When Media Moguls Collide

By John M. Higgins and Steve McClellan

NEW YORK

I f you think the war between Rupert Murdoch and Ted Turner is bruising, look at the one quietly shaping up between Murdoch and Mickey Mouse.

Media dealmakers have watched with fascination—and a bit of anxiety—the recent deals that have sent News Corp. Chairman Murdoch and Walt Disney Co. Chairman Michael Eisner head-to-head in major bidding wars involving Disney’s two most valuable businesses: children’s entertainment and sports.

Disney lost both contests, clearing the way for Murdoch to convert Pat Robertson’s Family Channel into a daytime children’s channel and to use Cablevision Systems Corp.’s SportsChannel to forge the Fox Sports hodgepodge regional sports operation into a formidable challenger to ESPN.

Media executives now ask how hot the fight will become. “These are companies that are now limitless in their ambition and huge in power,” says one senior media executive who has dealt with both companies. “When locomotives collide on the Great Divide, it’s hard to tell where the pieces fly.”

Such turf fights among the Broadcasting & Cable Top 25 media companies inevitably will become bigger and more frequent. As the biggest media players continue to gobble up other big players—Viacom Inc. and Paramount Communications Inc., Time Warner Inc. and Turner Broadcasting System Inc.—they become emboldened to attack other companies’ most lucrative niches.

That friction is likely to be a dominant force at investment banker Allen & Co.’s annual gathering for media moguls this week. If the past is a guide, as the biggest media players gather around the pool in Sun Valley, Idaho, for Herb Allen’s summer camp, one side of the veranda will be plotting attacks on the other side. “The fewer the players, the bigger the battles,” says Sanford C. Bernstein & Co. media analyst Tom Wolzien.

“You’re dealing with monstrous, cosmic egos,” says Porter Bibb, a managing director at New York investment banker Ladenburg Thalmann, of the sometimes brutal competitiveness among News Corp., Time Warner and Disney. "But just as with Tyson and Holyfield, business comes before anything else. Even after having part of his ear bitten off by Tyson, Holyfield says he'd fight him again if the financial incentives are there."

News Corp. and Disney officials minimize the rivalry. "This has nothing to do with attacking Disney; we are entering businesses we find attractive," says a News Corp. spokesperson.

The Disney–News Corp. fight is instructive. Fox Broadcasting's success is partly responsible for the woes at Disney's ABC. Fox posting ratings gains while ABC's audience trickles away. Fox Kids has for years poached on Disney's jealously guarded children's TV turf. Studio 20th Century Fox is even trying to attack Disney's formidable animation franchise with "Anastasia" this fall.

"It's not a personality war per se, not like Ted and Rupert," says the CEO of one media company. "It's that every ball field they show up in, the other guy's there. Inevitably, a rivalry builds up."

Murdoch's yearlong courting of International Family Entertainment poses a bigger threat to Eisner than do personalities or ratings. Fox Kids Worldwide's venture with Saban Entertainment sought to grab IFE to reprogram The Family Channel's daytime hours as a Nickelodeon-like children's network.

An IFE Securities and Exchange Commission filing shows that as News Corp. sat on the cusp of cutting a deal, another bidder had been circling—which sources identify as Disney—pounced into the fray to wrest The Family Channel away.

The company tried to outmaneuver News Corp., dangling the possibility of topping Murdoch's $13 billion, $35-per-share offer if it could get an exclusive negotiating period with IFE that would shut Murdoch out of the room. That tactic failed. "It got pretty ugly," says one executive familiar with the negotiations.

Disney's attack on Rainbow Sports was even more forceful. TCI chief John Malone had been seeking a deal between TCI's Liberty Sports and Rainbow for seven years; success was limited to a couple of joint ventures that yielded mixed results. Suddenly, an overleveraged Cablevision badly needed cash, in part to help pay for its buyout of Madison Square Garden.

But sources say Dolan felt that by forging a partnership to compete with ESPN, Cablevision would enjoy a much bigger payoff in a few years than by selling to Disney today. "You weren't building anything," says one source.

Disney has retaliated in part by suing to break the TV contract between its Anaheim Angels and Fox Sports West. Some media executives look askance at a recent critical ABC Nightline piece about Murdoch. And with the companies grating on so many fronts, executives believe more sparks are likely to come.

"More intelligently, it is about business," says the CEO of one cable company. "But it's looking like a fight."

Time Warner wins NYC cable news fight

NEW YORK—After months of wrangling, Time Warner Inc. won an appeals court ruling on July 3 that blocks New York City from airing News Channel and Bloomberg: LP's Bloomberg Television Network on public access cable channels in the city.

The appeals court decision affirms an injunction issued by a U.S. District Court against New York City last November. That decision found that the city had overstepped its bounds and threatened Time Warner's rights under federal law by trying to force the cable operator to add FNC and Bloomberg to two of five public access channels.

Those channels, Time Warner argued and the court held, are reserved for public, educational or governmental use, not for commercial news services. Installing FNC and Bloomberg on public access would violate its cable franchise agreement, Time Warner contended.

New York Mayor Rudy Giuliani argued that FNC would bring some 1,500 jobs to New York and was an appropriate cable news service because it is New York-based. City officials charged Time Warner with breach of contract and fraud for allegedly reneging on an oral agreement with News Corp. to add FNC. Time Warner says it made no such agreement.

Time Warner rejected both FNC and Bloomberg from its commercial channels as well; instead, last year the cable operator added rival news channel MSNBC, which is a joint venture between Microsoft and NBC.

Stuart Gold, an attorney for Time Warner and a partner at Cravath Swaine & Moore, says the latest decision "continues the injunction that prevents the city from interfering with our programming."

NBC’s Wright, guilds resist ratings

By Paige Albinia
WASHINGTON

NBC President Bob Wright last week took broadcasters to task over the latest round of TV ratings negotiations, saying he was “disappointed that our industry seems to have lost the sense of where to draw the line.” It was his first public statement on the issue.

NBC has steadfastly opposed a content-based ratings system, although the network always has said it wants to see the deal made in order to decide whether to sign.

Wright is not alone in his belief that a content-based system is a start on the slippery slope toward federal regulation of content. Last week three Hollywood guilds—representing actors, writers, and directors—announced they are willing to go to court against a new ratings system if they feel it breaches their First Amendment rights.

“We see this as a potential assault on the First Amendment,” said Brad Radnitz, president of the Writers Guild of America. “We believe that without the sanctity of the First Amendment, our system—like a deck of cards—would crumble.”

“We want to make sure that the language describing the new system doesn’t allow Congress and the advocacy groups to start meddling around with the content of programs,” said Jack Shea, president of the Directors Guild of America.

The WGA, DGA and the Screen Actors Guild said they want to study the new system, but that “reserve all legal, political and other options open to them, including opposing by a federal lawsuit” any action that infringes on their members’ First Amendment rights.

Negotiations stalling last week over broadcasters’ request for legislative assurances that they would not have to review the ratings system again for three years. Some of the advocacy groups have been willing to offer an 18-month moratorium, while others say even that is too long. After a meeting last Monday night, negotiators decided not to reconvene until after the Fourth of July holiday.

There is general agreement on the new ratings system itself: it would add S for sex, V for violence, L for mature language and D for suggestive dialogue to the existing age-based ratings. It also would add FFV (for fantasy violence) to certain cartoons for children age seven and older.

NBC’s Wright says that once Congress is allowed to guide the industry toward creating a ratings system, it’s a short step before Congress is censoring programming.

“No senator Joe Lieberman [D-Conn.], my senator, recently admitted that to him, the debate about our parental guidelines system is not about, quote, ‘rating the garbage,’ but how to, quote ‘get rid of the garbage,’” Wright said in a July 1 speech to the New York State Broadcasters Association.

In search of the I-chip

Internet critics seek alternative to legislation

By Paige Albinia
WASHINGTON

The Supreme Court’s recent decision that Internet content—including most pornography—cannot be regulated is not going to deter President Clinton from trying to keep that content out of children’s reach.

In a speech last week Clinton reiterated that children should be protected from some Internet content, while he unveiled an administration report on electronic commerce that declared no new taxes or duties should be levied on the Internet.

He also said he would convene a meeting with industry leaders and groups representing Internet users, teachers, parents and librarians “to help parents protect their children from objectionable content in cyberspace.

“I ask the industry leaders,” Clinton said, “to join with us in developing a solution to the Internet as powerful as for television, to protect children in ways that are consistent with the First Amendment.”

An aide to Representative Edward Markey (D-Mass.) said Markey resists the V-chip analogy, “Do they mean that government should pass a bill to require there be a technological fix?” the aide said. Although backers of the now-dead Internet regulation provisions of the Communications Decency Act remain adamant in their hope for successful legislation, many legal analysts say the high court’s decision left little room for any law to effectively and constitutionally regulate Internet content.

For his part, Markey has introduced a bill that would require Internet service providers to make blocking software—or “B-ware,” as Markey terms it—available to customers. The software would allow them to screen Websites. ISPs would be required to offer that software, which includes such products as Cyber Patrol or Net Nanny, free or at cost.

House Telecommunications Subcommittee Chairman Billy Tauzin (R-La.) agrees with the administration, in principle, that children need to be protected from “indecent” content on the Internet.

“We think that should happen in the form of a voluntary cooperative agreement with the industry,” said Tauzin aide Ken Johnson.

The TV ratings system also was supposed to be voluntary, Johnson said, but became mandatory once including the V-chip in television sets became law.

“Considering...the administration’s propensity to flip-flop on issues, we are going to be watching what they are doing very closely,” Johnson said.

Tauln will introduce a bill July 16 designed to prevent the government from interfering with the Internet through new regulations.

FCC takes back channels 60-69
Some will go to public service agencies, others will be auctioned

By Chris McConnell
WASHINGTON

The FCC this week will reclaim TV channels 60-69, but companies may still have a shot at delivering TV programming over the frequencies.

The commission’s plan calls for allowing such services as mobile phones and two-way radio to operate in the band. For the time being, however, the commission is not foreclosing the possibility that future auction winners might use the channels to carry new TV signals as well.

Channels in the 60-69 band already are carrying 97 analog TV signals and will be carrying another 15 digital signals once stations begin transmitting DTV. FCC officials earlier this year kept the DTV assignments in the band to a minimum in order to reclaim the spectrum band and auction the channels.

FCC officials say the reallocation scheme proposes to devote four of the 10 channels to public safety services, such as ambulance and police communications. The rest of the spectrum would go to commercial services, with the precise rules for those services to be determined later. Providers of the commercial services will acquire the spectrum through an auction.

At the same time, officials say the commission is not mixing the possibility that a bidder on the spectrum might use the channels to deliver TV. Some groups have been pushing the commission to adopt such a strategy. Earlier this year, a coalition including Jesse Jackson and BET Holdings chief Robert Johnson urged the FCC to auction digital TV licenses as a way of promoting minority ownership in television. When the FCC issued its DTV rules in April, FCC Chairman Reed Hundt voiced approval of Johnson’s suggestion: “An auction with that desirable possibility should be encouraged.”

Last week BET Senior Vice President/General Counsel Byron Marchant said would-be broadcasters still have several hurdles to overcome before they can bid on any digital TV spectrum. Marchant cited pending petitions for reconsideration of the DTV rules along with pending budget legislation.

Current drafts of House and Senate budget language require the commission to devote four of the channels to public safety use and to auction the six other channels for “commercial purposes.”

“People may still have a shot, but it’s a ways away,” said Marchant.

Networks to get leeway on kids preemptions
FCC to OK plan by ABC, CBS, NBC to handle sports

By Chris McConnell
WASHINGTON

For now, FCC officials are planning to give networks some breathing room in scheduling weekend sports and children’s educational shows.

Officials say the commission this week plans to reply to network concerns that the children’s programming will conflict with weekend sports, particularly for viewers on the West Coast. Three networks—CBS, NBC and ABC—have submitted evaluations of the scheduling problems along with detailed proposals for rescheduling preempted shows.

Sources in and out of the FCC expect officials to give a green light to network proposals for rescheduling preempted children’s programming. Officials say they then plan to evaluate the results after one year.

“I’ve been for flexibility from the start,” FCC Commissioner James Quello said of the scheduling issue, although last week he had not yet seen the commission responses to the networks.

The networks requested the scheduling flexibility earlier this year after realizing that the weekend sports programming could keep some of the children’s shows from qualifying as “regularly scheduled” programming.

Beginning Sept. 1, stations will be required to air three hours of children’s educational programming each week or to demonstrate to the FCC that they have aired equivalent educational material. Stations that do not meet the three-hour “processing guideline” will need to show the FCC at license renewal time how they have served the educational needs of children.

An original draft of the children’s TV rule said that shows would not count as regularly scheduled if a station preempted more than 10% of a 13-week run.

Although that clause was struck from the final rule, broadcasters have been concerned that FCC staff would employ such a benchmark in reviewing educational programming. The industry has also pointed out the issue to lawmakers; late last month a group of eight senators asked the FCC to allow stations flexibility in scheduling sports and educational fare.

Commission officials last week appeared to be taking such an approach. Sources said they expected that the commission would send letters about the preemption issue to each of the three networks this week.

NBC’s ‘Saved by the Bell’ is often preempted by sports programing.

Hundt, Quello will clash over alcohol ads

By Chris McConnell
WASHINGTON

Red Hundt and Jim Quello are headed for a showdown over alcohol advertising this week.

The FCC chairman again will attempt to hold a vote on a proposed FCC inquiry into broadcast hard-alcohol advertising. Quello has the option of pulling the item from the meeting agenda but instead plans to vote against it at the meeting Wednesday.

"Why pull it again?" Quello asked last week, maintaining that he prefers to vote against the proposed inquiry and "get it out of the way."

Last month Commissioner Rachelle Chong pulled the proposed inquiry from the FCC's meeting agenda. For months both Chong and Quello have opposed FCC action on the issue, saying the FTC should deal with hard-alcohol advertising.

"We lack jurisdiction, and no amount of hectoring from the chairman's supposed 'bally pulpit' can change that." Quello said last month in supporting Chong's decision to pull the item from the agenda. Last week Quello also cited the ongoing FTC investigations. "The government already has taken responsible action," he said.

Hundt has maintained that the commission should study the issue. Commissioner Susan Ness, who has been less vocal, supports the idea of conducting an inquiry into the issue.

The expected tie will prevent that from happening, since a majority is required for the FCC to act.

Errata

The June 30 issue of Broadcasting & Cable incorrectly reported the new chain of command at CBS following the departure of CBS Inc. President Peter Lund. The story should have said that CBS Entertainment President Leslie Moonves now reports to Michael Jordan, chairman and CEO of Westinghouse/CBS.

ABC rethinks Your Choice TV

ABC has let Discovery Communications know that it will reevaluate its commitment to video-on-demand project Your Choice TV as it reviews its digital television strategy in the coming months. Preston Padden, president, ABC Television Network, sent a "protective letter" in early June to Discovery Chairman John Hendricks, reasserting the network's right to opt out after six months.

"We may or may not participate" after that time, says Padden, who sent Discovery the letter after being briefed on the project shortly after joining ABC last month. "Under the original plan, Your Choice TV was to show replays of network shows with network ads and ads from local [broadcast] affiliates," he says. "They have proposed major changes from the original plan. At the same time, ABC is about to undertake a soup-to-nuts review of digital television plans, so it is logical to include Your Choice within that review."

Padden says he will be meeting with Hendricks and other Discovery executives to discuss Your Choice in the next couple of weeks.

Take a letter

In an attempt to "break the logjam" in negotiations over TV ratings, House Telecommunications Subcommittee Chairman Billy Tauzin (R-La.) planned last Thursday to send a letter to Motion Picture Association of America head Jack Valenti assuring broadcasters that there will be no new ratings legislation in the House for three years if they all cut a deal. Tauzin spokesman Ken Johnson says Tauzin tried to get House Commerce Committee Chairman Tom Bliley (R-Va.) and Speaker of the House Newt Gingrich (R-Ga.) on board. Gingrich won't agree unless Bliley will, and Bliley will "not give blanket assurances until we know what the finished product is," says Commerce spokesman Mike Collins. Gingrich's spokesperson says that until Gingrich sees a letter, whether he will agree to offer any assurances is "a hypothetical." The bigger problem for broadcasters comes from the Senate, where no letters appear to be forthcoming.

NAB sees future in expansion

NAB is eyeing late prognosticator Jeanne Dixon's Washington townhouse, located next to NAB's headquarters. NAB is fairly "bursting at the seams," one source says, and would like to expand into the house. If NAB does buy the building, valued at approximately $1.6 million, the association will have some negotiating to do because of the home's residential zoning in Washington's Dupont Circle neighborhood.

Better late...

Peter Barton is smiling about Liberty Media Corp. and News Corp.'s deal to buy 40% of Cablevision Systems Corp.'s sport networks. The former Liberty president had long declared that it was Liberty's "manifest destiny" to get its hands on the Madison Square Garden network to give Liberty Sports a critical New York City ad outlet. That phrase drew much criticism from media executives, who believed Barton drove the MSG price past $1 billion when Viacom Inc. first auctioned it off in 1995. Barton is claiming vindication. "I have weathered the storm," he declares (although the deal happened after he had left the ship). "It was a noble act to make the MSG dream come true."

WASHINGTON

The budget bill making its way toward the House-Senate conference contains major spectrum victories for broadcasters, but the road to the President's pen could be pitted with potholes.

The administration continues to lobby for spectrum user fees; a firm date for return of the analog spectrum, and penalties for failure to meet the FCC's digital rollout timetable.

Joining the administration is ranking Commerce Committee member Representative John Dingell (D-Mich.), who has directed pointed questions about the House's amended bill at FCC Chairman Reed Hundt and the Congressional Budget Office.

Dingell is concerned about several provisions in the bill. It doesn't clearly assign minimum bids for spectrum auctions, and thus does not ensure that auctions will bring in a minimum amount of money. The House legislation assigns portions of spectrum for auction without regard for whoever is currently using it. And it requires the FCC to auction spectrum within a certain time frame regardless of whether the spectrum would be more valuable at another time.

Dingell also questions the CBO "scoring" process, by which budgeters assign an estimated cost to pieces of legislation. With regard to the spectrum portion of the budget, committee chairs have had to live or die by CBO estimates even if lawmakers think that what makes a good score also makes bad policy.

"During much of the debate on spectrum auctions, a key issue was the potential market for various frequencies," Dingell writes. "Our committee has received no convincing testimony that such demand will occur in the next five years, yet CBO appears to believe that auctions will raise significant revenues.... Please cite all evidence that CBO used in making its estimates of the value of spectrum..."

The conference committee could start proceedings as early as tomorrow (July 8), when Congress returns to session. The conference committee will give both sides a chance to re-sling their arrows.

The administration will aim its shots most carefully at the House legislation, which was changed by a "manager's amendment" on the House floor just before the House passed its version of the budget.

Before both bills went to their respective floors, the Office of Management and Budget—the administration's foot soldier on spectrum auctions—pointed out to the House and Senate that neither bill includes spectrum penalty fees, levies user fees, or "provide[s] a firm date for the termination of analog broadcasting," all of which the administration advocates.

While the Senate bill, OMB says, "is a substantial improvement over counterpart House legislation, we continue to have serious concerns." OMB will continue to raise them, sources say.

The biggest win for broadcasters so far is the "market tests" in both versions of the bill. Those tests would give broadcasters use of the spectrum far beyond the targeted 2006 give-back date.

Most lawmakers favor the Senate's version, which says that 95% of households in a market area must have access to local digital service through over-the-air signals, digital cable or direct broadcast satellite. One Senate staffer calls the language vague, however, suggesting there will be a conference fight over it, or even the tests themselves.

One administration source also says that vague language in the House bill explaining eligibility for exemptions from spectrum auctions may allow broadcasters to lay claim to more than just replacement digital spectrum.

The House allows exemption from auction "for initial licenses or con-

Activist administration may stay out of cyber-commerce

WASHINGTON—In a marked change from other Clinton administration policies, the President unveiled a report last Tuesday that recommends the government keep its hands off electronic commerce.

Revenue generated by Internet electronic commerce is expected to reach $200 billion in the U.S. by 2000 if left unregulated, the report says. The report recommends that no new taxes or duties be levied on the worldwide network.

The report was put together by senior administration official Ira Magaziner, who worked on Clinton's failed health care plan. That plan, which recommended heavy government regulation of the health care industry, failed to pass Congress.

Clinton has been a strong backer of such measures as the Communications Decency Act, a provision in the Telecommunications Act of 1996 that the Supreme Court last week called unconstitutional under the First Amendment. The administration also is in favor of the V-chip, a device that television set manufacturers are required to include in new television sets so that parents can block mature programming.

Outgoing FCC Chairman Reed Hundt said in a statement that "government can help by promoting open and competitive communications markets at home and abroad." In the report, the Clinton administration is advocating such a competitive position, but it refuses to back down on its encryption policies. The administration says that allowing the export of high-level security software endangers national safety because such software could fall into the hands of terrorists.

Computer companies are pleased with the administration's electronic commerce recommendations but still want the administration to relax its encryption policies.

Broadcasting permits assigned by the commission to existing terrestrial broadcast licenses for new terrestrial digital television services.”

The Senate's language allows exemption “for initial licenses or construction permits for new digital television service given to existing terrestrial broadcast licensees to replace their current television licenses.”

The key difference, the source says, is the word “replace.” Without it, the House language could allow broadcasters to keep their analog spectrum forever and to lay claim to more digital spectrum.

The administration sees that as a double whammy, or a double win for broadcasters, when combined with the House's proposal to relax duopoly and newspaper/television crossownership laws.

Republican lawmakers in the House Commerce Committee wanted to relax those laws as an added incentive for broadcasters who want to bid on the returned analog spectrum. Lawmakers believed that adding those bidders to the table would increase the value of the spectrum and drive up the bids.

But, says an administration source, if broadcasters could claim all available spectrum for any new digital service without restrictions against owning more than one full-power station in a market, broadcasters could keep competition at bay as they add to their digital holdings.

Broadcasters welcome Minow-less choices

But still oppose committee to study digital public interest duties

By Chris McConnell

WASHINGTON

Broadcasters like at least one of the choices the Clinton administration has made for its planned digital TV public interest advisory group.

Industry lobbyists welcome the administration’s decision to name one of their own—CBS Entertainment President Leslie Moonves—co-chairman of the advisory committee that will study digital broadcast public interest obligations. While Moonves will be joined by American Enterprise Institute Resident Scholar Norman Ornstein and the four other authors called for the creation of a “broadcast bank” that would provide airtime to candidates.

Under the plan, the government would eliminate its “lowest unit charge” regime and instead assess a fee on all broadcast advertising sales. The revenue—to be paid either in dollars or in airtime—would then go into the broadcast bank. Additionally, the proposal called for the government to obtain more broadcast bank revenue by auctioning channels 60-69.

Such free-airtime plans have won applause from FCC Chairman Reed Hundt. And last week several in Washington were quick to point out that Ornstein is married to Judith Harris, a former director of the FCC Office of Legislative Affairs.

Ornstein, an election analyst for CBS News and a columnist for USA Today and Roll Call, also has written on other broadcast-related issues. In one editorial, he called on Congress to use digital TV channels to achieve a balanced budget compromise.

“Six new channels for each existing one, commercially viable in a couple of years, with untold profit potential,” Ornstein wrote of the digital channels. “Auction them off.”

Moonves, meanwhile, will be reprising his role as the industry’s representative on a public interest-related initiative. It was Moonves who boarded a red-eye flight to Washington last summer to attend a White House announcement of a government/industry agreement on children’s television programing requirements.

"We look to people we know," one broadcast source says of Moones’s appointment to the new committee.

One source said last week that the White House may not name the rest of the committee for a few weeks.

Equally uncertain was the status of the FCC rulemaking that is expected to incorporate the committee’s recommendations. Hundt had hoped to launch an FCC inquiry into the public interest obligations of digital broadcasters and other spectrum users.

But the initiative, which Hundt had hoped to launch at the FCC’s July 9 meeting, has run into early resistance from commissioners James Quello and Rachelle Chong.

Late last month, Quello said he looked forward to the committee’s recommendations, but insisted that there was no need for the FCC to be “out in front” of the Vice President.

“Any imposition of burdensome additional quantifiable public interest obligations for new, costly, undeveloped services will impede growth,” Quello added.

Everett gaining support for FCC chair

Ralph Everett has picked up more congressional support to be the FCC’s next chairman. Last month, 31 members of the Congressional Black Caucus endorsed the Washington lawyer as the next chairman. “As a native of South Carolina, Ralph appreciates not only the necessity but the nuances of how to promulgate policies that address regional concerns of communities and businesses affected by evolving telecommunications policy,” said the June 25 letter. “There is no better time and no better person to serve as the next chairman of the FCC.”

Access Washington

Candidate appearances on Access Hollywood qualify as bona fide newscasts, the FCC said last week. Responding to a petition from the show, the commission said candidate appearances on Access Hollywood are not subject to rules requiring equal time for political candidates. “As with specific programs previously considered exempt under the newcast exemption, Access Hollywood appears to follow a traditional newscast format,” the commission said.

Scotland Yard, Interpol and the FCC

Extortion, pornography and copyright violations were among the issues under investigation at the FCC between October and March. In its semiannual report to Congress last week, the commission’s Office of Inspector General said it had opened 15 new cases and closed another 14 since its last report. Among the “significant” investigations listed in the report are a probe of possible extortion of the management of four radio stations in Vero Beach, Fla. The commission said it is assisting the FBI in the investigation, which is ongoing. In another case, the FCC is working with the FBI and two county police departments on a pornography case involving FCC employee use of the Internet from a commission computer. A third case involved a contractor upgrading computers at the Office of Inspector General. When officials saw the contractor making a copy of a copyrighted computer program stored in a nearby bookcase, the man’s FCC assignment “was terminated, and security escorted him from the building.”

Don’t kids like sports?

Lawmakers are urging the FCC to cut stations some slack in scheduling children’s educational programing. Network executives have been concerned that their educational lineups won’t count toward the FCC’s three-hour standard once stations start preempting the shows for weekend sports. In a June 27 letter to FCC Chairman Reed Hundt, eight senators asked the commission to allow the stations flexibility in rescheduling shows. “Local stations should not be faced with the difficult decision of choosing between the live broadcast of a very popular sports event and an equally popular children’s program,” said the letter, whose signers include Senator Conrad Burns (R-Mont.) and Orrin Hatch (R-Utah).

Purging the urge to merge

Unhappy with the dearth of competition in telecommunications, Senator Bob Kerrey (D-Neb.) has introduced legislation that would tie Justice Department approval of telecommunications mergers to proof that the mergers would “significantly enhance competition.” Kerrey’s proposal would cover combinations between most telephone companies, cable operators, DBS operators and broadcasters. The Justice Department’s current standard for reviewing mergers is “appropriate for competitive companies tending toward monopoly, but not for monopolies which should be moving toward competition,” Kerrey said on the Senate floor.

NAB wary of satellite repeaters

The FCC may have auctioned off the satellite radio spectrum, but the National Association of Broadcasters has not abandoned its battle against the service. Last month the association was urging the commission not to allow the use of terrestrial repeaters for the satellite radio. “NAB is unaware of a U.S. satellite system relying upon a terrestrial repeater component,” the association said. “Clearly, a sound technical basis is needed...before any rules governing terrestrial repeaters are considered and adopted.”

Satellite radio companies also have a new opponent at the FCC. Primosphere, itself a proponent of the service and an unsuccessful bidder on satellite radio spectrum, has asked the FCC to deny applications by CD Radio and American Mobile Radio Corp. to launch satellites. Primosphere says CD Radio is exceeding FCC limits on foreign ownership and maintains that the other auction winner, AMRC, may also be exceeding the limits.

Universal ends 'Crook and Chase' run

Producers continue to look for other venues

By Joe Schlosser

Universal Television Enterprises ended its six-month run with syndicated talk show Crook and Chase. After failing to land the show in two of the top three markets (New York and Chicago), Universal officials say enough is enough.

The show's producer, Jim Owens and Associates, has acquired the domestic distribution rights and is looking into syndication and cable options. Through mid-September, Crook and Chase will air in re-packaged programs. The show is cleared in 91 markets covering more than 45% of the nation.

Universal Television Enterprises President Jim McNamara says that without clearances in all top three markets, the show—which airs on KCAL(TV) Los Angeles—was not economically viable. McNamara said the limited amount of shelf space, combined with the diverting of Universal's resources to a number of projects—including the upcoming Maury Povich talk show—forced Universal to take such action.

Crook and Chase averaged a 1.7

'Syndication Marketplace'

TBS buys 'Moresha,' 'Parent 'Hood'

TBS has acquired the off-network rights to sitcoms from the two fledgling broadcast networks. TBS nabbed UPN's Moesha and The WB's The Parent 'Hood, which join the cable network's ever-increasing list of off-network shows. Both series will premiere on TBS in 2002. The Parent 'Hood goes into syndication in fall 1999. It has been acquired by Tribune Broadcasting and is being sold by Warner Bros. Domestic Television. Moesha is distributed by Worldvision and goes into syndication in 2000. According to sources, the asking price for the show in the top three markets is $115,000 per episode plus one minute of barter. Chris Craft, Paramount and other station groups have already picked up Moesha for its first three years.

Wayans' gets executive producer

Buena Vista Television has signed British independent production company Planet 24 to produce the Keenen Ivory Wayans show. Buena Vista also named Charlie Parsons, Planet 24's co-founder and a longtime British television producer, as the late-night show's executive producer. Planet 24's credits include Britain's popular morning program The Big Breakfast and the late-night music show The Word. Buena Vista will premiere the Wayans show Aug. 4.

Kid-friendly 'Kidazzle'

Treat Entertainment, producer of PBS series Kidazzle, has been in discussions about distributing the FCC-friendly series to commercial stations. An ad-supported version of the show is already distributed internationally by King World and has found some takers in Singapore, Malaysia and New Zealand. The show will not have to search for documentation of its kid-friendliness. If the PBS pedigree weren't enough, according to a Treat executive, when the BBC was pitched the show, it declined, saying Kidazzle was "far too educational" for its audience.

Arthel and Fred' additions

All American Television's new daily talk show The Arthel and Fred Show has added seven new staffers. Michael L. Weinberg was named supervising producer. Weinberg previously worked on Late Night with Conan O'Brien and Later With Bob Costas. Steve Grant, who last directed MTV's Loveline, was named the show's director Susan Gold and Laurie D. Muslow were named talent executives. Gold most recently operated her own talent firm, and Muslow was with daytime talker Scoop with Sam and Dorothy. Liz Tuccillo and Craig Carlisle join as executives and writers. The two have written comedy as a team and produced a number of stage shows. Finally, Kevin Rupnick has been added as production designer. Rupnick has worked on sitcoms All My Children and As the World Turns. The show, hosted by Arthel Neville and Fred Rogers, debuts Sept. 8.—IS Nielsen rating/9 share nationally in the May sweeps. The show was moved to Los Angeles in February from its 13-year production facility in Nashville.

Although Crook and Chase had its trouble in the national ratings, it has fared well in a number of southern and midwest markets. It posted a 5.2/23 on WBIR-TV Knoxville, Tenn., and a 4.9/21 on KSDK(TV) St. Louis.

"It is a show that has had some good stories but hasn’t done that well nationally," says Bill Carroll, vice president, director of programming, Katz Television Group. "They do a nice middle-of-the-road show, and unfortunately in today’s market a middle-of-the-road show doesn’t make it nationally.”

Lorianne Crook and Charlie Chase have hosted the show for 14 years, and Owens vows the show will continue for many more years.

CBS shuffles program lineups

Look for programing changes at CBS this month, from new time slots for its shows to the addition of new and familiar faces in prime time.

Beginning July 23 and continuing through the summer, Murphy Brown will air twice each week—in its new 8:30-9 p.m. fall slot on Wednesday and in its 9:30-10 p.m. slot on Monday. On Aug. 5, JAG will move from 9-10 p.m. Friday to its new 8-9 p.m. spot on Tuesday. On Aug. 7, Promised Land jumps from 8-9 p.m. Tuesday to its new 8-9 p.m. slot on Thursday, and Diagnosis Murder moves from 8-9 p.m. to 9-10 p.m. on Thursday.

The midseason news magazine Coast to Coast will return to the schedule on July 23 in the 9-10 p.m. slot and will continue to air July 30, Aug. 13, Aug. 27 and Sept. 3. Bernard Goldberg, Cynthia Bowers and Steve Hartman are among the correspondents returning to the series.

On Aug. 1, CBS will debut Ordinary/Extraordinary, a reality-based series hosted by John Schneider and Leanza Cornett that celebrates the human spirit. CBS picked up six episodes of the show from LMNO Productions. —LR

Pick a number

This one from the "Which Nielsen Number Do You Pick?” book: Local data from the May sweeps have The Late Show with David Letterman outranking The Tonight Show with Jay Leno and Politically Incorrect with Bill Maher in adults 18-34. According to local data from 187 stations, Letterman garnered a 2.3/13, while Leno—according to data from 183 stations—earned a 2.2/13 in the young-adult demo. In Letterman’s second half-hour opposite Politically Incorrect, the CBS show led in the demo with a 2.7/11 and Maher’s show earned a 2.6/11, according to local data from 85 stations where the two go head-to-head. Yet in the national numbers, Leno still reigns in the demo with a 2.3/11, while Letterman trails with a 2.0/10.

ABC unveils movies, made-for's and minis

ABC last week announced its slate of theatricals, made-fors and specials for the 1997-98 season. Theatricals include “Apollo 13,” “Waterworld,” “Dangerous Minds,” “First Knight,” “Love Affair,” “My Family/Mi Familia” and “Quiz Show.” The miniseries include Medusa’s Child—based on the novel by John J. Nance—as well as Oprah Winfrey Presents: The Wedding, starring Halle Berry, and Peter Benchley’s Creature. Among the made-fors are The Advocate’s Devil, starring Ken Olin, and Bad As I Wanna Be: The Dennis Rodman Story. Specials include Motown’s 40th: A Retrospective, A Tribute to Aaron Spelling and the annual Academy Awards.

Creative appointment

Former Witt-Thomas president Gary Levine was tapped to replace Warner Bros.’ David Janollari as executive vice president of creative affairs. As the number-two to Warner Bros. TV President Tony Jonas, Levine will oversee all network drama and comedy series development. While at Witt-Thomas, Levine helped develop Pearl and The John Larroquette Show. The departing Janollari will form a production company with Bob Greenblatt, the former number-two in programing at Fox.

Bergeron out at ‘Breakfast’

In a mutual decision, Tom Bergeron has left Fox’s slow-growth morning show, Fox After Breakfast. The show, which has averaged a .9 rating since its debut, has already bid farewell to co-host Laurie Hibberd as well as the original executive producers. Announcer Nancy Giles will take over hosting duties with “Road Warrior” correspondent Jeff McGregor until a replacement is found.

WB sign-up

The WB has signed a four-year agreement with WBNX-TV Cleveland to carry the network’s programing. WBNX-TV replaces WUAH(TV) there, which carried The WB as a secondary affiliate until a recent deal in which it will become exclusive to UPN beginning in January through 2004. The WB’s start date with WBNX-TV has yet to be determined.

Morning addition

Hall Gessner has been named executive producer of CBS News Saturday Morning, the new two-hour broadcast that will premiere in mid-September. The broadcast will be co-anchored by Susan Molinari, who will step down from her seat in the U.S. House of Representatives at the end of July. Gessner was a senior producer of Coast to Coast, the freshman CBS news magazine that premiered in January.

Separately, ABC confirmed that Lisa McRee will replace Joan Lunden as co-anchor of Good Morning America starting in September. McRee has co-anchored two newscasts (5 p.m. and 11 p.m.) on KABC-TV Los Angeles since 1994. Before that she was an original anchor of World News Now, ABC’s overnight newscast. —LR

Westinghouse denies Microsoft/CBS report

Westinghouse took the usual step of breaking its policy of not commenting on rumors about the company and strongly denied a story in last Tuesday's New York Post that Microsoft number crunchers were examining the books of Westinghouse subsidiary CBS in order to make a possible bid for the network. Microsoft also issued a denial. The Post story said that "four Microsoft executives are now poring over CBS's books."

Westinghouse's response: "There is no truth to the unattributed rumor reported in today's New York Post story speculating on a possible sale of CBS; nor is any party examining our financial books as reported by the Post." The statement went on to say that Westinghouse intended to build CBS into a media powerhouse, not sell it. Westinghouse said it was commenting in the light of heavy trading (30% higher than normal) for its stock, which shot up almost two points in early Tuesday morning trading, to $25. By mid-afternoon, the stock had settled somewhat, to 23-15/16, up from 23-1/8 at the close of trading Monday.

Microsoft already is in business with NBC in joint-venture cable/online service MSNBC. That venture would have to be restructured if Microsoft bought CBS, sources say.

You simply won't behave.
Entertaining us wasn't enough for you.
From primetime to sports to news to kids TV,
you had to be innovative,
to challenge us.
You got what you wanted.
Television will never be the same.

Not to mention that you don't respect your elders.
Airing the Emmys wasn't enough for you.
Oh, no . . .
You had to get the Super Bowl,
the NHL & Major League Baseball, too.
You couldn't be content with 106 affiliates in 1987.
Of course not.
You had to go and become a network.

You break the rules constantly.
But, then again . . . you're Fox.
Why should we expect anything less?

Radio revenue continues to rise

RAB data show national and local ad dollars up for 57 consecutive months

By Donna Petrozzello

Combined national and local radio advertising revenue climbed 10% in May, marking 57 months of consistent revenue growth for the industry.

In a survey of 100 radio markets, the Radio Advertising Bureau reported that local ad revenue rose an average 8% during May and improved by an average 9% in January through May.

National revenue increased an average 14% during May and was up 17% January-May. Combined revenue was up 10% during the first five months of the year compared with the same period last year.

RAB President Gary Fries attributed the growth to "the ever-increasing number of advertisers who are discovering radio's power to deliver exceptional results."

The RAB's report was compiled from revenue data collected by the independent accounting firms of Miller Kaplan Arase & Co. and Hungerford Aldrin Nichols & Carter.

While January-May increases in local ad revenue ranged between 7% and 10% across markets in the nation's five geographical regions, national revenue's growth range was larger—from 8% for stations in the Southeast to 24% for stations in the Southwest. In May, national revenue climbed 6% for stations in the Southeast, while stations in the West saw an average 21% gain.

Meanwhile, national and local revenue growth remained steady throughout May and during the first five months of the year for New York and Los Angeles stations.

In New York, a survey by the New York Market Radio Association showed combined radio revenue up 6.1%, to $49.6 million, in May compared with last year. Between January and May, combined revenue in New York was up 11.2%, to $199.7 million. And in May, New York stations' local revenue increased 6.4%, to $42.1 million, while national revenue rose 4.1%, to $7.4 million. In January-May, local revenue improved 11.7%, to $167 million, while national revenue climbed 9.1%, to $32.6 million.

In Los Angeles, combined revenue increased 13.1% during May, to $48.7 million, compared with the same period last year, according to the Southern California Broadcasters Association (SCBA). Combined revenue for Los Angeles stations totaled $200.4 million between January and May, an 8.9% increase over the same period last year. And in May, Los Angeles stations reported an average 7.8% increase in local revenue and a 33.6% increase in national revenue. For January-May, local revenue rose 3.4% and national revenue rose 27.3%, the SCBA reports.

Buy rates soar for bite bout

PPV revenue in $90 million–$95 million range for Holyfield–Tyson II

By John M. Higgins

Cable operators are crying over Mike Tyson’s behavior in the ring, but only because it will keep him off pay per view for too long.

It’s not clear whether Tyson’s box office appeal was permanently damaged when he chewed off a piece of heavyweight champion Evander Holyfield’s ear. It’s also not clear how much money Cablevision Systems Inc. may have lost on its maverick pay-per-round pricing plan for the three-round, two-bite bout.

But otherwise, operators and producer Showtime Entertainment Television were elated over sales of the fight.

SET estimated that the fight generated a record $1.8 million–1.9 million buys. At a general retail rate of $49.95, that means retail PPV revenue of $90 million–$95 million, a bit shy of the $100 million the company and fight promoters had hoped to fetch, but still huge.

With addressable homes estimated at 33 million, that puts the average buy rate at 5.4%–5.7%.

“We’re extremely happy from the economics,” said Mark Greenberg, SET’s executive vice president of sports marketing. “No one’s going to condone the behavior in the ring, but the numbers were great.”

The previous record was last year’s Holyfield–Tyson I, which drew 1.6 million buys. Many operators wouldn’t publicly disclose results. However, companies and sources close to the reluctant ones put Tele-Communications Inc.’s buy rate at 7%, about 25% more than the MSO generated for the previous fight. Cox Communications did more than 6%. Time Warner a bit less. DBS service United States Satellite Broadcasting did about a 6.5%.

Given that the largest operators, which account for the vast majority of subscribers, reported beating SET’s estimate, the numbers do not quite add up.

But even ignoring a half-point here and there, the question on PPV executives’ minds was, How did Cablevision fare? After customer howls over past Tyson early-round knockouts of tomato cans like Peter McNeeley, Cablevision began selling PPV fights for $9.95 per round, with the maximum price around $50.

Cablevision CEO James Dolan said that final tallies weren’t yet available to determine if Cablevision made money.

“If I did, it’s not a lot,” Dolan said. “If I lost, it’s not a lot. What we will get out of it is a tremendous amount of goodwill.”

Unlike other MSOs that pay a split to SET of whatever sales they generate, Cablevision has a special deal in which it pays $14 million for four fights no matter how many units are sold. The MSO can profit big by pushing sales hard—but only if the fights go five rounds. So the three-round biting match means that Cablevision collected just $29.85 per buy—40% less than other operators.

At an average $3.5 million per fight, Cablevision needs a 6% buy rate to cover the license fee. But marketing costs could push the threshold up to 7%.

Whatever the outcome, Dolan said Cablevision will “definitely do this again.”

Not all fight fans were happy. With just about everyone outraged over the fight’s gruesome conclusion, operators reported some calls from subscribers demanding refunds.

Lawyers in San Francisco and Dallas filed class-action suits seeking refunds for subscribers.

“Tough,” said one MSO executive.

“There was a fight. Maybe if someone’s really upset we’ll give it to them.”

Operators do provide refunds they’ll have to eat the license fee. “If the local cable operator makes a decision, they still have to pay us,” SET’s Greenberg said.

However, even boxing advocates wonder whether the sport is getting tarnished by bizarre incidents, from Oliver McCall’s surrender in the ring to Riddick Bowe’s brief entry into the ring to Sugar Ray Leonard’s brief comeback campaign.

“What’s been happening is that the dark side is coming out more than the light,” says Hugh Panaro, president of PPV distributor Request TV. “The accumulation of all these things is beginning to hurt boxing, which didn’t have a good reputation to begin with.”
Christie Hefner, chairman and CEO of Playboy Enterprises since 1988, sits at the conference table of her Chicago office. On the desk behind her is a photo of a young Christie—perhaps age seven—with her father (and Playboy founder) Hugh Hefner. On the conference table is a plastic-encased copy of the magazine’s premiere issue—the one with Marilyn Monroe—alongside a recent issue (Farrah Fawcett at 50). But despite the homages to the magazine, this company is not her father’s Oldsmobile. The younger Hefner has been instrumental in expanding Playboy’s TV presence with its domestic Playboy Channel and the addition of international versions and licensed programming running in 135 countries, not to mention a home video business and an online service that boasts 1.4 million “impressions” a day. She has been busy lately combating new scrambling/blocking rules that she says unfairly target cable in general and services like Playboy in particular. Hefner spoke with BROADCASTING & CABLE editors about the impact of those rules.

New cable rules went into effect in May that require cable operators to scramble both the audio and the video portions of so-called sexually explicit channels. Those unable or unwilling to scramble must confine their carriage of those channels to the 10 p.m.–6 a.m. “safe harbor.” What kind of economic impact will this have on you?

It isn’t scrambling, per se, because everything’s scrambled to begin with. It’s additional blocking technology [to ensure] that there can’t be garbled bits of audio or any audio bleed.

That said, it’s difficult to know exactly what the economic consequences will be. We haven’t yet had much, if any, experience with what the consumer does in an environment in which previously he could buy Playboy on a pay-per-view basis at 8 o’clock at night, and now he can’t. Does he wait and buy it at 10? Does he record it at 10 and watch it the next night at 8? Or does he not make that buy? Does the person who subscribes to Playboy who was getting it 24 hours and now gets it only 10 hours decide it’s still worth a subscription? And what do the cable companies do, depending on what the consumers do? Do they say, “Gee, we just don’t think the revenues are going to be great enough to support carriage and so we’re going to put the food channel on instead”? There is a lot of uncertainty.

We have estimated the first-year costs at approximately $25 million to the cable industry and approximately $5 million to us. But that is based on a lot of assumptions that you can’t verify until there has been more market experience.

The real problem is that no matter what the absolute dollar amount, these things are certain: It’s going to cost a lot of money—hopefully, not money out of the hands of the cable companies, who will be the bigger losers. It means that there’s going to be something else that will have to give—prices, investment in upgrade, something. These are not people operating with high margins right now who can just absorb that.

Second, it makes no sense on a public policy basis because 504 (the rule that requires operators to scramble/block programing at a customer’s request) offers the same technological solution to anybody who needs it and wants it and calls for it.

Third, the whole notion of pay television was not that you got edited movies but that you got unedited movies. It’s a peculiar application of reasoning to say, “Well, we think there may be too many children around at 6 o’clock in the evening, so Playboy shouldn’t be available as a pay service.”

How did you go about challenging the law?

We got a temporary restraining order. We then went for a preliminary injunction. We didn’t get the preliminary injunction, so we appealed to the Supreme Court. They denied cert [the court refused to hear the case] without saying why, which is their prerogative. But we think it may be because we have not exhausted our lower-court remedies. So now we are looking to get a permanent injunction.

We put a man on the moon almost 30 years ago. What is so hard about making sure there’s no bleeding? And what kind of cost would it entail to provide the trapping required to scramble audio?

Billions of dollars. Two-thirds of television homes don’t have children in them to begin with, so why would an operator spend lots of money to provide trapping in homes that don’t have children? Most of the homes that have children don’t need the trapping and don’t want the trapping. So you’re trying to add a cost with no benefit for the operator. And I think that it was a case of a bit of legislation sliding... through with no hearings, no debate and no understanding on the part of the people who sponsored it and voted for it as to what the consequences would be.

When we found out that 505 had passed and we started calling cable companies and saying, "Did you know that a part of the telecom bill requires you to put this in every home or else to roll back the hours?" they said, "Oh, you’re crazy: you gotta be kidding: that’s in the telecom bill?"

And when we filed suit, one of the points we made was that the economic impact of this is staggering. It’s part of the justification for government intervention that it be the least intrusive solution, particularly when it regards control of speech. This is neither the least intrusive in terms of the consumer nor the most logical in terms of encouraging competition and helping the marketplace.

Now, ultimately the solution is that the cable world is going digital, and when it becomes digital it’s irrelevant. But in the meantime you have this anomaly where you let broadcast have no restrictions on it. So we’re 24 hours on DIRECTV and we’re 24 hours on Primestar, but in the same markets, if you want cable and it happens not to be digital—and we estimate that roughly 80 percent of the cable systems that carry us are not in compliance with 505 in terms of their technology—they have to limit the hours that Playboy’s available.

So in one little amendment Congress has managed to favor one technology over another in a fairly significant way, because we know from when we used to be 10 hours a night that we get 40 percent higher buys when we are 24 hours than [when we were] 10 hours. Now, we’ll actually be fewer than 10 hours.

I think it’s kind of the law of unintended consequences. It’s a bill that was intended to foster competition, to create more choice for the consumer, that in fact in this provision does the opposite. And it’s particularly ironic because the provision that precedes, 504, is the ideal solution. It says that if you’re concerned about bleed on any channel or that you want to have additional blocking for [any channel], call your cable company and they’ll come out and block it.

The fact that most of the systems have a problem that’s strictly audio makes it in my mind all the more ironic, because this is an environment in which you can listen to Howard Stern on the radio and hear language considerably more graphic than you would hear from audio bleed on the Playboy channel.

What are the prospects for changing the rules?

I think that people on the Hill, as they better understand what they’ve done, are potentially willing to undo it. I went to the Hill to explain why we were filing suit and was pleasantly surprised by the number of times people said, “Oh, well, that doesn’t really make very much sense, does it?” Everybody now says there’s going to be another bill in the fall to address all kinds of things in the original telecom bill that either didn’t turn out the way Congress wanted or that they shouldn’t have put there in the first place.

I think the best way to fix 505 is to delete 505 but append to 504 a commitment by the industry—programmers and operators—regularly to run a public education campaign that makes it clear to consumers that [the blocking] option exists. Because the one thing that the government said in its brief is “Well, consumers don’t know that they could have this technology to block, and therefore it’s not an alternative.” First of all, they have no evidence consumers don’t know, and cable companies will tell you that they get calls when people are unhappy about bleed and they go and fix it.

But to the extent that you can’t prove a negative, the way to address that would be for the government to say, “You have to make the technology available,” as it did in 504, “but also you have to make sure consumers know it’s available.” So you do that too. You do that in your guide. You do that on air. That would be a fairly easy thing to do and a responsible thing to do. So there’s some possibility that, in effect, we could hang that ornament on the Christmas tree of a bigger bill and that [the problem] would get resolved legislatively.

Who are your allies in this fight?

Everybody that’s either got an adult movie service [Spice Entertainment joined Playboy in its court challenge] on their system or plans to launch one at some point, because basically the cable industry is in competition with the direct-to-home industries for customers. And I can tell you from the e-mail we’re getting that consumers don’t understand how the government can use the standard of what’s appropriate for children to tell them when they can have something in their homes as adults. And second, they’re saying that if they can’t get it through cable they’ll get a dish.

Is it more likely that you are going to get more freedom or that others will be regulated to your level?

That’s the risk. Which is why it’s a slippery slope and why it’s important to try to turn this back.

Is your strongest argument against 505 that, unlike broadcasting, people have to invite cable into the home?

We would look at precedents like Pacifica in applying them to pay television. But in fact, I would make the case that where the world is really moving is that the whole notion of regulating broadcast television the way we have historically is anachronistic. And that there aren’t distinctions anymore. That there’s no more logic in placing certain regulations on CBS than there is in placing them on USA Network.
SBS snags Hungarian frequencies

Scandinavian Broadcasting System and its partners have won one of two Hungarian national terrestrial frequencies with a bid of $50 million. Another consortium, led by European media giant CLT/Ufa, secured the second terrestrial frequency for $41 million. Rival bidder Central European Media Enterprises had submitted higher bids for both licenses but apparently was denied because it already owns six commercial frequencies throughout Eastern Europe.

BellSouth out from Down Under

BellSouth Corp. is pulling out of the Australian pay-TV scene. UK-based Cable & Wireless has agreed to pay the Baby Bell $730 million for its 24.5% stake in Australian telco Optus Communications, which owns pay-TV group Optus Vision. In other Australian pay-TV news, Australian-based Publishing & Broadcasting Ltd. has agreed to sell about half of its 11% economic interest in rival Australian MMDS/satellite pay-TV operator Australis Media to Foxtel, which is a joint venture of News Corp. and telco Telstra.

'Friends' in high places

UK pay-TV group BSkyB has secured the first-window rights to the latest series of Warner Bros.' ER and Friends, including repeats of the first three seasons of each series. Sources say Channel 4 could no longer afford the annual $30 million price tag for the exclusive rights to both series through 2000.

Merging platforms

CLT-Ufa and German conglomerate Kirch Group have agreed to merge their German pay-TV platforms. The pair have agreed to form a new 50-50 joint-venture company to operate a single platform under the Premiere name. Premiere is owned by Kirch Group, CLT-Ufa and France's Canal+, Kirch also owns 100% of rival DF1. Canal+ will sell its stake in Premiere.

CAI warns of financial woes

Ailing wireless cable operator CAI Wireless Inc. last week signaled that its financial problems are deep and that it may not be able to stay in business. The Albany, N.Y.-based company said in a Securities and Exchange Commission filing that continuing losses, difficulty in obtaining financing and looming financial obligations "raise substantial doubt about CAI continuing as a going concern." CAI's auditor Coopers & Lybrand echoed that statement. The warning comes even after CAI secured $30 million in loans from two finance companies a month ago. But that won't last past year-end, the company said. CAI's problems have been clear for months, but this disclosure contains the strongest language to date. The company has been scrambling to replace former backers Nyxex and Bell Atlantic, which once saw CAI as a major weapon against cable operators throughout the Northeast, including Boston, New York and Washington. They have backed out and essentially taken a 60% loss on their $100 million investment. One problem is continuing operating losses from a business that has never been profitable.

Hoping for cheaper and better digital equipment, CAI has stopped installing analog customers, so revenue is dropping. Subscribers have fallen 20%, from 82,900 in March 1996 to 66,500 about three weeks ago. In addition, the company faces $8.5 million minimum in fees for microwave licenses and lease payments, plus approximately $1.1 million in MMDS license auction payments and another $8.2 million in equipment orders. More bad news: New PCS wireless telephone systems interfere with signals in CAI's Philadelphia system, so the company must replace 24,000 downconverters in subscribers' homes at a total cost of at least $1.7 million.

Adelphia investor cries foul

A major investor in Adelphia Communications Corp. says the company's plan to sell its preferred stock to the family of chairman John Rigas is unfair to public shareholders. In a filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission, investor Myron Kaplan complained about the plan to sell $100 million in perpetual convertible preferred stock to the Rigas family and FPL Group's Telesat Cablevision unit. Adelphia announced the deal June 23. Kaplan recently raised his own stake in Adelphia, the country's seventh-largest cable operator, from 5.4% to 6.1% of Class A common shares.

Mr. October starts in July

Baseball great Reggie Jackson has joined ESPN's Major League Baseball announcing crew. Jackson will provide analysis on several of the cable network's play-off telecasts, Wednesday night games and other broadcasts. Jackson's first assignment was scheduled to be last Friday on the Anaheim-Seattle game.

Wireless sale

National Wireless Holdings has completed the sale of subsidiary South Florida Television Inc. to BellSouth Corp. for 1,048,321 shares of BellSouth common stock, or approximately $48 million. South Florida Television holds the rights to provide wireless cable TV service in Miami. Terrence S. Cassidy, president of National Wireless, says: "With this sale of our South Florida Television subsidiary, we have significantly strengthened our balance sheet, which now will have approximately $60 million in cash and marketable

July 7 1997 Broadcasting & Cable
The recent FCC mandate requiring all areas of broadcasting — network, cable, syndication and PBS — to air three hours of educational television has accelerated the demand for "FCC-friendly" children's programming. In light of this legislation, Broadcasting & Cable tunes into the increasingly important arena of Educational Programming in an in-depth special report on September 22.

The curriculum of this issue includes a look at "Cable in the Classroom," with a report on why this project is getting high marks from teachers. We'll also report on the key cable companies offering educational programs.

If you do your homework, you'll know that 35,000 industry leaders in electronic communications read Broadcasting & Cable closely every week. Make a smart move and reserve your advertising space today.

Gridiron legends

Classic Sports Network has signed an agreement with various collegiate rights holders and CBS Sports to carry a 17-game package of legendary college football games. "Phi Beta Classics" is slated to premiere in August, coinciding with the start of the college football season. Some featured games will be the Cotton Bowl of 1979 (Notre Dame versus Texas), Boston College versus Miami in 1984 and Oklahoma versus Miami in 1986.

Signal-theft consultant

Jim Allen, director of National Cable Television Association’s office of cable signal theft, has resigned to become an independent consultant on cable signal theft and law enforcement issues. Allen was director of the NCTA office for 10 years. Before that he directed antipiracy and security efforts for Storer Communications and United Cable.

Out of Africa

BET Movies was scheduled to debut "Kongi’s Harvest," the first film in its Pan-African Film Festival, last Saturday. The festival, which runs through August on the cable network, will feature the U.S. premiere of several rare black films from inside and outside Africa, including the 1993 social drama "Neria," the biggest box office hit in the history of Zimbabwe, and "Guinamba the Tyrant" (1995), winner of African cinema’s most prestigious award.

TNT on film

Turner Network Television has gathered a slew of entertainment journalism personalities to host, report and produce for its new 30-minute news program about the film industry. "Rough Cut" will have its first airing Thursday, Aug. 7, at 10:30 p.m. ET on TNT. Along with the new show, TNT has launched a film-related Internet magazine: www.roughcut.com.

Odetics wins patent appeal against StorageTek

By Glen Dickson

Automation supplier Odetics has won an appeal against Storage Technology Corp. in a patent infringement suit involving its robotic tape cassette handling systems.

The suit dates back to June 1995, when Anaheim, Calif.-based Odetics filed suit that Louisville, Colo.-based StorageTek was infringing on its patent for library pass-through ports (U.S. Patent No. 4,779,151) in StorageTek's automated tape library system products. In February 1996, a jury in Federal District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia ruled that StorageTek hadn't infringed on Odetics' intellectual property based on a claim construction determined by the court before the trial.

Odetics appealed that decision in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit, which now has vacated the lower court's claim construction and the findings of noninfringement against StorageTek and has remanded the case for consideration of infringement under a new claim construction.

"The appeals court said the claim construction was incorrect," says Odetics spokeswoman Juli Merkovsky. She says that the Odetics technology in question is used both in Odetics broadcast cart machines and in its digital linear tape library products and that StorageTek is infringing on the Odetics patent in digital storage products such as the StorageTek ACS4400, PowderHorn and WolfCreek.

StorageTek spokeswoman Judith Hargrove won't directly comment on the appeal, as she says her company hasn't seen the court documents yet. She says that StorageTek believes it owns the technology and plans to "appeal the appeal." She does concede that the case could drag on: "This one is going to have a life until we prove the technology belongs to StorageTek."

GI develops DTV transcoder

Unit lets cable systems carry digital broadcast signals; will be available in '98

By Glen Dickson

General Instrument is developing a headend product that will allow cable operators to remodule broadcast DTV signals for carriage on their systems.

The unit, called the TCD-1000, is an 8-VSB (Vestigial Side Band) to QAM (Quadrature Amplitude Modulation) transcoder that demodulates 8-VSB digital broadcast signals so they can be converted to the QAM modulation (64 or 256) scheme used in digital cable plants. GI says the transcoder will be compatible with its NextLevel MPEG-2 digital cable equipment and should be available by year-end 1998.

By using the transcoder, cable operators could either interleave broadcast standard-definition (SDTV) signals into their existing digital NTSC lineup or use 256 QAM modulation to carry two HDTV signals within one 6 mhz channel.

"Customers are starting to ask more questions about HDTV and how to handle it," says David Fritch, GI's senior manager of marketing and strategy for digital network systems. Fritch points out that as a Grand Alliance member, GI has been working on the technical challenges of cable carrying DTV signals for some time. The company licensed the 8-VSB modulation technology from Zenith several years ago.

Fritch won't give projected prices for the TCD-1000, a modular unit designed to integrate with existing QAM equipment in the headend that does not include a QAM modulator itself. But this spring, David Robinson, GI's vice president/GM of digital network systems, estimated that such a product would cost less than $5,000 (B&C, May 19).

"We're looking at a number of ways how it will be packaged into headend equipment," Fritch says. "It's a little premature to quote price."

Of course, headend equipment is only one side of the cable DTV equation. The thorny issue is in the home, where cable operators are unsure how their digital set-tops will interface with the new DTV sets. Although GI's digital set-tops can decode and display either 4:3..."
or 16:9 SDTV pictures on an NTSC set, GI set-top users will need to rely on a digital TV set or converter box to decode and display HDTV pictures.

"Operators' real goal is to take all these differently formatted signals and make it one seamless package that's easily navigated by remote," he says.

Cable operators and equipment suppliers are working on the digital set-top/DTV set interface problem with consumer electronics manufacturers. GI is exploring whether operators can upgrade set-tops to deal with HDTV via remote "firmware" downloads, or whether a plug-in adaptor may be needed, says Fritch. Dealing with the problem at the set-top makes sense, he adds, as operators will be supplying signals to customers with both new DTV sets and old NTSC sets.

Carrying HDTV has become more of a concern among operators since HBO announced plans to launch an HDTV service in 1998, says Fritch. "Cable operators are trying to get their hands around it. They're looking at their infrastructure and must carry is still a big unanswered question at this point. But with HBO committed, it's not just a broadcasting issue — it's "How do I accommodate all these signals?"

Kaleidoscope Television (KTV) has purchased a Quantel Hal and Editbox for its post-production needs. The San Antonio, Tex.-based 24-hour cable channel will use the Hal video design system to create opens, interstitials, closes and bumpers. The Editbox 3010 online nonlinear editor will be used to edit KTV's unique open-captioned programming, both for promos and for 30-minute shows. "We air 188 hours of television per week, 75 percent of which is original programming," says Ron Dixon, KTV executive vice president for programming and operations. "With such heavy demands, we needed systems we could count on."

Comark Digital Services (CDS) has signed a contract to design and build two digital television facilities for Sinclair Broadcast Group in Birmingham, Ala., and Milwaukee. Both facilities will be multichannel, with the Birmingham operation feeding WTVW(tv) and WABM(tv) and WJBQ(tv) Tuscaloosa and the Milwaukee facility feeding WPTV(tv) and WCGV(tv). CDS will design and build the digital production, post-production and master control operations at the two sites and will work with Sinclair to convert the stations from analog to digital broadcasting. Sinclair had an earlier agreement for Comark to provide digital transmitters for its 29 stations.

When ESPN International signed Adidas to sponsor its transmission of the 1997 X Games in Latin America (which aired on a one-week delay), it included "virtual signage," or live video insertion technology, as part of the package. The virtual signage technology, provided by Princeton Video Image (PVI), allowed Adidas to place its logo on the screen as if in the field of play. The PVI technology, called L-VIS, has been used by ESPN in the past to insert the Gateway 2000 logo in WCAC college football games. L-VIS was also recently employed by the San Francisco Giants and San Diego Padres for SportsChannel Pacific's and Cox Cable 4's coverage of their interleague Major League Baseball games, allowing the teams to target local advertising to their home audiences.

Fujinon has introduced a new 2/3-inch zoom lens for ENG hand-held cameras, the A20X8 EVM/ERD. The small weight lens combines Fujinon's Aspheric Technology with a new inner focusing system and has a reduced minimum object distance of 0.8 meters. The lens also has Fujinon's V-Grip, which allows camera operators to adjust grip position in five steps to balance loads ranging from lightweight camera/lens packages to camcorders.

Discreet Logic has acquired Denim Software, a Los Angeles-based desktop visual effects software developer, for $11.3 million—$9.8 million in cash and $1.5 million in assumed liabilities. With the Denim Software acquisition, effects system provider Discreet hopes to target new market segments with Macintosh and Windows NT-based paint and compositing software. The company expects to incur a onetime charge of $9 million—$10 million or 32-36 cents per share, for in-process R&D purchased and expensed in its fourth fiscal quarter ended June 30.

Philips BTS has developed a new slow-motion camera system in conjunction with Evans & Sutherland Broadcast Equipment of Belgium. The system, which combines Philips' high-speed LDK23 camera with EVS' Super Live Slow Motion conversion unit offers instant slow-motion action replays with smooth video from up to four cameras with on-air camera switching. Features include search-while-recording, clip management, split screen, mini-paint, target track, sound on slow motion and frame interpolation. The new system will be released in time for coverage of the World Cup soccer championships in France in 1998.

Baseball is making a big comeback on the Internet. Major League Baseball plans to put audio coverage of two or three games a day on its Website.

But the Westwood One/CBS radio group is resisting this revival; CBS stations in two markets are declining to permit carriage in cyberspace of games they broadcast.

The 26 big-league ball clubs have established guidelines for handling content for PCs. As anticipated before recent June team meetings ("Telemedia," May 26), each Major League team now has the option to make the audio from its games available on its own site or the site of its flagship radio station. The games also can be accessed from AudioNet (www.audionet.com), which is sharing ad revenue.

With an increasing number of MLB contests migrating to regional cable TV networks, the Internet offers the alternative of a free outlet to supplement radio broadcasts in home markets.

The Baltimore Orioles, Houston Astros, Texas Rangers, Seattle Mariners, Chicago White Sox, San Francisco Giants and Kansas City Royals are among the teams regularly Webcasting games.

Linking with AudioNet, which uses Progressive Networks' RealAudio, solves the technical and financial problems of the Webcasts. "We wouldn't do it ourselves," says Steve McNeill. Texas Rangers vice president of information and technology.

Meanwhile, the Philadelphia Phillies and Oakland Athletics are being kept from the Internet by CBS stations WPHT(AM) Philadelphia and KFRC(AM) San Francisco. The teams, in the last year of their respective contracts with the stations, intend to renegotiate their deals specifically to include Internet broadcast rights.

The Phillies will restructure their deal with WPHT, according to spokeswoman Joanne Levy-Lamoreaux, to retain the radio broadcast rights and buy game time on the station. "It is their production," Levy-Lamoreaux says of the current situation. "Their rights are up this year. And we're going to take our rights in house."

The Athletics' deal with KFRC gives the station English-language broadcast rights within the team's territory, according to Ken Pries, Oakland Athletics senior director of broadcasting. He says the team will simply wait until next year to take its games to the 'Net.

AOL put CBS SportsLine in lineup

CBS SportsLine will become America Online's Sports Channel anchor tenant in a strategic deal for both media companies.

The deal gives AOL a second strong multimedia content provider (ABC Sports is the first), for its sports site and makes CBS SportsLine readily accessible to AOL's 8 million subscribers. As part of the pact, portions of CBS Sports coverage of such marquee events as the winter Olympics and the NCAA Basketball Tournaments will be accessible through SportsLine on AOL.

The deal calls for an unspecified payment to AOL, which will also take a share of the merchandising revenue that CBS SportsLine draws from AOL subs. AOL also benefits from on-air and other forms of CBS cross-promotion of CBS SportsLine.

AOL has struck a similar deal with ABC Sports to produce a site on AOL Sports Channel. That deal gives AOL exclusive online access to ABC Sports coverage.—RT just playing hardball about baseball audiocasts. It’s maintaining the hard line that none of its stations’ programming—including baseball—can be carried live on the 'Net. “It is a Westwood One and CBS policy that programming they distribute is not to be broadcast on the Internet at this time,” says Ted Kelly, Westwood One/CBS Radio spokesman. “Everything we do for our affiliates promotes listening to radio.”

From its perspective, the Kansas City Royals games that KMBZ(AM) puts online through AudioNet does just that. “We may be reaching an audience within Kansas City we might not have been able to reach previously,” says KMBZ Program Director John Butler, who believes the audiocasts build goodwill too.

That was a prime motivation for the Baltimore Orioles when they started Webcasting games early this season. The Orioles ignored the ban imposed before MLB formulated Internet rules and never stopped Webcasting.

Marketing is the primary benefit for the Orioles, as it is for other clubs. “First and foremost, it’s something that the fans outside of our territory can go into and hear our games,” says Mike Lehr, the Orioles executive director of broadcasting. “It’s definitely a marketing tool for our presence.”

That’s why Major League Baseball plans to feature two or three games-of-the-day from teams in different regions by the All-Star break or soon after. Technical details must be resolved, including whose technology will be used for the audiocasts. But timing is of the essence, according to Michael Bernstein, MLB vice president of business development and new ventures, who says talks are ongoing to engage a third party to carry a comprehensive menu of games on a single site. “We want to get it up as soon as we possibly can,” Bernstein says.

MSN gets some Great Stuff

Some prominent American writers and illustrators will be contributing to a new interactive literature-and-arts entertainment channel on Microsoft Network when “Great Stuff” debuts on the service this week.

The latest midseason entry on MSN’s entertainment channel presents PC users with an opportunity to help compose the great American novel—along with its art and commentary counterparts. Four noted practitioners of each particular form will provide a paragraph, a drawing, a piece every week to be added to an ongoing composition. MSN subscribers can vote on their selections from among the contributions and watch the resulting work unfold.

Monologist Spalding Gray leads the list of commentators, which include Arianna Huffington, Sandra Tsing Loh and Mark Crispin Miller. The novelists involved in the project are Christopher Buckley, Mark Leyner, Maggie Estep and Michael Chabon. The artists are Iisvan Banyal, Juliette Borda, Paul Davis and Scott Mencin.

“We’re planning an appealing to a literate adult audience,” says Renee Russak, MSN senior producer. MSN will seek to drive the new “show” with cross-promotion on its reading and writing community sites.

WNBA scores online

The WNBA is off to a flying start online, through ESPN’s SportsZone game-of-the-week Webcast series. Carriage of the July 3 audiocast of the Phoenix Mercury/Houston Comets game using RealAudio was the second regular WNBA Thursday audiocast. PC users will be able to access the games in SportsZone’s non-subscription area. The software is available on the site.

ESPN and Starwave Corp. sensed a “huge demand” for the audiocasts, says Geoff Reiss, Starwave senior vice president of sports publishing. Previously, NBA audiocasts peaked when 22,000 PC users heard the sixth game of the NBA Finals series between the Chicago Bulls and Utah Jazz.

SportsZone also provides a link to the fully featured WNBA Website (www.wnba.com), which the NBA launched last month. Response to the site has been strong, with 35,000 hits recorded the day after the WNBA’s first week of games, according to Jamie Rosenberg, NBA director of interactive programming.

The Website carries video and audio game highlights, along with news, features, running scores, game recaps and other updates. Live chat sessions are held online, and fans can also send messages to player and coach mailboxes. Information about each of the eight teams in the league includes seating and ticket data.

MGM brings magical mystery to MSN

Inspired by a nearly 30-year-old controversy involving the Beatles, MGM Interactive is producing a cyberserial dubbed Paul Is Dead for Microsoft Network.

Planned for debut on MSN later this year, Paul Is Dead will be a daily updated mystery about the possible murder of the lead singer of a rock band called Miasma. Apart from that brief description, mum’s the word about the new series—apart from the fact that it will incorporate some video streaming and musical content, according to Ken Locker, executive producer of online programming for MGM Interactive. Each full Paul Is Dead episode will play out over the course of a week.

The Beatles were enmeshed in a controversy in the late '60s in which some observers alleged that Paul McCartney was dead. That was a product of multimedia manipulation, largely based on “clues” that Beatles fanatics insisted were embedded in the music and album cover art—factors likely to figure in MGM’s online production.

The Miasma mystery is one of a dozen properties MGM Interactive has in development, according to Locker, who says two more may begin appearing on MSN before year’s end. MGM is in discussions with potential media partners on the others, with plans to put up as many as a dozen Internet productions per year. “The Internet doesn’t present the same barrier to presentation as television does,” Locker says.

Paul Is Dead was created for MGM by a company called LaFong, with John Sanborn and Michael Kaplan directing and writing.—RT

During the late 1950s and early ’60s, when legendary producer Fred Friendly was covering critical issues with Edward R. Murrow, his son Andy took care of more mundane things for top network executives—like shining their shoes.

Andy Friendly, now 45 and King World’s executive vice president for programing and production, shined his father’s shoes and those of other CBS producers and executives for what was then the going rate of 10 cents a pair.

In between shining shoes and what he describes as “fooling around,” Friendly was exposed to the television business in a way that few his age could have been.

He grew out of his shoe shine box and followed his father into television, moving through the ranks. Friendly describes his father as a pioneer, someone who made a tremendous impact in the United States and around the world. “I have great respect for what my father did,” Friendly says. “I don’t aspire to be a legend like he is.”

During his 24 years in television, Andy Friendly has been credited with bringing cable network CNBC into its own and originating syndicated Hollywood magazine show Entertainment Tonight. He now oversees the King brothers’ syndication dynasty, which includes Oprah and game shows Jeopardy! and Wheel of Fortune.

After graduating from the University of Southern California Film School in 1973, Friendly landed in New York at WNBC(TV) as a summer replacement researcher earning $165 a week.

He was quickly promoted to news writer. He first tackled weather, then sports and finally straight news. In the early 1970s, one of WNBC’s head anchors was Tom Snyder. Snyder liked what he saw in Friendly and offered him a position at former NBC program Tomorrow. At 24, Friendly was a network segment producer.

In 1981 he moved to Paramount Television, where he came up with the idea for a daily entertainment news show. The idea turned into Entertainment Tonight, which is in its second decade of syndication. Friendly would later run his own production company for six years during the 1980s, a period he fondly remembers as “production Hell.”

“It was exciting, but very frustrating at the same time,” he says. “I was used to being more of a hands-on, everyday kind of guy. It was very hard for me to be waiting around to produce television.”

Whether he enjoyed it or not, Friendly was more than successful, producing a variety of shows that included a series for King World in 1985, The Rock & Roll Evening News.

The day-to-day grind beckoned and Friendly quickly returned, this time joining NBC’s fledgling cable network CNBC a year after its launch. In 1990 he was named CNBC’s head of prime time programing and development.

“It was a wide-open canvas, almost a playground in television for me,” he says.

Friendly went to CNBC with a plan to bring the business-oriented cable network onto the scene. His idea for prime time programing was simple and relatively inexpensive. It filled a niche he believed was totally untapped. Friendly wanted to run talk shows, not just any talk shows—but intelligent ones—every night and all night.

“It took a year or two for management to buy into my idea that there was a giant opportunity in talk. No one except Larry King was doing it for more than an hour a night. It was a hole you could drive a truck through.”

NBC management soon bought into Friendly’s plan. He quickly brought in Geraldo Rivera, Mary Matalin and old friend Tom Snyder, gave each a nightly talk show and watched the network take off. CNBC went from 10 million subscribers to more than 60 million during his tenure. The network’s prime time ratings went from .2 and .3 to 1.2 and 1.3.

“People like Bob Wright and Tom Rogers were really committed to cable. They saw that it was something NBC needed to be a part of,” Friendly says. “And talk also fit into CNBC’s mission statement as an information-driven network.”

With CNBC up and running, Friendly needed a new challenge. King World, the nation’s top syndicator, offered him an opportunity to oversee Oprah and other shows and to produce well-financed future projects. In October 1995 Friendly signed with King World, where he has in the works a new version of Hollywood Squares, Roseanne’s new talk show and a host of other projects.

“It will be 25 years in the business next year, and to tell you the truth I feel like an athlete who is in his prime,” Friendly says. “I’m probably as turned on to the business now as I’ve ever been. I can’t see myself doing anything else.”

Jimmy Stewart, an appreciation

Forget that he made only a couple of forgettable TV shows and a few memorable TV appearances (remember him reciting poetry on The Tonight Show or singing “Ragtime Cowboy Joe” to an overwhelmed Carol Burnett?). James Stewart, who died last week at the age of 89, may have made his career in the movies, but television is the reason his screen persona resonates across at least four generations, with more to come. “It’s a Wonderful Life” was a box office disappointment, but revived on television it became a classic and the most identifiable role of Stewart’s career. Now, with classic movie channels on cable, it is even easier for yet another generation to become familiar with the lanky Stewart, embodiment of the principled everyman and by all accounts as fine a person off the screen as on.

Evergreen Media Corp. and Chancellor Broadcasting Co. closed on their joint $1.075 billion acquisition of 10 radio stations formerly owned by Viacom Inc. after winning FCC approval on June 27. Those stations are WLTW(FM) and WAXC(FM), both New York; WMZO-FM, WJZW(FM), W2HF(AM) and W2SZ(AM), all Washington; KYSR(FM) and KJBB(FM), both Los Angeles; WLT-FM Chicago, and WDRQ(FM) Detroit.

Warner Bros. International Television signed a long-term deal with Sogecable in Spain that sources say is worth nearly $1 billion. The deal includes pay television, pay per view and near-video-on-demand for feature films that will be carried on Sogecable's digital satellite platform Canal Satellite Digital and premium pay service Canal+ Spain. The agreement starts with films released in the U.S. in 1995. It also calls for carriage of Cartoon Network, TNT and CNN International on Sogecable's basic tiers in Spain.

The FCC last week said broadcasters interested in supplementing petitions on the FCC's DTV rules can do so though Aug. 22. The commission took the action after issuing its "Bulletin 69," a long-awaited document that provides guidance for predicting the coverage of digital TV channels.

Crown Communications Inc. has asked the FCC to deny Paxson Communications' bid to acquire WNS(F) New York from ITT-Dow Jones Television. Crown says that common ownership of the station and Paxson's WHAI-TV Bridgeport, Conn., would violate the FCC's duopoly rule.

Fox Kids is changing its Saturday and weekday schedule. Starting today (July 7), Big Bad Beetlesborgs—which was set to move so that Stickin' Around could debut in its 4 p.m. time slot—stays put, while Round the Twist premiers at 4:30 p.m. Stickin' Around will surface later this month. And Saturdays? C-Bear & Jamal—originally targeted for preemption by Big Bad Beetlesborgs—stays at 8 a.m. The weekday schedule—7:30-8:30 a.m.: Bobby's World; 3 p.m.: The Adventures of Batman & Robin; 3:30: Eek! Stravaganza; 4: Big Bad Beetlesborgs; 4:30: Round the Twist. Saturday—8 a.m.: C-Bear & Jamal; 8:30: Power Rangers Turbo; 9: Spider-Man; 9:30: Casper; 10: Goosebumps; 10:30: Eerie Indiana; 11: Life with Louie; 11:30: X-Men. Although Fox Kids is arguably the most aggressive among the broadcast networks, Maureen Smith, senior vice president of scheduling and planning, promises fewer changes come fall.

Broadcasters are seeing significant audience erosion even in homes without cable, a study by the Cabletelevision Advertising Bureau asserts. The CAB analysis of Nielsen TV data tracked prime time viewership in non-cable homes over six years. The study found that the Big Four networks' ratings have slid from 45.9 in 1992 to 38.1, with the biggest falloff coming since 1994. Audience shares have dropped from 87.8 to 74. CAB President Joe Ostrow contends that the loss of "a captive audience" which can't defect to cable suggests that "viewers are being turned off by the quality of programming." However, David Poltrack, CBS executive VP of research, dismisses the study, saying CAB ignored start-up networks WB and UPN and categorized 4 million satellite homes as "non-cable." Poltrack adds that the top 10 cable networks' share of cable homes dropped from 63% to 57%.

Westwood redesigns its lineup of networks

Westwood One Inc. plans to realign three of its networks to allow advertisers to target women 25-54, adults 25-54 and men 18-34.

Starting this fall, Westwood One will create the NBC Radio Network, comprising affiliates that had been part of Westwood's Adult Contemporary Network and its Country Network, both of which will fold. NBC Radio Network will target adults 25-54 and women 25-54, says Ron Werth, Westwood One senior research vice president. However, NBC Radio News product still will be available to affiliates of all six Westwood One networks, Werth says.

Westwood One also is shuffling stations that had been included in its Young Adult and Source networks into the new NeXt network and a revamped Source Network. The redesigned Source, which will focus on men 18-34, will include some stations that had been part of the Young Adult Network. NeXt will target ages 18-34 and will absorb those stations that had been part of the previous incarnation of Source.

Werth says the changes were made to “fine-tune our ability to help the advertiser do a better job finding the consumers they are looking for.” The redesign reduces Westwood One’s networks from seven to six. The CBS Radio Network and CBS Spectrum network, for which Westwood One is handling affiliate marketing and relations, will remain intact.

Digital Systems (NDS) to transmit its live coverage of the Hong Kong “handover” ceremony last Monday, which aired on both NBC and MSNBC. For the Tom Brokaw–anchored broadcast, NBC used an NDS portable DSNG codec to compress its feed, which then was uplinked from a portable flyaway unit to the PanAmSat-2 satellite, downlinked and decoded in California and transmitted over fiber to NBC News headquarters in New York.

The NATPE Educational Foundation has awarded Jason Schmall of Miami University first place in its 1997 Student PSA Contest. Schmall’s entry, “Fruit Are People Too,” promotes an end to racism. Schmall will receive $1,000, as will Miami’s mass communication department.

Online coverage of the 1997 Tour de France will be thorough. ABC Sports on America Online is supplementing the TV network’s coverage of the annual 2,500-mile bicycle race with a new “slide-show” technology, linking visuals and images online. In addition, Lycos-Bertelsmann and World Media Live jointly have launched a VeloCity site (www.worldmediative.com/velo) where fans can track the minute-by-minute progress of the race.

WRRV (AM) Indianapolis will air its 11 p.m. news commercial-free each Thursday night for the month of July. The newscasts are being solely sponsored by a local supermarket chain, which will get billboards before and after and sponsorship of a weekly community calendar.

One stood tall

We had begun to think it would never happen—that we would never again hear a broadcaster, engaged in mortal combat with the United States government, speak up for his First Amendment rights. It happened last week when Bob Wright, the chief executive of NBC, told New York broadcasters:

"Frankly, I'm disappointed that our industry seems to have lost the sense of where to draw the line. It's our job to provide program content. It's the job of Congress to pass legislation. For broadcasters to be negotiating with Congress over content—what kind, or when it is aired—should be completely out of the question."

NBC has been the one network resisting the government's demand to add content ratings to the age ratings already "voluntarily" in place. The National Association of Broadcasters and all the other TV networks have been more interested in dealing than in fighting. This page is pessimistic enough to think that, at the end of the day, the industry will cave, and television and the country will be stuck with a ratings system ad infinitum. We disagree with Wright on only one point. He says the debate has only just begun. We think it's almost over.

Perspective

This week's list of the top 25 media companies—as we see them—is noteworthy in a number of respects, but perhaps most for the size of the companies. Compared with the Fortune 500, these small potatoes: not one of our top 25 reaches into Fortune's top 50 (which ranges from General Motors $168 billion to Home Depot's $19.5 billion). And only five of our top 25—Disney, Viacom, Time Warner, Westinghouse and General Electric—make it into the Fortune 500 at all.

While they’re at it

We are no fans of the public interest commission currently being assembled by the Vice President, although we are glad to see that Leslie Moovnes is positioned to provide some needed broadcaster perspective. At root, the commission looks to be another Washington quid pro quo, with broadcaster complicity extracted in trade for peace.

It needn't be unidirectional, of course. It could cut both ways. While the administration is undoubtedly looking to add more obligations—free time for political candidates is high on its wish list—the commission should be equally quick to recommend removing obligations it concludes to be misguided or not in the public's best interest. For instance, the commission could conclude, as did the framers of the Constitution, that the public's interest is best served by a press free of government content regulation. Broadcasters have historically served the public by programming to the dictates of their audience, by being active corporate members of the community (from AIDS awareness campaigns to zoo rights for underprivileged kids), by being a constant news line to their communities and even a lifeline in times of local or national emergencies. The barnacles of recent times—kids quotas, ratings, V-chips—need scraping away.

Planting an acorn

National Association of Broadcasters board member Bill O' Shaughnessy has proposed that a First Amendment/Public Interest Task Force be established—reestablished, actually—to serve as a focus for those subjects within the association. We concur. Given the right leadership, it could help broadcasters get back in the game of pursuing First Amendment freedom and coming to consensus on their obligations as public trustees. The sooner the better, we'd say.
On the cusp of the important RTNDA and NAB Radio conventions — both held September 17-20 in New Orleans — Broadcasting & Cable’s September 15th issue investigates the current and future state of television and radio news.

In this in-depth report, we’ll tell you what you can expect at the RTNDA and NAB events, and we’ll include our annual survey of broadcasting’s top news directors. We’ll also be the sounding board for radio’s leading players on such hot-button topics as consolidation and syndicated programming.

You won’t want to miss this opportunity to reach 35,000 top-echelon leaders in electronic communications. And with bonus distribution of this issue at both NAB and RTNDA, your message will be delivered to an additional 10,000 event attendees. To tip the scales in your favor, call your sales representative to reserve your ad space today.
