Broadcasters connecting to cable

TV networks among largest investors in cable services; latest is CBS's buy of TNN, CMT

By Rich Brown
NEW YORK

Slowly but surely, the broadcast networks have grown to become some of the biggest players in the cable programming business.

Gone is the old image of the broadcast networks as a group of dinosaurs too slow to catch the cable wave. In its place are four forward-thinking companies that have methodically developed their programming holdings into some of the most impressive portfolios in the business. Ironically, the broadcast networks are now among the six or seven companies that essentially own the rival cable programming business.

CBS/Westinghouse last week shelled out a whopping $1.53 billion for The Nashville Network and Country Music Television (see page 10). Two weeks ago, ABC/Disney teamed with cable operator Comcast Corporation to buy majority interest in E! Entertainment Television for an estimated $321 million. Rumors persist that Fox and NBC covet The Family Channel. And the broadcast executives indicate that yet more cable network acquisitions and launches loom.

"As cable distribution expanded, you saw ownership expand; now that distribution has stabilized, the ownership is consolidating," says Sanford Bernstein analyst Tom Wolzien. "We're almost getting to a point where you can't look at whether people own broadcast or cable networks. There are a handful of single entities that have multiple forms of distribution. In the end, the whole world is an oligopoly."

ABC/Disney: $1.2 billion in cable revenue

Some industry estimates place revenue for ABC/Disney's cable and international business at more than $1.2 billion a year, much of it from ESPN. Since the launch of the sports network in 1979, ABC/Disney's combined cable holdings have grown to include

NBC: $2.5 billion in cable assets

Likewise, NBC has aggressively expanded into the online business through its MSNBC cable network partnership with Microsoft. NBC's cable business now includes partial or full ownership of well over a dozen services, ranging from CNBC to seven of the SportsChannel regional sports networks. The company's cable portfolio has an estimated asset value of $2.5 billion-$3 billion, says Tom Rogers, president, NBC Cable, and executive vice president, NBC.

opportunities, though those opportunities are harder and harder to come by as channel capacity gets harder and harder to come by and there are fewer and fewer sellers.” Rogers says. NBC has had on-again, off-again discussions with International Family Entertainment for the past five years about a possible acquisition of The Family Channel.

“We’d very much like a major entertainment vehicle beyond the more limited entertainment potential that an A&E or an American Movie Classics represents,” says Rogers, referring to two cable services in which NBC already owns an interest.

CBS/Westinghouse the latest buyer

CBS/Westinghouse cable holdings now include TNN and CMT (with combined cash flow of $106 million) as well as recently acquired Spanish-language news channel TeleNoticias (purchased last July) and Westinghouse regional sports networks Home Team Sports and Midwest Sports Channel.

Taking into account those properties, plus the planned March 31 debut of the CBS Eye on People entertainment network, Westinghouse Electric Corp. Chairman Michael Jordan last week issued a memo to employees defining CBS Cable as “a core business” for the company.

CBS has come a long way—before Westinghouse’s purchase last year, the closest the broadcaster had come to owning a cable network was its failed attempt to launch an arts channel back in 1981.

“We decided a year ago with the Westinghouse merger and Michael Jordan’s commitment to the business that cable was a part of what we wanted to do,” says CBS Inc. President Peter Lund. “How much more we would do beyond the four cable channels that we now own or are launching is hard to say. We’re probably not going to do another $1.5 billion transaction in the near future.”

Fox is an old hand at cable

Fox has fewer years under its belt as a broadcast network but has nevertheless managed to build a sizable cable network portfolio. Thanks to the company’s close ties with top MSO Tele-Communications Inc., Fox early on found broad distribution for FX when it launched the cable network in June 1994. Fox also is gaining distribution for its four-month-old Fox News Channel with an aggressive offer to cable system operators of $10 per subscriber.

Fox’s more recent joint sports venture with TCI programing arm Liberty Media has made the broadcaster a serious player in the ownership of regional sports networks around the country. Fox and Liberty already own regional sports operations serving 40 million subscribers nationally and are said to be eyeing ITT’s stake in Madison Square Garden. (ITT officials, looking to thwart a hostile takeover attempt by Hilton Hotels, late last week said they intend to sell various assets, including ITT’s half of MSG; the other half is owned by MSO Cablevision Systems Corp.) MSG includes the New York arena as well as local sports teams the Knicks and the Rangers and the MSG regional sports cable network.

“More channels and more video products to compete with broadcasting are coming.”

—Rupert Murdoch

News Corp. Chairman Rupert Murdoch told Fox Broadcasting affiliates at a meeting last month in New Orleans that the company’s survival in the marketplace demands diversification into other franchises: “More channels and more video products to compete with broadcasting are coming. They cannot be stopped. We ignore that reality at our own peril.”

Keeping the affiliates happy

It’s a delicate balancing act for all of the broadcast networks as they try to expand into cable and keep their TV station affiliates happy at the same time. Last summer, NBC took some heat from its affiliates for the company’s growing involvement in cable and multimedia. A major sore point was the company’s decision to telecast certain NBA Finals postgame shows exclusively on CNBC. Particularly vexing to some NBC affiliates were promotions for the cable shows during the net-

THE PEOPLE'S COURT

WITH HIS HONOR ED KOCH PRESIDING
CBS affiliates appear to support the CBS/Westinghouse plan to debut Eye on People despite a prime time lineup that features repackaged episodes of key CBS News shows like 60 Minutes and 48 Hours.

"You really have to push to imagine that a cable network is going to be much of a threat to a juggernaut like 60 Minutes," says Alan Bell, president of Freedom Communications' broadcasting division, which owns several CBS affiliates. "It's smart business and if they handle it properly, it will not hurt their first-run broadcast programming. I would like to see the parent organization prosper."

Whether Eye on People gets off the ground is another story. The would-be network only recently appointed a president and has yet to announce any cable system affiliates or advertisers lined up for the launch. Fueling rumors about a possible collapse of Eye on People was a story in USA Today last week that quoted Jordan as saying the network might not be needed now that CBS/Westinghouse owns TNN and CMT. Nevertheless, Lund told Broadcasting & Cable last Friday that all systems are go for a March 31 launch.

The broadcast networks are not about to leap into any new cable network launches until they are good and ready. ABC/Disney last May pulled the plug on its planned 24-hour ABC News Channel, citing limited channel capacity and the prohibitive cost of gaining carriage. It looks like ABC/Disney also is not rushing into launching ABZ, a would-be kids network that has been rumored for several months.

"It is in a development stage and is undergoing a period of considerable scrutiny...with regard to its future," says Iger.

CBS makes cable a 'core business'

With purchase of TNN and CMT, network doubles its cable holdings

By Michael Katz

WASHINGTON

CBS heaved up its cable profile last week with its purchase of The Nashville Network and Country Music Television from Gaylord Entertainment for $1.55 billion in stock.

With the move, Westinghouse-owned CBS doubles its national cable network portfolio, country-style, taking over domestic and international operations of TNN, U.S. and Canadian operations of CMT and $50 million in working capital. Westinghouse already owned one-third of TNN.

While the other major networks grabbed multiple cable networks, CBS had been criticized for not joining in. But in less than a year, it has made up for lost time.

In July, CBS purchased Spanish-language news channel TeleNoticias, and on March 31 it is scheduled to launch Eye on People, for which it will use material from CBS News's archives. The new cable properties will give the network four national cable networks. It also owns regional sports networks Home Team Sports based in Bethesda, Md., and Midwest Sports Channel in Minneapolis.

"Cable is now a core business of CBS," said Westinghouse CEO Michael Jordan in a memo to CBS News and CBS Cable employees. "Our ownership of TNN and CMT sends a signal to the cable industry that CBS is serious about being a major program supplier to multichannel distributors."

Jordan also said the purchase would not have a deleterious effect on the launch of Eye on People, "It reinforces our other cable ventures. The response from cable operators to our [Eye on People] programs has been terrific, and negotiations are well under way to gain carriage on their systems."

Don Mitzner, president of Group W Satellite Communications, says that despite speculation to the contrary, the company will not turn either of the country networks into an entertainment or sports network. "We bought these networks because we believe sincerely in them," Mitzner says. "There is no consideration to do anything differently."

Westinghouse and Gaylord have had a close working relationship since 1982, with Gaylord supplying programming for CMT and TNN and Westinghouse providing affiliate relations, ad sales and marketing.

TNN and CMT will become part of CBS Cable when Group W Satellite Communications is rechristened in the third quarter. David Hall will continue to run both networks and will report to Mitzner.

On the day the acquisition was announced, Gaylord's stock (NYSE: GET) dropped 3 1/8 points to 22 1/2. Investors apparently felt that Gaylord shareholders would have been better served by an all-out purchase of the company and therefore saw the deal as Gaylord selling its best assets.

But Westinghouse had no intention of buying Gaylord lock, stock and Grand Ole Opry. "Our business is the media business," says Mitzner, "not the hotel and hospitality business.... That's not our thing." In addition to the Grand Ole Opry, Gaylord's holdings include the Opryland Hotel Convention Center and a stake in the Fiesta Texas theme park.

Gaylord has no plans to rid itself of its remaining broadcast holdings. CBS affiliate KTVT (TV) Fort Worth/Dallas and WSM-AM/FM and WXTN (FM) Nashville, company spokesman Alan Hall says. "They are going to remain part of Gaylord Entertainment," he says. Last month, Gaylord sold its only other TV, KSTW (TV) Tacoma/Seattle, Wash., to Cox Broadcasting Inc. for $160 million.

But if Gaylord were to sell KTVT, it probably would find some eager bidders. None of the Big Three broadcast networks has an O&O in the nation's eighth-largest market, and one TV broker estimates the station's worth at $200 million-$250 million.

During the week of the deal, both companies turned in fourth-quarter and year-end financial results.

Westinghouse had a net loss of $3.4 million for the quarter, compared with a net loss of $7 million for the same period the previous year. However, its net income for the year doubled to $30 million, from $15 million in 1995. The earnings were hamstrung by losses at the CBS network, which reported an operating loss of $86 million for the quarter, compared with a $12 million profit in fourth quarter 1995.

Operating profit for Westinghouse's media division dropped more than 53% during the quarter, to $34 million from $73 million for the same period in 1995. However, the company's operating profit for the year was up 46%, to $310 million from $212 million in 1995. Revenue for the media group nearly doubled during the quarter, to over $1 billion from $516 million, and jumped to $4.15 billion for the year from more than $1 billion in 1995.

Gaylord announced upbeat financial returns for the fourth quarter ended Dec. 31, 1996, which was bolstered by its cable operations. Revenue climbed 11.1%, to $194 million, compared with $174.7 million for fourth quarter 1995. Revenue for the year increased 5.6%, to $747.2 million from $707.5 million in 1995. Gaylord's revenue generated from its cable networks, including TNN and CMT, jumped 20.1% for the quarter, to $84.3 million compared with $70.2 million the previous year. Full-year revenue for the cable networks was up 17.4%, to $331.8 million from $282.6 million.

Turner makes first network strike at Oscar nominees

Network looks to boost audience, ad rates

By Paige Albinak

"The English Patient" and "Shine" are leading contenders for the Best Picture award.

As fortunate as the timing seems, Turner did not postpone the announcement until the academy's nominations, says Brad Siegel, president of Turner Network Television and Turner Classic Movies.

"I think it was partly coincidence, but it made those movies more valuable for sure," he says.

TBS also acquired Miramax's "Mighty Aphrodite," and New Line Cinema's "Jackie Chan's First Strike" and "The Island of Dr. Moreau." TBS will show the movies in 1999 and 2000, three years after their cinema debut.

Siegel pointed out in an interview that TBS acquired the network television premiere rights to the films, but not rights to the pay- TV window.

"The syndication window is the window that comes after pay TV," Siegel says. "Movies are released theatrically, they go to pay TV, such as HBO or Showtime, and then the next window is the syndication window. That's this window [we purchased]."

Encore Media Corp. apparently didn't think Turner had made that distinction clear enough. Two days after the Turner announcement, Encore put out a statement to assert that its premium cable network, Starz!, has first pay-window rights on "The English Patient," "Shine," "Evita" and "Mighty Aphrodite."

"The information [Turner is] releasing to the press is completely erroneous and misleading," says John Cie, CEO of Encore.

Encore also says Turner's contract does not allow the cable network to announce the names of acquired titles so far ahead of their scheduled airing.

Whether TBS outbid broadcast networks is unclear, but the cable station paid a competitive price for the privilege of debuting this new set of films, Siegel says.

"We were led to believe that we had to bid against other networks," Siegel says. "It took a few weeks to close [the deal]."

No one from the broadcast networks would comment officially on the TBS film acquisitions. Sources close to ABC and CBS, however, said those networks saw the Disney/Miramax package (sold by Disney syndication arm Buena Vista Television) and chose to pass on it because limited-run movies such as...

“The English Patient” would not have enough appeal. But Siegel thinks Turner’s diverse collection of movies will bring in viewers.

“We are anticipating much higher ratings from these movies,” Siegel says. “We think that these movies should double, triple, or quadruple our average prime time movie ratings.”

If that is true, such acquisitions should put Turner in direct competition with the broadcast networks for viewers, which will allow Turner to charge similar advertising rates.

“Ted’s overall strategy on this is to pretty radically change the landscape that has traditionally existed and wipe out the distinction between broadcast and cable....” Siegel says. “[Advertisers should be paying] the same prices on TNT and TBS as they would be on ABC, NBC and CBS. A big part of the strategy was to close that gap.”

Turner will continue to aggressively pursue movie packages. “You are always buying out into the future.” Siegel says. “We are keeping our cars open.”

Pondering ‘PM’

Very intriguing, but let’s wait and see. That’s the general consensus among broadcasters who have talked with Eyemark Entertainment about the possibility of bringing PM Magazine back to access time slots next year. The prospect of a revived PM Magazine has piqued the interest of some stations that carried the original series, including top 50 market outlets in the Post-Newsweek and Jefferson-Pilot groups. The CBS O&Os’ ultimate game plan in access next year will have a major impact on Eyemark’s decision on whether to bring back the Group W Television franchise. And at this stage of the game, the CBS stations are keeping their options open, with plans to try a number of strategies this fall in various markets. While the overall access landscape is expected to undergo considerable churn in fall 1998, one show that’s expected to stay put is Entertainment Tonight. The CBS stations are said to be close to sealing a multiyear renewal with Paramount for the studio’s access workhorse.

NEW YORK

Disney’s basic strategy

ABC/Disney is deep into discussions with “key” cable system operators to migrate its remaining Disney Channel pay-TV subscribers to basic, according to ABC President Robert Iger. “I think the continued move of The Disney Channel in a basic direction should be expected,” says Iger. “Whether it will result in a full basic service would be premature to say.”

WASHINGTON

DBS policing plan

DBS chiefs this week will take another stab at working out a plan to settle the industry’s battle with broadcasters over the Satellite Home Viewer Act. Broadcasters have charged satellite carriers with violating the act, which bars satellite delivery of distant network signals into areas capable of receiving the network from a local TV station. Satellite industry executives last week were pondering a proposal that would allow carriers to determine by ZIP code whether a subscriber could receive a retransmitted network signal. Sources said the executives last week wanted more time to review the plan.

Sale, sort of

Pappas Telecasting Cos., may be selling KSNB-TV (ch. 4) Superior, Neb., but it is keeping the station close to home. Collins Broadcasting Co. will pay $10 for the station, and Pappas will continue to provide programming and sell advertising in those programs. The arrangement allows Pappas to continue to own overlapping KPMR-TV Omaha, according to company documents recently filed with the FCC. Pappas acquired KSNB-TV in July from Fant Broadcasting Co., along with KICH-TV Kearney and KWMN-TV Hayes Center, both Nebraska. Collins is owned by Thomas F. Mith, who also owns KTNV(r) Concord, Calif. Both Collins and Pappas are based in Visalia, Calif. Pappas is paying Collins $333,333 for a five-year option to buy back the station. Pappas then would pay $350,000-$637,117 for the station, depending on when the option was exercised.

Westwood One/CBS scenarios

Talk around town concerning prospects of a merger between the Westwood One Radio Networks and CBS Radio Networks has fallen into two scenarios. One is that Westwood One would purchase CBS Radio Networks and distribute CBS network news and entertainment programming and products under the Westwood One name. Another is that Westwood One would provide marketing and affiliate relations for CBS programming under a local marketing agreement structure. The programs would retain the CBS name, say sources. Neither CBS nor Westwood One officials would comment on the scenarios.

CNN opening Havana bureau this week

Network gets administration and Cuban permission

By Joe Schlosser

NEW YORK

CNN President Tom Johnson and anchor Bernard Shaw credit a dinner with Fidel Castro two years ago in Havana—and a lot of political wrangling—as the keys to the cable network’s announcement of the opening of the first U.S. news bureau in Cuba since 1969.

CNN, the only news organization so far to have permission from both the U.S. and the Cuban governments, will open a six-person bureau in Havana this week.

CNN political correspondent Lucia Newman, who is covering the Japanese Embassy hostage crisis in Peru, will be the network’s Havana bureau chief.

Johnson says it should be fully operational by early March.

The U.S. has granted permission to nine other news organizations to open bureaus in Havana, but all still await permission from Castro’s government.

Johnson says his organization had been frustrated by its inability to do more than just go in and out of Cuba on a limited basis, “so two years ago, I had a private interview with Castro. I took Bernie Shaw and me, and we just tried to make the case about the importance of telling the story of Cuba to the world.

[Rather than dwelling on] this U.S.-Cuba conflict, it would be CNN telling the story of Cuba to the world, telling it accurately and telling it fairly."

Johnson says he received permission from Cuba months ago, but kept it a secret until just recently.

"[Castro] granted us the approval during the presidential election campaign," Johnson says. "But I felt there was no way we could go to Washington during the campaign. So we kept the Cuban approval complete for two weeks after the election because it was such a hot political football.

"Then we went to the White House, where we met with a lot of different people who said the only way we could get this approved was by going out and neutralizing the opposition."

The opposition included members of Congress, members of the White House staff and Cuban Americans, especially those in Miami and New Jersey.

Johnson says he and Shaw spent a good portion of the past three and a half months meeting with “virtually every group of opposition imaginable.”

"Bernie and I sit in Miami and took some of the most vitriolic criticism of CNN you can imagine,” Johnson says. "We were accused of being soft on Cuba. Of being friends of Castro—we were even called the Castro News Network."

Johnson also met with Senator Jesse Helms (R-N.C.) and his staff on several occasions, trying to persuade the powerful Washington figure to help him open Cuba. Just last week, Johnson got what he called a “real break” when Helms sent President Clinton a letter endorsing CNN’s entrance into Cuba. On Wednesday, the Clinton administration approved the network’s request, and Cuban officials confirmed on Thursday morning.

“I do not remember in my career having more difficulty achieving an authorization for a news bureau,” Johnson says. "The idea that we must go to the United States to get approval to operate a news bureau anywhere in the world goes against everything we believe in. I think the idea of news organizations having to lobby for something like that is crooked and wrong. I’m pleased that we have permission and hopeful other news organizations will join us soon.”

Government plans anti-drug PSA push

Campaign is budgeted at $175 million

By Heather Fleming

WASHINGTON

The Clinton administration will bring its war on drugs to prime time TV.

It is launching a $350 million anti-drug media campaign whose cost would be split equally by the federal government and the private sector, the Washington Post reported Feb. 13.

President Clinton’s budget blueprint unveiled Feb. 6 includes $175 million for the initiative, which would rely on “high-impact anti-drug television public service advertisements aired during prime time to educate and inform the public on the dangers of illegal drug use.” The media campaign is only part of the President’s $16 billion anti-drug budget proposal. The proposal makes no mention of private sector contributions to the campaign.

President Clinton is expected to unveil his proposal the week of Feb. 24. A spokesperson for the White House Office of National Drug Policy, which will coordinate the effort, would not provide any further details.

“A number of networks have sponsored their own public education campaigns or worked to try to be a part of the fight against drugs, and we commend those... media groups for doing that type of thing,” said White House press secretary Michael McCurry. “But it is important to have resources available. We think it does make a difference, [and] that’s why it was included in the President’s budget.”

Asked if the administration wants broadcasters to run more ads than what the government is paying for, McCurry said it would be “desirable. I don’t know that we’ve made...any formal requests for that, but we know the more frequently you can reach young people with a message, the more likely it is to have a desired impact. And anything they can do would be appreciated.”

The National Association of Broadcasters said broadcasters already donate “more than $1 billion a year toward the prevention of substance abuse in the form of free airtime, production costs and local station community outreach programs.”

Chuck Sherman, NAB senior vice president, television, said broadcasters historically have served their communities by airing public service announcements and that there has been no recent “diminution or slack off” of those announcements. Over the past two years, stations have especially made their mark through the “Stations Target Alcohol Abuse Reduction,” or STAR public service announcement program, he said.

One new anti-drug initiative will be launched by ABC next month. Its March Against Drugs public service campaign will encourage parents to talk to their children about drugs. Part of the campaign will include special PSAs featuring ABC News, Daytime and Entertainment division personalities that will air every hour for the entire month.

New group working for digital auctions

Led by BET’s Bob Johnson, Coalition on Diversity of Ownership is recruiting members

By Chris McConnell

WASHINGTON

Jesse Jackson and David Dinkins are among those joining BET Holdings chief Robert Johnson’s push to auction digital TV spectrum.

Johnson last week said he has formed a coalition to promote auctions and diversity of ownership in the digital TV age. The group, the Coalition on Diversity of Ownership, has 37 members, including Jackson, Dinkins and Johnson.

“The general public should receive value for this spectrum in the form of spectrum fees and auction revenue,” said Johnson, who has advocated the auctions as a means of promoting minority ownership in broadcasting.

“Digital TV licenses should not be given away to a handful of powerful media entities without a vigorous public debate on the value of this spectrum.”

Johnson has been pushing for an auction of the digital TV channels since last September, when he wrote lawmakers and the FCC to urge for auctions. Last fall he retained a Washington lobbying firm to promote the idea on Capitol Hill and sent a petition to more than 100 national black organizations.

Those joining the coalition include representatives of the National Urban League, the National Association of Urban Bankers and the Urban Family Institute. Lawmakers who have signed on include representatives Earl Hilliard (D-Ala.), Charles Rangel (D-N.Y.) and Melvin Watt (D-N.C.).

Broadcasters have strongly opposed efforts to auction their digital TV channels. “Is this the same Bob Johnson who can’t say no to hard-liquor advertising, but can’t say yes to carrying the new TV parental guidelines?” one industry source asked.
Chong vows to stay put
With broadcaster backing, commissioner will make bid for reappointment despite McCain's suggestion it is time to go

By Chris McConnell
WASHINGTON

Senate Commerce Committee Chairman John McCain says it may be time for FCC Commissioner Rachelle Chong to move on. But Chong isn't budging yet. McCain (R-Ariz.) earlier last week said "serious consideration" should be given to replacing Chong, whose term expires in June. Chong fired back with a statement saying she plans to stick around and make a bid for reappointment anyway.

"I have had some preliminary conversations about my reappointment with many key players, and I am very encouraged by their comments," she said.

Adding encouraging words were broadcasters, who are looking for an ally against the public interest policies of FCC Chairman Reed Hundt. Chong repeatedly has sided with Commissioner James Quello against Hundt on public interest issues.

Chong, for instance, opposed Hundt's successful push for a quantified audience measurement of children's TV rule and more recently has opposed his effort to launch an FCC inquiry into broadcast liquor advertising. Several sources speculated that the industry already has been pushing for a renomination of Chong.

"Her refreshing independence—coupled with a steadfast belief in the public interest—have been the hallmarks of her tenure," National Association of Broadcasters President Eddie Fritts said in a statement. "We support Commissioner Chong's renomination. "I think she's got a good shot," Fritts added.

The cellular industry would also like to see Chong return. "She would be an excellent choice for reappointment," said Cellular Telecommunications Industry Association President Tom Wheeler.

Chong's statement of her efforts to seek renomination prompted suspicion among Washington lobbyists that she may have some support from Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.). Sources say Lott already has passed up McCain's choice for the job: Justice Department Antitrust Division Chief of Staff Michael Powell.

McCain had backed Powell for the 1996 Telecommunications Act. Sources say Lott already has proposed House Commerce Committee Chief Economist Harold Furchtgott-Roth to the Clinton administration as a Republican nominee.

McCain still hopes to put Powell on the commission as part of a package of nominations that likely will include Furchtgott-Roth and FCC General Counsel William Kennard. Kennard long has been the leading contender for the Democratic seat that Quello will relinquish in June.

Last week, McCain pushed for opening a second Republican vacancy. Of Chong he said, "People are appointed to a commission and sometimes it's time for them to move on."

The strong words lead many in Washington to count Chong out of the FCC sweepstakes. Several sources speculated that some of her votes on spectrum auction issues may have antagonized McCain, an ardent auction proponent. In 1995, for instance, Chong voted with Quello and Barrett to process 100 pending wireless cable license applications through lotteries rather than through auctions.

Others also cited McCain's continued support for Powell, son of retired general Colin Powell.

Chong countered with a defense of her FCC tenure. "I am proud of my record at the commission, and I stand by it," she said in her statement. Chong added that she would like to stay on at the FCC to continue work on implementing the 1996 Telecommunications Act.

The exchange left all eyes on Lott. Lott has not spoken out on Chong but has raised questions about Powell's Republican stripes. Some speculated that the Chong/Powell rivalry reflects a growing turf battle between the majority leader and the Commerce Committee chairman.

Administration revises plan for digital transition

Analog spectrum auction still planned for 2002

By Heather Fleming
WASHINGTON

Broadcasters will get an additional year in which to switch to digital under a revised Clinton administration digital TV transition plan.

National Telecommunications and Information Administration (NTIA) head Larry Irving testified before the House Telecommunications Subcommittee last week that broadcasters would have until 2006—not 2005 as earlier proposed—to hand back the spectrum used for analog TV. But the analog spectrum would still be auctioned in 2002, as in the original plan, to raise an estimated $14.8 billion.

“We’re giving broadcasters the same period of time to develop the digital market,” explained Greg Simon, Vice President Gore’s chief domestic policy adviser. The change in give-back dates is due to the delay in issuing the digital licenses, as demanded by then-Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole (R-Kan.), he said. But Simon told reporters as late as Feb. 5 that the give-back was still planned for 2005.

House Telecommunications Subcommittee Chairman Billy Tauzin (R-La.) and other members of the subcommittee are still skeptical of the administration’s digital TV transition plan and its spectrum auction budget estimates.

The 1993 Budget Act, which first gave the FCC authority to auction spectrum, includes “specific direction to the FCC to not let all its spectrum decisions be guided by potential auction revenues,” said Tauzin.

Commerce Committee Chairman Thomas Bliley (R-Va.) said, “The budget process...is wholly unsuited to make the deliberate and rational decisions that must be made in order to promote sound spectrum policy.”

After giving the subcommittee the first-ever live Capitol Hill HDTV demonstration, NBC President Robert Wright stressed the importance of moving ahead “aggressively” to digital.

Commenting on Gore’s new proposal to reexamine public interest responsibilities, FCC Chairman Reed Hundt said small-market broadcasters would “greatly benefit” from the “aggressive” move to digital by the networks and owned-and-operated stations by letting them take the first risks and purchase the first equipment. Irving said the administration was “more than happy to talk about lengthening the [digital TV] transition time” for small market and rural TV stations.

On the other side of the Capitol, Senate Commerce Committee Chairman John McCain (R-Ariz.) views budget considerations and the digital TV spectrum differently. McCain maintains that broadcasters should have to pay for their use of the public airwaves. However, he knows the political realities.

“I’m willing to negotiate all aspects of the issue,” he said.

But McCain opposes a provision in the President’s budget that would force broadcasters to make up the difference if an auction of the analog spectrum does not earn the targeted $14.8 billion.

“Either auction it, or let it go,” said McCain, who believes broadcasters should be given public interest responsibilities or pay for the use of spectrum—but not both.

John McCain: the agenda

The six-week-old TV ratings system will be at the top of the communications policy priority list for Senate Commerce Committee Chairman John McCain (R-Ariz.).

McCain will hold a hearing on the new system Feb. 27. Although the chairman says he is reserving final judgment on the age-based system, he is concerned that the TV ratings implementation group did not consult all interested parties.

Also on his agenda is a hearing March 12 on universal service and access charge reform. In late March or early April, McCain plans a hearing on cable rate increases since passage of the Telecommunications Act. The hearing will address the lack of competition in cable, progress of the DBS industry, and why telephone companies are getting out of wireless cable.

McCain also touched on a number of other issues:

Broadcast mergers—“They are a natural outcome of the way the industry is growing and changing.” He is still “mildly concerned,” but the Justice Department will oversee these deals to make sure they conform to antitrust laws.

Duopoly—“It never bothered me in large markets,” but the impact in smaller markets should be considered.

The Telecommunications Act—Supporters “shouldn’t have hyped it the way they did.” Rates are not falling and deregulation is not occurring as supporters argued would happen.

Broadcasters ask FCC for more purchasing power

Some fear reduction in competition, diversity

By Chris McConnell

WASHINGTON

Broadcasters are urging regulators to throw out or scale back a series of TV and radio ownership restrictions.

In comments filed this month with the FCC, several groups asked regulators to ease or eliminate the duopoly rule, the one-to-a-market rule and newspaper/radio crossownership restrictions. The industry also supported proposals that would allow companies to increase their investments in stations without counting them as “owned” properties.

“In the more than 30 years since the FCC last examined the television duopoly rule, the video market has undergone a breathtaking transformation,” the National Association of Broadcasters (NAB) told the commission. “In light of those changes, NAB urges the commission to deregulate ownership of broadcasting stations broadly.”

The comments follow last month’s NAB joint board of directors meeting, at which a divided board voted to back the deregulation.

Several broadcast groups joined NAB in pushing for a relaxed duopoly rule that would allow UHF-UHF and UHF-VHF combinations within a market.

Sullivan Broadcasting, for instance, cited increased competition from DBS and wireless cable in pushing for a relaxed duopoly rule. Sinclair Broadcast Group said the FCC should allow one company to own up to 50% of the stations in a market, provided only one of the stations is a VHF.

But not all broadcasters agreed with the industry’s push for deregulation. Post-Newsweek Stations said that allowing the local TV combinations without any required public interest showing “could greatly hinder competition and diversity in local markets.” Post-Newsweek President William Ryan earlier had said the NAB board’s vote did not reflect most industry opinion.

Also opposing “comprehensive” relaxation of the rule was Press Broadcasting, which suggested that the commission allow waivers of the duopoly rule in cases where both of the stations are UHF.

Media Access Project and a group of nine organizations added that the FCC should suspend its policy for waiving the duopoly rule rather than relax it further.

“The commission should resist urgings of the broadcasting industry to equate a mere multiplicity of program channels with diversity, since there is no diversity of viewpoint where a large number of offerings are under common economic or editorial control,” the groups said.

The groups also supported an FCC proposal to treat TV local marketing agreements (LMAs) as “owned” stations and to subject LMAs to the ownership restrictions. LMAs that existed before Nov. 5 would be subject to the ownership rules once they expired. Media Access Project said the FCC should go further and ban the LMAs altogether.

Broadcasters countered that the commission should at least let the existing LMAs continue. Sinclair insisted that the FCC lacks authority to subject the existing deals to local ownership rules.

"The benefits of LMAs are well established and hardly will vanish at the expiration of the current term of a contract," said the Local Station Ownership Coalition, a collection of broadcast groups.

Others targeted an FCC proposal that would subject nonvoting stock interests to the ownership caps. The commission's "equity or debt plus" proposal would subject the investments to the ownership rules in cases where a company owns a broadcast license, newspaper or cable system and also holds more than a 33% stake in another station within the same market. The rule also would apply to program suppliers owning more than 33% of a station to which they apply programing.

Tele-Communications Inc. opposed it, calling the proposal "imprecise and overinclusive."

"Investment in a local outlet by a program supplier produces beneficial results that extend far beyond the particular station involved," added Fox Broadcasting, which opposed applying the new attribution rule to program suppliers.

Auction opponents find comfort in appeals court dissent

But no rehearing in DBS–public interest requirement case

By Chris McConnell

WASHINGTON

Opponents of FCC Chairman Reed Hundt's public interest policies this month got some encouraging words from the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington.

Half of the 10-judge court issued a dissenting opinion that questioned last summer's decision to uphold a requirement that DBS operators devote 4%-7% of their channel capacity to educational or informational programming. While they issued no opinion on whether the requirement itself should be allowed, the five judges said the rule cannot be justified on the basis of spectrum scarcity.

"DBS is not subject to anything remotely approaching the 'scarcity' that the court found in conventional broadcast in 1969 and used to justify a peculiarly relaxed First Amendment regime for such broadcast," said Judge Stephen Williams, who wrote the dissent. Joining him were Chief Judge Harry Edwards and judges Lawrence Silberman, Douglas Ginsburg and David Sentelle.

The dissent follows a three-judge panel's decision last August to uphold the provision of the 1992 Cable Act. Time Warner had challenged the provision along with a slew of additional rules concerning rate regulation— as well as set-aside channels for lease and public, educational and government programming.

After the judges upheld the provisions, Time Warner asked the full 10-judge court to review the decision. The company came up one vote shy of the six required to win the en banc review. But the five judges voting for a rehearing focused their concern on the DBS provisions.

"DBS is more than an order of magnitude less scarce than traditional broadcasting," Williams said in the nine-page dissent. He pointed to the channel capacity of DBS systems in maintaining that the spectrum scarcity logic should not apply to the satellite services.

Time Warner now will be taking the dissenting words to Supreme Court justices, Robert Joffe, an attorney for Time Warner, said the company will ask the Supreme Court to review the DBS provisions along with the other provisions it challenged in the appeals court.

Joffe hopes the dissent will help draw the attention of Supreme Court justices. "Sometime a dissenting opinion can have an important persuasive effect," Washington communications lawyer Robert Corn-Revere said.

Others voiced hopes that any persuasive effects might eventually extend beyond the DBS services. Hundt, for instance, has suggested that TV stations devote 5% of their digital TV spectrum to public interest programing.

"There certainly is a parallel of sorts," one broadcast lawyer said of the dissenting opinion. "I think it sends a strong message," added another.

Several lawyers agreed, however, that the dissent has no immediate impact on the FCC's ongoing effort to implement the DBS public interest obligations or on the digital TV rulemakings.

And one FCC official said that the dissenting judges, while criticizing the spectrum scarcity rationale, suggested alternative arguments that could be used to justify the public interest requirements.

"Perhaps...the DBS regulation could be saved as a condition legitimately attached to a government grant," Williams said. He cited earlier court decisions upholding the idea of attaching conditions to government grants.

"I think it's useful," the FCC official said about the discussion.

Hundt has suggested similar logic in defending the FCC's spectrum policies, comparing the airwaves to public parks in which playgrounds and concert shells are constructed.

But although he discussed such arguments in his dissent, Williams also questioned their validity. He said unallocated spectrum is government property "only in the special sense that it simply has not been allocated to any real 'owner' in any way."

Williams also voiced concerns with the government's property interest in spectrum. "We would see rather serious First Amendment problems if the government used its power of eminent domain to become the only lawful supplier of newsprint and sold the newsprint only to licensed persons, issuing the licenses only to persons that promised to use the newsprint for papers satisfying government-defined rules of content," Williams said.

"I can see no principled basis for upholding the requirements imposed on DBS operators without resolving these questions," he added.
Ratings attacked as ‘hopelessly vague’

Media watchdog group finds inconsistency across categories

By Heather Fleming

WASHINGTON

The six-week-old TV ratings system got a rating of its own last week: an “F.”

After reviewing 150 hours of rated prime time TV shows on ABC, CBS, NBC, Fox, WB and UPN, the Parents Television Council (PTC)—the entertainment-monitoring arm of the conservative media watchdog group Media Research Center—found the age-based ratings “hopelessly vague,” “inconsistent” and “contradictory.” PTC is joined by public interest, parental and child advocacy groups and a handful of lawmakers in pushing for a content-based ratings system.

Three-fifths of prime time programming received the TV-PG rating, yet within that category the programing ranged from “the mildest of violence or language” to shows with “far more sexual innuendo, vulgarities, obscenities and explicit violence.” In addition, some perceived verbal vulgarities as “ass,” “bastard” and “son of a bitch” appeared almost as often in PG shows as in shows rated TV-14, the study found.

Nothing on prime time TV, the group noted, carried the TV-M rating reserved for programing “specifically designed to be viewed by adults.” The film “Schindler’s List,” which will air on NBC later this month, will be the first program to carry the adult-only rating.

Industry groups had no direct response to the PTC’s report, but National Association of Broadcasters spokesman Walt Wurzel said the month-old ratings should be given a chance.

Representative Edward Markey (D-Mass.), father of the V-chip legislation that prompted the ratings, said the report “will ring true with every parent in America.... The industry system doesn’t give parents the information they need to make appropriate decisions for their own kids, and it won’t give them the choices they need to block programing with the V-chip.”

The Senate Commerce Committee will hold a hearing Feb. 27 on the TV ratings system. Committee chairman John McCain (R-Ariz.) told reporters he was reserving judgment on the ratings system but that he had heard from parents and children’s advocacy groups complaining about it, leading him to believe that the TV industry did not properly consult with all interested parties.

“I am confident that when we appear before the Senate Commerce Committee later this month, not only the members of the committee but also the public at large will see that what we are doing is right,” responded Jack Valenti, president of the Motion Picture Association of America and leader of the TV ratings implementation group and ratings oversight board.

Silent stations’ licenses revoked

The FCC last week informed 33 silent radio stations that their licenses have been revoked. The commission earlier said that stations off the air before Feb. 8, 1996, would have until Feb. 9, 1997, to resume operations to avoid losing their license. During past months the FCC also has revoked the licenses of another 23 silent radio stations through the commission’s hearing process.

Hubbell scoped by Starr

Independent counsel Kenneth Starr is investigating Time Warner’s 1994 hiring of former associate attorney general Webster Hubbell as part of a broader investigation into Hubbell’s work for an Indonesian conglomerate, the Lippo Group. Time magazine reported. The Lippo Group’s contributions to the Democratic National Committee in the 1995-96 election cycle are under scrutiny in the controversy over foreign contributions to campaigns. After leaving the Justice Department in 1994, Hubbell was hired by Time Warner as a consultant on antitrust issues and was paid approximately $5,000 for his services, a Time Warner spokesperson said. Shortly thereafter, his relationship with Time Warner ended in light of Hubbell’s “change of legal circumstances.” He pleaded guilty to charges of mail fraud and tax evasion in late 1994 and served a 17-month jail sentence.

Cohen promoted

Jonathan Cohen is the FCC Wireless Telecommunication Bureau’s new associate bureau chief. Cohen previously was assistant bureau chief for law in the Mass Media Bureau. In his new job, he will advise the bureau chief on spectrum policy and auction issues.

Trade balance

Senate Commerce Committee ranking member Ernest Hollings (D-S.C.) plans to offer a controversial amendment to Charlene Barshefsky’s nomination to become U.S. trade representative. The measure would require any trade agreement that changes U.S. law to be ratified by Congress. The amendment specifically targets a trade agreement on telecommunications being negotiated last week by the World Trade Organization. The agreement may include a provision to allow foreign ownership of common carrier facilities. Current U.S. law caps foreign ownership of common carrier and broadcast facilities at 25%. Senate Minority Leader Thomas Daschle (D-S.D.) said last week that Hollings’ amendment did not have the votes to pass. Representative Edward Markey (D-Mass.) also sent a letter to President Clinton warning that foreign ownership of common carrier licenses may lead to foreign ownership of broadcast licenses. “The logical conclusion of USTR’s interpretation is that foreign ownership of U.S. television and radio licenses today hinges solely on the FCC’s willingness to block such ownership on public interest grounds,” Markey wrote.

Networks take dramatic turn

Cops and sci-fi offerings dominate drama development

By Lynette Rice

Crime and science fiction have captivated the networks in preparation for next season’s drama lineup.

Dramas with female leads, such as the David E. Kelley pilot about a single female lawyer or the Warner Bros. offering that depicts four New York women, also highlight the drama-pilot ordering season now nearing completion.

Hospital tales are taking a back seat to several movie spin-offs, like Universal TV’s “Timecop,” which picks up where the Jean-Claude Van Damme film left off, and a Trilogy/MGM series based on the classic western “The Magnificent Seven.”

Here’s a partial list of dramas earmarked for next season, provided by agency sources (pilot orders for comedies are expected to be completed within the next month). The networks traditionally do not comment on orders. Unless otherwise noted, all of the following are pilot orders only. UPN reportedly has no dramas in development.

Timecop (Universal TV, 13-episode order) is based on the Jean-Claude Van Damme feature.

Total Security (Steven Bochco, 13-episode order) is about a Chicago security firm.

UCLA Medical (working title) from Touchstone TV.

* Dellal Ventura* (Rysher) deals with a former New York City undercover cop who works as a private investigator.

Forever Yours is co-written and co-executive produced by Paul Faggis (EZ Streets) and Steve Nathan and deals with a lost soul who encounters a beautiful ghost who changes his life.

A two-hour pilot from MGM and Trilogy that’s based on the western “The Magnificent Seven.”

The Travel Agency (Warner Bros.) is about a firm that allows people to look into their past and future.

Rug & Bone (Columbia TriStar) is a crime drama set in New Orleans and based on an idea by author Anne Rice.

Southern Cross (Rysher) is about a Southern cop.

112 (Paramount) focuses on firefighters.

Listen to This (Warner Bros.) is the story of four women in New York.

A drama starring David Caruso

The executive producer will change but the show star will remain the same as CBS’s Murphy Brown returns for a 10th season next fall.

Marc Flanagan, a consulting producer on CBS’s Ink and NBC’s Suddenly Susan, will take over the Warner Bros. show as executive producer while Murphy Brown creator Diane English will return as an executive consultant. English will keep her other job, however, running the freshman comedy Ink.

Murphy Brown is much more than just a successful series to CBS; it is our crown jewel,” says Leslie Moonves, entertainment president. “It represents the quality we want in our programming and the audience profile our advertisers desire, and it is an important part of the network’s identity.”

In its ninth season, Murphy Brown is averaging a 10.9 Nielsen rating/16 and consistently wins its 9-9:30 p.m. Monday time period among women 18-49. It regularly ranks first or second in households and adults 18-49 on Monday behind Monday Night Football.

This year, Murphy Brown became the ninth prime time series in history to reach the 200-episode milestone. Star Candice Bergen has won five Emmys for best actress in a comedy series.

NBC heads toward sweeps win

CBS in second place, ABC in third; Fox only network to show growth in all key demos

By Lynette Rice

In the first 13 days of the February sweeps, through Feb. 11, NBC appeared on its way to another sweeps victory, albeit a modest one. For that period, the network averaged a 10.9 Nielsen rating/18 share in total households and led in adults 18-49, with a 7.2/19. The sweeps, which end Feb. 26, are used by local stations four times a year to set advertising rates.

But week 21 of the TV season dealt some blows to the networks' sweeps performance, with some veteran shows generating disappointing audiences. ABC's "Grace Under Fire" (8.5/14), NBC's "Dark Skies" (4.6/8) and CBS's "Early Edition" (7.9/14) were among those that delivered lackluster results, Feb. 3-9.

With a powerhouse performance on Feb. 6 (20.3/32) under its belt, NBC was expected to pick up the pace by Feb. 16-17, when its much-anticipated "Asteroid" was set to hit homes. And, of course, there is no denying the impact that "Schindler's List" will have later this month.

The race for second, however, will remain competitive in adults 18-49, as Fox proves its underdog status with a 6.2/16 sweeps-to-date through Feb. 11. Already the leader in its home-base demo of adults 18-34 (7.1/20), Fox is the only network of the Big Four to show growth in all key demos. ABC remains third in adults 18-49, with a 5.4/14, while CBS trails in fourth, with a 4.4/11.

Feb. 2 was beneficial to Fox, when the network enjoyed its highest ratings ever for a Sunday, excluding sports, in total households and adults 18-49. From 7 p.m. to 10 p.m., Fox earned an 11.8/18 HH and a 10.0/23 in the key demo. Through Feb. 11, Fox remained in fourth in total households, with an 8.2/13.

In the race for second in total households, CBS is tasing some success; the network held the rank through Feb. 11 with a 10.2/17. The network's performance on Feb. 9 played a significant role in its season-to-date performance as "60 Minutes, Touched by an Angel" and the original movie "Old Man" helped CBS earn an impressive 14.5/23.

ABC trailed in third in total households, with a 9.2/15, although things were beginning to look up Feb. 8, when starring Kevin Pollack that focuses on an ex-Mobster trying to find a new life outside of crime and the judicial system.

The performances of UPN and The WB through Feb. 9—the latest national ratings available by press time—were 3.5 and 2.5, respectively. In its competitive demo of teens, The WB led with a 3.0, followed by UPN's 2.7.

Kelly: Hungry and hustling
Syndicator gives green light to its lineup

By Cynthia Littleton

mid the dizzying pace of media mega media-mergers over the last three years, the programing arm of Kelly Broadcasting has quietly built a business out of dayparts mostly ignored by major syndicators.

As Kelly News & Entertainment begins its fourth year in business, the company already has an impressive track record given the recent upheaval in the broadcasting industry. Thanks to a warm reception from broadcast buyers, KN&E last week gave a green light to its slate of programming offered for fall 1997 at last month's NATPE convention.

Since 1995, KN&E has launched two profitable weekend series, the issues-oriented reality show Save Our Streets and Rebecca's Garden, a how-to-half-hour. Two more weekend half-hours, Peer Pressure and Click!, are on the way this fall, both of them FCC-friendly, live-action teen game shows.

Led by syndication sales veteran Alan Winters, KN&E has created its own opportunities in the marketplace with distinctive shows. WABC-TV New York wasn't looking for a gardening show last year, but program director Art Moore was quickly sold on the potential of Rebecca's Garden as a weekend transitional vehicle.

"This is a program-driven business and programing is the strength of any distributor—big or small," said Moore.

Looking ahead to 1998, KN&E is searching for the right project for its first stab at the more competitive Monday-Friday strip business. Moreover, the company is looking to grow through acquisitions financed by its deep-pocketed parent company.

The family-run Kelly Broadcasting owns KTRA-TV Sacramento, one of the highest-rated NBC affiliates in the country, and KCPQ(TV) Seattle. The Kelly family, founders of Sacramento's River City Bank, also has a range of interests in real estate and banking.

Without naming names, Kelly is evaluating opportunities to purchase small-to-medium-size companies in the areas of licensing and merchandising and publishing, said Winters, president of KN&E.

Still, incremental growth remains the underlying philosophy of KN&E's long-term business plan. The company has 10 full-time staffers, with national barter sales handled by Rysher Entertainment.

In a short time, KN&E has established a reputation as a provider of high-quality, family-friendly programing. Save Our Streets, hosted by actor Tim Reid, earned a taped appearance by President Clinton last year for an episode about efforts to combat gang violence in Little Rock.

That reputation has helped KN&E attract prominent business partners, such as Hearst Broadcasting Productions (Rebecca's Garden) and Merv Griffin Entertainment (Click!). LIN Television is also an investor in KN&E's upcoming teen block.

Ernest Chambers, senior vice president of Merv Griffin Entertainment, says history helped guide the decision to pick KN&E as the distribution partner for the first teen game show developed by Griffin, creator of Wheel of Fortune.

"Merv once got involved with a very small company called King World when they were nowhere, and it turned out to be very advantageous for both," said Chambers. "There's good people at KN&E—they're full of drive and ambition. They're hungry enough to hustle for us."

avid Geffen has purchased a small stake in Barry Diller's future.

Geffen has purchased 415,945 shares of Class B shares of HSN Inc. from an investment group that includes Roy Speer, founder and former chairman of the Home Shopping Network.

Financial terms of the transaction were not disclosed. With HSN shares trading last week at roughly $20 a share, the purchase was valued on the open Nasdaq market at about $8.3 million. Geffen, the music and movie mogul who co-founded DreamWorks SKG, controls 2% to 3% of the voting power in HSN and owns about 1% of the equity.

A representative for Geffen declined to comment on the deal, saying the purchase was "for investment purposes only." The move prompted renewed speculation about a possible alliance

Enquiring TV
There’s no doubt that celebrity scandal sells supermarket tabloids, but will inquiring minds tune in to a nightly TV edition of the National Enquirer? MGM Domestic Television Distribution hopes to find the answer this year with two syndicated specials offered under the National Enquirer Presents banner. National Enquirer Presents: 25 Years of Scandals, hosted by the paper’s senior editor, Mike Walker, is set to air in late May and early June, with a second hour special following in the fall. “It is our hope that the success of these specials will evolve into a first-run strip for fall 1998,” says John Symes, president of MGM Worldwide Television. Both specials will be offered on a straight barter basis of seven minutes national, seven minutes local.

Top dogs
Cluster Television’s All Dogs Go to Heaven: The Series has something to bark about. The animated weekly hit a season high last month, scoring a 3.1 GAA rating with kids 2-11 for the week of Jan. 20, according to Nielsen Media Research, to place second behind Disney’s Mighty Ducks among weekly children’s programs. Now in its second season, All Dogs is produced by MGM Animation.

More than just a show
Marquee Group, New York is producing the new sports show More Than Just a Game. The weekly highlights show “will be about heroes and the best that sports has to offer,” says Ray Warren, chief operating officer of Raycom Sports, which came up with the concept and will syndicate the program. The show will be hosted by CNN Sports Tonight co-host Fred Hickman.

‘Ghost’s’ clearance story
All American Television has scared up sales in more than 60% of the country for Ghost Stories. Stations on board for the upcoming weekly anthology series include WWOR-TV New York, KCAL(TV) Los Angeles and WPWR-TV Chicago. All American has tapped writer/producer Fred Rapaport (Melrose Place, Cagney & Lacey) as executive producer of the series, hosted by actor Rip Torn. Elsewhere on the fall 1997 weekly drama front, MGM Domestic Television has nearly wrapped up the top 50 markets for Fame L.A. As of last week, MGM’s revival of the hit 1980s series had been sold in 79% of the country, including 47 of the top 50 markets.

Oscar picks
With last week’s unveiling of Oscar’s flick picks for ’96, syndicators are starting to rack up clearances for Academy Awards preview specials. For the third year in a row, Tribune Entertainment is offering Live from the Academy Awards. The two-hour special, broadcast March 24—Oscar night—outside Los Angeles’s Shrine Auditorium, will again be hosted by KTLA(TV) entertainment reporter Sam Rubin and Entertainment Tonight correspondent Leanza Cornett. Oscar predictions by the film critic for ABC’s Good Morning America are the hook for Joel Siegel’s Road to the Academy Awards. San Francisco-based syndicator GGP has cleared the hour special for broadcast March 14-24 on 140 stations covering nearly 80% of the country.

All American licensing
All American Television has formed an in-house licensing and merchandising division, headed by licensing industry veteran Rob Stone. Last week, Stone unveiled the company’s first major merchandising agreement, a deal with Playmates Toys for a line of action figures based on All American’s Adventures of Sinbad. As vice president, All American Consumer Merchandising Group, Stone will oversee merchandising for All American’s TV properties. The Barnwatch brand name alone, with 58 products under license, has generated a cottage industry of clothing, perfume and other bric-a-brac.

Twentyeth topper
Frank J. Cicha was named last week to one of the top posts in the syndication business: vice president, programming, for Fox Television Stations. Cica, who reports to group president Mitch Stern, will oversee programming acquisitions and scheduling for the nation’s largest station group, with 22 outlets covering 40% of the country. Cicha has been with Fox since 1991, most recently as senior vice president, research and marketing, for Twentieth Television. —CL
CBS has licensed the rights to a series of live-action prime time children's series to air this summer. The Crayola Kids Adventures is part of a multimedia venture between Hallmark Entertainment and Binney & Smith, makers of Crayola products. The family-oriented hour specials will be based on such classics as "Gullivers Travels" and "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea." Each episode will be introduced by Livingstone the Literacy Lion, an animatronic character created by Jim Henson's Creature Shop. CBS sales president Joseph Abruzzese says "Crayola Kids" host Livingstone is buying all the time in the specials. Supplemental teaching materials for the classroom are planned, as well as home videos, CD-ROMs, books, magazines, toys and possibly other merchandise. The TV specials will be produced and directed by Michael Kruzan, whose most recent credits are several segments of the Olson Twins home video series.

With The Twilight Zone, Rod Serling took millions of TV viewers on a journey through another dimension, not only of sight and sound but of mind. Shortly before his death in 1975, Serling wrote four scripts for another reality-bending TV series that never got off the ground—until now.

With "surreality TV" the latest programing trend. The Producers Entertainment Group has acquired the rights to Steps Along the Way, a project recently uncovered in Serling's archives by his widow, Carol. TPEG is shopping the project to network and cable outlets.

Steps Along the Way, described as "an overview of the 20th century from the perspective of a man about to enter the next millennium," bears similarities to the concept behind 1994's theatrical blockbuster "Forrest Gump." The show's main character, who represents the nation's conscience, travels back and forth through the 20th century to take part in historic events.

Carol Serling says her husband realized that the limitations of mid-1970s special effects technology would make the series too costly to produce for TV. But innovations in the '90s have made it economically feasible to realize Serling's vision, according to TPEG President Irwin Meyer.

Serling, who was 50 when he died during open-heart surgery, ranks among the most acclaimed creative figures in TV history. Before The Twilight Zone became a national institution in the 1960s, Serling made his name during the golden age of live TV dramas, writing teleplays for such classics as Patterson and Requiem for a Heavyweight.

CBS posts $86 million 4Q loss

Network ends 1996 with flat profits of $25 million

By Steve McClellan

Westinghouse reported last week that its CBS Television Network had an operating loss of $86 million in fourth quarter 1996 on revenue of $584 million.

For the year, the network’s profits were roughly flat at $25 million (pro forma) on a 2% revenue gain, to $2.581 billion. However, included in the network profit gain was a $131 million purchase price accounting benefit, analysts said. If that benefit were deleted, the network would have posted a $106 million operating loss for the year.

Pro forma results for the radio holdings (which for comparative purposes assumes the Westinghouse-CBS merger took place a year earlier) showed a 37% fourth-quarter gain in operating profit to $52 million, on a 10% revenue gain to $152 million. For the year, operating profit was up 38%, to $161 million on an 11% revenue gain, to $554 million.

The company said the media group’s overall operating profit dropped to $34 million in the fourth quarter from $73 million in fourth quarter 1995, largely the result of the network declines. However, the pro forma drop (not disclosed) would be even larger because the $73 million figure for fourth quarter 1995 includes only 37 days of CBS earnings for that quarter. (Westinghouse took over CBS on Nov. 24, 1995.) Pro forma media revenue for the quarter was flat at $1.017 billion.

For the year, analysts estimate that pro forma operating profit for the media group dropped about 13%, to $351 million. However, the 1996 operating profit number includes a purchase price accounting benefit of $164 million.

The company said TV station revenue was roughly flat in the fourth quarter. But the group turned in a roughly 6% pro forma drop in revenue for the year, to $808 million. Operating profit for the TV station group in the fourth quarter totaled $104 million, versus $55 million for fourth quarter 1995 (but again, the year ago fourth-quarter number includes only 37 days of CBS results). The drop was due to lower ratings. Total-year TV group operating profits were $280 million, analysts said, about a 9% drop from 1995.

Cable/satellite revenue was up 28% to just over $200 million in 1996, analysts said, but the cable segment posted an operating loss of about $170 million due to costs associated with gearing up TeleNoticias and Eye on People. The latter network is scheduled to launch on March 31.

“We are encouraged by the strong [pro]fit growth in radio, which should accelerate as we leverage the new opportunities in the combined Infinity and CBS Radio groups,” said Westinghouse Chairman Michael Jordan. Jordan also cited “encouraging signs for the TV business in the 1997-98 advertising season. As the only one of the top three networks to increase household ratings during the fall season, the CBS Network is solidifying its move into second place in the ratings.”

The network is fourth among adults 18-49, a key selling demographic.

Jordan also said CBS had the most affiliates ranked first in their markets, a 41% improvement over last year. And he cited a potentially “strong upside” for the owned TV stations in 1997, given the household ratings boost, as well as management and talent changes within the group’s top three markets.

Big 3 post $10.7 billion in revenue

ABC, CBS and NBC did almost $1 billion more in business in 1996 than in 1995, with a 12% gain in gross network ad revenue, to $10,727,764,000, according to figures compiled by Ernst & Young and released last week by the Broadcast Cable Financial Management Association. For the fourth quarter, the Big Three were up 3.6%, to more than $2.83 billion.

The sports category, driven by the summer Olympics was the biggest gainer on a percentage basis—up 44.8%, to $2.6 billion. Prime time dollars were up 3.4% on the year, to $4.9 billion. Children’s advertising fell 16.3%, to $28.4 million. Daytime was up 11%, to almost $1.3 billion. News dollars were up 3%, to $937.6 million. Late-night advertising was up 4.4%, to almost $507 million.

For the fourth quarter, prime time was up 1.2%, to almost $1.35 billion; late night was down 4.4%, to $130.4 million; daytime was flat at $360 million; kids was down 3.5%, to $35.8 million; sports was up 13%, to $600 million, and news was up 7%, to $245 million.

National ad revenue tops $2 billion

Sales managers say stations need to concentrate on growing that segment

By Donna Petrozzello

As radio groups amass more stations nationwide, radio sales teams are gearing up to boost national advertising revenue this year.

The state of national revenue took precedence at the Radio Advertising Bureau’s 1997 Marketing Leadership Conference in Atlanta earlier this month.

According to RAB figures, national revenue increased an average 9% in 1996, to $2.1 billion (it totaled $1.9 billion in 1995). The association estimates that 35%-40% of national advertisers return to radio annually.

Leading national sales managers agreed that radio stations need to work at cultivating relationships with national ad reps as strongly as they work to form bonds with local advertisers in their stations’ markets.

Those managers and industry watchdogs fear that national revenue may not increase as much in 1997. Many expect a slightly slower economy in 1997 compared with 1996 and less spending in radio by some major national advertising groups.

In a panel discussion, Carey Davis, vice president/general manager of Spanish Broadcasting System Inc., said he expects little if any growth in national radio spending by airlines, beer advertisers or retail sales in 1997.

Before joining SBS, Davis was vice president of sales development for CBS Radio.

Automotive advertising should remain steady in 1997, although it may not maintain the surge that it took in the third quarter last year, Davis says. Yet Davis anticipates brisk business from phone company advertising for radio, some of it new business, this year.

Davis advised national sales managers to begin “calling on clients, like AT&T, who may not have been interested in buying radio before.”

In a prospective report on advertising trends in 1997 over all media, Robert Coen of McCann-Erickson predicted less national revenue from a variety of radio advertisers—beer, automotive and airline companies among them.

Several leading national sales managers, including Tom Hantzarides of WOR(AM) New York, advised station sales managers to try to talk directly to national advertising clients. Hantzarides suggested contacting district managers of national companies or speaking directly with the clients.

Jacor picks up the ‘Phones’

Jacor Communications last week began syndicating Love Phones, a late-night radio talk show about sex and relationships, after taking over the show from Westwood One Entertainment.

Westwood One dropped Love Phones about two weeks ago, after the show’s flagship, WHTZ(FM) New York, canceled it in favor of a music request show. Love Phones had about 30 affiliates, many of which continued to run the show.

Hosted by sex therapist Dr. Judy Kuriansky and sidekick Chris Jagger, Love Phones had originated from Westwood One’s New York studios, but was moved temporarily to studios Jacor uses in Cincinnati. Jacor says it will lease studio space in New York for the show. Kuriansky and Jagger are represented by David Katz of Don Buchwald & Associates, New York, the same talent firm that represents Howard Stern.

Meanwhile, Westwood One will continue to syndicate the tamer Love Line, hosted by Dr. Drew Pinsky and comedian Adam Carolla from the network’s studios in Culver City, Calif., to about 27 affiliates. Modern rock WXHK(FM) New York has aired Love Line on two consecutive Sunday nights, on a tape-delayed basis. WXHK management has not discussed whether it will take Love Line nightly.

Premiere to distribute Michael Reagan

Premiere Radio Networks has acquired distribution rights to Michael Reagan's talk show, broad-cast to 140 stations from the network’s studios in Los Angeles. Premiere takes over syndication of the four-hour, political talk show from Major Talk Networks. Since 1994, Premiere has represented ad sales for Reagan's show. And Premiere has distributed Reagan's 60-second Constitutional Minute feature to more than 50 stations since 1995.

WOR to let Rivers talk

News/talk WOR(AM) New York is expected to turn weekday evenings over to former TV talk show host Joan Rivers starting March 3 with the debut of The Joan Rivers Show. Rivers replaces the late Barry Gray, who hosted an issues-oriented talk show for seven years on WOR before his death in January. Although a veteran of TV talk, Rivers calls radio "the only place left where you can say what you really think unabridged and unedited." Rivers filled in afternoons on WABC(AM) New York after host Bob Grant’s dismissal and she has been a guest on Howard Stern's show. WOR plans to offer Rivers as part of its WOR Radio Network outside New York.

Interep names CBS team, takes on SBS

The Interep Radio Store has named the four-part sales team, representing 79 CBS-owned stations, it announced late last month. The new CBS Radio Sales incorporates CBS Radio Representatives, led by Chad Brown; Group W Radio Sales, led by Tony Miraglia, and two Infinity Radio Sales teams. led by Sue McNamara and Peggy Kafka.

Interep’s Caballero Spanish Media reached an agreement to handle national ad sales for nine stations owned by Spanish Broadcasting System: WPAT-FM, WSKQ(AM) and WXLX(AM), all New York; KLAX-FM and KXMG(AM) Los Angeles, and WCMQ-AM-FM, WZMO(AM) and WSKP(AM), all serving Miami. Interep estimated the group's annual billings at $14 million. The SBS stations previously were repped by the Katz Radio Group.

CBS News Radio names affiliate director

CBS News Radio has added a director of affiliate relations and news feed to “strengthen the ties and lines of communication between CBS Radio affiliates and the people of CBS News and the product they provide for the CBS Radio Network,” CBS said in a press release. The move follows the closing of the network’s CBS Radio Stations News Service late last year. RSNS provided news to CBS-owned AM stations. CBS named Jerome Navies, the former director of RSNS, to the affiliate relations and news feed post.

CS First Boston says Jacor stock ‘undervalued’

A recent report by financial analysts at CS First Boston describes Jacor Communications as "the largest [radio] station group in the country" and "the most undervalued name" of the companies followed by the firm. CS First Boston says Jacor’s mix of 113 stations in 28 markets will be "the catalyst for future growth substantially above industry averages." The firm reiterated its “buy” on Jacor and set a target price at $40 per share, up from last week’s average $28 per share.

Harder settles with UAW

Outspoken radio host Chuck Harder settled the multi-million lawsuit he filed last year against United Auto Workers, majority owner of United Broadcasting Network. Harder alleged that UBN management never paid him in full, asked him to “tone down” his criticism of Bill Clinton and then dropped his show. Last fall, the Talk America Radio Network picked up Harder’s show, which it syndicates to 110 affiliates.

Media Sports Partnership races into radio

Dallas-based Media Sports Partnership has formed Radio Shows Ltd., a syndication arm specializing in long- and short-form talk and sports programming. The new company’s debut show will be In the Garage with Donnie Allison, a two-hour Sunday show featuring live coverage of national auto racing. The weekly show will be paired with Donnie Allison Unplugged, a 90-second weekday update on NASCAR racing. As Media Sports’ fourth division, Radio Shows will offer market clearances, sales and billing services to affiliates, said Jeff Dorf, the company’s general manager. Owned by the McMullen Group, Media Sports’ divisions include Prime Sports Radio, Prime Sports Interactive and America One Television.

BDS launches new monitoring system

BDS/Preferred Data is Broadcast Data Systems’ new computerized music monitoring system, which reports playlists of AC, country, top 40 and modern rock stations nationwide. BDS/PD is a Microsoft Windows, client-server-based system that delivers information to users via the Internet. MediaAmerica will represent sales of the product in the U.S.

One Music rolls out LiquidTrax

One Music Co. will introduce LiquidTrax on March 1. The technology allows operators of digital audio workstations at radio stations and other music post-production facilities to remix music after it has been issued in CD form, says One Music founder Jim Long.—DP
Leo J. Hindery Jr., 49, may be little known outside the cable industry, but that's about to change. Recently named president of Tele-Communications Inc., Hindery overnight has become one of the most high-profile cable executives, second only, perhaps, to TCI Chairman John Malone.

To the cable cognoscenti, Hindery is no stranger. In just over eight years, the founder, managing general partner and chief executive of InterMedia Partners, a San Francisco-based MSO, has grown his company into a top 10 operator with 1.4 million subscribers. Hindery cut his teeth at The Chronicle Publishing Co. of San Francisco, where he was chief officer for planning and finance.

(Hindery is also well known on the stock car circuit. With veteran Richard Petty as his mentor, he has become skilled enough to race in the NASCAR Winston West Series.)

Reared in Washington State, Hindery picked crops during summers, then worked his way through high school with a full-time job at a Safeway. Hindery paid for college with stints in the merchant marines, as a sheet-metal worker and at UPS. He graduated from Seattle University, a Jesuit college, and holds an honors MBA from Stanford University's Graduate School of Business.

From there, it was on to Utah International Inc. for a nine-year stay, then to the New York investment banking firm Becker Paribas Inc., where he was CFO and managing director before leaving to join Chronicle in 1985.

In the following interview with BROADCASTING & CABLE's Price Colman, Hindery does some straight talking—complete with biblical allusions and a down-home delivery that makes self-deprecating what might otherwise seem hubris—about what's ahead for TCI.

Characterize your top priority at TCI.

One general answer and one specific answer. The general answer is that I will do whatever John [Malone] feels is helpful to his agenda here. There's only one person I'd work for at this point in my career, and that's John Malone.

Specifically, we believe these cable operations can be run somewhat differently to greater effect. I have no sense that they're broken. That's not a phrase I ever intend to use. They're not broken.

This is an industry that has had a dramatic, decade-long period of ownership consolidation. What's not clear to me or John is whether operations consolidation should have gone as strongly hand-in-hand with that as it has.

This is a local business. Don't outlocal the local, that's an old newspaper phrase. There's enormous benefit to the shareholders, the company and the customers in owning more subs than fewer subs. It's not clear to me that you get the same benefit from consolidating operations. There's some point—and it's a much smaller number than the size of this company—beyond which any man or woman can't manage as efficiently as they could up to that point.

It's around 3 or 4 million subscribers. There isn't a man or woman capable of running 8 million subscribers as efficiently as they run 3 or 4 million.

TCI is a 15 million-subscriber cable company, and it's a 15 million-subscriber multiple system operator that needs to be run, perhaps, in four or five or six chunks of million subscribers. People don't lose their jobs because of that; it's just that you recognize that this industry may run better—I believe it does—from the bottom up than from the top down. John is the finest strategist this industry will ever know. He's been distinguished for two and a half decades by his strategic initiative. I do some of that fairly well and will help him out there. John is the leader and I can follow him.

The third thing that we will pay some attention to is the programing side. He’s been quite outspoken—I’ve been quite outspoken—about the fact that right now in our industry we seem to have more programing supply agreements than we do programing partnerships. I would like to see, and I think he would like to see, an era where we have more programing partnerships and fewer programing supply agreements.

You addressed that issue at the Western Show.

We’re in the pipeline business, not the oil business. Let me quantify it for you: At InterMedia in 1996, 80% of our rate increases were content cost-driven. So don’t tell me I’m in the oil business: I’m in the pipeline business. You fill up your tank, and if you think you’ve paid too much you rant and rave, and you look up and it says Exxon and you get all ticked off. You’re not going to get mad at El Paso Gas Company, which brought that stuff up in the pipeline. We have great distribution in this industry—65 million subscribers. But a substantial amount of our cost structure is out of our control. That’s a phenomenon we live with every day. When we had 35 channels and they all cost a couple of pennies, it was sort of OK. Now we have a lot of channels and they don’t cost pennies anymore.

Albert Belle gets paid $55 million for playing baseball for the Chicago Red Sox—who do you think pays for that? The cable subscriber. Nobody knows that. You’ll go home tonight and you’ll surf channels and you’ll switch from NBC to ESPN. One of them cost TCI money and one of them didn’t. Ninety-nine percent of our customers don’t understand the distinction. There’s no correlation in their minds to the fact that Albert Belle’s $55 million comes out of their hides. So when we put through a rate increase, they say: “That crummy cable company.” To go back to my example, 80% of our rate increase last year was content cost-driven. Twenty percent went to salaries, rebuild, rent, employee benefits, return to my investors. Twenty percent to that, 80% to content costs. So we’re going to spend some time there. After that, on the seventh day, we’ll rest.

Do you plan to take an active role in negotiating with programers?

Yes.

There are some other key things going on with TCI. There’s an impression that the third quarter last year was sort of the bursting balloon for TCI. TCI and executives have taken a lot of heat for that quarter. Is the criticism deserved?

I think anytime you don’t meet the expectations of your shareholders, the criticism is warranted. This is a company that has accomplished an enormous amount. It leads its industry, it built this industry and it has grown as dramatically as any company in any industry in the history of this country. It got to a point of maturity last summer when the 1996 acquisitions came to fruition, the Viacom transaction most notably, and the company properly looked back and looked down and said, “Do we like what we have wrought?” And the answer was, “Absolutely. We have built something really great here. Are we running it as well as we should?” The answer is no. No company that has grown through acquisitions as mightily as this company has will ever be totally content with the way it runs it.

September was the first quarter since 1982 or 1983 where there hadn’t been a deal of the moment. So you can’t look back and say, “How did we do this quarter compared to last quarter?” because it’s not exactly the same.

Let’s use the analogy of Creation: In seven days he built it and he looked down and he said, “It’s really great except Adam and Eve are sort of pissed off at each other and the walls aren’t swept down there.” The answer is, it’s a great company. That’s the perspective I think people should take. If their expectations as shareholders and investors aren’t met, then something is wrong. But I tell you, this is a great

Taking the measure of the man

News had barely broken that Leo J. Hindery Jr. would take on the number-two job at Tele-Communications Inc. when financial markets began giving positive, if muted, approval.

Since Hindery’s appointment became official Feb. 7, TCI’s stock (Nasdaq-TCOMA) has climbed gradually, from about $13.50 to $14.50.

Wall Street appears to like Hindery, although he doesn’t have the market-moving ability of a John Malone. Analysts are certainly interested in Hindery’s message that TCI’s cable operations are unwieldy and need to be broken into smaller, more manageable chunks, that programers can expect hardball negotiations and that digital cable is going to be easier to deploy than most think.

The common theme is that Hindery is strong in the operations department, disciplined about cutting costs and a savvy deal maker.

“The reaction on Wall Street has been that this is a good move; this is not a complete outsider,” said Ted Henderson of Janco Partners. “Hindery is familiar enough with the TCI systems to come in and do it.”

In a report to clients, Smith Barney analysts John Reidy and Spencer Grimes suggested that Hindery may be a breath of fresh air in TCI’s diplomacy department.

“We view the change positively but wonder how much impact one individual can have in shifting an organization this large,” the note states.

Hindery clearly has the respect and admiration of his peers.

“He’s very bright, tremendously energetic—a problem solver and a consensus builder,” said Jeffrey A. Marcus, chairman of Marcus Cable. “He’s the only man I know who has the energy to do the job that’s required [at TCI].”

Just what that job is remains to be seen. Ray Katz of Bear Stearns & Co. considers Malone’s selection of Hindery a straightforward means to an end: “Mr. Hindery is there to get the stock price up and facilitate selling pieces of the company,” Katz said.

Malone, in recent press reports, has denied that selling all or part of TCI is part of his strategic plan. —PC company with great people. It’s not broken.

Is it your perspective that the company is going to remain where it is in terms of size?

Absent adjustments, I think this company is extremely well positioned. Its portfolio can do everything John wants it to do. When you own 1,310 headends, an enormous number, you can always trim the tree a little differently. But this one is pretty well where it needs to be. It is the clear industry leader, an enviable position to be in. It has great assets. It has a wonderful mix of urban, metro, suburban and exurban systems in about the right ratio. Unless John concludes otherwise, I don’t anticipate much change to the underlying assets at this point.

In terms of how you might restructure cable operations to make them more locally oriented, you indicated you weren’t looking at layoffs.

I can’t comment one way or another. I haven’t been out there. I’m not counting them in, I’m not counting them out. I will tell you that this company owns every asset that it needs to be wildly successful. That’s a nice place to be. What it doesn’t mean is that John has to go out and stay acquisitive. That’s hard on an organization. My company has grown only through acquisition, and every night I worry that I’m straining it. It’s hard on them: they’re exhausted. It’s easy to do deals, go and buy stuff. It’s harder than hell to run it. I think it’s a relief, to be frank, that this company has gone through, as well as it has, its acquisition stage.

After you pass from acquisition, what’s the next stage?

GE uses phrases like nurture and harvest. I think they have some application here. This company has gone through its nurturing stage. The grain is about this tall [holds his hands about 12 inches apart] and it’s growing an inch a day at this point. I would like the employees to feel that it’s sort of the spring of the year. I can hear it grow: I think that’s great. If the employees get a sense in the next few weeks and months that it has been worth the price and say, “Boy, is that corn growing fast. What I thought was a job just might be a career,” that will be a great day. This is John’s company and it was Bob’s [Magness], and nobody wants this thing to be anything other than careers for these people more than Bob did and John does. That’s what’s fun about what they built. I can walk out of here and talk to anybody in this organization and promise them a career. That’s a nice arrow to have around.

A couple of things that have to be biggest on your radar screen are cutting debt and improving cash flow. If you’re saying TCI has reached the mass where it needs to be, it suggests that cutting debt should be fairly easy. Improving cash flow is a little bit more challenging, in a sense, because some of the systems are going to need some work.

Yeah, but I think that’s where John shines. John is the greatest technologist in this industry, with no close second. John has identified a technology strategy that’s affordable and compelling. I was worried—we were all a couple of years ago—that to get this stuff done you had to tear out every baseboard in the country and to go to great lengths and great costs to add these services. John figured out that you can do it with the platforms we have in place; you can do it as add-ons to those platforms as opposed to total throw-outs. I’ve got to tell you, that’s a huge relief.

You’re talking about the addition of digital as well as the satellite overlay in those systems that are not likely to get digital soon.

There are three things going on. One is the existing analog hybrid fiber/coax plant. It’s clear that it does not have to be rebuilt as much as we once thought. John showed me that we can do it with 450 megahertz. As a complement to that, there’s the realization that digital services are not likely to be, at least in the medium term, ubiquitous. They’re house by house. They’re not system by system, region by region. If you want them and can afford them and they meet your expectations, you’ll take them. If I decline, you won’t burden me with your exalted expectations. That’s a huge relief. The other thing that’s a huge relief is that data and these digital services can be delivered at affordable prices.

I think the measure of our relationship with our customers is across two spectrums. [First there is] service, service, service. I can give you the sun, the moon, the stars and crappy service, and I’ll watch your dust because you’re going to run. I can give you superior service and average products and you’ll be surprisingly patient with me.

The easiest way for you to get a distorted price-value relationship in your head is to think that the money is going to me. If you say, “Those bastards raised their rates 12 percent but three-quarters of that was for that crazy Albert Belle,” all right, I can live with that. I hate rate increases because I’ve done a bad job—I know this. I believe it—I’ve done a miserable job of explaining the situation to my customers. And until I do a better job, every time I do a rate increase, I grab my heart and hope to God I survive the experience. What I need to do—and am starting to do—a better job of is explaining my situation.

We used to just put our rate increases out there. Not anymore. I’m going to tell you how many more channels you’ve got. I’m going to tell you what I’m paying for those channels. I’m going to tell you that two cents went to salaries for my employees and that 48 cents went to ESPN. Then you’re going to say, “At least it’s not he who’s doing it.”

I find the challenge more than manageable. I’m intimidated, to be frank, by the sheer size of this company. But I think that’s a time-to-implement issue, not a can-you-implement issue.
DirecTV backs local retrans for DBS

Pioneer DBS operator DirecTV favors permitting DBS companies to carry local TV signals, even though it has no interest in offering such a service.

“We have absolutely no objection to finding a legislative solution that allows for local retransmission of local signals, so long as it’s part of a broader solution to protecting the rights of all consumers to receive some network programming if they can’t get local signals,” says Steve Cox, DirecTV’s general counsel and senior vice president, business affairs. “We’ll be supportive of anything that gives satellite [TV providers] more rather than less flexibility.”

“We’ve acknowledged that [local signals] are not part of our business plan because we don’t think it’s the best use of capacity,” Cox said. DirecTV’s solution is simpler: a high-tech, off-air TV antenna that attaches to its dish.

DirecTV’s “broader solution” would include copyright legislation facilitating the distribution of distant TV signals, a service now mired in controversy and litigation. Current law permits satellite TV companies to retransmit distant TV signals. But they may offer distant network affiliate (ABC, CBS, NBC, Fox) signals only in “white areas,” places where subscribers cannot receive local network affiliates off air. Fox, CBS, ABC and other broadcasters have sued some satellite TV providers, claiming they are skirting the white-areas restrictions.

Copyright legislation that would set the rules for satellite companies’ carriage of local and distant broadcast signals is expected to become a hot issue in Washington this year.

Seeing local retransmission as vital to their DBS services, News Corp.’s ASkyB and EchoStar are pushing for legislation that would affirm their right to offer local signals within their markets.

EchoStar “could probably legally [transmit] local stations today, but we’re going to pursue changes on Capital Hill,” said company chairman Charlie Ergen during the two-day DBS Summit hosted in Los Angeles last week by Paul Kagan Associates. “Satellites should be able to do anything that cable can, and I think Congress understands that,” Ergen said.

Time Warner cable numbers up

System and programing operations report record fourth quarter

By Michael Katz

Time Warner Inc. reported better-than-expected financial results for fourth quarter 1996, fueled by record performances from cable.

Time Warner Cable reported a record combined EBITDA of $526 million for the quarter, a 15% increase from fourth quarter 1995. Time Warner Inc.’s EBITDA increased more than fivefold for the year, to $476 million from $90 million the previous year. Time Warner Entertainment’s cable division increased to $1.5 billion for the year, compared with $1.27 billion the previous year. The growth is attributed to an increase in basic cable revenue as well as increased ad and pay-per-view revenue.

HBO also reported a record fourth-quarter EBITDA of $91 million, a 25% increase from the $73 million earned in fourth quarter 1995. EBITDA was up 19% for the year, to $350 million, from $293 million the previous year. The positive results reflect a 2.7 million–subscriber increase for HBO and Cinemax, which together now count 32.4 million households.

Time Warner also nominated Stephen Bollenbach and Gerald Greenwald to the company’s board and elected J. Carter Bacin a director.

Bollenbach is president and CEO of Hilton Hotels Corp.; before that he was senior executive vice president and chief financial officer of Disney. Bollenbach played a significant role in Disney’s acquisition of Cap Cities/ABC in 1995.

Greenwald is chairman and CEO of United Corp. and United Airlines. Before joining UAL, he was chairman of Tatra, a Czech Republic truck manufacturer.

Bacin is chairman and CEO of The Bank of New York Co. The three men will replace Lawrence Buttenwieser, David Kearns and J. Richard Munro, who are retiring from the board.
Cablevision rounds up pirates

Calls it company’s largest-ever antitheft campaign

By Joe Schlosser

Cablevision Systems Corp. of New York City is shooting down cable pirates in a roundup it calls “the largest electronic antitheft initiative ever.”

Through the use of an electronic bullet, Cablevision is sending out enhanced signals that “zap out” service in all households and businesses that are receiving the service illegally.

“We don’t like having to be the cable police, but we do want to get our people signed up legally,” says John Hamill, Cablevision of New York City’s manager of public affairs. “This is costing us millions each and every year.”

Cablevision, which serves 450,000 customers throughout the Bronx and Brooklyn, estimates that it is losing nearly 25% of its yearly revenue to signal theft. The National Cable Television Association puts the industry loss at more than $4.7 billion a year.

Cablevision says it will criminally prosecute those who have been selling illegal boxes. As for those who have been receiving the signal illegally and now want to pay for the service, Cablevision has plans for them as well.

“It’s not going to be like ‘turn yourself in and all is well,’” says Hamill. “There is not going to be any amnesty. We want people who have been stealing the signal, to be legal subscribers. But it is not going to be like all has been forgotten. There are going to be some payments made."

Cablevision is just the latest operator to fire a salvo at the pirates. Time Warner Cable of New York City has also employed the technology.

“We did it about four years ago, and we successfully prosecuted about 200 people,” says Barry Rosenblum, president of Time Warner Cable of New York City. “When we do this, we receive thousands of phone calls from people claiming to have service problems. When we ask their names, they hang up.”

Four months ago, Cablevision took aim at piracy in the Bronx, with premium channels such as Home Box Office and Cinemax the primary targets.

“When people who were getting our signal illegally tuned in to watch a movie on a premium channel, all they got was snow,” says Hamill of Cablevision’s first attempt to slow down the piracy. The direct result, Cablevision says, was a 17% increase in the upgrading of premium services by its Bronx customers. A month ago, after a similar firing in Brooklyn, the increase in upgrades was estimated at a minimum 35%.

Cablevision advertised its first firings well in advance on its cable access channels. But now, the company is going all-out: no more advance warnings.

“We don’t like having to be the cable police, but we do want to get our people signed up legally.”

—John Hamill, Cablevision of New York City’s manager of public affairs

The results of the early firings showed us that we could increase our revenue tremendously, so now we are going after all of them,” Hamill says. “We have the capacity to shoot the bullet out every day, and we just might do that.”

Ultimate fighting down for count in Empire State

Promoter insists sport is safer than boxing

By Michael Katz

New York State lawmakers delivered a knockout blow to ultimate fighting last week as the state Senate unanimously voted to ban the controversial events in New York. The state Assembly had already voted to ban the events.

The moves come less than six months after New York voted to legalize ultimate fighting. But pressure from Governor George Pataki and New York City Mayor Rudolph Giuliani helped spur a reversal. The ban will not prevent the events from being shown on PPV.

“It seems to me it is a purely political situation,” says ultimate-fighting promoter SEG Sports President Bob Meyrowitz. “It’s an easy political target, and they are not pointing to any incident” of serious injury.

Meyrowitz says that, unlike with boxing and other major sports, no ultimate fighter has ever been seriously injured or had to spend a night in the hospital as the result of a bout. “In our last fight, the most serious injury in which the fighter had to withdraw was a sprained knuckle,” he says.

“Human cockfighting’’ is how New York state Senator Roy Goodman (R-Manhattan), who sponsored the legislation, has referred to ultimate fighting. “These fights are no different from street brawls,’’ he says. “ Contestants use brutal techniques, including kicking, chopping, wrestling, head butts, and choke holds.’’

SEG Sports had petitioned a federal court earlier this month to overturn state rules that banned the rough sport. Upon the court’s refusal, SEG Sports at the last minute moved a bout scheduled for Feb. 19 to Niagara Falls to Dothan, Ala.

According to preliminary results, SEG Sports estimates that the buy rate for the Feb. 7 event will exceed that of the previous event by 10% to 20%. The next ultimate fighting event is scheduled for May 30. No location has been set; it was originally supposed to take place at Nassau Coliseum on Long Island.
Cartoon net re-ups big bag
Cartoon Network has ordered 26 new episodes of Big Bag, the preschool program created by Children's Television Workshop. The deal calls for the creation of the new half-hour episodes, in addition to the original 13 hour-long episodes, which are being reformatted to half-hour shows.

HTS keeps Orioles
Westinghouse's Home Team Sports regional cable network has signed a deal with the Baltimore Orioles to extend their television rights agreement for four years. HTS will televise 90 Orioles games a year on cable and will produce 65 Orioles games each year through the 2000 season for broadcasts divided between Baltimore stations WJZ-TV and WSMV-TV, with WJZ-TV delivering a minimum of 35 a season. WBDC-TV Washington will broadcast an average 65 games per season.

Nickelodeon and Mattel together again
Nickelodeon has granted Mattel Inc. exclusive licensing rights across major toy categories to Nickelodeon's original characters and properties, excluding preschool. Nickelodeon and Mattel teamed in 1991 for a Nickelodeon-branded toy line. Under the new deal, Mattel will make products such as board games, puzzles and action figures, beyond the already existing activity toys.

On the AMC marque
American Movie Classics has a number of specials lined up for March and April. Long, Long Ago (March 11, 9:30 p.m. ET) is a look at the birth of the motion picture through the eyes of 26 centenarians, whose remembrances of films are blended with silent film clips. Hollywood Walk of Fame: America's Street of Dreams (March 18, 9:30 p.m. ET) looks at the more than 2,000 celebrities who have been accorded stars on this "unique" sidewalk. Hollywood Diaries (April 15, 8:30 p.m. ET) looks at the lives of Marilyn Monroe, Marlon Brando, Robert Mitchum and Joan Crawford.

CTPAA President's Awards
The Cable Television Public Affairs Association selected Comcast Corporation President Brian Roberts, Rainbow Programming President Joshua Sapan and Time Warner Cable Senior Vice President of Corporate Affairs Lynn Yaeger as its 1997 President's Awards winners. The awards will be presented during the Beacon Awards Ceremony on Tuesday, April 29.

BellSouth buys Atlanta wireless
BellSouth last week reached a definitive agreement to purchase Wireless Cable of Atlanta for $46.9 million in stock. BellSouth will exchange 0.49 share of stock for each share of Wireless Cable. The deal will give the telco licenses to provide video service to its Atlanta customers.

Charter hits a million subs
Charter Communications reached the 1 million-subscriber mark with its acquisition of 37,000-subscriber Price Cable in Hickory, N.C. Its 14th acquisition in less than three years. Charter has raised more than $2 billion in equity and debt to fund acquisitions, according to Jerald L. Kent, president of the four-year-old company. Kent was confident that Charter could manage the debt. "Charter has had a terrific year. We haven't had the problems other cable systems have had." Charter plans to spend $160 million this year, including a multimillion-dollar systems upgrade. Look for more acquisitions in the second quarter of this year to bring Charter 140,000 more subscribers. Although going public is a "possibility down the road, we have no plans to do that today," Kent said.

Auto Channel sues competitor
The Auto Channel has sued Comcast, Continental, Cox and Speedvision, charging antitrust violations in an 80-page complaint in federal court in the U.S. Western District of Kentucky. Auto Channel owner Bob Gordon, president of Louisville, Ky.-based Gordon Communications, says he talked with all three cable companies for a year and a half about becoming partners in The Auto Channel venture. "In September 1994 they said they didn't want to do it," Gordon says. "In November 1994 they announced they were doing it as Speedvision." The Auto Channel, a 24-hour car channel, has no carriage after six years of existence. "It's difficult for an independent producer to compete against a monopoly," Gordon says. "If a [programer] is not owned by an MSO, it can't get carriage. That's a monopoly to me and to my attorneys."

Cable sales
US Cable Group sold two New Jersey cable systems encompassing 25,000 subscribers to TCI Communications. The price was not disclosed. Montvale, N.J.-based US Cable and TCI last year agreed to transfer to TCI ownership of the New Jersey, Illinois, Indiana and Michigan systems they hold in a 50-50 partnership. US Cable, which has about 230,000 subscribers, is exiting the U.S. cable business to focus on international markets and is selling systems in New York, Texas, New Mexico, South Carolina, Georgia and Florida in addition to properties in the TCI partnership.

Buchanan back in the 'Crossfire'
Just when liberals thought it was safe to watch Crossfire again, arch-conservative Pat Buchanan announced he'll return to the CNN show March 3. Buchanan will join former New Hampshire governor and Bush administration White House Chief of Staff John Sununu on the conservative side of the political debate/talk show, and will sit opposite former representative Geraldine Ferraro and Democratic activist Bill Press, who represent liberals. Buchanan asserted that the purpose of his return is not to use the show as a relaunching pad for his political career. "I'm a journalist by vocation," he said. "I'm coming back to Crossfire as a journalist. All political activity has ended for me."
Soccer PPV results from Italy

Europe's first pay-per-view soccer service Telepiu Calci, which launched in Italy in September 1996 via direct-to-home satellite by Italian pay operator Telepiu, had 46,000 subscribers as of Feb. 4. The figure is in line with company expectations. Telepiu forecasts that Telepiu Calci will break even within three years. Telepiu Calci allows customers to subscribe to an entire season's matches for one or more teams.

News Corp.'s Star losses unchanged

News Corp. CFO William Sorenson told analysts that the company doesn't see any improvement in Asian broadcaster Star TV's losses "at the moment." Sorenson said News Corp. had not revised its original 1996 loss estimate for Star, reportedly about $100 million, but that it was too early to predict 1997 losses. News Corp. posted a 17% increase in after-tax profits before abnormals of $576 million on operating revenue of $5.6 billion for the six months to Dec. 31, 1996.

TF1 signs for Universal output

Universal International Television and French commercial broadcaster TF1 have sealed a five-year free TV rights deal covering movies, TV movies and series. The deal is TF1's first multyear deal with a Hollywood studio covering both features and TV. Until now, its only multyear rights deal was with Disney for features only. TF1 has been approached by other majors for a deal similar to the Universal arrangement, TF1's acquisitions manager, Edmond Bakaloglou, says. No price was put on the deal. TF1 also has renewed contracts for long-running series Columbo and Murder, She Wrote. Canal+ has the pay-TV rights to Universal movies; TF1 can show films in the free-TV window one year after they are screened on Canal+.

News, information sites hold steady

By Richard Tedesco

The Weather Channel, the NFL and Warner Bros. all posted gains in the latest round of PC Meter household Internet ratings.

Online interest in the weather peaked with a 4.9 rating for The Weather Channel's site in December, more than a point increase over the two months prior. The Disney site scored well in the last two months of the year, with users typically visiting for 10 minutes or more. Disney rose from a 4.2 rating in October to 5.8 in November, before dropping to 4.8 in December.

Warner's online site broke through into the ranks of the most popular content providers. A previously unranked site, it pulled into the fifth spot in the rankings, topping off at 4.0. Another site, WarnerBros.com, scored a 2.0, producing an aggregate third-place finish in PC Meter's news, information and entertainment category.

A trio of online cable sites, from ESPN, CNN and MSNBC, continued to draw surfers on the homefront. ESPN's SportsZone site maintained its place among the most consistent performers in household Internet ratings, with users spending an average of nearly 23 minutes on the site monthly. SportsZone slipped slightly from its 4.5 rating in October to level off at 3.9 in December. CNN and MSNBC hit 4.1 and 3.8 in November, respectively, probably driven by interest in the presidential election. Both dropped off a bit in December.

ESPN, CNN and MSNBC are among those sites widely assumed to be heavily trafficked by PC users at work. PC Meter's numbers represent the respective percentage of home Internet users accessing particular sites, based on a sample of 10,000 PC households. Its estimate of PC households capable of Internet access stands at 12.5 million—15 million, with a rating point translating to 120,000-150,000 users.

The top tandem in the info/entertainment category for December remained ZDNet, with an 8.0 rating, and Pathfinder, with a 6.8. Both have been steadily increasing in site traffic from households in the past several months. C/Net dropped from a 5.2 in November to a 4.5 in December after breaking out two new sites from its main one.

The rest of the top 20 sites in the category showed little fluctuation from October to December. USA Today's site held fairly steady, rising to 4.0 in November after 3.8 the previous month, then sliding back to 3.7 for December. The NFL's rating rose to 2.7 in December from 2.1 in November, evidencing peaking fan interest as its regular season drew to a close. SportsLine held steady at a 2.9 rating.
Discovery buys stake in Omniview

By Richard Tedesco

Discovery Communications Inc. became a more serious Internet player last week, taking a multimillion-dollar equity stake in Omniview Inc., a company with a radical new photo technology.

Simultaneously, Motorola's Multimedia Group took an additional stake in Omniview, increasing its ownership to 20% of the Knoxville, Tenn., company. Jim Phillips, who had been corporate vice president overseeing that Motorola unit, has been named chairman and CEO of Omniview, effective immediately. He has served on Omniview's board of directors for the past three years.

Omniview's technology enables the creation of 360-degree photo images of environments that can be explored online in real time. Discovery used the technology on its Web site when it explored the sunken ocean liner Titanic last August. The technology will soon be used to preview its Planet Explorer CD-ROM about Istanbul on its site.

The relationship with Omniview will give Discovery more creative license online, according to Tom Hicks, vice president of Discovery Online. "It will help us bring down the cost of field production. And we can create these wonderfully engaging and immersive environments," Hicks also notes that Omniview's use of compression conserves space on the photo files to be downloaded.

Phillips says the Omniview technology has the ability to transform the way images are presented in cyberspace: "This makes the Internet, or intranets, very much more robust. It's magical to the extent that it literally puts you right in that spot."

Discovery spokesman Jim Boyle would not disclose the amount of his network's investment, but said it was less than the $10 million that has been reported.

Motorola is one of Intel Corp.'s development partners for its MMX multimedia technology, and Intel's multimedia desktops are now being demonstrated using Omniview's photo system.

For Motorola, the stake in Omniview is one of five such moves the company has made as part of its Cyberseed Investments program. Other companies it has invested in: Virtus Corp., Viewpoint Databox, Multichannel Communications Sciences Inc., Protozoa and Media Technology Ventures.

Increase your word power with blabbing Barney

In its latest venture in the video realm, Microsoft Corp. and PBS will pump life into Barney dolls that will interact with the TV series.

Technical tests of the plush, purple, animated dinosaur have been conducted in New York, Los Angeles, Dallas, Philadelphia, Seattle and Fairfield County, Conn. PBS hopes to have the series ready for a national launch with its new interactive format on Sept. 1, according to Jacqueline Weiss, CEO of PBS National Datcast.

"We're excited about the possibilities of getting the kids to participate more than they already do with the PBS product," Weiss says.

Microsoft's Barney dolls, which have a 2,000-word vocabulary as stand-alone toys, will be activated with a signal emitted through the horizontal blanking interval of the TV signal.

The interactive purple dinosaur hits toy stores with a $110 list price later this year. A $65 donut-shaped radio transmitter from Microsoft increases its vocabulary to 4,000 words when hooked up to a PC to enable interaction with educational CD-ROM programs. And the lovable Barney spouts 14,000 words when the transmitter is hooked to a TV to enable interaction with videocassette tape programs. CD-ROM titles sell for $34.95; videocassettes will be $14.95.

Sean McGowan, toy industry analyst for Gerard Klaer Mattison, is skeptical about the idea because of the price and the character's limited appeal to three- and four-year-olds. "The demographic window for Barney is pretty narrow," McGowan says.—RT

Mining the Internet mother lode of ads

Cheap labor, related sites do the digging

By Richard Tedesco

Find Web producers to create subject sites to lead PC users to related sites. And pay those producers $250 a week.

That's the idea driving Scott Kurnit's Mining Co.: establish a service—cheaply—that points users to the best of the Web. Kurnitz is putting together a collection of introductory home pages that connect to related subject sites, packaged for ad sales.

On the strength of that concept, Mining Co. already has lined up 13 advertisers, including AT&T. A&E Network, Chevrolet. IBM, Duracell, Nabisco, Olympus, Schwab and the U.S. Army.

The company's working list of 140 site subjects has plenty of TV-related content: Days of Our Lives (now in demo form). Baywatch, Beverly Hills, Seinfeld, X-Files, cable TV, music TV, public access and public TV. "The expectation of the entire site is to provide a satisfying service for the user," says Kurnitz. "The solution was to recruit Web producers and give them a better proposition than they already have."

The deal is the $250 weekly allowance and a cut of the advertising action to produce "a come-and-hang-out-service that sends you away but also brings you back," as Kurnitz puts it.

Thus far the result is 62 finished sites, Kurnitz says, and another 100 sites in "Mining Prep," a three-week crash course in everything one needs to become an online miner. The demo sites seem uniformly unremarkable: a pro basketball site contains links to NBA sites and a commentary on the need for strong defense on a title team.

But Kurnitz thinks he can build a compelling service of 500 sites in time for an April launch. His requirements are simple: answer all e-mail within 24 hours, write a weekly, participate in bulletin boards and chats, and produce a source list superior to that of any other service.

Mining Co. will use Alta Vista as its external search engine. Sunnyvale, Calif.-based Verity will supply an internal search engine; ichat, of Austin, Tex., provides chat technology, and Proxicom will do the bulletin boards.

C-SPAN, Fox News launch RealVideo coverage

By Richard Tedesco

When Progressive Networks launched its RealVideo streaming technology two weeks ago, C-SPAN and Fox News effectively provided the online demos.

C-SPAN had a launch of its own last week, beginning wall-to-wall video coverage of the U.S. House of Representatives online (www.cspan.com). When C-SPAN starts similar Senate coverage March 1, RealVideo will be streaming on its site 13 hours daily, according to Robert Kennedy, C-SPAN executive vice president and co-CEO.

C-SPAN's next step will be to differentiate itself online by offering other live content and stored content from its cable side. "From here, we have to develop a Web product that complements our television networks," Kennedy says. "Our Web video offerings might include events that are not airing live on our television networks, or they might include events that aired last week."

Fox News Network was transmitting its cable signal live over the Internet, and will continue live, 24-hour video carriage online for another week, according to Juliann Villalobos, Fox News Internet producer. "After that, if all goes well, we'll probably use it for video applications on a daily basis," she says.

Fox News will feature a video news update at the top of each hour, as well as video content to supplement text online.

It could also break out interviews from on-air stories and may archive news stories on site. Villalobos says.

RealVideo is designed to deliver consistently good video imaging at 45 kbps. At access rates between 28.8 kbps and 56.6 kbps, RealVideo can deliver 15 to 22 frames per second. Its ideal applications now are for information content or short-form video.

"Over time, the Internet will become a valid distribution alternative for a lot of kinds of programming," says Rob Glaser, Progressive Networks chairman. "It works particularly well for things like news and public affairs programming. It's not necessarily the way you'd want to watch 'Jurassic Park' today, but we'll get there."

Director Spike Lee, who created three five-minute films to help demonstrate RealVideo on Progressive Networks' site, sees the technology as a boon to young directors. "There's really no boundaries. Who knows where this stuff is going to go?" Lee says.

Several other programmers supporting the technology, including ABC Online, BBC, MSNBC and Children's Television Network, will help define that direction. CNN and other programmers are expected to follow suit.

The RealVideo Server is available to developers for $295. RealPlayer 4.0, which plays both RealVideo and RealAudio, is available for free download online (www.real.com).
GI unveils 16:1 compression
Packet Multiplexer will send 16 MPEG-2 channels over a 24 mhz transponder

By Glen Dickson

GI's new Packet Multiplexer works hand-in-hand with its DigiCipher II encoder.

(which Immedia demonstrated via satellite at last December's Western Cable Show).

Marty Stein, associate vice president for commercial product line management in GI's NextLevel satellite data networks group, says the 16:1 breakthrough came when GI figured out how link together two DigiCipher II encoders and have them communicate with one statistical multiplexing processor. A single DigiCipher II encoder can accept only eight inputs, so GI previously could do only 8:1 compression.

"Now the statistical multiplexing works across encoders and looks at all 16 channels at once," says Stein.

The Packet Multiplexer performs real-time encoding at an average rate of 1.5 mbs. and allocates 14 channels for programming and two reserve channels for redundancy. The unit adjusts the bit rate between different channels about 35 times per video frame, or 1,000 times per second.

"The multiplexing and encoding happen simultaneously," says Stein. "As the video feeds come into the encoder, it does a sampling of the complexity of the scene and calls for a certain bit rate. Then it relays that request to the central processor, which takes all the channels into consideration and allocates a bit rate to each one. The encoder then finishes the compression to the allocated bit rate."

Stein says that 16:1 compression is suitable for transmitting movies and other film-based material, while material shot in video would require a lower compression rate, as would high-activity programming such as sporting events.

The Packet Multiplexer will be sold as part of a complete DigiCipher II system, which includes access control, encryption and an uplink control system. "The ballpark for the whole thing would be about $65,000 per channel," says Stein.

GI posts fourth-quarter loss

General Instrument announced a net loss of $17 million for fourth quarter 1996 last week and said it is restructuring into three separate units—NextLevel Systems, CommScope and General Semiconductor—which should be completed this summer (B&SC, Jan. 13).

GI's loss reflects $59 million in after-tax charges related to investments in its next-generation digital products, a write-down of assets and restructuring costs. The company had sales of $737 million for the fourth quarter, ended Dec. 31, 1996, an increase of 14% from fourth quarter 1995.

The NextLevel Systems businesses, which include set-top boxes, satellite equipment and cable modems, reported fourth-quarter sales of $507 million, up 21% from fourth quarter 1995. CommScope coaxial cable sales increased 18%, to $151 million, from fourth quarter 1995, while General Semiconductor (currently Power Semiconductor) sales decreased 23%, to $79 million, from the prior-year quarter.

First quarter 1997 is looking strong for NextLevel, as GI's largest customer, TCI, nears completion of a third-party lease agreement for 450,000 of GI's DCT-1000 digital set-tops. TCI's projected 1997 set-top orders with GI are based on its existing contract to purchase 1 million set-tops over several years.

Odetics launches Roswell

New software tackles digital disk storage challenges

By Glen Dickson

A utomation supplier Odetics Broadcast has developed a facility management system specifically designed to handle the new demands of using digital disk storage within the broadcast plant. The product, named Roswell, uses distributed client/server software to automate material and media tracking, provide multichannel playback for up to 50 channels and perform real-time machine control.

Odetics spent the past year and a half developing Roswell, which will make its official debut at April's NAB convention in Las Vegas. The company hopes to begin beta-testing the system after the show, and Roswell should be available late this summer.

“We’re betting the farm on it,” says Mike Guess, Odetics director of marketing, who emphasizes that Roswell is the company's first system designed from scratch with the evolving hybrid tape/disk storage environment in mind. “The big question in automation today is, Where is it? If you’ve got a server with 30 hours of material, finding a 10-second spot isn’t easy.”

The Windows NT-based Roswell uses an SQL-compliant Oracle relational database to track material throughout the plant and has open interfaces to traffic and billing systems. Its client/server architecture allows an operator to control the entire system, including switching and machine control, from a single “device control server” (DCS) with a Microsoft graphical user interface.

Roswell supports PC networking through a standard Ethernet LAN, and a basic DCS can control up to 16 peripheral devices. Up to 10 DCSs can be included in a Roswell system, for the total control of a maximum 160 peripheral devices.

For a simple one-channel Roswell system, Guess says a station could run four software programs on one PC and one DCS.

While Roswell incorporates hierarchic video management algorithms that Odetics developed for its CacheMachine and Spectrum software, it is designed as a stand-alone system that will work with any combination of cart machines and disk recorders. The system also supports object-oriented programming to allow software upgrades, and application programing interfaces for third-party support.

Cutting Edge

By Glen Dickson

Fox Kids Network Worldwide is now being distributed to cable operators in Latin America off the PanAmSat PAS-3 satellite, joining Canal Fox, the BBC, CCTV, Discovery, ESPN, HBO, Viacom and The Weather Channel on the Atlantic Ocean Region bird. The new PAS-3 service consists of one digital channel on the satellite’s C-band Pan-American beam, which covers virtually all of Latin America and the Caribbean. The Fox Kids signal is being uplinked to PAS-3 from PanAmSat's Global Operations Center in Atlanta.

Robinson Helicopter Co., Torrance, Calif., has ordered 30 UltraMedia-RS gyrostabilized camera systems from FLIR Systems, Portland, Ore., in a move to sell smaller, less expensive ENG helicopters. Robinson plans to use the FLIR UltraMedia-RS as part of a turnkey aerial ENG platform that will cost less than $500,000, mounting the 35-pound camera system on the nose of the Robinson R44. “There is an entirely untapped segment of the market that needs a low-cost/high-performance airborne system that can capture steady images over long distances,” says Robinson Helicopter President Frank Robinson. “The combination of the R44 and the UltraMedia-RS gives them a system that is inexpensive, cost-effective and the best technology available.”

Post Edge, Miami Beach, Fla., has created a complete graphic design and production package for CBS TeleNoticias, the Spanish-language 24-hour news channel distributed in Latin America. The new on-air look, created by Post Edge in conjunction with CBS TeleNoticias's creative services team, includes a general news open, segment openings, animated backgrounds, bumper animation, three station IDs, transitional elements and audio sweetening. Post Edge performed hours of online editing and used its Discreet Logic Flame, QLantel Paintbox and 3-D graphics equipment to create animations. “Oftentimes, the Flame is used just to add new elements into a scene,” says Post Edge producer Romulo Guardia. “For this project, wire framed objects were textured and animated in an intricate and elaborate process.”

Cincinnati Bell Information Systems (CBIS) has netted its first cable subscriber management and billing contract. The company will run the CableMaster 2000 subscriber management and billing system for Galaxy Telecom LP of Sikeston, Mo., which has more than 202,000 subscribers. CBIS will operate the system for Galaxy in its Cincinnati and Orlando data centers. Galaxy, which serves communities in 18 midwestern and southern states, will use the CBIS CableMaster 2000 system to consolidate its various operations into a subscriber management system.
Broadband snags $30 million MMDS deal

Image Wireless to launch digital service in Canada

By Glen Dickson

Digital wireless supplier Broadband Networks Inc. (BNI) has received a $30 million order from Image Wireless Communications to supply equipment for a digital MMDS service that Image Wireless is starting in Saskatchewan, Canada, next month.

Winnipeg-based Broadband will supply Image Wireless with MPEG-2 encoders, digital MMDS transmitters, RF modulation equipment and MPEG-2 consumer set-top decoders for the wireless service, which is scheduled to launch with 55 compressed channels on March 5.

The Saskatchewan service would be the second digital MMDS installation in Canada, following SkyCable in Brandon, which is owned by Craig Broadcast Systems. BNI also outfitted SkyCable's digital MMDS operation.

Besides the BNI equipment, Image Wireless has ordered broadcast towers from LeBlanc (the parent company of transmitter manufacturer Larcan), MMDS antennas from Andrew Corp., and consumer antennas with integral block downconverters from Pacific Monolithics and California Amplifier. Image Wireless's headend plant will use a combination of analog and digital tape and video servers for programming storage and playback, with automation software from Interactive Software Inc., says operations manager Jim Huziak.

Huziak won't give a ballpark figure for Image Wireless's total equipment investment, but he says the $30 million order with BNI is a "solid number."

Image Wireless's final capital investment will depend on how many subscribers from the Saskatchewan prairie sign up for the service. Neil McFadden, the company's director of public affairs and business development, says that Image Wireless has signed 1,000 subscribers so far but hasn't yet "actively pursued" a subscriber base. He says that after a three-year system build, the company hopes to have more than 25,000 subscribers.

The MMDS service will be distributed from 13 broadcast towers and 20 trunking, or relay towers, throughout Saskatchewan. Image Wireless delivers 30 channels off a temporary 150-foot tower, with a pool of Image Wireless employees serving as test subscribers. A 600-foot tower at the service's projected Yorkton hub is within 15 feet of completion.

McFadden says the flat terrain of the Saskatchewan region is ideal for MMDS line-of-sight transmission, although Image Wireless will have to wait and see how the area's trees affect transmission when their leaves grow back this spring.

"So far, the testing has been excellent," McFadden says. "We are very pleased with the quality and reliability."

Leitch unveils MPEG-2 encoder

Leitch has introduced an MPEG-2 compression system that will encode video in the 4:2:0 and 4:2:2 profiles, making it suitable for both distribution and contribution feeds. The single-board module, which fits into a three-rack-unit Leitch DigiBus frame, uses IBM's MPEG-2 chip set and controls bit rates from 40 mbs down to 2 mbs (the minimum encoding rate for 4:2:2 profile is 15 mbs). It can support both analog NTSC and component digital inputs and outputs.

"It goes into the DigiBus family with our other cards," says John Piercy, vice president of marketing for Leitch Technologies. "It can also handle audio [Dolby AC-3 and Musicam] and date compression, and then it merges those streams back together to send out on satellite or fiber."

For the receiving end, Leitch manufactures a similar decoder, which also can handle either distribution- or contribution-quality compressed video. The encoder ranges in price from $40,000 to $60,000, while the decoder will sell for around $30,000. The encoder also is available with an optional plug-in noise reduction card to conserve bandwidth when recording and compressing off-air feeds. "That way you're not compressing artifacts, only real signals," Piercy says.

Leitch has demonstrated the MPEG-2 encoder to several broadcasters, including the Canadian Broadcasting Corp., and hopes to begin "full-fledged testing" after NAB '97, says Piercy. The unit should start shipping in July.

HELP WANTED INSTRUCTION

Positions in Communication. The University of Southwestern Louisiana will hire two assistant professors and one instructor in the Department of Communication in the Fall 1997. Applicants are sought with experience in journalism, public relations, visual communication, advertising, or broadcasting. Assistant professors must have the doctorate; instructors must have at least a master's degree and extensive professional experience. USL is the second-largest university in the state, with approximately 17,000 students and 580 faculty. Located in the heart of Cajun country, USL draws students from 46 states and 77 foreign countries. The nationally accredited Department of Communication offers both bachelor's and master's degrees. Send a letter of application, resume, and the names, addresses and telephone numbers of three references to: Timothy Dee, Chair, Search Committee, Department of Communication, University of Southwestern Louisiana, P.O. Box 43650 USL, Lafayette, LA 70504-3650. Email: timdee@usl.edu Review will begin February 28, 1997 and will continue until the positions are filled. USL is an EEO/AA employer.
Broadcasting & Cable February 17 1997

Assistant Professor, Department of Mass Communications. Located on 2,660 acres just 20 minutes away from the cultural attractions of downtown St. Louis, MO. Southern Illinois University at Edwardsville enrolls approximately 11,000 students, including 2,400 graduate students. The Department of Mass Communications, with nine faculty members, offers bachelor's and master's degree programs and is supported by an active and influential alumni association. As the department approaches the 50th anniversary of its founding, it also approaches an exciting time of curricular innovation. The Fall 1997 semester will see the beginning of an integrated mass communications program that will require course work in both print and electronic media and offer specializations in visual communication, journalism, television, radio, corporate and institutional media, media advertising, and electronic journalism. Responsibilities: Teach three courses per semester in the undergraduate and graduate program. The successful candidate will have competencies in the following: visual communication, new technologies, photogrammetric, media administration, and multimedia. This position involves responsibility for the implementation and oversight of the visual communication specialization under the new integrated curriculum. Committee assignments, student advisement, thesis direction, and other duties as assigned. Term of contract: Nine months, continuing. Salary range: Competitive. Qualifications Required: Ph.D. in mass communications and three years professional experience required. Closing Date For Applications: Review of applications will begin on March 15, 1997 and will continue until the position is filled. Submit resumes, three letters of recommendation, and transcripts to: Patrick Murphy, Chair, Search Committee, Department of Mass Communications, Southern Illinois University at Edwardsville, Campus Box 1775, Edwardsville, Illinois 62026-1775; http://www.sue.MASSCOMM As an affirmative action employer, SIUE offers equal employment opportunity without regard to race, color, creed or religion, age, sex, national origin, or disability. Applications from women and members of minority groups are especially encouraged.

Fox and the wolf

EDITOR: An open letter to Chase Carey, Fox Television chairman:

The bogus Fox News Channel “news bulletin” with Catherine Crier at the anchor desk that was used to initiate the entertainment during halftime ceremonies at the Super Bowl was, simply, wrong.

It was an affront to the television news presentation process, and was an affront to your affiliates and secondary affiliates, as is one of our stations, that treat news seriously and take earnestly our news responsibilities to our viewers. We don’t cry “wolf” just to get attention.

Perhaps, somehow, it didn’t occur to your creative or news people involved that at the break of a news bulletin, or news interruption, many of your viewers immediately expect the worst: another TWA 800, the outbreak of World War III, or a president’s assassination. When the interruption occurs, our emotions turn toward feelings of doom—assuming, particularly, that if the Super Bowl is being interrupted a world-class disaster has occurred.

When we realize that we’ve just been hoaxed, that this was nothing more than a frivolous introduction to the Blues Brothers, we are now angry and feel our emotions have been used—not abused—for all the wrong reasons.

It’s audience manipulation at its worst, at the expense of the credibility of the Fox news operation.

If Fox is to be a serious news presence, this sort of nonsense should be stopped, apologized for and never repeated. If you think this sort of thing is all right, then we know exactly what Fox News is and what matter it serves: entertainment. No more, no less.—Beverly Brechter, vice president, Brechter Management Co., Briarcliff Manor, N.Y.

Avoiding errors at HITS

Richard C. Fickle is getting accustomed to playing nanny for TCI Technology Ventures' Headend in the Sky, or HITS, as it's known.

As vice president for marketing and new business development for what is essentially a digital contracting service for cable MSOs and programers, Fickle answers to David Beddow, senior vice president, TCI Technology Ventures.

But it's really Fickle who—figuratively—is changing the diapers and getting up in the middle of the night.

"It's kind of like a newborn infant," Fickle says of HITS. "The first months or year or so from birth is a time when it learns how to walk and talk and articulate things in such a way as to be successful."

Despite its name, HITS is a good deal more than a satellite that beams digital bits to earth-based cable system headends. With its National Digital Television Center (NDTC) component, it's also a multimillion-dollar uplink center and digitizing operation that can translate analog programming into 1s and 0s.

HITS may still be in its infancy, but it's already well beyond the crawling stage. Indeed, it is up and running, with parent TCI using HITS to deliver its ALL TV digital cable service to Hartford, Conn., Arlington Heights, Ill., and Fremont-Sunnyvale, Calif. TCI officials have said they plan to roll out ALL TV to as many as 5 million subscribers this year.

But HITS, with the NDTC in Littleton, Colo., and a G7 bird orbiting at 91 degrees west, was designed to support more just TCI. Indeed, the main thrust of HITS is to be a contractor that can provide digital compression services or digital feeds to any and all comers.

"It could generate some new revenue for TCI that isn't expected revenue," says Ted Henderson of Janco Partners in Denver.

HITS now has 140 letters of intent—largely the doing of Fickle and his staff—from MSOs and programers large and small.

One of Fickle's key responsibilities is to help potential customers build economic models that demonstrate how their businesses—programers and MSOs alike—can benefit from HITS.

"Today it's a different story from what it will be in a couple of years," Fickle says. "Our objective today is to be a catalyst for having digital TV accepted by the marketplace."

"Our objective today is to be a catalyst for having digital TV accepted by the marketplace."

Richard C. Fickle

MSOs are clearly interested in digital. With DBS an ever-encroaching presence, digital has been embraced by the cable industry as both a defensive and an offensive thrust: defensive because it addresses DBS's current advantages of picture quality and bandwidth; offensive because it offers the capability for two-way, high-speed data service as well as video.

The issue, as it often is, is one of balance. Digital looks great in theory and in practice, but if it costs too much to roll out, consumers will stay away, leaving MSOs holding a leaky revenue bucket.

Which, of course, is precisely where HITS and Fickle come in. With HITS, MSOs still have to supply subscribers with digital converter boxes (hardly cheap at an estimated $450 a crack) and must buy some minimal headend equipment. Without HITS, each MSO would essentially be reinventing the wheel, providing uplink and digitizing operations, a move that all but the biggest would have a hard time affording.

"Mission one is to spread MPEG-2 content over the [HITS] satellite," says Fickle. "The second part is set-top management. [Digital] set-tops are complex. They're addressable, like analog [set-tops], but they have more applications for data and are capable of more. At HITS, we're the national processing center to manage complexity, reduce the cost of capital at local sites and bring in new services that couldn't be done on a site-by-site basis."

Fickle, a 12-year veteran of the cable industry, has been with TCI for six of the past eight years and was with Jones Intercable from 1984 to 1988. During his tenure at the nation's largest cable MSO, he ran Netlink, the programming purveyor for C-band satellites, and was instrumental in the launch of Primestar by TCI. He also ran WestMarc's cable operations for a time.

Given his experience in cable and DBS sectors, Fickle has a broader perspective than some in the industry. Last year's DBS incursion on cable didn't catch him off guard.

Meanwhile, Fickle is conservatively optimistic about HITS.

"Our strategy is to get contracts done—the first ones should come in the next 60 days," he says. "In the first half of the year, you'll see us focusing on supporting large MSOs but also working with smaller and midsize markets.... That should set the stage for a multiplier effect in the second half of '97."

DEATHS

Eleanor Prescott, 50, senior producer, ABC News, died Feb. 9 at North Shore University Hospital in Manhasset, Long Island. She had been taken to the hospital after experiencing chest pains. A 17-year veteran of ABC News, Prescott most recently worked on Good Morning America/Sunday. Also during her tenure at ABC, she executive-produced Business World, a weekly financial news program. She also produced The Weekend Report and 20/20.

Earlier, Prescott was with NBC News in Washington as a writer and producer of Today. She is survived by her husband, Nicholas, and two sons.

Bob Einhorn, 51, died Feb. 9 in New York of kidney disease. Einhorn was a Katz Media Group employee for more than 25 years. He joined Katz in 1972 as an account executive. He moved up the ranks steadily, and in 1988 was named VP/director, research, Katz National Television. Einhorn is survived by his wife, Stacey, and two children.

Arthur Kent, 74, television technician, died Feb. 9 in Delray Beach, Fla. Kent joined NBC Television in 1953 as an audio technician. He worked on such "golden age" shows as Texaco Star Theater, Your Show of Shows and the Tonight show with Jack Paar. He retired from NBC in 1988. During his tenure at NBC, Kent became president of the National Association of Broadcast Employees and Technicians (NABET). He also was a founding member of the New York chapter of the National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences and its most recent president. He is survived by his wife, Jeannette, and three children.

Martin Schneider, 52, writer/correspondent, died Feb. 3 of brain cancer in Rockville, Md. Schneider began his career as a writer for NBC, New York. He later worked for Wlwc(TV) New Bedford, Mass., as a writer/reporter; KDKA-TV Pittsburgh as a producer, and CBS Radio News as a writer. In 1971 he joined Voice of America as West Coast correspondent. Schneider wrote American Moments, a daily feature focusing on important events in American history and one of VOA's most popular programs. He is survived by his wife, Carol, and two children.

US West Media Group (UMG) executives confirmed last week that they continue to talk with Time Warner about restructuring the Time Warner Entertainment partnership (UMG owns 25.5%) but said little has changed over the past several months. The comments from UMG CEO Chuck Lillis and CFO Richard Post are in contrast with comments earlier in the week from Time Warner CEO Gerald Levin, who said the companies had reached "conceptual understanding" in restructuring the partnership. Time Warner has been seeking to restructure the partnership—partly in an effort to shed some of its $17.5 billion in debt—for more than a year. The executives' comments came during conference calls concerning UMG's fourth-quarter and year-end financial statements (see page 43).

An Orange County, Calif., Superior Court judge has denied a request by the Mighty Ducks of Anaheim to force Fox Sports West 2 to simulcast the hockey team's games on Fox Sports West. At the request of the Ducks, another hearing has been set for Feb. 25. The Ducks allege that Fox Sports West breached its contract by moving the team to the new Fox Sports West 2 channel. The month-old Sports West 2 has 500,000 subscribers, while its sister network claims more than 4 million.

The Gordon Elliott Show is going on hiatus at the end of this month to give stations time to decide if the show will continue for a fourth season next fall. Gordon Elliott, produced by Eyemark Entertainment and distributed by Twentieth Television, has struggled this season with an average 1.5 Nielsen Media Research household rating. The talker will have enough episodes in the can to stretch through the end of this season when production wraps on Feb. 28. Eyemark and Twentieth plan to discuss the show's future with stations once broadcasters have had a chance to analyze the February sweeps results.

Dallas Cowboy Erik Williams has filed a libel suit against LIN Television's KXAS-TV Fort Worth for falsely accusing him of rape. Williams is charging the NBC affiliate, and one of its reporters, with defamation, negligence, fraud, invasion of privacy and trespassing. Attorneys for the station denied the allegations.

Moody's assigned a B1 rating to TC! Satellite Entertainment's (TSAT) $750 million secured credit facility and B3 ratings to its proposed $150 million senior subordinated notes and $200 million senior subordinated discount notes. Moody's said the ratings, both non-investment (junk) grade, reflect TSAT's marginal operating profitability, expenditures that will translate into negative cash flow for several years, competitive challenges and uncertainty regarding Tempo satellites.

Gray Communications Systems Inc. is paying $40 million for WTN-TV Washington/Greenville, N.C. Gray will acquire the ch. 7 station (pending FCC approval) once Raycom Media Inc. closes on it. As part of a package deal, Raycom offered to buy the station from AFLAC Inc. in August 1996. But because of FCC duopoly rules, Raycom had to get rid of NBC affiliate WTN-TV, in the nation's 104th-largest Nielsen market, or nearby WECT-TV Wilmington, N.C. (ch. 6), also an NBC affiliate but in market 155. Raycom acquired WECT in May 1996 from Ellis Communications Inc.

House Telecommunications Subcommittee Chairman Billy Tauzin (R-La.) in a Feb. 14 letter to U.S. Trade Representative designate Charlene Barshefsky said the Communications Act of 1934 permits "unlimited indirect foreign investment in common carrier licenses" and that no implementing legislation would be necessary to ratify a World Trade Organization trade deal on telecommunications. However, "the issue of foreign ownership of broadcast licenses has always been and will continue to be of special concern to the United States Congress," Tauzin wrote. "In light of this fact, it would be my hope that USTR would not in the future seek to negotiate, without prior congressional direction...."

Motion Picture Association of America President Jack Valenti will be the keynote speaker at the NAB TV/Television Bureau of Advertising Joint Luncheon at the NAB convention on April 7. Valenti, MPAA president since 1966, led the TV ratings implementation group and heads the industry ratings oversight board.

Walt Disney Co. is in negotiations with Starwave Corp. to obtain a controlling interest in the Bellevue, Wash., Internet firm. Starwave has designed Websites including ESPN SportsZone and NBA.com. A source says the complex deal being negotiated could be consummated within the next month.

Disney reports a 33% increase in net income to $749 million for the quarter ended Dec. 31, 1996. Disney attributes the increase to higher operating income from all of its business segments, including a $135 gain from the sale of KCAL(TV) Los Angeles.

Revenue edged up 4%, to $1.9 billion, driven by a $63 million revenue increase at ESPN and The Disney Channel. ESPN's revenue growth was spurred by higher ad revenues and affiliate fees. The increases were partially offset by a $13 million drop in revenue at the ABC network, which was due to lower ratings.

Errata—U.S. Broadcast Group's seven TV-station group is for sale, but Bob Fish's status with the company was incorrectly reported in the Jan. 20 Broadcasting & Cable. Fish remains chairman of the company; Jason Elkin is its CEO.

Can’t win for losin’

There’s still a long row to hoe for the 105th Congress’s campaign reformers, led by the tenacious John McCain (R-Ariz.), chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee. Some could be forgiven for writing off the rewriting of rules as being DOA, given the opposition of Majority Leader Trent Lott. But deader snakes than that have crawled, and anything could yet happen on Capitol Hill.

Our interest at the moment is concentrated on free TV time for political candidates, a feature of the proposed McCain legislation. But even if that doesn’t come to pass in that forum, it could still gain traction at the FCC as part of the service rules that will accompany digital television. Chairman Reed Hundt’s ante is 5% of airtime (some 2% for children’s), which might leave five hours a week for electioneering.

The idea of shifting the burden of campaigning away from the electorate and onto the medium must sound great to everyone but the medium. No free space in newspapers and magazines. Billboards home free. Cable, we’re happy to say, exempt. Only broadcaster airtime expropriated by the national government, whose officials are sworn never to pass a law abridging freedom of the press.

If either the congressional or the FCC measure is put to a vote it may pass, just because it’s so hard to oppose. The best tactic may be to stall. The incumbents in Congress have little interest in reform, and Hundt won’t be at the FCC forever. Maybe this wrong idea’s time hasn’t come after all.

You make the call

The very people that the new TV ratings system was meant to appease were martialed against it last week, while the industry that resisted it as unnecessary and unworkable was saying give it a chance. Meanwhile, hearings on the Hill are planned for the end of this month so that Congress can put its 1,070 cents in. And this is just the ratings system. Wait until the V-chip is added to the mix.

The problem is, of course, that once you start making content calls, everyone turns into an umpire. Just take your average sports bar during a close play at home and multiply it by a few million.

The conservative Parents Television Council has pronounced the age-based ratings “hopelessly vague,” “inconsistent” and “contradictory.” These are, in essence, the same ratings that have been applied to movies for three decades. The PTC was joined by various parental and child advocacy groups and some legislators who want, well, what they want. Then there is the American Family Association. It doesn’t like the ratings either. We know because we’ve had to sort by hand tens of thousands of postcards to that effect.

Senate Commerce Committee Chairman John McCain (R-Ariz.) said last week that he had heard from the parents and children’s advocacy groups complaining about the ratings system, leading him to conclude that the industry had not consulted all interested parties. That’s a safe conclusion; it would have had to consult about 97 million TV households. (It did, by the way, consult with last week’s complainers.)

We knew the ratings/V-chip would be a mine field. The loud sounds you heard from Washington last week were those mines beginning to explode.

At the movies

What has 24 Oscar nominations and is flying directly to cable? “The English Patient.” “Shine” and “Evita.” Last week Turner scooped up the TV network premiere rights (after the pay window, of course) to those and other big ticket theatricals. As this week’s cover story points out, the networks are widening their cable orbit, but cable is returning the favor by encroaching on their turf, particularly when it comes to movies. It’s a new, and newly competitive, world out there.
GET CABLE READY

Broadcasting & Cable gets readers ready for the action at NCTA 1997 with an invaluable NCTA Convention package, including our weekly issue and two up-to-the-minute special tabloid-sized dailies published on-site in New Orleans.

NCTA Convention Issue

Our March 17 NCTA Convention Issue previews the year’s biggest cable gathering and includes in-depth features. Our must-read coverage includes the ultra-competitive cable arena and the outlook for the survival of New Cable Networks. Plus, we’ll examine the new digital and advanced analog Set-top Boxes on the market.

NCTA Tabloid-sized Dailies

On March 18 and 19, Broadcasting & Cable publishes special tabloid-sized NCTA Dailies designed to give NCTA attendees breaking news from the convention floor and events.

Unmatched Reach Among Top Cable Executives

Distribution of Broadcasting & Cable’s Convention Issue and Dailies on the convention floor at NCTA and to the hotel rooms of every registered NCTA attendee means an audience for your message of the most powerful players in cable. In addition, our Convention Issue reaches our regular weekly readership of 35,000 leading decisionmakers in television, cable and related industries.

Make sure you’re cable-ready. To reserve your space in Broadcasting & Cable’s NCTA issues, call Millie Chiavelli at (212) 337-6943 or your advertising sales representative today.
