than four years ago. Two years after we opened the doors here, the decision was made to move forward to open the museum in Los Angeles.

But the value of having the museum in Los Angeles is not just another public that will have access to the collection, but two points, one for the public and one for us as an institution.

We have three criteria for putting a program into the collection: excellence, historical significance—so we have all the space flights, and the assassinations and things like that—and social impact. If you really want to study American culture over the past century, you come here. What is it that we’ve laughed at? What is it we’ve cried at?

Is it a coincidence that Dynasty and the Reagan administration paralleled each other for eight years? Or, if you want to study the role of women in American society, look at Lucy, who couldn’t get a job. Look at Eve Arden, who was a secretary but ran the office. Look at Marlo Thomas, who was That Girl, who had the audacity to want a career before she got married. Look at Mary Tyler Moore, who had the audacity not to be married. And look at Murphy Brown, who just has audacity.

I was at a meeting not too long ago where I learned that it wasn’t until 70 years after the invention of the printing press that the idea of numbering pages was developed. Before that, pages were never numbered. A book was made to fit into a saddlebag so it could be transported. And when it was transported, there might be a note saying, “Please see documentation on page 455.” And the reader would count “one, two, three, four, five....”

So if something that simple came 70 years after an invention, we still have 20 years in television before something as simple as numbering pages comes.

And if you want to see the development of this institution, it’s the result of some very exciting people who have been on the board, and a chairman like Frank Bennack. And that can’t be underestimated.

I mean, when you think that in 20 years, an institution has gone from an idea to a 17-story Philip Johnson building with a 75,000-program collection in New York, to a Richard Meier museum in Los Angeles, it’s extraordinary.

It wouldn’t have happened without Bill Paley, whose great idea it was. It’s evolved since then to the point that we have telephone industry representation on the board. And it’s become a kind of watering hole where they come together, talk to each other and exchange ideas in a noncompetitive fashion, and it vitalizes us. We’re as good as our ability to tap that spirit and communicate it to the public.

We’re trying to catch what’s in the air. The brilliance of the Museum of Modern Art is that it caught what was in the air, and everybody said, “Yes. That’s it.” That’s what we’re trying to do.

CBS gets boost with weekly win

First first since 1994 on strength of stunts, specials and series

By Steve Coe

Despite the network's sweeps performance and recent weekly win, Leslie Moonves, president, CBS Entertainment, cautioned that "we still have miles to go before we sleep. This is not the be-all and end-all. It's a baby step in the right direction for us."

Moonves acknowledged, however, that the weekly win following the February numbers comes at a time when the network is in need of good news. "This is a morale boost for us here [at the entertainment division] as well as among the affiliates. It also helps to change the perception. Reports of our death are premature."

In winning the week, which included the last three days of the sweeps, CBS averaged an 11.4 rating/19 share in Nielsen household numbers compared with NBC's 10.6/17, ABC's 9.4/15 and Fox's 7.7/12. The network, which is still looking for ways to woo adults 18-49, finished first among women 25-54 for the week and was a close second among women viewers 18-49.

CBS won four nights outright (Monday, Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday), was edged out for first place on Friday night and placed second on Thursday night. Of the 44 prime time half-hours, CBS captured more than half, with 23, followed by NBC with 16, including one tie, and ABC with 6, including one tie. The 23 half-hours

‘Friends’ in high places

Warner Bros. sales executives may have spoken too soon last year when they predicted that NBC's smash hit Friends would become the biggest money-making off-network sitcom of the post-Cosby era.

With 45% of the country and all of the top 10 markets cleared, Warner Bros. executives are now confidently predicting Friends will shatter even the record set in 1988 by The Cosby Show, which raked in an estimated $650 million in license fees and barter revenue for Viacom during its initial 3 1/2-year cycle.

"It's pacing well north of Cosby," says Dick Robertson, president of Warner Bros. Domestic Television Distribution. Recent additions to the Friends off-network family include KDAF(TV) Dallas, WKBW(TV) Detroit and WATL(TV) Atlanta.

The FCC gave a boost to Warner Bros.' sales blitz by allowing the prime time access rule to expire in the fall. Big Three affiliates in the top 50 markets have aggressively courted Friends, driving up the dollar amount of the bids in those markets and, in turn, raising the floor price for the show throughout the country.

The marketing plan for Friends, which bows in 1998, also gives Warner Bros. 7 1/2 minutes of barter time per week, compared with the 5 minutes per week Viacom received when it took the then-unprecedented step of adding barter time to the price tag of an off-network series.

Friends already made off-network history in December by racking up its first sales before the show, which revolves around a group of twenty-something roommates in New York, was halfway through its second network season.

Typically, the off-network sales process doesn't begin until a sitcom reaches its third or fourth season. But Friends was scooped up by the Tribune Broadcasting group and three other stations in a move characterized by the buyers as a "preemptive strike" against the competition.

Stations signing on for Friends have the option of double-running the show for the first three years of the initial 3 1/4-year license term, which will be extended by nine months for each year the show adds to its network run after the 1997-98 season. The deal also gives stations one barter-free run of the show on weekends.

Friends has been guaranteed prime access slots in all of the 22 markets cleared as of last week, which is certain to boost the barter portion of its take beyond the estimated $100 million generated by Cosby.

—CL
won by CBS represent the most time periods won by any network this season since the premiere week.

The network's stunting on the Monday night comedies proved successful, with Elizabeth Taylor's appearance on four series boosting the two-hour block to a 14.0/21, with a season record or near-season-record performance for each of the shows. For the night, the network averaged a 13.5/21, its fourth-highest Monday of the season, and led in households and among all key demographic groups.

CBS's presentation of the Grammy Awards on Wednesday, Feb. 28, scored a 14.6/23, winning every half-hour on the night and giving the network its highest-rated Wednesday performance of the season.

The network also got a strong showing from its long-form in February with the second installments of the four-hour Gone in the Night and Thorn Birds: The Missing Years averaging a 12.9/20, the highest Tuesday movie numbers of the season.

CBS's showing in February was not limited to specials or stunting, however, as its Saturday lineup continued to pull in workmanlike numbers and confirm the other networks.

For the season, CBS has won 21 of the 24 Saturday nights, and Moonves says the network has found the right formula on an otherwise difficult night to program. "Obviously, the biggest surprise is our spectacular Saturday night," consisting of Dr. Quinn, Touched by an Angel and Walker, Texas Ranger. "We've obviously struck a chord with what people want to watch."

CBS also found cause to crow in dayparts other than prime time. In late night, the network's Late Show with David Letterman finished first among 18-49-year-olds during the sweeps, beating NBC's Tonight Show with Jay Leno by two-tenths of a ratings point. The network also continued its daytime dominance in households by winning its 365th consecutive week.

As the network's household fortunes continue to rise, Moonves expects the demographic profile of the schedule to improve as well. However, he cautions that any presumptions that the network will chase blindly after the younger viewers is incorrect. "We'll still be the household network for a while," he said. "But we think there will be shifting in the Madison Avenue thinking. We believe the primary demographic will become the adults 25-54, not the 18-49-year-olds."

MCA taps worldwide distribution chief

In restructuring of TV operations, McNamara is brought in from New World

By Cynthia Littleton

The new leaders at MCA/Universal last week took the first step toward restructuring the studio's television operations after spending the past few months implementing major changes in the theatrical and music divisions.

In a bid to streamline the TV unit's domestic syndication efforts and boost international sales, New World Entertainment veteran James McNamara was named to the new position of president of worldwide television distribution. McNamara also will oversee production of all first-run programing, bringing the studio's syndication sales and development activities under the watch of one executive for the first time.

Domestic syndication sales are now overseen by Shelly Schwab, president of MCA Television, while first-run production and development is handled by Ned Nalle, executive vice president of Universal Television. Schwab and Nalle will report to McNamara, along with Colin Davis, president of MCA TV International.

The new chain of command on the TV side is part of an overall effort to "reposition our company around the world" and focus more attention on the international marketplace, says Greg Meidel, who joined the studio as chairman of the MCA Television Group in January. MCA has been in a period of transition since it was acquired by Canadian beverage giant Seagram Co. last April.

McNamara, who will report to Meidel, was chosen to help Meidel overhaul the TV division partly because of his strong track record in international sales. McNamara helped turn the soap operas Santa Barbara and The Bold and the Beautiful into prime time hits in France and Italy, among other countries, during his five-year tenure as a senior executive with New World International. McNamara later served as chief executive officer of New World Entertainment from 1991 to 1995.

In recent years, MCA's international sales have been hindered by its troubles in the domestic market. The studio, home to such TV classics as Leave It to Beaver, Columbo and The Rockford Files, has had a spotty record in network prime time, faring best with such dramas as NBC's Law & Order, Fox's NY Undercover and CBS's low-rated but critically praised American Gothic.

Syndication has been the bright spot in the MCA TV picture during the past year. After launching the high-profile first-run failures Last Call and The Suzanne Somers Show in 1994, MCA has been credited with helping to revive the moribund action-hour genre with its highly rated first-run hours Hercules: The Legendary Journeys and Xena: Warrior Princess.

'Dateline' goes for four

NBC executives aren't looking for miracles, just improvement

By Steve McClellan

When Dateline NBC expands to a fourth night this Sunday (March 17) against 60 Minutes, no one expects the NBC magazine to topple the venerable CBS powerhouse from its time period perch—least of all NBC executives.

Indeed, David Corvo, the NBC News vice president in charge of prime time programs, says the Sunday edition of Dateline will probably place third in the ratings, like most of the NBC shows in the 7-8 p.m. time period in recent years.

It was that track record that prompted NBC Entertainment executives to ask the news division to give it a go on Sunday nights. "I'm excited about this, but it's not like I went into [NBC News President Andy Lack's] office and said please, please let me do a show against 60 Minutes," says Dateline executive producer Neal Shapiro.

But one thing network executives are expecting, almost out of the box, says Corvo, is time period improvement. "We think we can outperform the [NBC] shows that have been there," he says.

That shouldn't be terribly difficult to accomplish. Season to date, NBC has averaged a 5.2 rating and a 9 share in the Sunday 7-8 p.m. slot, compared with a 14.6/24 for CBS and an 11.0/18 for ABC. Meanwhile, Dateline has averaged an 11.3/19 this season on Tuesday (second in the time period); an 11.6/18 on Wednesday (first or second in the time period), and a 10.6/18 on Friday (first in the time period).

The tougher question is whether Dateline will be the network's best bet in the time period going into next fall. The answer depends partly on how the show performs during the next two months (the network will announce its fall schedule May 13), but also on judgments concerning entertainment shows now in development.

For now, Corvo and Shapiro aren't worried about the numbers so much as getting the staff (which will grow from about 200 to 250 to produce the fourth night) to focus on executing stories well. "We know there's an appetite for news then," as 60 Minutes has proved for years, says Corvo. "We can offer another version and give people a choice."

In terms of audience composition, 60 Minutes skews older than does Dateline, just as CBS skews older as a network than does NBC. Shapiro says it's possible that Dateline could draw younger viewers to the set who aren't now tuning in.

Going against 60 Minutes will be a formidable task. But, says Shapiro, "we're a show that has shown surprising strength against tremendous competition," including NYPD Blue and ABC's 9-10 p.m. comedies. "Being up against a tremendous hit show is not new to us."

Although Corvo and Shapiro downplay expectations of the Sunday Dateline, 60 Minutes isn't taking the new competition lightly. Although no slouch in the breaking-news department, the magazine has installed a new producer to focus on breaking-news stories—a focus on which Dateline has built its franchise. The CBS show is also scrapping its long summer break and adding a new point-counterpoint segment.

New day for local news

Daytime newscasts are boosting brand awareness and bottom lines

By Cynthia Littleton

At the national and local levels, many broadcasters are making long-term investments in daytime news to help boost station identity and the bottom line.

For example, the Chris Craft/United Television group has joined the growing number of TV strategists that see plenty of room for more news in the daytime landscape. Chris Craft's Minneapolis outlet, UPN affiliate KMSP-TV, is gearing up to produce a nationally oriented midday news hour to be carried live at 2 p.m. EST by six of the group's eight stations starting in mid-September.

"News viewers in daytime are underserved, and a lot of advertisers want news," says Stu Swartz, general manager of KMSP-TV. "It's a logical move for us."

At the most recent Fox affiliates meeting, general managers were once again urged to beef up their local news presence. And NBC provided more fuel to the daytime news boom last week with the premiere of its Boston-based news magazine, Real Life, carried between 9 a.m. and noon on about 65% of the network's affiliates.

"There's always been a niche for daytime news, but the opportunities have really opened up with talk shows reaching the saturation point with viewers," says Joel Cheatwood, executive producer of Real Life.

Although the as-yet-unnamed Chris Craft show is a major financial commitment for the group, Swartz noted that the show will allow each station to get more use out of existing news departments. Breaking with the magazine format favored by most nationally oriented daytime news programs, the Chris Craft show will look more like a network newscast, with the latest headlines fol-owed by in-depth topical features.

While Chris Craft owns the fledgling UPN network and is active in syndication, there are no immediate plans to offer it to other UPN affiliates or pitch it as a first-run property. Network commitments prevent Chris Craft’s NBC affiliate in San Antonio and ABC affiliate in Salt Lake City from carrying the show, Swartz said.

New World Entertainment is taking a similar approach by developing an in-house franchise newsmagazine for its 12 Fox affiliates as a 4 p.m. news lead-in. The show, tentatively targeted for a 1997 debut, would be produced locally at each station, with New World Entertainment supplying general interest lifestyle and feature segments.

Industry observers say expanded news coverage is a sign of maturation for the Chris Craft stations and other traditional independents that often cede the local news battle to the more established Big Three affiliates.

“Independents can’t really afford to stay out of the news business,” says Janeen Bjork, vice president and director of programming for Seltey Inc. “News buys account for about one-third of the [advertising] revenue in most markets. Start-up newscasts are a slow, slow build, but it is another way that [broadcasters] can distinguish themselves from cable.”

Additionally, the growth of news blocks in the early morning has been driven by changes in the children’s TV market. With the rise of the Fox Children’s Network and cable’s Nick-Eldoon, broadcasters say the pool of children’s advertising dollars in small

Games afoot
Columbia TriStar Television Distribution has cleared its upcoming game show block, Dating/Newlywed Hour on 160 stations covering 88% of the country. CTDD officials say the younger-skewing shows have drawn interest from Big Three affiliates. New stations on board for revivals of the campy Newlywed Game and Dating Game include CBS affiliate KOMO(TV) Portland, Ore., ABC affiliate WZZM(TV) Grand Rapids, Mich., and NBC’s WVGR(TV) Buffalo, N.Y.

SeaGull ‘Showcase’
SeaGull Entertainment is said to be preparing a first-run home shopping show for a June launch. SeaGull officials could not be reached for comment, but the Celebrity Showcase Network hour strip reportedly blends home shopping pitches with entertainment news, interviews and remote broadcasts from the homes of Hollywood stars. Meanwhile, SeaGull says it has cleared its fall action-hour entry, Tarzan: The Epic Adventures, on 86 stations covering 72% of the country, including 28 of the top 30 markets.

Miss ‘Strange Universe’
No final decision has been made, but former Miss America Leanza Cornett may become more familiar with the wide world of weird news this fall as co-host of Rysher Entertainment’s news magazine Strange Universe Tonight. Cornett, a correspondent for Entertainment Tonight, and Hard Copy’s Alan Frio are the co-hosts on the presentation tape for the show, described as a humorous nightly roundup of bizarre news, tales of the paranormal, strange science and other unusual events making headlines around the globe. Rysher has cleared the half-hour strip, co-produced with the Chris Craft/United Television group, for a fall start in more than 60% of the country.

‘Oprah’ times two
ABC’s Los Angeles O&O has taken a cue from ABC’s WLS(TV) Chicago and added a second run of Oprah Winfrey in the post-Nightline slot. KABC-TV, which runs the top-rated talker at 3 p.m., began airing three-week-old repeats of Oprah at 12:05 a.m. last week. In the February sweeps, the show won its 9 a.m. and 11 p.m. time slots for WLS-TV, beating the second half-hours of network late-night warriors Jay Leno and David Letterman by wide margins.

‘Elliott’ in Wenatchee
CBS/Twentieth Television’s New York–based talk show Gordon Elliott will travel to Wenatchee, Wash., next week for a two-part interview with residents caught up in a bizarre sex ring scandal. The March 18 and 19 editions of the show will be presented in news magazine–style segments as part of an effort to keep the second-year show fresh by periodically breaking away from the traditional talk show format. Elliott will interview several of the accused ringleaders as well as the police officer who first levied the allegations against a town clergyman in 1994.

Step by Step, our FOOTPRINT IS GETTING LARGER.

Much larger. Because with the recent launch of PanAmSat's PAS-3™ satellite, we now offer expanded coverage around the world.

In addition to providing extensive coverage of Europe and Africa, PAS-3 enhances our leadership role in the booming Latin America market.

PAS-3 is also the final step in our four-satellite global system, and we plan to launch four additional satellites by the end of 1997.

What's more, our new state-of-the-art satellite will function as our platform for direct-to-home television services with 24-inch antenna reception in Latin America and Spain.

No wonder the world's leading broadcasters, telecommunications companies and businesses call PanAmSat when they need sophisticated global satellite services.

Especially when they need to make bigger footprints of their own.

and medium-size markets is drying up.

Chris Craft's KPTV (TV) Portland will replace its 6-9 a.m. kids block with news in September, a decision prompted in part by the generally poor quality of syndicated children's programming, according to program director Marvin Rhodes.

Thirteen months after it replaced an hour of children's programming with news at 7 a.m., Tribune Broadcasting's Chicago flagship WGN-TV expanded its Morning News to two hours in January.

"One of the best advantages to an extended morning news is that the format allows you to accent localism in a more casual, usually more upbeat way than you can on a straight-ahead newscast," says Peter Walker, vice president and general manager of WGN-TV.

Talent agents tap newsy niche
Local talent groomed for start-up shows

By Cynthia Littleton

The rise of local TV newscasts in any of the top 15 markets and chances are you'll see one of Ken Lindner's clients.

Lindner, a talent agent who spent five years with the William Morris Agency before opening his own shop in 1989, has carved a niche in the agent business by specializing in clients destined for jobs on news, sports, talk and magazine shows.

"There's really no other agency that handles the kind of talent [producers] need for start-up shows," says one executive with a first-run magazine strip well stocked with Lindner clients.

"Our advantage is that we try to choreograph careers," says Lindner. "It's not just about finding people jobs. We have a long-term plan for our clients."

Most of the agency's discoveries are found working in local news. Thanks to the growth of cable and first-run syndication during the past decade, the demand for on-air talent with experience in live TV has never been stronger, Lindner says.

The changing TV landscape also has more rising stars taking nontraditional paths to network platforms. Ken Taylor came to his job as co-host of NBC's upcoming daytime magazine strip, Real Life, by way of stints at E! Entertainment Television, VH1 and eventually an anchor spot on WNBC-TV New York.

The lines between network and syndication will blur this fall for another Lindner client, NBC News's Giselle Fernandez. Fernandez will co-host the new first-run magazine strip Access Hollywood, co-produced by NBC, but she also will continue to contribute to Dateline NBC, Today and the network's nightly newscast.

"Most of what we do for our clients boils down to steering them into the right job and the right vehicle at the right time," says Babette Perry, Lindner's executive vice president of programming. "We don't try to create stars: these people already have the talent when they walk in our door."

Uncle Sam wants you

The Army's Audio Visual division is looking for a few good stations.

Major John Loughlin of the Maryland National Guard, whose other hat (the one without the braid) is vice president for news and public affairs of The Military Channel cable network, is heading a program to supply audio and video of soldiers stationed in Hungary and Bosnia (for Operation Joint Enavendor) free to radio and TV stations.

The footage, including a packaged piece, raw interviews and B-roll, focuses on the daily lives of individual soldiers such as Specialist Ralph Bowen from Orlando, Fla. (pictured above). The stories are being targeted for use in localized feature pieces in newscasts. Loughlin says the division also will follow up on station requests for footage of particular soldiers. For example, wmbc-tv Peoria, Ill., has interviewed the family of a hometown man serving in the Navy in Bosnia and has contacted Loughlin about getting some interview footage of him.

Although there is obvious promotional value for the Army in profiling soldiers, Loughlin points out that the footage is being supplied not only as prepackaged stories but as components to be used as the station sees fit, from a complete feature to "truck rolling" clips to illustrate news stories about the operation.

The audio and video are being produced by 17-person National Guard and reserve units that include a number of broadcast professionals called up, as was Loughlin, for service during the operation.

Stations wanting more information can contact Major Loughlin by fax at 011-49-6221-57-6376.

Ratings slump continues for network radio

Survey shows audiences dwindle for variety of network formats

By Donna Petrozzello

For the second consecutive survey period, network radio listenership declined on average across all age groups and national markets, according to the latest RADAR 52 report.

RADAR 52, compiled by Statistical Research Inc. of Westfield, N.J., measured network radio audience shares from April 1995 to October 1995. SRI research found that network radio listening overall declined by 3.1% among listeners 12 and older, by 1.6% among listeners ages 25-54 and by 8.3% among listeners 18-49. By comparison, the RADAR 51 survey last spring found network audience shares down an average 4.2%.

Among the industry’s 14 radio networks, nine reported a loss in audience share among listeners 12-plus, but five networks reported gains in 12-plus listeners over spring 1995. Each of the five networks with larger 12-plus audiences in RADAR 52 was adult-oriented.

Specifically, ABC Radio’s Platinum, Prime and Galaxy networks, all aimed at adults, showed an increase in 12-plus audience share. Likewise, both the American Urban Radio Network and the CBS Radio Network showed a larger 12-plus audience share in RADAR 52 over last spring.

However, 12-plus audience share dropped for all Westwood One Radio networks, including adult-oriented CNN+, Variety network and the Westwood One Country network.

And although networks featuring a young-adult format were the only ones to show audience-share increases in RADAR 51, listenership for all four young-adult networks fell in RADAR 52. Westwood One’s young-adult-oriented Source network was hit particularly hard, suffering a 22.6% loss of 12-plus audience in RADAR 52 from RADAR 51.

Likewise, Westwood One’s Young Adult network lost 8.8% of its 12-plus audience, according to RADAR 52. By comparison, ABC’s young-adult Genesis and Excel networks lost .9% and 7.2% of their 12-plus audience share, respectively, in RADAR 52.

Bill McClenaghan, ABC Radio Networks’ senior vice president of research and development, said lower audience shares for the young-adult networks may be the result of fewer station affiliates.

Despite lackluster ratings overall for network radio, some networks improved their ratings. ABC’s Galaxy network topped the list, gaining 10.6% audience share of listeners 12-plus, and American Urban Radio Networks earned an 8.9% larger 12-plus audience in RADAR 52 over last spring’s results.

Other networks showed smaller, yet significant, audience boosts. The CBS Radio Network improved its 12-plus share by 5.6%; ABC’s Platinum network 12-plus audience grew by 3.9%, and ABC’s Prime network 12-plus audience grew by .8%.

In the 25-54 demographic, ABC’s Galaxy showed the most improvement by gaining a 12.4% larger audience share in RADAR 52 over last spring. ABC’s Genesis, Prime and Platinum networks also increased audience share among listeners 25-54. Only ABC’s Excel network lost audience share in the 25-54 age group, dropping by 9.5% in RADAR 52 from RADAR 51 results.

All five Westwood One networks lost audience ages 25-54 in the latest RADAR, with Westwood One’s Country network suffering the most significant (23.2%) audience loss among listeners 25-54. The 25-54 audience shares for both CBS Radio networks—CBS Spectrum and CBS Radio—dropped in RADAR 52 by 11.1% and 3.3%, respectively.

In McClenaghan’s research of the RADAR 52 survey, he ranked ABC’s Prime network first, with an estimated weekly audience of 3.6 million listeners 12-plus. Westwood One’s Source network ranked last, with an estimated weekly audience of 716,000, McClenaghan said.

In addition, ABC News veteran commentator Paul Harvey remains the most listened-to personality in network radio. McClenaghan noted, with an estimated 5.3 million people tuning in to his daily newscasts.

Ad revenue totals $11.4 billion for 1995
Radio generated 7% more advertising revenue in 1995 than in 1994 from combined local, national and network advertisers, according to a report compiled by the Radio Advertising Bureau. A recent RAB report places total radio revenue at $11.47 billion for 1995, up from the $10.65 billion generated in 1994. Advertisers invested most heavily in local spots: local revenue totaled $9.1 billion last year. National ad revenue totaled $1.9 billion and network revenue totaled $426.3 million for the year, the report states.

Westwood One acquires Shadow
Westwood One Inc. has announced the acquisition of Shadow Broadcast Services operations in New York, Los Angeles, Philadelphia and Chicago and has an option to acquire Shadow services in other cities. Shadow provides regional traffic, weather, sports news and general news to approximately 250 radio and TV stations in nine cities. Westwood One officials did not reveal the purchase price.

ABC debuts modern-rock format
ABC Radio Networks plans to debut "MR-35," a 24-hour modern-rock-based format designed for "thirtysomething" alternative rock listeners, network officials say. ABC Senior Vice President of Programming Robert Hall says MR-35 blends rock artists popular in the late 1970s with current adult alternative artists. Ted Bolton of Bolton Research helped ABC develop the format. MR-35 is the first 24-hour format that ABC has unveiled since 1993, when it launched "Urban Gold," network officials say. MR-35 is scheduled to debut March 25.

Dahl quits WMVP(AM) Chicago
Citing dissatisfaction with station managers at Evergreen Media Corp.'s sports/talk WMVP(AM) Chicago, morning show host Steve Dahl has quit his airshift after 18 years in the market. In a statement, Dahl said his "presence at WMVP was always a fluke and a struggle. In a two-day span in 1993, I was transformed from an FM staple to an AM exile." Dahl criticized management for moving him from talk WLUP-FM to WMVP, a station whose "financial focus" is "not the air talent" but sports programming. Dahl said he also said that WMVP's AM signal presented "multiple obstacles" in broadcasting his show and selling it to advertisers. WMVP official Doug Stern said that the station had "philosophical differences" with Dahl, but was disappointed at his resignation.

Evergreen adds O'Keefe
Evergreen Media Corp. has named Kenneth O'Keefe to the new position of executive vice president of operations. O'Keefe, formerly executive vice president and chief fiscal officer of Pyramid Communications, becomes the first executive principally hired to oversee station management and development of Evergreen's expanded 34-station group.

Prudential rates Children's Broadcasting Corp. a buy
Prudential Securities investments initiated coverage of the Children's Broadcasting Corp. with a positive recommendation on its stock. Minneapolis-based CBC syndicates the 24-hour children's radio format "Radio Aahs" to more than two dozen stations nationwide and recently signed New York-area affiliate WJDM(AM) Elizabeth, N.J.
Among its reasons for rating CBC stock a "buy," Prudential noted CBC's partnership with ABC Radio Networks in marketing and sales efforts and CBC’s recent secondary stock offering that raised almost $20 million for the broadcaster. Prudential anticipates that CBC’s annual revenue will reach $12 million by the end of 1996 and $18 million in 1997. Also, Prudential estimates that CBC will generate $4 million in positive broadcast cash flow by the end of 1997.

STATION TRADING 1995

$8 billion bull loose in station market

For third year, TV and radio stations change hands in greater numbers for higher prices

By Elizabeth Rathbun

With plans for federal deregulation fueling the market, station sales skyrocketed in 1995. Brokers and owners say it was one of their best years ever, if not the best. During the $8 billion-plus year, 67% more dollars changed hands than in 1994, according to figures reported in Broadcasting & Cable.

And this year is revving up to be even better. With deregulation now law and the presidential election and summer Olympics on tap, brokers expect to top their 1995 records in 1996.

“Ninety-five was equal to the best year I ever had, and ’96 is going to be the best year ever,” says Gary Stevens, managing director, Gary Stevens & Co. Inc., New Canaan, Conn.

After a record 1995, this year is shaping up to be “probably the best year I’ll have in my life,” echoes Richard A. Foreman, president, Richard A. Foreman Associates, Stamford, Conn. “People are really tuned on about the broadcast industry.”

For Media Venture Partners, 1995 was “clearly one of the very best [years] ever. No question about it,” says managing partner Brian Cobb of McLean, Va. With deregulation, “we could have a blockbuster year again [in 1996],” or perhaps do even better, he says.

In the boom year of 1995, agreements were reported for sales worth a total $8.324 billion, 67.4% more than 1994’s $4.97 billion. This high number also marks the third year of increasing station trading since the recession ended in 1992. TV deals showed the biggest increase in 1995, rising more than 115% over 1994.

Meanwhile, although the dollars exchanged for standalone radio stations were down, the market for AM-FM “combos” rose 55%, from $1.8 billion to $2.79 billion (see chart, above). These reported figures might have been even higher, brokers say, except the federal government shut down for about three weeks late last year. As a result, “a lot of deals didn’t close in December,” Cobb says. Some would-be dealers also waited to see if capital-gains taxes would be lowered, he says, an issue that has not yet been resolved.

The figures also would be higher if they included the year’s mega-mergers—Walt Disney Co. and Capital Cities/ABC; Westinghouse Electric Corp. and CBS; and Gannett Co. Inc. and Multimedia. But because these deals involved substantial non-station assets, station prices were not broken out.

Year of the group

Even without counting history’s biggest mergers, 1995 clearly was the year of the group, particularly in radio.

Deregulation is the reason, brokers and owners agree. The new law—expected to be implemented shortly by the FCC—lifts radio’s national ownership limits and relaxes its local ownership caps. Now, in a market with 45 or more commercial radio stations, a broadcaster may own eight stations; in markets with 30-44 stations, a broadcaster may own seven; in markets with 15-29, six; in markets with 14 or fewer stations, five. But no one may own more than half the stations in a market.

deregulation of TV-newspaper crossownership and duopoly rules. Instead, those issues will be considered by the FCC. Meanwhile, owners have to settle for elimination of the 12-station national ownership cap and a change in the coverage limit from 25% of the nation’s homes to 35%.

Although President Clinton didn’t sign the deregulation bill into law until Feb. 8, radio deals in particular were made in 1995 in anticipation of the changes, brokers say. Television deals are “just now starting to come out of the woodwork because deregulation [for that medium] was so iff,” says TV broker Ted Hepburn of Ted Hepburn Co., Palm Beach, Fla.

TV prices multiply

Even with that uncertainty, not only did more TV stations sell in 1995 than in 1994, but they went for higher cash-flow multiples. Cash flow reflects operating income before expenses, depreciation and amortization.

“Pent-up demand pushed [ed multiples] to the limit” in 1995, Hepburn says. While multiples fell during the recession, they have returned to “more normal...some say unreasonable” levels, Hepburn says.

One of the more seemingly “unreasonable” multiples was seen when Tribune Broadcasting Co. paid nearly 30 times cash flow for WB Network affiliate KTTY-TV San Diego, channel 39. WB investor Tribune and competitor UPN Network co-parent United Television bid the price up to $70.5 million at an auction last August.

Just a few weeks before the KTTY-TV auction, the highest price ever for a UHF was recorded: ITT Corp. and Dow Jones & Co. paid $207 million for noncommercial WNYC-TV New York, channel 31.

High prices indicate a strategic buy aimed at developing a specific property, says Steven Pruett, senior vice president, Communications Equity Associates Inc., New York. “Nobody has been doing crazy, whacked-out deals.”

But Cobb characterizes as “very steep” the year’s routine multiples of 11-12 times cash flow, compared with the 9-10 times cash flow that TV stations traditionally have pulled. He expects these high multiples to continue as long as TV stations are in such demand.

And why the demand for TV stations? In one word: revenue. An enter-prise that makes money is attractive to investors. Advertising “still drives our business,” Cobb says. And TV advertising had a good year in 1995. In fact, all forms of broadcast TV revenue rose 3% in 1995, to $27.9 billion, according to the Television Bureau of Advertising (Broadcasting & Cable, March 4).

That 3% sounds modest, but revenue had posted an astounding 15% increase in 1994. With political and Olympics spending slated for this year, TVB’s outlook is for accelerated revenue growth in 1996 compared with 1995, but below 1994’s pace.

TV stations were so attractive that companies content simply to be owners for a decade or longer jumped back into the market. Allbritton Communications Co. broke a 12-year dry spell, paying more than 13 times cash flow for WHTM-TV Harrisburg, Pa. Hearst Corp. and Freedom Communications also joined the fray, buying TV stations on Florida’s west and east coast.

Station sales slowed in the fourth quarter of the year, however, as the reality of TV deregulation hit and as station revenue softened, Pruett says.

But there are high hopes that the FCC will allow TV duopolies by the end of the year, perhaps with a rule that would allow an owner to have one VHF and one UHF in the same market, says Fred Kaill, vice president, Kaill & Co., Inc., Tucson. “I think it’s inevitable. You can just see it [coming] with LMAs [and] joint sales [agreements].”

Radio renaissance

Meanwhile, 1995 was the year of “the largest group of radio transactions in the history of the world,” says Evergreen Media Corp. Chairman/CEO Scott Ginsburg. “Consolidation was perhaps more rapid than anybody could have guessed.”

“Radio had a tremendous renaissance in ’95,” Foreman says. “That’s where the consolidation game is really being played,” adds Paul Leonard, managing director, Star Media Group, Dallas. “[Nineteen ninety-five] was really a sort of euphoric 12-month period, and that’s unusual in any business.”

The biggest radio deal of the year also is the third-largest broadcasting deal of the year (see chart, page 42). Chancellor Broadcasting Co.’s $395 million purchase of Shamrock Broadcasting Inc. more than doubled Chancellor’s holdings, from 14 stations to 33.

“Nine-fifty was a very good year to be buying radio stations,” says Chancellor President/CEO Steven Dinetz. “Today, they’re much more expensive.” Pending deregulation was an important factor in Chancellor’s plans, he says.

Evergreen also kept its eye on telecommunications reform. “With all the uncertainty of where [federal telecommunications] legislation was going...you had to place your bets early,” Ginsburg says. So Evergreen placed its bets early and often.

In July, the company agreed to pay $306.5 million for Pyramid Communications Inc.’s 12 stations. In an earlier deal worth $243 million, Evergreen bought Broadcasting Partners Inc.’s 11 stations. In about eight months, Evergreen’s holdings increased 236.4%, from 11 stations to 37.

The company now is the nation’s third-largest in billings, behind Westinghouse’s Group W/CBS and Infinity Broadcasting Corp., Ginsburg says.

He attributes the singular year to the “natural growth rate” of the medium, and advertisers’ moves from newspaper to radio advertising. Radio, Ginsburg says, “is the perfect way to reach consumers,” particularly as more of them move to urban areas and spend more time commuting.

‘Duopoly lit fuse’

Radio’s upturn dates to 1992, when the FCC first allowed duopolies—or “deregulation with training wheels,” as Leonard puts it. For the first time, someone could own or control two overlapping FM or two overlapping AMs in one market. “Duopoly certainly lit the fuse” for trading in 1995, Stevens says.

Anticipation of further deregulation accounted for a slew of sales in the last half of the year, Stevens says. “This is a major shift in the entire ownership structure of the industry,” he says of deregulation. When radio groups were limited to owning no more than 20 AMs and 20 FMs, “where’s the growth in that?” And without growth, where are the investors?

But actual and anticipated growth in 1995 made for a plentiful money supply, from banks as well as equity investors. “People are tired of 4% yields in money markets,” and the stock market’s too expensive, Foreman says. “They’re looking to put their money in other solid investments,” like... radio groups. The industry saw a solid 7% gain in local and national revenue last year, according to the Radio Advertising Bureau.

Duopolies also paved the way for last year’s strategic deals by proving that consolidation saves an owner money, Cobb says. Unproven is whether that holds true with the ownership of four or five stations in one market, he says.

Bigger looks better
The bigger, the better, Chancellor thinks. Owning “multiple stations in a market [gives radio operators] greater knowledge of, and control over, the radio advertising environment in that market," a recent company prospectus says. Also, administrative, engineering and management costs can be consolidated.

"You can get as big as your management expertise or potential is," Dinetz says. And the sky’s the limit, he says: "We’ve got a long way to go in terms of consolidation" in the radio industry.

But that consolidation will continue at the expense of single-station or small-group owners, brokers agree. "I regret that [the radio business] is getting more institutionalized," Stevens says. Small owners are simply "out of luck."

"It is sort of sad seeing the passing of the entrepreneur," Leonard agrees. But that was bound to happen as the industry matured, he says.

Instead, look for big owners—TV and radio—io get huge. Expect "major consolidation [to continue] for the next three to five years almost unabated,"

Pruett says.

This already is well under way. Witness the mergers just last week of Infinity and Granum Holdings LP, and Clear Channel Communications Inc. and US Radio Inc. (see story, "Top of the Week"). Brokers also are keeping their eyes on the Big Three networks as well as American Radio Systems Corp., Disney, Paxson Communications Corp., Tribune Co. and Sinclair Broadcast Group.

The busiest markets will continue to be the large and medium-size markets, brokers say. Owners of midsize-market stations must be thinking, "The world is at my doorstep right now," Pruett says.

Prices will increase in medium-sized markets as fewer stations are available in the large markets, where "the prices are way out of kilter," Foremand say.

Small markets are a different animal, the brokers say. "It's a very specialized business," Stevens says, one what was unaddressed by deregulation.

Cobb foresees fewer transactions and lower prices in 1997, when election and Olympics advertising disappears. That will show up later this year when "people will start worrying about what's happening in '97 and approach deals more cautiously, he says.

Leonard expects 1997 to be just as strong as the record-setting 1996 he anticipates. However, he admits, "mathematically, that will have to slow down at some point in the future... We cannot have strong double-digit growth in this industry every year. It's not natural."

AT&T may call on cable

Telco giant plans to offer local telephone service; could include buying access from cable operators

By Rich Brown

AT&T could wind up courting cable system operators as the telco giant embarks on its ambitious plan to enter the local telephone business.

AT&T Chairman Robert Allen says the company eventually may team with cable and wireless cable system operators in its plan to offer customers local phone service in all 50 states. It is one of a handful of options that include teaming with regional Bell operating companies; teaming with alternate access companies, and building new AT&T facilities.

AT&T executives say the RBOCs now provide the most economical and fastest way for AT&T to get into the local phone business. Talks already have begun with Ameritech, Bell Atlantic and Nynex, and meetings are scheduled with the remaining telcos during the next two weeks.

The telco also has been busy negotiating with alternate access providers and has signed deals with 20 as-yet-unnamed companies. It has even begun work on the construction of its own local phone service facilities at undisclosed locations.

So far, AT&T executives are not reporting any progress with cable system operators. They say their most likely course of action with cable systems would be to buy access from operators to carry out their local phone strategy. AT&T now has no plans to acquire any cable systems, according to a spokesperson. (AT&T was rumored to be eyeing a stake in cable system giant Time Warner late last year.)

Multiple system cable operators eager to get into the telephony business but reluctant to spend the research and development dollars could find an AT&T partnership attractive.

"I’m obviously going to put together a business plan that takes the most risk out of it that I can take out of it," says Barry Babcock, chairman, Charter Communications, a St. Louis-based MSO serving about 1 million subscribers in 17 states. "If part of that process of removing risk is to include in my business plan some relationship with AT&T, sure I would consider it."

AT&T last week completed filings at state commissions in all 50 states seeking permission to offer local phone service. The company received the federal go-ahead to expand from its long-distance and cellular businesses with last month’s passage of the Telecommunications Act.

AT&T so far has received certification to provide local telephone service in 14 states (California, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Massachusetts, Maryland, Michigan, Montana, New York, Tennessee, Washington, Wisconsin and Wyoming). Company executives hope to enter the $90 billion local telephone market as early as this summer.

Ironically, AT&T is considering possible partnerships with cable operators at the same time that it is working with the rival direct broadcast satellite business. The company earlier this year struck a marketing deal with DIRECTV calling for the telco to invest $137.5 million in the growing DBS company. AT&T plans to use its considerable marketing muscle to promote the service in exchange for an equity stake in the company.

Heim to leave Nostalgia

Surprise exit has some operators scratching their heads

By Rich Brown

Cable veteran Jack Heim is exiting his post as Nostalgia Television president less than two years after coming onboard to try to fix the troubled cable network.

His departure marks the latest turmoil at Nostalgia, which launched 11 years ago as an entertainment network targeting the age-50 plus market. Heim’s surprise exit leaves some cable system operators wondering where the network is heading.

"I honestly don’t know what we’re going to do going forward, given the change of events," says Lynn Buening, vice president of programming, Falcon Cable, which carries Nostalgia on a limited basis. "We’re in a wait-and-see mode to see what the change will be from this."

Another cable system executive joined by the move is Mike Eagen, executive vice president of Liberty, N.Y.-based Renaissance Media Partners, which does not now carry the network.

"It’s disappointing for me to see Jack leave because I have great admiration for him, and he brought a credibility and a personality to the network that it had lacked."

Heim joined Nostalgia in July 1994 after a 14-year run with Showtime and The Movie Channel. At the time, Nostalgia was trying to get back on its feet following a messy ownership battle and the loss of more than 1 million subscribers in New York City and elsewhere. The network also was trying to allay fears that members of the controversial Unification Church held a stake in the publicly traded company. Board members include Dong Moon Joo of Concept Communications, Josette Shiner of the Washington Times and Board Chairman Ambassador Phillip Sanchez of newspaper Noticias Del Mundo. It has been widely reported that all three of those companies have ties to the Moon organization.

Heim says he spent 70%-80% of his time at Nostalgia on the road talking up the service to cable system operators. He says that while some operators have dropped the network, others have signed on in recent months, including systems owned by Tele-Communications Inc., Comcast and Bresnan. Distribution of the network on cable and wireless cable systems has held steady during the past year, at 8.9 million subscribers, he says.

“We’re at the point where the launches have matched our drops,” Heim says.

Nostalgia’s internal figures do not match those of Nielsen, which show the network with a steady decline and a current subscriber base of 7.6 million subscribers. Heim says Nielsen’s numbers do not include, for instance, institutional distribution or offshore distribution in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

Heim is particularly pleased that the network during his tenure has seen its prime time ratings climb from hash marks to 0.5. Last spring he announced a four-year, $20 million plan to drop infomercials from the daytime lineup and introduce more original programing throughout the schedule.

The network in the past year has added such original series as Issues and Answers with Ron Nessen to a lineup that traditionally emphasized off-network classics like Love Boat. Heim says that more original programing is expected to join Nostalgia’s lineup within the next 60-90 days.

Nostalgia’s increased investment in programming and marketing has taken its toll on the company’s bottom line, says Heim. Nostalgia’s stock price is now in the 37 cent range, but had been trading closer to $1 per share last summer.

“We don’t have the earnings yet to drive the stock, but the things we’re doing will ultimately result in that,” says Heim.

Heim will remain in his post until June 30 and then possibly continue in an advisory capacity at the company. He will relinquish his seat on the board of directors when he leaves the president post.

“I’ve got enough assets put aside to take it easy, and that’s what I want to do,” says Heim. “I’ve had a couple of friends recently either die or come close. I feel like I don’t get time back, and I want to use it. We all have to think that way at some point.”

Liberty to offer Dow Jones network

Business service to go to Manhattan MMDS customers at no charge for ‘sampling’

By Jim McConville

Dow Jones & Co. has paired with MMDS operator Liberty Cable in New York to offer the Dow Jones Investor Network (DJIN) to commercial and residential locations in Manhattan.

DJIN, a 12-hour premium business service for institutional customers, is now available at no charge to Liberty Cable’s estimated 32,000 subscribers in New York City.

Liberty also provides DJIN to commercial locations, such as the World Trade Center, and may offer the network to some New York hotels for traveling corporate executives.

Liberty President Peter O. Price says, “It’s more of a sampling device, so if a business person really gets intrigued with it they can go into the office and order this premium channel for their business cable lineup.”

Liberty taps into commercial locations that Dow Jones cannot reach. "Liberty is an efficient way to deliver the Dow Jones Investor signal into those buildings," says Simon Langdon, director of business operations for DJIN. "The fact that they go to some residential areas is more of a bonus for us, but we’re not too sure our content has a real [consumer] audience."

It has not been determined how long Liberty subscribers will receive DJIN free. "We have to find out what the response is," says Price.

Dow Jones says DJIN will not be used as a replacement for the company’s proposed business news and entertainment channel, WBIS+, scheduled to roll out later this year, pending FCC approval.

“We have no plans whatsoever to use DJIN in lieu of the content stream we’re developing for WBIS+,” says Martin Shanker, managing editor of DJIN. “We see these as distinct, yet complementary, products. WBIS+ is obviously seeking a broad audience, whereas DJIN is a specialized niche product for a high-end customer.”

Shanker says that DJIN programming may “find its way onto WBIS on occasion, but [it] will still be a distinct product.” He says that WBIS+, like DJIN, will use the editorial resources of Dow Jones’s Wall Street Journal.

The network in the past year has added such original series as Issues and Answers with Ron Nessen to a lineup that traditionally emphasized off-network classics like Love Boat. Heim says that more original programing is expected to join Nostalgia’s lineup within the next 60-90 days.

Nostalgia’s increased investment in programming and marketing has taken its toll on the company’s bottom line, says Heim. Nostalgia’s stock price is now in the 37 cent range, but had been trading closer to $1 per share last summer.

Cable attracts political ad dollars

Medium proves to be efficient and affordable alternative to broadcast television

By Michael Katz

Two important keys to campaign advertising are saving money and targeting an audience. For this reason, political candidates this year are spending more of their advertising budgets buying time on cable.

"I think cable is becoming more a player in campaign politics," says Bruce Mentzer, president of Mentzer Media Services, a political research and consulting firm. "It is a good and affordable alternative to broadcast advertising."

Cable advertising is an efficient choice for political advertising because of its ability to target geographic areas and demographic groups. "Clearly, it is a more efficient and effective outlet for a state senate or district race that includes only certain counties, while a TV station would cover a whole area and be wasteful," says Mentzer. "Also, if candidates want to reach females, they'll put spots on USA or Lifetime, and they can reach activists or opinion leaders through CNN, CNBC or Headline News."

Robin Roberts, president of National Media Inc., a political media services group working with campaigns for 20 years, also likes to use cable to target specific groups. "We like to look at cable as direct mail that comes through your television sets," says Roberts. "More candidates are using cable, and the systems are making it easier to use."

In 1994 Mentzer's organization handled more than 20 campaigns nationwide spending 10%-15% of his $9 million advertising budget on cable. He expects that number to grow during the 1996 campaign cycle. In previous campaigns, Mentzer put less than 5% of his clients' ad budget in cable. "In the mid- to late '80s, I had to talk clients into using cable," says Mentzer. "But now some clients even prefer using cable to broadcast."

Broadcasters' change in attitude toward political candidates has also forced many campaigns to switch from broadcast advertising to cable advertising. "A lot of major broadcasters are limiting access to non-federal candidates and this has increased a lot in the last two election cycles," says Mentzer. "I would anticipate with this trend that cable's share of the political media pie is going to get larger."

Other factors attracting candidates to cable are increased penetration, upgraded equipment and the advent of the cable news channel. "Most big systems have the technology and hardware now to make more immediate changes to get an ad spot on quicker and off quicker," says Roberts. "That has been one of the biggest improvements in cable."

Cable news channels, such as News 12 in Long Island, N.Y., have brought in substantial campaign ad dollars during the Republican presidential campaign. Steve Forbes bought $40,000 worth of ads, and Bob Dole has plunked down $10,000 on the channel for the New York primary. "This is the first time News 12 has been part of the presidential candidates' media strategy," says Robert Sullivan, director of sales for News 12, which reaches 700,000 households. "Increasingly, candidates are tapping into the strength of cable advertising."

Forbes also spent a total $36,000 on cable channels NY 1 and CNN in New York, and Dole spent another $17,000 on ads targeting Time Warner cable viewers in Brooklyn and Queens.

Cable giant TCI also is playing a role in this year's elections with its production Race for the Presidency, which offers candidates free airtime to deliver their messages. Throughout the primaries, each presidential candidate will be able to air a 2 1/2-minute tape on the weekly show.

Showtime adds Phoenix feather to cap

Looking to boost its stable of film product, Viacom-owned Showtime Networks has bought an 11% stake (roughly $11 million) in the newly formed Phoenix Pictures—the first time the network has taken a financial stake in a film company.

Showtime's investment is in preferred stock of Phoenix, which was formed by Mike Medavoy and Arnold Messer and was based at Sony Pictures Entertainment. Showtime also has signed a seven-year licensing deal with Phoenix valued at $200 million.

The deal will give the cable network approximately 40 films between now and the end of 2002. The deal also gives Showtime two seats on Phoenix's board of directors that will be occupied by Showtime President Matt Blank and network programing president Jerry Offsay. Canadian-based investment firm Altamura also has taken a 7.5% stake in the company. Showtime and Altamura joint Sony Pictures Entertainment, Pearson Television and Onex Corp., which share equal stakes in the balance of ownership.

DBS heavies up service

AT SBCA convention, companies add programs, partners and promos to boost sub counts

By Jim McConville

Direct broadcast satellite companies jockeying for better position in the business used last week’s Satellite Broadcasting and Communications Association convention in Las Vegas to unveil plans to bolster programing packages, sign new distribution partners and roll out promotional incentives, all aimed at building their subscriber bases.

With viewer attitudes toward Major League Baseball (MLB) likely more amicable than they were, DBS companies DIRECTV and Primestar will add “MLB Extra Innings” this month. The package, which consists of 1,000 out-of-market baseball games, will sell for $119 before April 15 and $139 thereafter. DIRECTV and Primestar will market the service with ESPN, which controls out-of-market TV rights as part of its deal with MLB.

- Newcomer AlphaStar Digital Television, slated to launch in early April, will add TV Land, Nickelodeon’s 24-hour classic TV network scheduled to launch April 29, to its programing roster. AlphaStar has signed marketing agreements with Professional Farmers of America to offer its PFA’s “Globalink” market data and information (futures and options price quotes) as part of its DBS service.
- DIRECTV will offer pay-per-view promotional incentives to customers who purchase a DBS dish and sign up for DIRECTV’s “Total Choice” program package. Subscribers who sign up between March 21 and May 7 can receive up to $100 worth of free DBS PPV movies in 1996.
- Primestar has added 7,000 retail outlets for its leased DBS satellite service by signing a deal last week with electronics retailer Radio Shack. Retailers will sell Primestar lease contracts for its DBS and C-band satellite products and programing packages starting in the second quarter. Radio Shack also will offer Primestar program packages ranging from $19.95-$54.95 and offer DBS installation for $199.
- Primestar will expand cable shopping network QVC to 24 hours and will expand its Playboy Channel PPV schedule by two hours. Primestar also will reorganize its programing packages in anticipation of adding 50 more channels to its current 95 by year’s end. The first new package—PrimeValue, a basic tier of 38 channels—will be available April 1.
- United States Satellite Broadcasting has signed an agreement with On Command Video and Heifner Communications to provide additional hotels and motels with its DBS programing service. USSB now provides its DBS feed of HBO or Showtime to some 120 commercial properties through an existing agreement with On Command Video. USSB says a similar agreement with Heifner Communications will become effective shortly.

TNT takes no prisoners

Heavily promoted TNT original miniseries Andersonville averaged a 6.5 rating (4.4 million homes) during its March 3-4 debut, according to A.C. Nielsen data supplied by the network. The four-hour two-parter scored a 6.7 rating during its initial two-hour presentation (8-10 p.m. ET), second only to TNT’s 1994 Civil War saga, Gettysburg, as the most-watched original movie in TNT’s history.

Andersonville, directed by John Frankenheimer and based on a true story about a Confederate prisoner-of-war camp, also ranked as the number-one basic cable program for the week of Feb. 26–March 3 (see chart, page 72).

Wrestling awards

USA on March 30 will present the World Wrestling Federation’s Slammy Awards live from the Anaheim Marriott Hotel at 11 p.m.-1 a.m. ET.

Lifetime shifts gears

Lifetime Television says it is business as usual for proposed reality series Telling Secrets, tentatively scheduled to start airing in the fourth quarter. However, the show will be without original producer Henry Winkler, who will be replaced because his production group and Lifetime reportedly did not see eye-to-eye on program content. The network, now reviewing sample story pitches from producers, says it likely will choose a successor by the end of this month.

Mush!
Outdoor Life Network is providing daily coverage of the 1996 Iditarod sled dog race. Coverage includes daily reports from the 1,049-mile trail that serves as the raceway for more than 50 sled teams racing from Anchorage to Nome and “Iditarod Reports” nightly at 11 p.m. from March 2 to 12. In other Outdoor news, The Ecology Channel (TEC), the yet-to-be-launched environmental channel, has signed two production deals with Outdoor Life. TEC has begun production on a series called EcoView, a weekly hour showcasing ecology and conservation issues that will debut in April. Outdoor Life, which launched last August, also has signed for TEC’s The Good Green Earth for weekly airing, also starting in April.

QVC’s new commercials
Cable shopping network QVC will roll out a set of 30-second commercial TV spots called “QChecks,” which feature such celebrities as Paula Abdul, Susan Lucci, Isaac Hayes and Louie Anderson. The spots are part of a national marketing campaign, scheduled to roll out in 1996.

Discovery launches Portuguese network
Discovery Communications will launch Discovery Channel Brazil, a 24-hour all-Portuguese cable channel April 1. The new service, independent from Discovery’s current Latin America feed, will offer Portuguese-language feeds of Discovery programs including Beyond 2000. Next Step and Wings.

CATA elects officers
The Cable Telecommunications Association has elected to its board of directors Daniel Gold, president, Century Communications Corp., and Frank K. Initiso, president and COO of Marcus Cable, Dallas.

HBO’s night of boxing
HBO Sports will televise Night of the Young Heavyweights live from the Atlantic City Convention Center at 9 p.m. March 15. The fight card will include David Tua vs. John Ruiz, Shannon Briggs vs. Darroll Wilson and Andrew Golota vs. Dannelle Nicholson.

Primestar donates more to Red Cross
DBS programer Primestar will donate an additional $250,000 to the American Red Cross 1996 Community Campaign. The campaign for community awareness will include specially created Red Cross commercials tagged with the Primestar logo that will air on ABC and Fox networks, The Family Channel, The Lifetime Channel and The Weather Channel. Primestar donated $1 million to the Red Cross in January.

Nickelodeon in print
Viacom sister companies Nickelodeon and publisher Simon & Schuster will introduce a line of books for preschoolers based on cable network Nickelodeon. Approximately 1.5 million copies of the “Nick, Jr.” line of books has started being shipped to bookstore chains. The companies will publish 34 titles for the series in 1996.

Tyson/Bruno fight on USSB
DBS programer United States Satellite Broadcasting (USSB) will carry the Showtime Event Television telecast of the World Boxing Council heavyweight championship bout between Mike Tyson and Frank Bruno scheduled for March 16 at MGM Grand Hotel in Las Vegas. USSB will offer the fight for $39.95 to subscribers who order using remote and $49.95 for those who order by phone.

Faith & Values builds viewer congregation
Religious cable network Faith & Values reported it increased its viewing audience in January by 163%, raising its average household audience from 8,000 to 21,000 viewers. The network also achieved a reportable average audience (0.1 or higher) for every Monday-Sunday daypart monitored.

HBO Asia has clinched a multiyear agreement with Buena Vista International Television, the television distribution arm of Walt Disney Co. The deal is for exclusive pay-TV rights to up to 30 first-run movies yearly from two Disney labels: Touchstone Pictures and Hollywood Pictures.

Word has it that U.S.-owned MSOs Nynex Corp. and TeleWest Communications are poised to merge their British cable operations.

TeleWest last June bought SBC Cablecomms, Britain's fifth-largest cable operator. If the deal moves forward, the two leading British MSOs would control more than 50% of the cable market. However, TV regulator Independent Television Commission has the power to prevent any deal that takes a single company into more than 25% of UK TV homes. According to the latest figures from the ITC, TeleWest has passed 2,050,210 homes and Nynex 994,917. Nynex Cablecomms is capitalized at some £817 million ($1.26 billion) and TeleWest at £1.2 billion.

Nynex Cablecomms saw its 1995 operating profit before depreciation and amortization charges fall to £46.7 million from £71.9 million. Churn among cable television subscribers fell to 29.4% in 1995 from 31.1% in 1994, while revenue grew 107%, to £85 million.

British Sky Broadcasting is paying $270 million for a 25% stake in Première, a German pay-television channel with 1.1 million satellite and cable subscribers. Other owners include Bertelsmann, Kirch Group and Canal+.

In Australia, Rupert Murdoch's Telstra pay-TV venture, Foxtel, and Australis Media have reportedly called off their A$700 million ($533 million) merger because their latest proposal is unlikely to be accepted by the Australian Competition and Consumer Commission.

The proposed merger would reduce the number of pay-TV operators in Australia from three to two and would combine Australis's microwave and satellite services with Foxtel's cable pay-TV services.

NetHold-owned satellite TV operator MultiChoice is launching a DTH digital TV package of at least 12 channels in the Middle East in second quarter 1996. Via-com reportedly will offer three or four channels, including M7V Europe, VH1 and a movie channel. Channels will be uplinked from Italy and beamed direct from PanAmSat's PAS-4 satellite.

French media group Havas will acquire a 25% stake in pay-TV service Canal+'s audiovisual rights arm, Canal+ DA. Meanwhile, Canal+ will raise its stake in the film production company Le Studio Canal+ from 60% to 100%. Havas was a founding member of Le Studio in 1990, taking a 25% stake alongside Canal+ (60%), Societe Generale (10%) and BNP (5%).

Dutch PPV operator TeleSelect (owned by Graff Pay-Per-View, Philips and KPN) has signed a carriage deal with Dutch MSO Combisw to carry its six PPV channels beginning in mid-April. TeleSelect's first-run service, MAX TV, will broadcast 15 top movies a month from Columbia, Warner, Disney and Fox across four channels.

Cinema Royal will show about 25 classic movies a month, while a third network, Passion TV, will air adult programming.

Canadian distributor/producer Atlantis Communications sold its 28% stake in youth channel YTV to Canadian media group Shaw Communications for CS27 million ($19.7 million).

Follow the Leader

On Thursday, Feb. 15, the New York Times, Washington Post, Atlanta Constitution and scores of other major (and lesser) news outlets announced what readers of Broadcasting & Cable TV Fax already knew: The networks were considering adopting a ratings system similar to that used by the Motion Picture Association of America. By the time the networks’ own newscasts were carrying the story, TV Fax readers had already had a full business day to contemplate the implications of what could be one of the biggest changes in the history of TV programming.

Don’t spend your day playing catch-up. For the price of a cup of coffee (or one-tenth the price of a grande latte), you can get the industry’s most authoritative daily news source.

It’s TV Fax. Or it’s old news.

The battle for king of the Web heated up last week as Netscape Communications Corp. cut the price of its Internet server software.
The move came on the heels of Microsoft Corp.'s recent strategy to make its server software available free. Netscape's FastTrack server software will sell for $295, compared with the $495 it previously cost.
Netscape also introduced more powerful server software, Netscape Enterprise, for $995—a reduction from the $1,295 price of an earlier enhanced server product. And it took a page from Microsoft's book in bundling a set of applications, including Enterprise, for $3,995. Both new products incorporate the Java and JavaScript programing languages.
The inclusion of Java and JavaScript was one feature Netscape was touting in comparing Microsoft's Internet Information Server. Netscape also said its new server software enables ease of use for novice Web authors. Both companies last week conducted a war of words about their opponent's products on their respective Web pages.
Microsoft claims that it has distributed 30,000 copies of IIS in its first few weeks of free accessibility. Netscape points out that users must first buy Windows NT for $699 and pay an additional $450 support cost to enable IIS use.
Netscape downplays the timing of its cost-cutting, saying it had anticipated its competitor and long planned the product introduction. "These products have been in development for a year. We knew what was coming," says Mike Homer, Netscape vice president of marketing.
The server software struggle is another sign of the explosion of Web site activity. Web servers distribute pages of text and graphics to PCs, enabling creation of sites on the World Wide Web, an increasingly common corporate and personal pursuit.

Microsoft introduces Direct3D, ActiveMovie
Microsoft Corp. introduced two new technologies for multimedia development last week, Direct3D and ActiveMovie.
Direct3D, an addition to Microsoft's DirectX group of interactive technologies, enables creation of 3-D animation effects on the PC. ActiveMovie, an open design built on 3-D, enables creation of titles on multiple platforms with synchronized audio, video and special effects. It will be built into the next generation of Microsoft's Explorer Web browser.
Microsoft executives conducted an impressive demo of the technologies at InterMedia World, dragging video onto a spinning doughnut graphic.
Microsoft reports that many companies have committed to using Direct3D in developing their products; more than 20 companies are supporting ActiveMovie. —RT
BellSouth readies Atlanta interactive trial

Suburb will be test bed for home banking, shopping, video on demand, high-speed PC services and more

By Richard Tedesco

BellSouth is building toward an interactive market trial of video services in Chamblee, Ga., next month.

A limited technical test in 100 employe households will segue into a market trial in April with a larger audience among the 12,000 households in the Atlanta suburb.

The test will be the model for BellSouth’s rollout of analog/switched digital video service elsewhere, according to Curtis Wall, director of marketing for BellSouth’s Interactive Media Group. "What we expect to be able to do is 'suitcase' the marketing and technical learning from Chamblee," Wall says.

BellSouth will carry that suitcase into its top 30 markets, where Wall says the RBOC already has detailed rollout plans mapped out “down to the neighborhood level.”

The Chamblee trial will test pricing on a potpourri of 70 analog channels, including traditional cable services and, ultimately, 480 digital channels on a hybrid fiber/coax system, including premium cable services to customers who want the whole menu.

Near-video-on-demand will be available shortly; true video on demand will be mixed in by midsummer. Original Americast-branded programing also will be added. Wall reports that BellSouth also has a deal in place with a major videogame supplier. High-speed PC services will be offered. Home banking and home shopping services, including a local grocery shopping service, also will be tested.

If all goes well in Chamblee during the next 18 months, service will go commercial there and then roll out in the greater Atlanta area, according to Wall, who says that the timing for other markets has yet to be determined. BellSouth would consider a 30%-35% share of the video services action to be a successful market test.

Meanwhile, BellSouth will proceed with plans for building cable systems in Daniel Island, S.C.; World Golf Village, Fla., and Vestavia Hills, Ala., where it has secured franchises.

Wall says BellSouth’s future plans depend largely on the FCC’s determination of how large a role open video system operators can play in providing content themselves.

Intel releases MMX technology

Intel Corp. outlined the details of its high-performance MMX technology for multimedia applications last week.

MMX, to be incorporated into Intel’s next generation of Pentium processors, designated P-6, will accelerate capabilities for producing higher-quality graphics, video and audio. It will be capable of decoding MPEG video.

Intel anticipates a multimedia environment with an increasing number of hybrid online/CD-ROM titles, according to Fred Pollack of the company’s microprocessor products group. Intel projects that 700 such titles will be developed this year compared with 30 in 1995.

Demonstrating MMX at the InterMedia World conference in San Francisco last week, Pollack showed a multiplayer tank-combat game in alpha stage from Sony with sophisticated polygon graphics.

Sony, one of more than 80 companies supporting MMX, along with Microsoft Corp., IBM and Macromedia, will debut advanced Pentium processors in the fourth quarter.—RT

SGI, Apple, push digital development

QuickTime to be folded into SiliconStudio architecture

By Richard Tedesco

Silicon Graphics and Apple Computer are driving digital production in broadcast video, film and animation by pairing complementary technologies.

That’s the objective of their alliance, which essentially will fold Apple’s QuickTime technology into SGI’s SiliconStudio architecture. The expectation is that customers using StudioCentral and QuickTime will be able to more readily distribute and manipulate digital video and other material across different platforms. David Nagel, Apple senior vice president of worldwide research and development, calls the technological marriage “a truly customer-driven strategy,” prompted by the reach both companies have in TV and film production.

The move also gives Apple the potential to make QuickTime a more potent product at a time when it needs to expand its presence in the marketplace.

QuickTime is Apple’s multiplatform software and hardware configuration for editing, storing and playing disparate media elements. SiliconStudio is SGI’s authoring and production software that includes its StudioCentral architecture for digital asset management.

From SGI’s perspective, the combination provides a “high-quality, integrated” approach to managing digital elements in TV and film production, according to Rob Burgess, senior vice president of Silicon Interactive.

The two companies also plan to collaborate on file viewers and converters between their respective standards for 3-D and animation applications.
WRC-TV, NASA make weather on 'Net

wrc-tv Washington has taken its state-of-the-art weather forecasting to the Internet.

With support from NASA, the Jet Propulsion Laboratory at the California Institute of Technology and the National Weather Service, wrc-tv has launched a Web site that puts the latest weather imaging techniques into cyberspace. The station and NASA each invested $2.3 million in the three-year project, the goal of which, says wrc-tv meteorologist Dave Jones, "is to increase the use of earth and space data over the Internet."

The primary idea is to use high-resolution imagery to focus on severe weather conditions, says Jones. wrc-tv is using Silicon Graphics Indy desktop workstations to create graphics for the site, which received 36,000 hits per hour during the Blizzard of '96. The WeatherNet 4 Web site (wwwnet4.nbc4.com) features regional radar, Doppler and skyscam images of the Northeast, national radar maps, updated forecasts and almanac information.

JPL will process real-time satellite data to enable a resolution that can distinguish city blocks in relation to landmarks such as the Washington Monument. The site also features a hot link to NASA's Web site.—RT

The Internet

‘Internet Live’ shoots for simulcast

Show would be seen on broadcast TV and on the Internet

By Richard Tedesco

The Broadcast Production Group is poised to simulcast a weekly half-hour magazine-style TV program, Internet Live, on broadcast TV and on the Internet to PCs worldwide. “It’s the next paradigm shift,” says Daniel Fortune, BPG vice president of business development and executive producer of Internet Live.

While it awaits that shift, BPG hopes to start with broadcast distribution of its program, and company executives say they are close to a deal with a major network or syndicator. A few technologies will enable the show to be carried on the Internet.

The show format features short items on Internet topics: “INews,” news on Internet developments; “Features,” about Internet lifestyles; “IPlanet,” featuring reports from correspondents worldwide; and “ILash,” about Internet misuse. A business segment with Bill Cleary is planned as well as a humorous Q&A session, “Just the FAQs,” with Glee Cady, author of “Mastering the Internet.” CU-SeeMe technology will be used for real-time interaction with viewers.

Sci-Fi live online

The Sci-Fi Channel has added a high-tech feature to its Web site, enabling it to carry real-time feeds of its cable programing online.

Sci-Fi fans now can access up to two minutes of the feed (www.scifi.com). The limited access permits 50-60 users to view the video simultaneously. Eventually, Sci-Fi will provide longer feeds of its original fare. UUNet Technologies is enabling the process, using CU-SeeMe technology.

It’s another way to engage current viewers and promote the network to those who can’t see it in the U.S. or abroad, says Ellen Kaye, vice president of enterprises for Sci-Fi parent USA Networks.

Later this year, the cable channel plans to hold a Sci-Fi convention on its Web site. Participants equipped with CU-SeeMe minicameras will be able to view each other as they’re speaking.—RT

News Corp. ditches Intelsat for Latin DBS

By Gien Dickson

News Corp. has pulled out of its contract with Comsat for satellite capacity on the Intelsat system, which was to be used to deliver programming to Mexico and Brazil as part of the Latin American direct broadcast satellite (DBS) venture of News Corp., TCI, Grupo Televisa of Mexico SA and Globo Organizaciones of Brazil.

The five-year lease was worth over $100 million, according to Comsat.

News Corp. executives failed to return repeated calls for comment. Comsat, the U.S. signatory for the Intelsat system, also declined to comment on the contract termination. In a statement, the company said that it is "currently evaluating its options" regarding the contract breach.

News Corp. had reserved 14 Ku-band transponders on the Intelsat 708 satellite that was destroyed on Feb. 14 when the launch vehicle, a Chinese Long March 3B rocket, veered off course and exploded seconds after lift-off. Intelsat immediately announced that it would deploy its next model VI/A bird, the 707, to the same orbital slot at 310 degrees east.

Comsat planned to offer equivalent Ku-band capacity to News Corp. on the identical 707 satellite. The News Corp./TCI/Globo/Televisa DBS venture already had eight Ku-band transponders on the PanAmSat PAS-3R, which will provide coverage in Latin America. PanAmSat's contract is to eventually provide 48 transponders to the DBS venture on its yet-to-be-launched PAS-5 and PAS-6 birds, but those won't be operational until early 1997.

News Corp. had originally contracted with Intelsat in 1995, when Globo was its lone DBS partner in Latin America. When Televisa came on board in November 1995, it brought PanAmSat capacity with it (Televisa owns 40.5% of PanAmSat). At the time, the venture decided to launch the service from both the PAS-3R and the Intelsat bird, whose footprint would offer better coverage in Mexico. To replace the Intelsat capacity, Televisa now is reportedly seeking capacity on the Mexican satellite Solidaridad.

Unlike the 708, whose unsuccessful launch was handled by the Chinese government's China Great Wall Industry, the 707 is scheduled to be launched by Arianespace. Arianespace has a strong commercial track record in the launch business with 83 successful launches.

"They're one of the best," says satellite consultant Walter Morgan of the Communications Center. "That's a vehicle that people don't even hesitate going on."

However, Arianespace's launch of the 707 has met with delays. The company originally postponed the launch from March 2 to March 6 to check the separation equipment on the Ariane 44LP rocket, and last Monday, it was delayed again after a final inspection turned up defective nuts, says spokeswoman Michelle Lyle. Now the launch is scheduled for March 13 or 14.

Morgan speculates that News Corp.'s decision wasn't due to fear of another launch failure and probably had more to do with pricing or coverage issues. He adds that the Mexican market "may not be as far along" as the venture hoped.

"With the loss of 708, they probably decided to re-evaluate everything, particularly if the contract had an out," Morgan says. One "out" could be an escape clause tied to timely delivery. "That would be a key one," he says.

TCI has installed a Panasonic Postbox nonlinear editing system in its National Digital Television Center in Littleton, Colo. The Postbox is being used for online editing of promotional spots for five channels of Request TV pay-per-view services, replacing an analog online room. The system is hooked up to a D-3 VTR and three additional 14-gigabyte hard-drive arrays. Fred Ramsey, TCI manager of PPV origination, says that nonlinear editing saves time in creating the numerous promo versions that PPV programming requires: "With the Postbox, to a large extent we simply click and drag the correct voiceover and graphic, set up a time line and let the system crank up and perform the assignment virtually unattended." —GD

Intelsat is deploying its 707 satellite to replace the 708 destroyed on Feb. 14.
Sony unveils components of digital facility

Will bring ‘shippable’ hardware and software to NAB

By Glen Dickson

A fter presenting its concept of “the digital facility of the future” at last year’s NAB, Sony will be showing some components of that future at this year’s convention.

Sony will be exhibiting a number of products, from acquisition to transmission, that will ship in fall 1996, says Chris Golson, Sony vice president of broadcast marketing. Golson says that Sony’s NAB ‘96 offerings will be heavy on the software side, as the hardware giant seeks to sell complete digital systems to broadcasters.

Perhaps the most important standard for Sony’s facility of the future—compression—has been determined. Golson says Sony has picked the MPEG-2 4:2:2 studio profile compression algorithm and is specifying an encoding rate of 18 megabits per second for the entire plant—for Digital SX camcorders, VTRs, hard drives, local storage, buffers and servers.

Eighteen megabits per second will guarantee better-than-Betacam SP quality from acquisition to the transmission point, says Golson: “You need a continuous compression scheme to maintain high quality without worrying about decompression/recompression issues.”

Sony also will display a number of nonlinear editing products at the show, along with hybrid disk recorders that can digitize a tape at four times faster than real time. One new “hybrid” editor, the DNE-300 news editor, is designed to work with either analog VTRs or these new hard disk recorders via the RS 422 disk and tape control protocol.

“The RS 422 protocol allows an editing system to manipulate hard drives as though they were VTRs,” says Golson. “So the DNE-300 can treat a hard drive or a tape machine as if they were transparent. You can start digitizing while jog-shuttling at faster than real time; then when you want to look at a scene, you stop shuttling and it digitizes in real time.”

For field use, the portable DNE-50 offers offline editing in a laptop module. Golson calls it the “journalist in a box.” The system is designed to take video out of a Digital SX camcorder, record it at 2 megabits per second on a 3.5-inch magneto-optical drive and allow reporters, producers or news directors to do audio, script and offline video editing to compose an EDL (edit decision list) that can then be modemed back to the studio. Unlike Sony’s studio editors, the DNE-50 will use JPEG compression, with each MO disk capable of holding 40 minutes of video.

Sony also will introduce a digital SNG system at NAB. The DSM-T1/R1, a digital satellite modulator/demodulator, is designed to be a high-speed transmission link from the field to the studio. It will transport one uncomp-ressed digital channel of video at twice the speed of real time (or two channels in real time), says Golson.

An important Sony news component that won’t be in deliverable form at NAB is the Sony/Oracle newsroom computer system introduced last year. Sony and Oracle are still working to develop the system, which will feature multimedia journalist workstations that offer script writing, text research, and cuts-only audio and video editing. Golson says the product will be demonstrated again at NAB, and that the two companies hope to have it ready for delivery by December.

Nonetheless, Sony will introduce a news archiving system at NAB that will store thumbnail images which can be retrieved into the Sony/Oracle newsroom computer system. That will be coupled with a digital linear tape system. The half-inch data tape, called Akebono, is based on the Digital Betacam transport system, says Golson.

Another line of products due for full delivery are three commercial and program playback automation systems: the STAS-100, which links BZA-810 transmission software to a Flexicart; the STAS-L100, which connects BZA-8100 software to the LMS cache; and the STAS-110, which will link the BZA-8100 software to a three-channel playback server.

Sony already has sold the STAS-L100 combination to a few beta sites, such as KPTV(TV) Portland, Ore. (Broadcasting & Cable, Jan. 8, 1995).

Golson says that Sony also will show the “daily server,” a central receptacle for video; an on-air buffering system; a central server for play-to-air, and local servers to network editing systems, all with software written by Sony. There are no model numbers for these products. Sony won’t be selling servers as stand-alone products (like the Tektronix Profile), but instead as part of larger newsroom or commercial playback systems, says Golson. “We don’t sell hardware for other people to write software to,” he says. ■
Tele-TV due for digital MMDS in fall
CAI Wireless buys ITS transmitters

By Glen Dickson

Tele-TV just got a lot closer to delivering digital wireless cable services in 1996.

Tele-TV distribution provider CAI Wireless Systems has placed an order with ITS Corporation for digital MMDS (multichannel multipoint distribution service) transmitters for its systems in Boston and Norfolk, Va. Tele-TV, the joint programing venture of Nynex, Bell Atlantic and Pacific Telesis, plans to use the transmitters to deliver 80 digital linear channels and 40 NVOD channels to Boston and Norfolk, which are in Nynex’s and Bell Atlantic’s service areas, respectively.

Nynex and Bell Atlantic jointly invested $100 million in CAI Wireless in 1995 (Broadcasting & Cable, April 3, 1995), thereby securing the distribution services of the wireless provider. In addition to Boston and Norfolk, CAI has access to wireless cable spectrum in New York, Albany, Buffalo, Syracuse and Rochester, all New York, Hartford, Conn., and Providence, R.I. Currently, the wireless company has 3500 customers in the Norfolk area and none in Boston, with towers in both sites.

The CAI orders for Boston and Norfolk are for a minimum of 33 ITS transmitters for each main and booster site (one transmitter per 6 megahertz of spectrum), along with appropriate combiners, backup equipment and antennas. Neither ITS Vice President of Sales Ken Schultz nor CAI President John Prisco would discuss the purchase price of the transmitters, but both hinted that future deliveries for the other CAI markets are in the works.

Tele-TV President Ed Grebow says that Cross Country Wireless, the wireless operator that Pacific Telesis bought in April 1995, also will buy ITS transmitters for its markets in California. Grebow says that the price of the transmitters pales in comparison to the $1 billion order for 3 million digital MMDS set-top boxes that Tele-TV placed with Thomson Consumer Electronics in September.

“The significance is not in a dollar amount,” says Grebow of the CAI purchase. “The significance is that this is a clear statement that Tele-TV and its three telco partners are going ahead with MMDS in a major way.”

Grebow says that beta testing of the ITS transmitters will start in July for Pacific Telesis; August for Nynex, and September for Bell Atlantic, with commercial deployment 60 days after Tele-TV has also selected Consistream modulators and DiviCom MPEG-2 encoders for its “headend” sites.

For existing analog MMDS subscribers, upgrading to digital requires at minimum a new set-top box with an estimated cost of $350-$400. Tele-TV also plans to install a new receive antenna with an integrated block downconverter in consumer homes and is “very close” to choosing a supplier, says Grebow. The local telcos will handle home installations.

Grebow is unsure what the final prices will be for the digital upgrade package—for both the receive equipment and the subscription costs. Right now, he says, Tele-TV and its wireless transport providers have their hands full with a “very massive systems integration project.” The telco venture also will be demonstrating the complete digital MMDS system at the upcoming NAB convention in Las Vegas.

“We’re proving we’re close to the schedule we predicted,” says Grebow.

Cutting Edge
By Glen Dickson

Empire Video, Manhattan, has added Ampex DCT 1700D tape drives to its new digital component editing room. “It’s fast, and it has all of the editing features we’ve grown accustomed to with D-2,” says Empire President Lenny Davidowitz. He says the New York post house will be archiving all of its component work to DCT tape.

National Ministry of Design (NMD), Brookline, Mass., designed and produced the new graphic look for New England Sports Network (NESN). NMD, a division of Boston Video Center, combined live action and animation to develop different looks for each NESN program, including Sportsdesk and Front Row and coverage of Boston Bruins, Boston Red Sox, NCAA college hockey and American Hockey League games. The multi-layered graphics for these shows are blended with 35mm film footage shot at slow speeds to capture “the ‘feel’ of the sports,” says NMD design director Dave Allen.

Errata
In the Feb. 19 issue, an article on the new Hewlett-Packard Broadcast Video Server incorrectly stated that the new product will use SDDI networking, with the FibreChannel networking protocol available in the future. In fact, the article should have stated that existing HP servers have been using FDDI, not SDDI networking, and that the new product will be shipped this summer with FibreChannel networking technology in place.

Being in the majority is more fun,” says Catherine Reid, senior counsel to the House Commerce Committee. It’s also a lot more work.

When Republicans took control of Congress for the first time in 40 years, they cut the committee staff by one third. Reid, who already was working long hours before the 1994 election, saw her workload triple as the Republicans picked up the mantle of telecommunications reform.

It was left to Reid and her colleague Michael Regan to coordinate the detailed work of writing the first major overhaul of communications law in more than 60 years.

For the last three months of 1995, Reid, Regan and 40 other congressional staffers sat around a table hammering out the fine print of the 111-page Telecommunications Act of 1996. Participants in the House/Senate conference put in 12 hours a day and often worked seven days a week. Even when a budget crisis forced the federal government to shut down, the conference continued to meet.

By many accounts, some of the Senate Republican staffers were outgunned by Democratic professionals who had decades of experience running legislative conferences. Reid is credited by several sources with picking up the slack. According to one source, it was to Reid that Republican senators turned when they wanted to make a point in the staff conference.

As a Commerce Committee staffer, Reid’s job is to represent her bosses—Commerce Committee Chairman Thomas Bliley (R-Va.) and House Telecommunications Subcommittee Chairman Jack Fields (R-Tex.). Several Washington insiders say that one of Reid’s strengths is her ability to negotiate in good faith without compromising her bosses’ role as decisionmakers.

In any legislative conference, staff-level discussions hinge on the ability of participants to represent their bosses’ views accurately. One of Reid’s Democratic colleagues praises Reid’s performance during the three months of almost nonstop discussions.

“Cathy is a tough negotiator,” the Democratic staffer says. “She knew exactly what she could promise and what she could deliver.”

“In an era when staffers often get ahead of their bosses, Cathy is an honest broker,” says CBS’s Martin Franks, senior vice president, Washington. Franks says he also counts on Reid to convey his views without editorial comment. “You don’t win all the time, but you know you get a fair hearing.”

Others praise her for a combination of political acumen and an eye for detail. “She is a wonderful person to deal with because she knows more about the subject than you do and has the personal skills to deal with a very difficult political situation,” says Turner Broadcasting Systems Inc.’s Bert Carp, vice president, governmental affairs.

Reid’s reputation as an advocate extends beyond the recent conference on the telecommunications bill. She has also been a fierce defender of the Commerce Committee’s turf when it comes to broadcast spectrum auctions. Congress’s goal of balancing the budget in seven years has put an extraordinary amount of pressure on broadcast spectrum, which may be worth billions of dollars at auction.

Reid, who comes from a family of lawyers, got her start in Washington working as a paralegal and attending law school at night. Before joining the Commerce Committee staff, Reid worked at Akin, Gump, Strauss, Hauer & Feld, where she specialized in communications law.

In contrast to the deregulatory mood of her current bosses, Reid spent part of her time at Akin, Gump defending the financial interest and syndication rules. The rules, which the FCC took off the books last year, restricted the broadcast networks’ ability to produce and distribute syndicated programs. “At the time, I felt the industry wasn’t ready for the rules to go away,” said Reid, adding, “There is a lot more competition in the world now.”

Reid will soon be preparing for FCC oversight hearings, which Chairman Fields has promised to hold now that the Telecommunications Act of 1996 is law.

Fields and other Republicans already have expressed concern that the FCC may be diverging from Congress’s intent in implementing the Telecommunications Act. Although Reid shares her bosses’ concerns, she is also careful not to indict the entire commission. “The people at the FCC are wonderful. I don’t think they get nearly the credit they deserve,” she says. —CSS

DEATHS

Lyle Talbot, the versatile character actor who played Ozzie and Harriet Nelson’s irritable neighbor Joe Randolph on The Adventures of Ozzie & Harriet from 1956 to 1966, died last week at his San Francisco home. He was 94. One of the 24 founding members of the Screen Actors Guild in 1935, Talbot also had recurring roles on The Bob Cun-mings Show, The Lucy Show, Burns and Allen and The Danny Thomas Show, as well as an extensive screen career. Talbot, whose real name was Lysle Hollywood Henderson, began in show business as a magician’s assistant but soon moved on to repertory theater. Known as “Mr. Hollywood” by virtue of his mother’s maiden name, he made his big-screen debut in 1932 after a talent agent spotted him on stage in Houston. Talbot is survived by four children and seven grandchildren.

H. Lee Browning, 72, retired Cosmos and Orion Broadcasting executive, died of cancer at his home in Greenville, S.C., Feb. 25. From the 1960s to the 1980s Browning was general manager at television stations including WFRV-TV Evansville, Ind.; WFRV-TV Green Bay, Wis., and WAVE(TV) Louisville, Ky. He was VP, operations, for Orion Broadcasting when the company was acquired by Cosmos. Browning moved to Cos-mos headquarters in a similar capacity and retired in 1988. He is survived by his wife, Mona; four children; seven grandchildren, and one great-grandchild.

Lee Concil Sheridan died on Feb. 24 in New York City. She retired in 1990 as executive VP, Television Editorial Corp., publisher of Television and Radio Age. Sheridan is survived by her brother and nieces and nephews.

Perhaps the Best Movie: Citizen Kane.
Disney's acquisition of Capital Cities/ABC got a big vote of confidence last week with the decision of Warren Buffett's Berkshire Hathaway Corp. to convert its 20 million CapCities/ABC shares into Disney stock. It's likely, however, that Berkshire will have to take some cash, due to a cap on new shares that Disney imposed in connection with its CapCities acquisition. Berkshire is the largest single CapCities shareholder.

MCA this week is expected to conclude a deal to acquire half of Brillstein-Grey Entertainment for about $75 million. Spokesmen for both companies declined comment, but MCA is said to have been negotiating with B-G partner Brad Grey for several weeks. The deal calls for MCA/Universal to distribute the company's movie and TV product, but excludes B-G's talent management division. It remains unclear how the deal would affect B-G's two-year-old programing partnership with ABC, under which B-G has produced the sitcoms The Naked Truth, The Jeff Foxworthy Show and NewsRadio.

Former Act III Broadcasting president Richard Ballinger and former Lazard Freres & Co. investment banker Scott J. Saunders have formed Balcom Media, which will raise money to finance broadcast and cable property acquisitions and to fund start-up companies. Ballinger says they are making their move now because of "fresh opportunities" created by the telcom bill and new technologies.

Disney signed some new talent last week. Walt Disney Television Animation signed an overall development deal with Paul Germain and Joseph Ansolabehere, producers of the CBS Saturday morning cartoon Beethoven. Germain's other TV credits include the upcoming Nickelodeon series Hey Arnold! and the cable network's hit Rugrats. Director Michael Mann signed a long-term movie deal with Disney that may also include a TV series for ABC. Mann was the creator of NBC hit Miami Vice.

Cablevision Systems may hand over its SportsChannel New York to ITT as payment toward a $250 million loan from ITT for the 1995 joint purchase of Madison Square Garden. According to a recent proxy statement, Cablevision may repay some of the debt in limited programing assets. Cablevision has until March 17, 1997, to repay the loan.

ABC announced last week that Roseanne has been renewed for a ninth season with a 22-episode order. The sitcom currently ranks 16th among all network shows among adults 18-49.

A spokesperson for CompuServe confirmed that AT&T executives met with CompuServe executives last week to discuss AT&T WorldNet Service offering access to the commercial online service.

Canadian-owned New Country Network and Country Music Television (jointly owned by Gaylord Entertainment Corp. and Group W Satellite Communications) have agreed to jointly operate a single Canadian country music network called CMT, Country Music Television, resolving a long-standing dispute between CMT and the Canadian government.

UPN's Moesha scored its highest metered-market numbers ever last Tuesday night (March 5), when it averaged a 7.0/11 share. Highlighting the overnight performance were the show's numbers in New York on wwor(tv), where it scored a 10.0/16, finishing number one at 8-8:30 p.m. In the country's top market the series beat ABC's Roseanne, NBC's Wings, CBS's The Client and the first half-hour of Fox's Tuesday movie.

In Brief

Old stars, new nets
Two power hitters from NBC's glory days in the 1980s are on their way back to prime time, but not for NBC. Ted Danson (Cheers) and Michael J. Fox (Family Ties) have signed sitcom deals for the 1996-97 season. Danson will return in a project for CBS, which reportedly beat out NBC for rights to the show. Danson's wife, actress Mary Steenburgen, also will star in the untitled project. Fox is reteaming with Family Ties creator Gary David Goldberg on an ABC project. Tentatively titled Spin, the series will star Fox as the assistant to the mayor of New York. Both projects will be produced by DreamWorks, with Fox's series produced under ABC's alliance with the studio. CBS and ABC have given at least full-season orders for the projects, and each deal calls for the networks to pick up the entire cost of the series. —SC
WASHINGTON

Analog fans
An increasing number of broadcasters are entertaining an analog-only strategy, passing up digital channels indefinitely. The threat of spectrum auctions is the black catalyst, although some have thought all along that broadcasters—especially VHF broadcasters—have more to lose by giving up analog than to gain with digital.

Barrett making it official
Andrew Barrett is finally calling it quits. The FCC commissioner says he will formally announce his departure within two weeks and will be gone within two months. Barrett will not say where he’s going, only that he likely will stay in Washington. The Chicago Republican’s five-year term ended last June, but law permits him to keep his seat until the end of this year, assuming no replacement is appointed.

Barrett’s departure is good news for FCC Chairman Reed Hundt, who has often faced Barrett’s outspoken opposition. But Hundt will be left without the third vote he needs to accelerate his agenda. (Only Commissioner Susan Ness has proved a steady ally.) Replacing Barrett probably will not be considered until after the November elections. If Clinton is re-elected, the White House likely will nominate two for the agency—a Republican to replace Barrett and a Democrat to replace James Quello, whose term ends in June. The White House will make sure the Democratic nominee will be what Quello is not: Hundt’s third vote.

Babb eyes chairmanship
Babb Broadcasting’s James Babb has set his sights on the chairmanship of the NAB TV board, sources say. He now serves as vice chairman. Clyde Payne, vice president/general manager, wBKO-TV Bowling Green, Ky./Benedek Broadcasting, confirmed last week that he plans to run for vice chairman of the TV board.

Silver King snag
Barry Diller’s bid to assume control of Silver King hit a snag last week. FCC commissioners had cast their votes to approve the 12-station deal but then received an objection from a company claiming that Silver King had skirted ownership rules “for several years” by exercising control over a station it did not claim among its “owned” stations. Urban Broadcasting Corp. President Theodore White, whose company holds the license for wtwm(TV) Arlington, Va., told the FCC that although Silver King holds a 45% non-voting share in Urban, the company “knowingly and willfully violated the commission’s rules by expending millions of dollars to construct and operate wtwm.” Charges of skirting the ownership rules last year lead the commission to deny the license renewal of Trinity Broadcasting Network’s whft(TV) Miami. Commission officials last week were pondering how to treat the new allegations. One option reportedly was to approve Diller’s bid to assume control but stay the action while investigating Urban Broadcasting’s charges.

NEW YORK

DeCesare moves to new frequency
20-year CBS veteran Don DeCesare has resigned from his post as VP of operations for CBS News to pursue a career as a radio station owner. DeCesare has purchased wcnx(AM) Midletown, Conn., and plans to buy a second station in a nearby town.

Incorporating The Fifth Estate TELEVISION Broadcasting

Who’s minding the store?
Top bidder for PCS C-block spectrum Northcoast Communications confirmed last week that some of its financing comes from Charles Dolan, head of MSO Cablevision Systems. That disclosure followed complaints by other bidders about participants not fully disclosing their financing. Northcoast, headed by Dolan’s nephew, John, did not detail its financing in the original application accompanying its $875 million bid, claiming assets of less than $100 million and no revenue. The relationship between the Dolans and the fact Northcoast bid only in New York and Cleveland, where Cablevision has most of its subs, led to speculation that Northcoast was fronting for Cablevision. In a complaint to the FCC, bidders Nextwave Personal Communications and Go Communications accused unnamed participants of being “fronts” for larger companies and undermining the spirit of an auction designed for small businesses. Last Thursday (March 7), Northcoast filed an amendment to its application reporting it had secured loans, and may seek equity investment, from Charles Dolan. Elsewhere on the “front” front, one source was speculating on NextWave’s relationship to backer Qualcomm, which develops, manufactures, and markets wireless communications equipment and has assets of more than $940 million. Janice Obuchowski, executive vice president of NextWave, is on Qualcomm’s board, and NextWave officers Allen Salmasi and Jim Mad-

No time for free time

We were there when Rupert Murdoch announced his political-time giveaway. We've read and listened to Walter Cronkite and Paul Taylor on the subject. And Reed Hundt/David Westin/Bill Bradley/Ted Koppel. Indeed, we were thinking about how to improve on their proposals with one of our own when suddenly we realized: this is a tail wagging a dog. Yes, ours is an imperfect system, and one that bears a remarkable resemblance to the making of sausage. But adding an hour, or several, of free time will make no iota of difference in the election outcome. As a solution, it isn't. As a precedent, it's dreadful.

Backing up a bit, Murdoch announced that Fox would donate one hour on election eve and give 10 spot minutes for candidates of the major parties to explain themselves. No big deal, in our view, and hardly worth the ballyhoo that has attended it. The hard fact is: By election eve Americans will have been exposed to thousands of hours of political appearances, interviews, commercials and debates (relatively speaking, few on Fox). The field will have been narrowed to two (presumably), and most voters will have decided what to do. We fear that Murdoch's hour will be too little, too late and too pedestrian to light up the skies.

That's not to dismiss the efficacy of Murdoch's call for political reform, nor to deny that the high cost of campaigning is a scandal. We know he has more in mind than giving away television, but that's the inevitable focus.

(If pressed, we can also make a case that requiring free airspace for candidates—as opposed to donating it—is reprehensible and anti-American, not to mention against the First Amendment. Of course, if the New York Times, the Wall Street Journal and the Washington Post wanted to contribute free pages for political advertising, that's their business. Until they do, we'll ask them to keep to themselves their opinions on free television advertising.)

Should the broadcast or cable networks elect to do something in the free-time vein, each should act on its own. (They already act in concert in donating time for presidential and vice presidential debates, but beyond that we're most comfortable if they act independently; this is no time to further regiment the airwaves/wires.) Nor is it the time to try to establish linkage with broadcasting's public trusteeship, a gleam ever in the FCC chairman's eye. Not to put too fine a point on it, should politicians be legislated free airspace, there will follow a glut of campaigning that will swamp the medium and the body politic.

Radio's week that was

The radio industry wasn't waiting last week for the FCC to dot the i's on its order lifting and loosening the ownership caps. In a record-setting few days almost $700 million worth of radio stations changed hands pending commission approval. Having to pay off Howard Stern's fines fairly has not dampened Infinity's fire for the medium. It ponied up $410 million to up its station count to 46 (and re-upped Stern to a new five-year contract to boot). Clear Channel, meanwhile, continued its buying spree, upping its station count to 52. Toss in a couple of eight- and nine-figure purchases by familiar names Paxson and Nationwide, and you're talking real money.

Anyone looking for a prologue to this success story need go no farther than this week's station-trading special.

Beginning on page 40 (we'd like to claim some prescience in the scheduling of that special to coincide with the biggest station sales week in radio history, but sometimes you just get lucky). Station sales were setting records for numbers and prices in 1995, said the brokers, and with deregulation, elections and Olympics, 1996 "is revving up to be even better" than they predicted. It didn't take long for that predic- tion to come true.
