Broadcasting & Cable  August 18 1997
HDTV falling out of favor

Some broadcasters think offering mini-wireless cable-type services only way to make money

By John M. Higgins

High-definition TV is starting to get the short shrift as stations decide they’d rather use their newfound real estate to create multiple channels than dedicating their spectrum to a single HDTV channel. And Sinclair Broadcasting President David Smith said he didn’t care about HDTV and wants to use his digital capacity to create a mini-wireless cable system in at least one market, Baltimore.

The disclosures are the first glimpses of how broadcasters are lining up to exploit the digital spectrum Congress granted and required that they begin using in short order. Blessed with the flexibility to use spectrum largely as they wish, but cursed by having to use it in major markets by 1999, broadcasters soon must present their digital plans to affiliates and TV set manufacturers.

But broadcast executives also have to convince Wall Street—and themselves—that they can make money. So far that’s the most important consideration. “They were so obsessed with getting the spectrum—that making sure they didn’t have to build out the systems—that they haven’t bothered with a business plan,” says one Washington cable analyst.

“This is a giant game of five-way chicken going on here,” says Sanford C. Bernstein & Co. media analyst Tom Wolzien. “It’s a big group grope” among broadcasters, MSOs, regulators and PC and TV companies that will ride whatever wave develops. “Nobody’s got the model yet. I think it’s going to take a year for this to shake out.”

The disclosures are no surprise to many media and Wall Street executives, who long have seen little financial percentage in hogging precious spectrum with HDTV when four to six video or data channels can be deployed in the same space.

“It’s very clear that to go 100% HDTV across the digital universe is sheer idiocy,” says PaineWebber analyst Christopher Dixon. “There’s no need to see the coffee stains on the news sets.”

Speaking at a Kagan Media digital TV conference in New York last Tuesday (see page 46), Padden emphasized that while ABC and parent The Walt Disney Co. have not reached any conclusions, he was enthusiastic about the business and programming opportunities of multichannel DTV.

“We’re really excited about the opportunities that digital presents,” Padden said after the conference. “But we didn’t rule anything out.”

What to do? The cheap ideas include time-shifting the best programming, NBC-2 could run Today all day and Dateline all night. CBS-3 could repeat Sunday’s Touched by an Angel every weekday at 10 a.m. and Monday’s Chicago Hope at 11 p.m.

DTV: Where the networks stand

ABC has announced plans to offer a multiplex of widescreen, standard-definition pictures, some on a subscription basis. The network wants to see DTV service take off through the sale of both widescreen TV sets and inexpensive set-top converters, and it plans to test DTV reception with indoor antennas.

CBS has consistently maintained that it will offer a single channel of HDTV as much as possible, although sources have indicated that CBS Stations Chairman Mel Karmazin is eyeing multiplexing as a potential revenue source. Joe Flaherty, CBS senior vice president for technology, acknowledges that local stations may offer multiplexes during the day but says that CBS definitely will offer HDTV in prime time. “Digital sets won’t move without high-def,” Flaherty says.

Fox hasn’t officially announced its DTV plans, although the network seems bullish on multichannel SDTV. Fox’s Andy Setos, executive vice president of News Corp.’s news technology group, says that Fox could fit six to eight compressed 480 P streams into a 6 mhz DTV channel.

NBC also hasn’t formally announced its intentions, but NBC engineers have indicated that the network will broadcast HDTV in prime time and may offer multiple channels of SDTV during the day. “We will be flexible throughout the day,” says Charles Jablonski, NBC vice president of broadcast and network engineering. “We will also be doing some HDTV when we start our digital television service.” Tom Rogers, NBC executive vice president, says that NBC won’t offer free multichannel service unless the new channels reach 30 million–40 million homes.

teaming to create a 15-24 channel wireless cable system, unburdened by the high cost of laying copper or installing converters in digital-ready TV homes. And the consumers, presumably, would pay for the DTV sets.

The downside is that wireless cable already has craters and Sinclair's scheme would carry far fewer channels at a time when cable operators are using digital compression to offer dozens of new channels.

Further, instead of getting spectrum for free, offering subscription-based DTV services will force a station to pay the government an as-yet unspecified fee. The fee could be based on the fat prices paid in wireless phone spectrum auctions over the past few years.

Broadcast and cable executives point out a host of other market and regulatory issues. When will enough DTV sets find their way into viewers' homes to give broadcasters something close to a mass audience for new networks? Is the prospect of multichannel DTV attractive enough to stick with ad-supported channels that might not reach more than 20% of TV homes for another decade?

Will DTV channels get the same must-carry status on cable systems that current broadcast stations enjoy?

"We think there's a huge debate that has to happen in Washington before all this is resolved," says Comcast treasurer John Alchin.

Hicks, Muse takes on TV

Buys LIN for $1.7 billion, says more TV station purchases are planned

By Steve McClellan

The nation's largest radio station operator—Hicks, Muse, Tate & Furst—last week signaled its intention to become a major player in TV as well.

It took a big step in that direction with the proposed $1.7 billion ($47.50 per share) acquisition of LIN Television, the nation's 22nd-largest group owner. LIN has eight network affiliates covering 6.2% of the country. Hicks Muse partner Tom Hicks said that LIN will acquire more top-50 television stations as opportunities arise.

Hicks said the LIN group is attractive because it provides a solid entry platform into big-market television and because the stations are well-run. Hicks intends to keep the management team, headed by LIN President Gary Chapman.

In a separate transaction, LIN Television is acquiring WOOD-TV Grand Rapids, Mich., from AT&T for $122.5 million. The acquisition adds a ninth station to the group, as well as a fifth LMA.

Analysts say the price that Hicks Muse is paying for LIN is low—slightly more than 12 times 1997 broadcast cash flow—compared with other recent transactions. Many analysts expected LIN to sell for a price in the $55-per-share range, or about $1.94 billion, including debt.

Several reasons are cited for the discount, including the fact that LIN stations have some of the highest profit margins in the industry—53% for its core non-LMA stations, according to Bear Stearns. That speaks well for current management but also puts a cap on upside potential, analysts say.

And as Smith Barney television analyst Bill Meyers points out, "As a stock purchase rather than an asset purchase, you need to build in a discount because you can't write off the assets, and it becomes a more expensive proposition."

The day after the deal was announced, LIN's stock fell almost $2, to 46-11/16, which some read as a sign that stock speculators had overestimated what LIN would sell for. AT&T, which owns 45% of LIN, indicated last year its intention to sell its interest in the company by 1998.

A question asked by many last week was whether another company would offer a higher bid for LIN. The deal is structured so that LIN can take the higher offer by paying a $32 million break-up fee to Hicks Muse. NBC, CBS, ABC, Meredith, Scripps and Gannett are said to have considered making bids. LIN's Chapman confirms that "all the usual suspects" talked to the company's board about buying the group. He also says "no one came close" to matching the Hicks Muse offer.

But Wall Streeters say many of those who passed the first time around will now go back and re-examine the numbers to see if making a higher bid makes sense. Another bid is a "definite likelihood," says one analyst. Merrill Lynch estimates that a competing bid would raise LIN's value to $53-$60 per share.

Bear Stearns analyst Victor Miller says Hicks Muse may seek to reduce the 7.8 times debt ($1.1 billion) to cash flow ($142.5 million) ratio of the deal, perhaps by selling flagship station KVAS-TV Dallas to NBC. Miller values the station, on a stand-alone basis, at $575 million-$675 million. Last week, however, both Hicks and Chapman said they have no plans to sell any of the LIN stations.

A LIN shareholder meeting to vote on the sale is planned no later than Nov. 30.

ENTERTAINMENT/VARIETY FOR 1998
Disney’s Valentine expected to head UPN

Likely Salhany successor considered strong programer

By Lynette Rice

The search for chairman Lucie Salhany’s replacement at UPN is expected to end soon with the hiring of Dean Valentine, the president of Walt Disney Television and Walt Disney Television Animation.

The delayed announcement is likely a result of Valentine’s contractual obligations to Disney, where he has signed to stay for another three years, sources close to the negotiations say. But word surfaced Friday of arrangements to replace Valentine in preparation for his anticipated departure to the UPN.

Speculation has Charles Hirschhorn, president of Disney Telefilms, assuming Valentine’s oversight of animation, while David Neuman, president of Walt Disney Television, will take on additional network programming responsibilities. A Disney spokesperson and a UPN spokesperson declined comment Friday.

Valentine, a 10-year veteran of Disney, could face a learning curve about affiliate relations and distribution, UPN’s biggest challenges. But there’s no question about his strength in programing. ABC’s Home Improvement and Ellen came out of his shop, as did the Disney animation lineup that will air this fall as a program block called “One Saturday Morning.”

As president of Walt Disney TV and animation, Valentine oversees the creative and business aspects of both divisions, as well as series, specials and movies produced for network, syndication and basic cable.

Salhany, in comparison, has been known for her keen distribution knowledge and strong affiliate relations. The 30-year veteran of the television industry—who was Fox’s first female chairman before joining UPN in 1994—will step down in September when her contract expires. Salhany will remain on the network’s operating committee as a representative of BHC Communications Inc., which owns half of UPN with Viacom.

The search for Salhany’s replacement began in late May. Within weeks, the usual list of top-notch executives was rumored for the position, including former ABC chairman Ted Harbert and former CBS Entertainment chief Kim LeMasters. Len Grossi, Salhany’s number-two at UPN, also was up for the job.

Ascent Entertainment on the rise

Company has a hit movie, sports deals and investments from TCI, Fox

By Price Colman

Ascent Entertainment Group appears to have picked the right name for itself. Powered by the “Air Force One” release last month and a series of crucial deals last week, Ascent has taken off.

In a single day last week, Ascent announced the following developments:

» A contract with the city of Denver, after three years of sometimes contentious talks, for the Pepsi Center sports complex. Total tab: $160 million. Tied to that contract are commitments to keep the Ascent-owned NHL Colorado Avalanche and NBA Denver Nuggets in town until 2025.

» A lucrative seven-year carriage contract, reportedly worth more than $100 million, with Liberty/Fox Sports to carry the two teams’ games on the Fox Sports Rocky Mountain regional sports network.

» The re-signing of Avalanche team captain Joe Sakic to a three-year, $21 million contract, including a $15 million signing bonus. Ascent’s offer matched one offered by the New York Rangers, a team that Liberty will partly own if its attempt to take a stake in the Madison Square Garden network goes through.

» A $15 million investment in the Ascent company building and management of the Pepsi Center by Telecommunications Inc. subsidiary Liberty.

That’s a whirlwind pace for any firm, particularly one that’s been on its own for less than two months. Comsat spun off its 80.67% stake in Ascent to shareholders on June 27. Predictably, the news was a boost for Ascent stock.

Speaking of stock, the institutional investment community has been paying close attention to Ascent. Mario Gabelli has taken a 2% stake and Gordon Crawford has bought in for 12%.

Considerable credit for Ascent’s quick climb goes to CEO Charlie Lyons and his staff, says William Smith of Denver’s William Smith & Co., an equities research firm: “These are very talented, capable people. They have done a very good job of setting up the company to maximize shareholder value.

“It’s important from a validation perspective,” adds Smith. “Having strategic partners like TCI and Fox going forward gives Ascent tremendous financial flexibility to do the kinds of things they want to do in the future.”

The Pepsi Center deal—and Liberty’s financial participation—were important for Ascent in another way. The company now looks like it will make its Aug. 31 deadline for breaking ground on the sports arena, thus avoiding default on a $140 million credit line from NationsBank earmarked for the arena project.
Networks tighten belts

ABC to cut up to 200 jobs: ABC, CBS to slash budgets by millions; NBC looks for efficiency

By Steve McClellan, Glen Dickson and Lynette Rice

It's cutback time at the Big Three networks. As audience erosion continues, the companies are looking for more cost-effective ways to do business.

All three are reviewing budgets. CBS and ABC will slash tens of millions from their operating budgets for the coming year. Word is that ABC wants to cut at least $50 million, partly through layoffs and buyouts that began last week.

CBS wants to pare $100 million from its budget for the coming year, and staffers are bracing for layoffs. The network also is implementing new ways to do business, such as outsourcing some business functions and paying local station sales staff straight compensation (B&C, July 28).

NBC also is said to be reviewing operating procedures in an effort to run its business more efficiently. It is unclear whether there will be layoffs, but the network is implementing parent General Electric's "quality initiative," called "Six Sigma." At GE, the initiative resulted in changes valued by the company at $700 million. GE veteran John Eck has joined the network to implement the program at NBC.

A round of job cuts began at ABC last week, with reports of some cuts in most divisions. Sources say that 150-200 jobs will be eliminated, including up to 30 positions on the West Coast.

Among the 30 management personnel cut from ABC's broadcast operations and engineering department (BOE) were three vice presidents: David Elliot, engineering services; Elliot Reed, graphics, post-production and special programs, and Robert Young, operations, West Coast.

Also leaving is Pete Barrett, senior vice president, public relations and affiliate marketing. Barrett says he has "accepted a buyout" and will leave in September. Another departing vice president is Larry Loeb, who was involved in international cable development.

Many of the cuts involve buyouts for which some have volunteered. "When word got around that buyouts were coming, some people raised their hands," says one company insider.

Sources say the news division budget is being cut by several million dollars, although last week it appeared that no more than a dozen midlevel management jobs had been cut. Two of those positions were held by veteran production managers going through their second buyout process.

The departure of BOE's Elliot is surprising, considering that he was ABC's point man on digital television technology. In fact, Elliot was scheduled to speak about ABC's DTV strategy last Tuesday at the Kagan Digital Television Summit, but he withdrew after learning of his termination on Monday.

In addition to his duties as head architect of ABC technical facilities, Elliot oversaw ABC's technology and strategic planning division, whose role was to explain to management the business implications of new technologies. But Elliot himself isn't surprised.

"I had foreseen this starting several months ago," says Elliot. "My boss [Preston Davis] and I couldn't agree on the role for me for the future.

Elliot says his position has been eliminated. While he has no plans upon leaving ABC on Oct. 1, he hopes to parlay his 10 years of work on advanced TV into another job in broadcasting.

Sources say some of the changes at BOE have to do with the fact that Preston Padden, president of the ABC Television Network Group, is assembling a team that is more business-oriented in its approach to digital television. One recent hire is Saul Shapiro, whom Padden recruited from the FCC.

Engineers Al Molinari, Dave Lind, John McMann, Tony Caravello and Joe Russo, all longtime ABC veterans, made those being laid off or bought out, sources report.

Shop at Home goes shopping for Global

Shop at Home Inc. has tendered a $53 million offer for fellow home-shopping broadcaster Global Broadcasting Systems Inc., but a pending auction could mean Global's TV stations will go to a higher bidder.

Global, which has filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy, owns KCNS(TV) San Francisco and WRAY-TV Wilson, Raleigh, N.C., and has contracts to buy six other stations. SAH's letter of intent for the two owned stations (and for the contracts with most of the other stations) should be filed in New York bankruptcy court by today (Aug. 18), says Betsy Cameron, attorney for Global bankruptcy trustee James Coppersmith before the FCC. The bidding then will be opened to other companies. The auction will be completed in 30 days.

"It's hard to tell how many bidders there will be," Cameron says. But she expects interest to be high: "There could be another 10 or 12.

Infomercial maven Lowell W. "Bud" Paxson is among those said to be keenly interested in Global's stations. That would be ironic, considering that Paxson sold Global his options to buy WNGM-TV Atlanta and WOAC(TV) Cleveland this past April to make way for his owned stations in those cities.

Coppersmith declines to name potential bidders but says they include "some of the absolute marquee names in the broadcast industry.

For that reason, Coppersmith says he doesn't expect the $53 million bid to stick: "I'd be surprised if that stands up. These [stations] are, in my view, jewels in these markets." Besides WNGM-TV and WOAC, Global's contracts are for WBSV-TV Tampa/St. Petersburg, Fla.; WNDS(TV) Boston; WPM(TV) Knoxville, Tenn., and KNWS-TV Houston. Global reportedly owes about $77 million to its creditors, but Coppersmith says SAH's bid would be enough to satisfy the court.

Shop at Home leads the way because "they were the first people who came to us with a bid we could accept and submit to the court," Coppersmith says. He jokes that he hung a sign on his office door saying, "Bottom fishers need not apply," but that didn't stop them."

Sinclair LMA deals attacked

By Elizabeth A. Rathbun

Federal Communications Commission staff decisions to allow Sinclair Broadcast Group Inc. and its LMA partner Glencairn Ltd. to operate two TV stations in one market are illegal, say attorneys for station owners in the markets in question.

Those lawyers have asked the full commission to review the decisions. Family ties that bind the two companies mean that station relationships go beyond those of a traditional LMA, they claim.

An outraged Pulitzer Broadcasting says the FCC staff decisions are "a vast expansion and reinterpretation of the commission's cross-interest policy."

The Mass Media Bureau's video services division in June approved—with conditions—the transfer of the following stations: WLDS-TV Asheville/Greenville, S.C., to Sinclair, along with Sinclair's planned sale of WNBC-TV Anderson/Greenville, S.C., to Glencairn. Pulitzer, which has filed its protest with the FCC, owns WYMT-TV (Greenville). KARB-TV San Antonio, Tex., to Sinclair and KRTT-TV San Antonio to Glencairn. Post-Newsweek Stations Inc., which has also filed a protest with the FCC, owns KSAT-TV there.

All of Glencairn's stations have local marketing agreements with Sinclair. Glencairn is 90% owned by trusts set up by Carolyn C. Smith for her grandchildren, the children of her four sons, who run Sinclair.

"The division's decision pays short shrift to the competitive and diversity implications of these business interests that bind the two companies," Pulitzer says.

"Given the morass of familial and business ties between Glencairn and Sinclair, the full FCC should reverse the staff decision," Post-Newsweek says.

Wabash Valley Broadcasting, which owns WNDY-TV Indianapolis, filed a protest to the division's decision to postpone action on its previously acknowledged "cross-interest policy concerns" regarding Sinclair's of WYZZ-TV Indianapolis and its purchase of WTVK-TV and satellite WTVKJ-TV Indianapolis.

The postponement, pending an FCC rulemaking on its cross-interest policy, "permits Sinclair to continue to operate WTVK without commission approval" and "is contrary to law," Wabash says.

NEW YORK

Switch is on

Acquisition of LIN Television by Hicks Muse prompted speculation on Wall Street that Fox might not shift its Norfolk affiliation from Sinclair's WTVZ-TV to LIN LMA WBTB-TV after all. The planned switch was announced in early 1996, at a time when the relationship between Fox and Sinclair was at an all-time low. Since then the companies have made up and the change of control of LIN is said to give Fox a way out of the deal they struck to switch stations in Norfolk. But it won't happen, sources at both Fox and LIN say. "LIN's management team will still be in place. They're good operators and we plan to honor the agreement we made with them," says a high-level Fox executive. The switch, scheduled for 1998, is a long-term deal, the executive says.

LeBlanc busy with tall towers

Tower manufacturer LeBlanc & Royle has taken orders for four tall towers (over 1,000 feet) for DTV, says Ronald Gibbs, president of LeBlanc subsidiary Lodestar Towers. LeBlanc also has orders for three DTV antennas. Lodestar's DTV tower farm on Mt. Harvard, outside Los Angeles, is due to be completed by the end of the year; local broadcasters should begin transmitting DTV signals from the site by the end of first quarter 1998, says Gibbs. But no Los Angeles broadcasters have signed a contract for service on Mt. Harvard yet.

WASHINGTON

Mobile Oil attorney Deborah Kennedy will be divesting at least $5,000 of holdings in the Washington Women's Investment Club, (including holdings in Black Entertainment Television) if husband William Kennard is confirmed as FCC chairman. Kennard's financial disclosure report also lists a series of investments and bank accounts totaling at least $650,000.

DIRECTV lobbyists have converted CEO Eddy Hartenstein's July 29 testimony before the House Telecommunications Subcommittee into a three-page policy paper. The subject: Why the Primestar Partners rollup should not be allowed to include News Corp.'s ASkyB assets. The lobbyists are circulating the paper on the Hill. Hartenstein told lawmakers at the hearing to "prohibit cross-subsidization by entities owning both cable systems and DBS providers." Public comments on the merger are due at the FCC Aug. 22.
HBO was pleased to share the special excitement of "Garth Live from Central Park" with millions of viewers on August 7.

14.6 million people watched "Garth Live from Central Park," making it the most-watched special on cable television in 1997. It was also the highest rated, with a 15.2 rating/25 share rising to a 19.1/29.2.

This great event beat all broadcast competition in the time period—actually attracting more viewership than 3 of the 4 nets combined.

HBO will replay "Garth Live from Central Park" on Saturday, September 13 at 9:30 PM ET/PT as part of the "Get Ready to Jam Open House Free Preview Weekend."

The heart of country thrilled millions last week. Thank you for making this incredible evening possible.

From all of your friends at HBO.
Approachable and likable, the FCC’s general counsel also could prove broadcasters’ formidable, if friendly, foe

By Chris McConnell

He’s the nicest guy broadcasters may ever want to neutralize.

He always makes time to talk; never yells; doesn’t act smarter than you; remembers your name and probably your birthday; asks how things are going, and genuinely seems to care.

“He’s just an absolute prince of a guy,” says National Association of Broadcasters Senior Associate General Counsel Valerie Schulte.

And yet William Earl Kennard—President Clinton’s choice for FCC chairman—also is a man who, if confirmed, could wield far more power over the broadcast and cable industries than his predecessor, outgoing FCC Chairman Reed Hundt.

“He could become an extremely effective chairman,” one official says of Kennard. Several others predict Kennard’s even-handed style will allow him to craft compromises where Hundt has been unable to do so. Broadcasters voice concerns that Kennard may prove a more formidable—if more soft-spoken—chairman than Hundt.

Still other observers point to the overhauled FCC that Kennard will inherit—an FCC that will not have outgoing FCC Commissioner James Quello to oppose any public interest initiatives.

The expected incoming Democratic commissioner—New Mexico regulator Gloria Tristani—is an unknown to broadcasters. But none expects a fellow Democrat to oppose Kennard as strongly as Quello opposed Hundt on public interest-related issues.

“The number-one big fact is the fact that Commissioner Quello is leaving,” Hundt says of the public interest portion of the commission’s agenda, although he objects adamantly to the notion that internal dissent has stymied the existing FCC. Hundt insists that disagreements over public interest-related matters have drawn a disproportionate share of attention.

Commissioner Susan Ness, while praising the existing commission, predicts Kennard’s FCC will address the thorny broadcast issues without the rancor that has characterized some FCC efforts during the past few years.

“I think we’re going to see a commission that’s more collegial than it’s been in the past,” says Ness, the lone commissioner remaining at the FCC.

The public interest issues that sparked squabbles in the Hundt FCC will be returning to the Kennard commission. His commission will receive an advisory group’s recommendations for setting new public interest obligations for digital TV. The Clinton administration this summer has been assembling a group of advisers to pre-
The approaching ownership and public interest review worries some broadcast lobbyists, who predict that Kennard will stick close to the Clinton/Gore policies that for the past few years have had the industry on the defensive.

"We don't hold much potential for the FCC to shift course," says David Honig, for instance, hope that Kennard—who would be the commission's first African American chairman—will place minority ownership issues atop the FCC agenda.

In 1995, Kennard and Hundt said they would hold on to the FCC's equal employment opportunity policies after the Supreme Court raised the bar on constitutional standards for policies favoring minorities. The FCC said it would compile a study of the Supreme Court's Adarand decision, although that report has not been issued.

"I expect the Kennard FCC to the Kennard FCC," adds Media Access Project President Andrew Schwartzman.

Quello, who sparred with Kennard in print during the 1996 debate over children's television rules, voices some hope that Kennard will run an independent agency.

"If he just remembers that we are a commission and not the executive branch, he'll do fine," Quello says.

Earlier in his tenure, Kennard should get a chance to show how closely his views track with the administration's on the issue of broadcast ownership. The Clinton administration has taken a hard line against further relaxation of ownership limits.

Ness, citing Kennard's interest in ownership diversity, speculates that he may proceed cautiously on allowing further ownership concentration. Kennard himself is declining interview requests, although he did agree to be photographed.

Others in and out of the FCC doubt the Kennard FCC will significantly shift course from the current FCC. But they add that the same probably could be said of any Gore pick for the FCC.

"We all have bosses," one communications lawyer says.

And Kennard, they add, is someone they think will be able to work with.

"Bill at least will give you an open door," ALTV's Hedlund says.

"He is an antithesis of Reed Hundt," another broadcast lobbyist adds, praising Kennard's affable manner. "He's not going to deceive you," another says.

Kennard is also someone who knows the broadcasting business. His first job out of law school was with the NAB, and later he worked for the association as its First Amendment counsel.

During his years at the law firm in 1996, he represented broadcasters and cable operators. Clients included BET Holdings, District Cablevision and Pulitzer Broadcasting. Colleagues say he handled several station sales, as well as cable and cellular transactions. Kennard also represented broadcast applicants vying for licenses in the commission's now-defunct comparative criteria process.

"He does have a very good understanding of what it takes to run a business," says Washington lawyer Antoinette Cook Bush.

Kennard's communications expertise, in fact, played a role in his 1993 appointment as FCC general counsel. A known force in the Federal Communications Bar Association, Kennard lent communications credibility to an FCC led by Hundt, who arrived as an antitrust lawyer with limited communications experience.

Kennard also has family ties to the television business. Fox Executive Vice President of Network Distribution Dana Corbi is a cousin of Kennard's. So is Black Entertainment Television President Debra Lee.

Broadcasters voice hopes that the inside look at their business will yield benefits when Kennard's commission believe there's going to be a lessening just because he's a nice guy," says one industry source.

Others point to Kennard's published thoughts on the First Amendment as it relates to broadcasters. "It is idle to posit an unbridgeable First Amendment right to broadcast comparable to the right of every individual to speak, write or publish," he and then-FCC Special Counsel Jonathan Nuechterlein wrote in a 1996 Legal Times piece.

"There is nothing in the First Amendment which prevents government from requiring a licensee to share his frequency with others and to conduct himself as a proxy or fiduciary with obligations to present those views and voices which are representative of his community," the authors said.

Despite such remarks and Kennard's expected freer hand at the FCC, however, others in the broadcast and cable industries voice less concern.
takes up such issues as how much flexibility stations should have in scheduling weekend sports around educational programming. (Earlier this summer, the FCC decided to give stations some breathing room but to reexamine the issue in a year.)

FCC staff also approve of a chairman nominee who has had an inside look at their commission. "Staff morale is extremely high," says David Solomon, deputy general counsel.

Solomon recalls Kennard's interest in staff members, how he would stop to chat with them in FCC hallways and even set up regular "staff hours" for commission officials to drop in and talk.

One former client says the hands-on style helped save her business. Search Communications President Shelly Spiegel says Kennard convinced the lawyers at Vern-er Liipfert to perform $50,000 worth of legal work for her new company at a time when all she could offer was a $5,000 retainer. Later, when the young company needed more capital, Kennard drove to New Jersey with Spiegel to convince a group of some 20 investors to keep the firm afloat.

Kennard has devoted similar energy to boosting diversity in the legal profession as well as other businesses. At Verner Liipfert he co-chaired the recruitment committee and focused on promoting diversity in the company's hiring. Verner Liipfert's Berl Bernhard says Kennard also worked to develop a legal practice that would help minority-owned businesses prosper.

Kennard focused on minority ownership issues at the NAB as well. There he labored on an advisory committee whose work eventually would lead to an expanded use of tax certificates.

Lawyers regard Kennard as an authority on the now-defunct tax certificate policies. When Congress was reviewing the policies in 1995, Kennard was the lone representative the FCC sent to defend the practice.

"It was really unfair," says civil rights lawyer Honig. "Bill had to go and do the [FCC] eighth floor's job for it."

The interest in promoting minority businesses and careers runs in the family. Kennard's father, the late Robert Kennard, was a founding member of the National Organization of Minority Architects and also a founder of one of the oldest U.S. African American architecture firms.

"You can't really talk about Bill without talking about his family," says Denver lawyer Stefan Stein, a longtime friend of Kennard's.

The youngest of three children, Kennard grew up in Hollywood Hills and attended Hollywood High School, where he was student body president.

Stein recalls the young Kennard riding around the California hills on a minibike. Kennard remains an outdoors enthusiast, now cultivating an interest in fly-fishing.

Like his two older sisters, Kennard attended Stanford University. He left California for Yale Law School after college before launching his legal career in Washington.

It's a career that has gone from an NAB fellowship to a nomination as FCC chairman in just 16 years.

Onlookers attribute his professional trajectory to a number of factors, including a knack for not making enemies and real legal talent (FCC officials are ever quick to cite the commission's improved winning percentage in court).

Others also cite good political connections. Although he was not a schoolmate of Gore or Clinton—as Hundt was—Kennard does know some people in Washington. One friend is Clinton intimate and Akin, Gump, Strauss, Hauer & Feld senior partner Vernon Jordan.

Jordan also is a friend of Kennard's wife, Mobile Oil Corp. attorney Deborah Kennedy, who might even prove a political asset. Kennedy's father is James Kennedy, a prominent South Carolina religious leader. Some say the elder Kennedy's influence in the state may factor into Senator Ernest Hollings' (D-S.C.) treatment of Kennard during confirmation hearings this fall.

Hollings had been leading his own campaign to place former aide and Washington lawyer (and Kennard friend) Ralph Everett in the chairman's seat. The effort did in earlier administration plans to nominate White House economic adviser Kathleen Wallman as FCC chairman.

Kennard also has kept up his own participation in elections. At the Democratic-leaning Verner Liipfert, for instance, he contributed regularly to the firm's political action committee.

Additionally, Kennard has been known to hit the streets in support of his party. Last year, BET's Johnson saw him on a Denver street corner campaigning—for Clinton/Gore. "He was out there like a rank-and-file voter," Johnson says.

In fact, Kennard's political clout was strong enough to make him a candidate for FCC chairman back in 1993. Several say he also was runner-up to Larry Irving as head of the National Telecommunications and Information Administration.

Most in Washington credit Verner Liipfert's Erwin Krasnow with shepherding Kennard's career at the law firm and at the NAB. "I look upon him more as a colleague," Krasnow says.

Krasnow adds that Kennard has merely been doing a general counsel's job in defending the Hundt FCC. He predicts Kennard will leave his own imprint on the commission.

While the exact shape of that imprint remains unknown, more possible hints can be found in earlier writings. In one humorous review of past chairmen, for instance, Kennard and Krasnow penned some verse extolling the then-coming Dennis Patrick FCC to strike a balance between extremes. The rhyme closed with the lines:

"The key is to strike a good balance/Since both chaos and fiat are bad./So the marketplace really can function/And be free of political fad./Call it ABCDeregulation/A sensible basic regime./Keep the best, scrap the rest/Give the market a full head of steam."

FCC lists out-of-market LMAs

By Sara Brown and Chris McConnell

Federal regulators have counted more than 30 local marketing agreements (LMAs) between stations or broadcast companies located in different markets.

Most of the “out-of-market” LMAs involve pacts between broadcast groups and stations. Paxson Communications Corp. alone holds nearly half of the out-of-market deals, and Pappas Telecasting programs another four stations through LMAs.

By Sara Brown and Chris McConnell

When combined with LMAs between stations in the same market (B&CC, Aug. 11), the out-of-market deals bring the total number of marketing agreements to more than 100. Regulators have counted about 70 in-market deals.

The FCC has been conducting the LMA research as part of its effort to revise TV ownership rules. A proposal issued last year would treat brokering stations as “owned” properties for the purpose of measuring compliance with ownership caps.

Earlier this year, the commission instructed all participants in LMAs to report the deals to the FCC. Commission officials said they plan to use the data in deciding what grandfathering provisions to grant the LMAs.

Last fall’s proposal would allow companies to keep any LMAs that do not conform to ownership limits, but only until the existing deals expire.

As with the in-market deals, in the out-of-market agreements most of the brokering companies use most or all of the airtime on the brokered station. The lengths of contracts for the out-of-market deals range from one year to 10.

Competing arrangement
The FCC last week stepped up efforts to encourage radio and TV applicants to settle competing bids for licenses, saying it will waive rules that limit the amount of money applicants can pay each other to drop competing applications. The action follows a decision by Congress to instruct the FCC to waive any rules necessary to allow applicants to settle competing applications. The Budget Act also calls for the commission to settle contented licenses through an auction if they are not otherwise settled after 180 days. Last week, the FCC said it will look favorably on requests to waive other rules in cases in which a waiver will help parties reach settlements. The commission took the action as part of a decision to accept a settlement agreement filed by a series of applicants seeking an FM radio license in Mableton, Ga.

FCC personnel moves
FCC International Bureau Chief Peter Cowhey is leaving the commission. Cowhey, who has served as the bureau’s head since March, will return to the University of California at San Diego, where he is a professor at the Graduate School of International Relations and Pacific Studies. Replacing Cowhey will be Regina Keeny, who will move from her current post as FCC Common Carrier Bureau chief on Sept. 15.

In another personnel move, the commission has named Richard Lee acting chief of the FCC Compliance and Information Bureau. Lee has served as the FCC’s deputy managing director since 1995. Additionally, Mary Beth Richards has been named deputy managing director of the FCC.

FCC on hold over editorial/personal attack
Regulators last week were explaining their deadlock over the political editorial and personal attack rules. The Radio-Television News Directors Association has been pushing the FCC to ax the rules, which require stations to offer candidates a chance to respond to on-air personal attacks or editorials. Commissioner Rachelle Chong said she would have to oblige the association, but Chairman Reed Hundt and Commissioner Susan Ness wanted to conduct additional review of the two rules. “It appears the result is a 2-2 tie,” Commissioner James Quello said. Quello hopes the new FCC will settle the issue.

Ness hopes for a less polarized atmosphere when the new FCC takes up the issue. “The First Amendment is in the public interest,” Ness said. “And the public interest can be well served...without imposing upon the values served by the First Amendment.”

Hundt said he would like the rules to be reviewed as part of a broader inquiry into broadcasting’s role in the political process. Hundt has been seeking to launch such an inquiry for weeks, but Chong and Quello have blocked the initiative. “These issues are important to our democracy, and from a constitutional perspective they are nontrivial,” Hundt said in a lengthy statement about the rules. “They should not be addressed by glib, nonfactual, unsupported statements that [spectrum] scarcity does or does not exist: that the First Amendment says one thing or the other; that there is or is not adequate diversity of viewpoint in television; that there is or is not sufficient access to free television for candidates or issues.”

Chong countered, saying the rules do not serve their intended purpose and should be eliminated: “The personal attack rule, for example, has been invoked largely as a substitute for defamation suits and serves primarily to escalate personal quarrels [rather than] illuminate public debate.” RTNDA President Barbara Cochran says the group plans to return to court to seek repeal of the two rules.

Paxson gets must-carry decision
Paxson Communications won a small victory in New York last week when the FCC decided to grant WHAI-TV Bridgeport, Conn., must-carry rights in several Westchester County, N.Y., communities, reversing a Cable Services Bureau decision. Paxson has asked the FCC to consider WHAI-TV a satellite of WPXN-TV New York; the request is pending at the FCC. Paxson lost a similar decision in Houston, however, when the FCC dismissed its request for must-carry privileges for Paxson Houston Licenses Inc. on TCI Cablevision of Texas, which serves Clute, Freeport, Lake Jackson and Richmond, all Texas. Paxson has filed multiple must-carry petitions at the FCC during the past several months, with the hope of gaining carriage for its fringe television stations.

Pole attachment changes
The FCC last week proposed revisions to its rules concerning the rates that govern what cable and telecommunications companies pay utilities for the use of poles and other rights of way. The 1996 Telecommunications Act requires the commission to adopt a new methodology for setting the rates that telecommunications carriers pay to use the poles and conduits. The commission is accepting comments on the new rate plan through Sept. 26.

FCC fines
Regulators last week handed out $20,000 in fines for violations of commercial limits during children’s programing. WEMT(TV) Greeneville, Tenn., received a $10,000 “notice of apparent liability” for exceeding the limits on the amount of commercial material stations may air during children’s programing. The FCC also gave a $10,000 fine to WNDY-TV Marion, Ind., for violating the rule.

In another enforcement action, the commission ordered KUTR(AM)-KCPX(FM) Salt Lake City to pay $16,500 for violations of FCC equal employment opportunity policies. The commission also notified WIBC(AM) Indianapolis of a $10,000 EEO fine.

Allan moves to Harris
High-definition-TV proponent Bruce Allan is moving from Thomson Consumer Electronics to broadcast hardware maker Harris Corp. Allan, who last year participated in computer/broadcast industry negotiations over the digital-TV standard, will be leading Harris’s digital-TV business as head of worldwide broadcast operations.

Gayle King walks the talk

Eyemark accommodates working mother’s busy schedule with side-by-side studios for talk host/news anchor

By Joe Schlosser

When Gayle King finishes taping an episode of her upcoming talk show, she walks exactly 169 steps to WFSB-TV, the Hartford, Conn., CBS affiliate where she anchors the evening news.

How does she know that it is 169 steps? William, her 10-year-old son, counted. King, a single mother of two and an anchor/reporter at the station since 1981, is doing her best to make Hartford a new TV hot spot.

When King was approached last year by officials at CBS’s syndication division, Eyemark Entertainment, she was excited by the prospect of hosting her own talk show. But King, who is known nationally as Oprah Winfrey’s best friend, had one problem.

“She was very honest and up-front with us,” says Eyemark Entertainment’s Jim Dauphinee, senior vice president, programing and development. “She said it sounded great and very interesting and that she’d love to do [a talk show]. But she said she had to be in Hartford, that her family is in Hartford and that she loves anchoring the news in the city.”

King says she thought Eyemark would want her to move to one of the traditional talk show outlets—New York or Los Angeles.

“I did say that if it meant leaving Hartford then I couldn’t do it,” says King, who lives in a Hartford suburb with son William and 11-year-old daughter Kirby. “I was really willing to take a pass on it if they said I had to move.”

Dauphinee says he and other Eyemark officials didn’t even blink.

“We didn’t spend more than two seconds thinking about that,” he says. “We were convinced that she was the person we wanted, so we said, ‘Sure, we’ll make it work for you.’”

King and Eyemark officials point out that not all talk shows have originated from major cities. Phil Donahue’s show started in Dayton, Ohio, and Sally Jessy Raphael taped her show in southern Connecticut. Winfrey, who has the top-rated syndicated talk show, got her start in Baltimore, King notes.

“You can do a talk show anywhere, as long as you have a good host and a good project,” says Linda Ellman, executive producer of The Gayle King Show. That’s what we have here.”

Fox sees ‘Stargate’

The 22 Fox owned-and-operated stations have signed on for the syndication run of MGM’s Stargate SG-1. The sci-fi series, which stars former MacGyver star Richard Dean Anderson, airs on Showtime and will debut in syndication in fall 1998.

The Fox O&Os signed on for a two-year deal, which includes 44 hours (22 each year) of the series. Financial terms of the deal were not released, but MGM officials say the stations and the syndicator will each get seven minutes of ad time in each episode.

“We had been talking about this for some time,” says Sid Cohen, MGM Domestic Television Distribution president. “[Fox] wanted to see the product; they did and liked what they saw, and we were able to consummate our deal.”

Two other MGM syndicated hours, The Outer Limits and Poltergeist: The Legacy, already air on the Fox stations.

With the Fox station clearances, Stargate now is carried in nearly 40% of the nation and in 14 of the top 20 markets. MGM officials say they will start selling the show aggressively in September.

Gayle King does double duty in Hartford.

Eyemark officials looked at 12 locations in and around Hartford and even considered Foxwoods Casino in Ledyard, Conn., before finding a home for the show in WFSB’s backyard. Across from the station, in an area known as Constitution Plaza, Dauphinee and other executives noticed a two-story building that had been abandoned for more than 10 years. It was quickly turned into a state-of-the-art television studio.

“The building was a total disaster. I mean, it had had an asbestos problem and it was all exposed brick,” says Dauphinee. “It looked like someone had just walked in and tossed a hand grenade and taken off.”

Four months of construction and more than $1 million was put into the 100-seat studio King now calls her daytime home. The set is unlike that of any other syndicated talk show. Dauphinee says. To take advantage of the building’s busy downtown location, Eyemark officials placed a series of windows behind the audience.

“You’ll see Connecticut at its best, with the snow falling and the leaves blowing,” Ellman says. “The windows add a genuine character to everything.”

As for its easy access to the CBS affiliate, King says she needs it. Eyemark officials are taping two episodes of the talk show every Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, and King anchors the 5:30 p.m. newscast each weekday.

“I’m not eating as much as I did before, so this is going to do wonders for my figure,” King says with a laugh. “I don’t plan to work this hard for the duration, but I understand that we need to work hard to do this thing right. So I’m going at the pace I am.”

The Gayle King Show, which debuts...
Sept. 8, is being packaged by Eyemart as a half-hour talk show to follow Martha Stewart Living.

King's producers say her show is not celebrity-driven and that the Hartford location (two hours from New York City) will not affect its success. And King says rumors that Winfrey will appear on her first show are not true. King and Winfrey have been close friends since the late '70s, when King got a job as a production assistant at WJZ-TV Baltimore, where Winfrey was a news anchor.

“I do talk to her and get advice from her, but I think that would be very cheesy to have her on my first show,” King says. “I'm sure we'd get great ratings, but that wouldn't be a true indication of the show. We have to get on and get started, and then we'll have her on.”

Crime spree on network news

Study finds number of such stories has tripled since 1993

By Steve McClellan

Body-bag stories have long been a staple of local news programs, but since 1993, such stories have received much greater coverage on the evening newscasts of ABC, CBS and NBC.

That’s one conclusion of a study issued last week by the Center for Media and Public Affairs, based on an analysis of every story reported by the Big Three evening newscasts from 1990 to 1996.

The study found that, overall, crime news on the network evening newscasts has tripled since 1993, the year before the O.J. Simpson story broke. Since then, one of every seven stories has been about crime, the most heavily covered topic. CMPA says. Coverage of murders is up 700% since 1993, at a time when homicide rates nationwide are dropping. Excluding the Simpson case, homicide coverage on the newscasts rose 356% from 1993 to 1996, according to CMPA.

On a year-by-year basis, the proliferation of crime stories on the evening newscasts may have peaked in 1995.

That year, NBC Nightly News with Tom Brokaw reported 993 crime stories, a threefold increase from 1992. But last year, the newscast’s crime coverage dropped nearly to 1992 levels, with just 373 stories about crime.

The CBS Evening News with Dan Rather reported 861 crime stories in 1995, up about 300% from 1992 levels. But last year its crime coverage dropped about 50%, to 452 stories. Crime coverage on ABC World News Tonight with Peter Jennings’ also peaked in 1995 with 720 stories, a 350% gain over 1992. But such coverage fell sharply last year, when the newscast reported just 402 stories on the subject.

The networks’ newscasts are also paying more attention to Hollywood and entertainment, the study found. Since 1993, the newscasts have aired 50% more stories on the entertainment world than on the environment. From 1990 to 1992, there were twice as many environmental stories as entertainment stories.

CMPA says.

But as with crime coverage, entertainment news coverage seemed to peak in 1995. NBC Nightly News that year was by far the leader in reporting entertainment-related stories with 115, versus 68 in 1992, a gain of 70%. ABC World News Tonight reported 66 entertainment stories in 1995, compared with 44 in 1992, while CBS did 61 such stories in 1995 versus 51 in 1992.

CMPA Research Director Dan Amundson says crime coverage on the evening newscasts started to escalate when crime became a presidential election issue in 1992. “It sort of got out of hand,” particularly during the Simpson period, when the networks saw such stories as “an effective way to build audience and bring people back to network news,” Amundson says.

Did the networks pande to their audience on this issue? Says Amundson: “At least at some level during that 1993-94 period the networks seemed to be saying ‘We know you’re scared of crime, and we will tell you all about it...”

Fox demo spike

Fox posted its highest Nielsen ratings for the summer in the key adult demos for the week of Aug. 4-10, thanks to the performance of its four-hour miniseries Intensity. Over the two nights of the miniseries, Intensity averaged a 4.7/15 in adults 18-49 and a 7.1/13 in households.

and fill your imagination with every conceivable type of crime.' They started to cover the sorts of crimes that only the local news was doing up until then."

Feature reports have also increased significantly on the newscasts, the study reports. From about 1% of all stories in 1990 to 9% in 1996, Amundson says the trend is clearly a marketing device to build stronger bonds between reporters and viewers and to try to carve out identities. Amundson says the trend isn’t bad per se, unless the purpose is “just to get ratings.”

An NBC spokesperson said there was no denying the trends reported in the study but stressed that the network was not deliberately seeking out crime stories to boost ratings. The jump in crime news “is largely led by some recent high-profile crime cases and a sense that viewers are more interested in those stories.”

The spokesperson also said that many of NBC’s feature stories qualify as hard news and noted that there have been fewer stories about international affairs since the end of the Cold War. “Is crime filling the gap? Maybe, but it’s a shifting of American priorities, not the networks.”

C-SPAN buying Washington FM
Is paying $13 million for U. of D.C. station after earlier buyer backs out

By Elizabeth A. Rathbun

fter vocal community opposition, Salem Communications Corp. officials last week backed out of plans to buy noncommercial WDCU (FM) Washington from the University of the District of Columbia and convert the station’s format from jazz to religion. The surprise replacement buyer is C-SPAN, the 24-hour cable network that covers Congress.

C-SPAN will assume the $13 million sales contract tendered last month by Salem principals Stuart W. Epperson and Edward G. Atsinger III. C-SPAN earlier had offered $10.5 million for the station. Its turn came again after Salem’s opponents, including National Public Radio and the Media Access Project, insisted that a commercial broadcaster is not an appropriate owner for a noncommercial station.

Salem technically would not have owned WDCU: a nonprofit organization would have, Atsinger says. “We could have prevailed.” But “it wasn’t that overwhelming a thing for us that we wanted to create problems for the financially strapped seller, he says. Atsinger has harsh words for his opponents’ argument: “It’s elitist and it frankly borders on religious bigotry.”

WDCU is C-SPAN’s first radio venture—and its last, says chairman Brian Lamb. “This is a big step for us,” he says. “Our next step would be to satellite radio, not to [more] radio station ownership.”

As for quieting the controversy that greeted Salem, “I can’t imagine a more complementary service” than national public affairs for a noncommercial radio channel. C-SPAN is a nonprofit, noncommercial organization.

Plans now call for C-SPAN to simulcast much of its national public affairs TV programming over WDCU, Lamb says. With the notoriously long commutes of the nation’s capital, “it will give us a reach that we can’t get solely through television.”

NPR’s main concerns are that WDCU’s owner be nonprofit and that it provide noncommercial educational programming. With C-SPAN’s radio lineup still being devised, whether educational programming will be offered “is still up in the air,” says Judy Reese, NPR’s acting communications director.

Media Access Project is concerned that C-SPAN address local needs over WDCU’s 90.1 mhz frequency, president Andrew Schwartzman says: “Relatively minor and not especially onerous modifications in C-SPAN’s current plan would go a long way toward meeting community concerns.”

That won’t be a problem, Lamb promises. “I think it’s going to be a tremendous service to this town.”

Big buy for Clear Channel?

Does Clear Channel Communications Inc.’s plan to sell up to $1.5 billion of stock and bonds within the next two years signal a pending major acquisition? Analysts last week were wondering if such a deal might be for SFX Broadcasting Inc., which has been on the block for weeks. The going price for SFX has been estimated at $2 billion.

Analysts note that most companies the size of Clear Channel have shelf registration statements on file with the Securities and Exchange Commission so that they can move quickly into the public markets if necessary. “They could be getting ready for the next big bang,” or acquisition, one Wall Street analyst says. “But it could also be the normal course of business.” In its statement, filed last Monday with the FCC, Clear Channel said the proceeds of the offerings would be used to repay debt and buy more radio and/or TV stations. The company currently is about $752.3 million in debt, according to Bloomberg Business News.

Huge news from Heftel

The second-quarter net income of Spanish-language broadcaster Heftel Broadcasting Corp. skyrocketed from a loss of $663,000 last year to $7.7 million this year, the company reports. The growth partly reflects the February merger of Tichener Media System into Clear Channel Communications Inc.—controlled Heftel, the company says. The result of the merger, which involved 37 radio stations, was a near tripling of Heftel’s assets, from $164 million to $479 million. Net revenue for the second quarter shot up 90.9%, to $38 million, while pro forma revenue increased 18.1%, also to $38 million. Meanwhile, operating income rose 106.8%, to $9.8 million, and broadcast cash flow grew 120.2%, to $15 million, the company says. The growth was better than expected, pumping up Heftel’s stock price to a record high of $70.75.

Good news from Cox

Cox Radio Inc. enjoyed 47.9% revenue growth in the second quarter, to $54.35 million. On a same-station basis, revenue was up 14.4% to $36.4 million. Meanwhile, net income rose 15.8%, to $3.9 million. The April merger with NewCity Communications Inc. was primarily responsible for the increase, the company says: NewCity contributed about $17.7 million in revenue in the second quarter. While “almost half of our portfolio falls into the start-up and developing categories,” Cox is in “an excellent financial position to pursue acquisition opportunities,” Cox President Bob Neil said in a statement. Cox will continue to “search for additional fill-in opportunities” in its Sunbelt markets. Despite net revenue growth of 75.7%, to $8 million, Triad Broadcasting Co. reports a second-quarter loss of $1.2 million, up from the $93,000 loss in the second quarter of last year. On a pro forma basis, revenue increased 8%, the company says. Poor cash-flow results were blamed largely on four radio stations in Omaha, two of which Triad Broadcasting Co. “only began to operate,” a news release says.

Studio donation aids girls
Troubled girls may find their voice in radio, thanks to OmniAmerica Group/Chancellor Broadcasting Co. The companies are donating the former studio of WOLL(FM) West Palm Beach, Fla. to the Children’s Home Society of Florida, which will teach radio broadcasting to at-risk girls ages 13-16. The building has been vacant since early last year, when OmniAmerica moved several of its area stations into a new building, says Steve Bardy, associate director of development for the Children’s Home Society. It has remained vacant through Chancellor’s May purchase of WOLL and OmniAmerica’s seven other Florida radio stations. The society now is seeking donations of equipment and eventually hopes to acquire an educational license from the FCC, Bardy says.

Meet the president
According to Evergreen Media Corp.’s home page on the World Wide Web, company president “Jimmy de Castro has a habit of turning things around quickly.” Not, however, his contributions to his own home page. His “Message from the President” informs a browser, over and over for two paragraphs, that “this space will be filled with a brief but brilliant letter composed by the president of Evergreen Media Corp.” That’s what it’s said for the past week or so, anyway. Perhaps de Castro is too busy with the pending merger of Evergreen and Chancellor Broadcasting Co. into Chancellor Media Corp. Evergreen’s Website address is www.evgn.com.

Cinemax brands for fans
Pay channel repositions itself with marketing, programming moves

By Donna Petrozzello

Cinemax has unveiled a marketing and programing strategy that will try to brand the pay-TV network as "the movie service for the movie fan."

Beginning Sept. 1, Cinemax will feature a different 8 p.m. movie every night. Dubbed "Max Hits at 8," the series will include Friday premiere films, current hits, modern classics, independent films and the Cinemax Reel Life documentary series. The network is promising viewers that they will not see a film twice in the same year in the 8 p.m. slot.

Starting at 10 p.m. nightly, Cinemax will feature first-time-on-TV movies, action films and big-budget theatricals in the network's "Max Prime at 10" service.

Dave Baldwin, senior vice president of program planning for Cinemax and HBO, says the new schedule is a departure from Cinemax's "predictable schedule," in which the network defined weekdays by showing films of a specific genre. While Cinemax has traditionally started its prime time movie at 8 p.m., the start time for the next film depended on the length of the earlier feature.

Starting a second feature at 10 p.m. allows the network to drop more product into prime time, says Baldwin. As a result of the 10 p.m. start, Cinemax's Friday After Dark adult series will not start before 11:30 p.m. in its Eastern, Pacific or Mountain feeds. Schedule changes are not expected to affect Cinemax 2, which will maintain its 9 p.m. start time for features.

In conjunction with the new schedule, Cinemax will launch an on-air marketing campaign with clips of viewers talking about movies, segments about obscure film facts and offbeat Hollywood tours. Trailers will focus on fans talking about their favorite films.

The campaign will try to "break through the clutter" of pay-TV movie channels vying for viewers, says Jeff Bewkes, chairman of Home Box Office and Cinemax.

According to Bewkes, Cinemax and Home Box Office combined claim more households than any other pay-TV movie channel and earn the highest total-day and prime time ratings for movies in pay-TV. Cinemax has 5% more movies than other pay-TV services.

"With the huge explosion of channels, we have got to get the size of Cinemax across to consumers," Bewkes says.

Cinemax Multichannel Marketing Vice President Rick Kendall notes that Cinemax has become the second-most-watched pay-TV movie channel, after HBO, without a "blockbuster movie premiere or an exclusive studio deal.

"...Cinemax has won in the ratings because it's better at meeting the needs of the true movie fan," says Kendall. "We found that movie fans were the key to Cinemax's popularity, and if we were going to get better, we'd have to refocus on the fan. We'll talk about the customer, rather than the titles."

CSG to service TCI subs
Buys SummiTrak system in bargain

By Price Colman

CSG Systems International's 15-year, $1.8 billion back-shop service contract with Tele-Communications Inc., announced last week, is CSG's biggest contract ever.

CSG returned the favor by acquiring TCI's SummiTrak back-shop system in a deal worth roughly $172 million. CSG paid TCI $106 million in cash and $66 million in contingency payments. Under the deal, TCI also gets warrants for 1.5 million shares of CSG stock worth some $40 million (at recent prices), provided that TCI meets certain undisclosed milestones.

The SummiTrak sale comes as no surprise. Sources had said (B&C, Aug. 11) that a deal was imminent and had named CSG, along with Cable Data and Oracle, as potential buyers.

Back-shop operations—essentially billing, sales support/service, order fulfillment and customer service—may not be the sexiest business, but they are essential and increasingly lucrative as telecommunications service providers offer more products. Cable companies once billed only for cable service, but their move toward bundling such products as video, high-speed data and limited instances telephony requires an increasingly sophisticated back shop operation.

Going in, CSG already had a driv-
Fox Sports takes shot at green

Regionals’ revenue often is eaten up by rights payments: challenge for new alliance is to demonstrate consistent cash-flow performance

By John M. Higgins

Executives at News Corp., Liberty Media and Cablevision Systems proclaim that their new sports network alliance is a cash machine, but new disclosures show that their existing operations could use a tune-up.

Disclosures related to Fox/Liberty Networks LLC’s $600 million junk-bond sale show that the three sports units—the existing Fox Sports regional networks, Cablevision’s SportsChannel and Madison Square Garden—that make up the venture are far from the cash generator ESPN has become for The Walt Disney Co. Further, the operations generally fall short of the performance of other cable networks.

Fox/Liberty’s performance will become even more critical after it completes its $850 million investment in 40% of Cablevision’s Rainbow Sports unit. The junk bonds, combined with a simultaneous $600 million bank loan, will leave Fox/Liberty with $1.12 billion in debt and $61.2 million in annual cash interest payments—far more than the operation is currently generating.

The junk-bond prospectus offers the first-ever financial peek at SportsChannel and MSG. While some details of Fox/Liberty’s operations have been available to the public, the prospectus gives the most extensive financial picture to date.

However, it offers very little detail about perhaps the most critical element of the business: the volatile cost of TV rights to local teams.

The networks are bringing in plenty of money—Fox/Liberty alone could hit $300 million in revenue this year. But it’s eaten up by the huge cost of local sports rights. Fox/Liberty had big losses in 1996, although there is less red ink this year. Cablevision is in better shape, but SportsChannel’s cash-flow margin is just 12%, compared with 41% for ESPN. MSG—buoyed by a turnaround in its namesake New York City arena—reaches about 20%.

The three companies insist they can galvanize the business by closely tying 12 Fox networks, eight Cablevision networks and seven additional affiliated services under a single 55 million-subscriber umbrella. That would allow Fox Sports to offer advertisers national reach on the highest-rated fare in cable—home-team sports programming.

They also contend that Fox Sports will score big by loading upgraded news and sports coverage onto the national “backdrop” service—rodeo and volleyball coverage aired when the Dodgers and Cubs aren’t playing.

Still, the spotty performance of the regionals concerns some financial and media executives. Spencer Grimes, cable analyst for Smith Barney & Co., characterizes the regional sports nets as “historically underperforming.”

“It’s a certain concentrated message on a national ad sales basis should help the regional nets, but it seems to me that they’ve got to demonstrate the strong cash-flow performance of the regional networks,” Grimes says.

Fox/Liberty and Cablevision would not comment on the disclosures. Fox/Liberty’s financial disclosures are jumbled because of News Corp.’s entry into the business in June 1996. However, the filing shows that the combined operation posted $43 million in negative cash flow during 1996 on more than $382.4 million in revenue.

For the first half of 1997 (ended in June), losses were tracking on a much lower pace, just $3.4 million on $236.8 million in revenue. The 1996 results ap-peer to be hurt by a big overpayment by FX for sports rights that didn't score ratings. Last December Fox/Liberty took a $109 million charge, writing off $80 million for overpayment on Major League Baseball rights and $29 million on college football rights.

So how will Fox/Liberty make the interest payments? One of the two series of 10-year junk bonds being sold—accounting for $250 million of the $600 million—is zero coupon for five years, requiring no immediate cash payments.

More important, the company is being dragged down by several relatively new networks, including the Rocky Mountain and Arizona networks. Fox/Liberty executives tell investors that the more established services, such as those in Los Angeles, Pittsburgh and Seattle, are expected to generate $100 million in cash flow this year.

If the start-ups can be turned around, Fox/Liberty might become profitable. Also, SportsChannel alone has been profitable enough to generate annual dividends of about $27 million, so Fox/Liberty can tap into that flow. MSG is being tapped for more cash.

The Rainbow operation is in better shape. SportsChannel, excluding MSG, generated $23.9 million in cash flow on $251.2 million in revenue last year—a 9.5% margin. For the first half of this year, the networks' earned cash flow jumped 50%, to $17 million, on a 13% sales gain, to $143.2 million.

MSG generated $90.3 million in cash flow on $423.7 million in revenue. For the first half of 1997, cash flow increased 11%, to $48.6 million, on flat revenue of $219.8 million.

One note on FX. The filing indicates that FX isn't living up to its promises to cable operators. When FX was launched in June 1994, then-president Anne Sweeney, now president of The Disney Channel, bragged that the network would spend $100 million annually on programming out of the gate.

The filing shows that in its first year of operation, FX spent no more than $54.4 million on programming. In the 10 months of fiscal 1996, FX's total operating expenses—largely, but not totally, programing costs—ran $63 million. That's $75 million on an annualized basis.

Tale of TSAT tape
TCI Satellite Entertainment reported a second-quarter net loss of $55.1 million, or 83 cents per share, on revenue of $137.4 million, up 40%. TSAT also said operating cash flow increased to $22.1 million from $1.9 million in the comparable period last year. The increases in revenue and operating cash flow were largely the result of increased revenue per customer, rate increases, a larger customer base and improved operations, according to the company. TSAT said it ended the quarter with 757,000 subs, an addition of 22,500 during the month period. Compared with the same period last year, when the company added 65,000 new subs, there was a 65% decrease in the number of new customers added. One reason for the slower subscriber growth is a prepurchase credit-check program the company implemented early in the year in an effort to reduce churn.
With so much interest in gardening, it's no wonder Home & Garden Television is growing wildly across the country.

Two of every five Americans are gardeners, and one network fits them perfectly. More than 29 million home enthusiasts have become HGTV subscribers in just over two years, because HGTV provides entertaining, informative programming they want. After all, there are thousands of choices for any garden, but only one real choice for gardeners. Home & Garden Television.
Jones, Bell disagreements come to light

SEC filing shows two don’t always see eye to eye

By Price Colman

I.

n Jones Interacable’s relationship with major investor Bell Canada International in trouble? A recent Securities and Exchange Commission filing from Jones might give that impression, but the company’s position is that it’s all part of the normal course of business.

In the SEC filing, Jones noted that BCI’s three board members voted against acquisition of an Independence, Mo., cable system. The filing also notes that BCI and two outside directors opposed the upcoming offering of 7.8 million shares. The $95 million Jones expects to net from that offering will be used to partly finance the Independence system acquisition. The remainder of the roughly $171 million purchase price will come from existing credit lines.

It’s hardly unprecedented for a regulatory filing to mention board-level disagreements. But it’s the first time Jones has acknowledged that it doesn’t always see eye to eye with BCI. BCI in 1994 increased its holdings in Jones from 2% to 32% by buying 7.4 million shares at a hefty premium of $27.50 per share. (During 1994, Jones shares traded as high as $17.875 and as low as $11.125.)

“There was a disagreement about the offering of shares,” says Jones spokesman Jim Carlson. “There are disagreements on boards of directors from time to time. Beyond that, we have no comment.”

BCI executives were unavailable for comment.

Analysts say there has been friction between Jones and BCI for some time, and that BCI is putting considerable pressure on Jones to improve its stock price.

“They are basically being told they can’t spend any more money,” says one source in the investment community. “BCI is saying ‘quit screwing around, roll up the partnerships.’”

Just how much friction there is depends on whom you ask.

“There’s no real divisive ness,” says a source familiar with board discussions. “There are spirited discussions on various issues with people who are really attuned to what’s going on.”

While Jones has been aggressive about buying out its managed partnerships—by September of last year it had increased its wholly owned subscribers by roughly 86%, to 576,000—how it’s doing those deals may be the source of disagreements between the company and BCI.

Issuing new shares to effect the Independence system purchase may not have sat well with BCI because it put the Canadian company in an awkward position: See its ownership stake diluted or buy enough shares to maintain its 32% stake. BCI, as dictated by its shareholder agreement, chose the latter, committing to buy roughly 2.34 million shares.

With shares in the offering likely to go for around $13, BCI has “averaged down” its investment in Jones. But given the premium that it paid for its 30% stake, BCI may still be having second thoughts about its decision to buy into Jones.

“I think they’re unhappy with their investment,” says a source in the investment community. “It’s unfortunate that their timing on coming into the cable market was bad.”

Unless Jones can prop up its stock price, in the process making BCI’s option to buy more attractive, it’s unlikely that BCI will voluntarily invest more money, the source says.

TCI’s money men

Proxy shows Clouston topped compensation heap

By Price Colman

f Tele-Communications Inc. Vice President Brendan Clouston is still in the executive doghouse, it’s a well-padded one: Clouston has an agreement with TCI for the company to buy out stock options he held as of April 7 for $10 million.

The information is disclosed in TCI’s proxy statement for its 1997 annual shareholder meeting, slated for Aug. 28.

While one TCI executive familiar with the purchase agreement called it “bizarre,” it’s not necessarily a bad deal for TCI.

The proxy shows that Clouston was granted stock options and stock appreciation rights effective Dec. 1, 1996, worth about $22.8 million based on the Black-Scholes valuation model. If Clouston were to activate the purchase agreement, TCI would pay only about 44 cents on the dollar to reacquire those options and rights.

There are conditions on the agreement, which expires March 31, 2002. If Clouston exercises any of the options, the $10 million price declines by the difference between the exercise price and the fair market value of the exercised options. The price also will decline by the fair market value of any restricted stock awards at the time they vest.

According to the proxy, Clouston and TCI International boss Fred Vierra tied for third in terms of raw salary at $650,000. CEO John Malone was number one with $900,000 and the late Bob Magness was second with $863,462. Peter Barton, who voluntarily resigned earlier this year after helping build Liberty Media Corp. into one of cable’s biggest and most successful programing concerns, was fourth with $503,00 in raw salary. Larry Romrell, president of TCI Technology Ventures, was fifth with $500,000.

But in terms of overall compensation, including tax payment reimbursements, dividends and stock awards, Clouston came out on top with $2.9 million. All top TCI executives took salary reductions late last year because of the company's financial stumbles. Compensation information in the proxy underscores an almost universal sentiment regarding Malone: For the responsibilities and titles he holds, he's one of the lowest-paid executives anywhere.

The proxy also discloses that former TCI executives Donne Fisher and J.C. Sparkman are collecting roughly $10.6 million between them for long-term consulting contracts with TCI. Fisher is collecting $6 million (including $35,000 annually for plane and flight crew privileges) for a contract that started when he retired Jan. 1, 1996, and runs through Dec. 31, 2006. That's "whether or not his services are required," according to the proxy. Compensation experts at Hewitt Associates say such clauses aren't unusual for top consultants.

Sparkman, who retired March 11, 1995, is getting about $4.6 million for a contract that runs through Sept. 30, 2002.

TCI officials declined to comment on what Fisher and Sparkman's consulting duties are, but one analyst suggested that their mere presence is a boon for TCI.

"Investors have a warm and fuzzy feel when the names Donne Fisher and J.C. Sparkman are raised," says Mark Riely of Media Group Research. "It carries over to the performance of the stock during that period when they were there." Coincidentally, TCI stock has recently emerged from the doldrums, trading over $19, or nearly 80% above its 52-week low of $10.75.

The proxy focuses primarily on the upcoming exchange offer for TCI's new tracking stock for TCI Ventures Group. But in one other peek at the executive shuffle that's occurred within TCI since early in the year, it discloses that Clouston, who will be president of TCI Ventures Group, was chief financial officer for TCI for just a month after being named to the position in mid-March. TCI's board declined to ratify Clouston's appointment.

TV Azteca ruffles peacock's feathers

NBC is claiming that Mexican broadcaster TV Azteca has caused the U.S. network some $130 million in financial damages because of its "failure to honor our rights" in a 1994 contract, says NBC spokesman George Jamison.

The charges came as a U.S. court gave NBC the green light to subpoena the Mexican broadcaster's financial investors to support claims that TV Azteca gave misleading statements about its financial situation when NBC had options to purchase a stake in the company. TV Azteca says that "NBC's claims are without merit."

The two networks are in arbitration concerning a three-year agreement, signed in 1994, in which NBC would provide the then-fledgling TV Azteca with programming, technical and managerial advice and use of the NBC brand name in exchange for $7 million and options to acquire up to 20% of TV Azteca.

Under the agreement, NBC would have the option to purchase up to 10% of TV Azteca for $16 million for each 1% acquired and would receive $2.5 million for every percentage not optioned. The deal also allowed NBC to purchase up to an additional 10% of the company upon a TV Azteca initial public offering at the IPO price.

In April 1997, one month before the contract expired, NBC decided to purchase just 1% of TV Azteca. This request, however, was denied by TV Azteca, which claimed that NBC had not lived up to its side of the agreement and therefore didn't deserve the acquisition options. The dispute was then brought to arbitration.

NBC claims that it was misled by TV Azteca about the company's value and the likelihood of an IPO in the near future. It is seeking documents from TV Azteca's investors and banks to prove that. "We believe they made misstatements and partial disclosures that would cause us to not exercise the full 10 percent."

DirectTV joins Spanish DTH consortium

Spanish government-backed digital TV platform Via Digital confirms that DirectTV has made "a huge investment" in the start-up service.

A Via Digital spokesperson says Hughes-owned DirectTV will become a "main partner" but that the exact percentage of its ownership has not yet been determined. DirectTV's stake in Via Digital likely will be 17%-18% but could be as much as 25%. DirectTV's investment will reduce the stake of the other main shareholders: Spanish telcom operator Telefonica de Espana, state public broadcaster Radio Television Española (RTVE) and Mexican media giant Grupo Televisa. Telefonica's 35% share could drop to 25%, and RTVE and Televisa's 25% shares could fall to 17% each. Completion of the deal will be announced in mid-September.

Pro Sieben eyes Nickelodeon stake

German television network Pro Sieben reportedly will acquire a majority stake in Nickelodeon's German service. That service, which launched in 1995, is owned by Viacom (90%) and local media company Ravensburger Film+TV (10%). Although Pro Sieben is expected to take over all of Ravensburger's stake, it is unknown how much the group will acquire from Viacom.

Comcast numbers

Comcast Corp. reports that operating cash flow rose 24.1%, to $367.4 million, for the second quarter compared with the same period last year. However, the company reported a net loss of $37.8 million, or 12 cents per share, compared with a profit of $16.8 million, or 7 cents per share, in last year's second quarter. Comcast attributed $32.3 million of that loss to startup costs associated with its 15% share of the Sprint PCS joint venture. The company also reported a 25.3% increase in consolidated revenue, to $1.185 billion, for the quarter. QVC, the company's electronic retailing operation, saw revenue increase 15.3%, to $467.7 million, generating a 23.4% increase in operating cash flow to $82.7 million. Comcast's cable division, including on a pro forma basis the acquisition of Scripps Howard cable, saw revenue rise 10.4%, to $520.8 million, with operating cash flow increasing 5.8%, to $246.4 million.

TCI, Box make it official

TCI Music and the Box Worldwide Inc., following through on a previous memorandum of understanding, signed a definitive agreement... to merge. As previously disclosed, The Box will become a subsidiary of TCI Music with shares of Box stock being exchanged for shares of TCI Music Series A preferred. The deal calls for each share of Box common to be valued at $1.50. Each share of TCI Music would be immediately convertible to three shares of TCI Music Series A common. The merger, contingent on regulatory OKs and approval by 75% of Box shareholders, is expected to close in the fourth quarter.

EchoStar losses up

EchoStar Communications Corp. said its net loss grew 182%, to $63.8 million, for the second quarter, although revenue increased 50%, to $172.8 million, and EBITDA (earnings before interest, taxes, depreciation and amortization) was $3 million compared with negative $7.6 million for the same period last year. EchoStar also reported that it has added 240,000 subs since year-end 1996, for a June 30 total of 590,000. The company reported improvements from first quarter 1997 to the second quarter; revenue increased $28.8 million and EBITDA went from negative $3.8 million to positive $3.3 million primarily because of the revenue improvement. EchoStar has not reported subscriber activity for June, when it unbundled equipment and programming packages, but analysts have indicated that the company’s subscriber base grew by about 45,000, which would give it a July 1 total of roughly 635,000 subs.

Low blows against high-def

Broadcasters embrace SDTV, multichannel approach

By Glen Dickson

Multichannel DTV is good... and HDTV is expensive.

That was the prevailing message at Paul Kagan's Digital Television Summit in New York last week, at which both ABC and Sinclair Broadcasting announced plans to use their DTV spectrum to deliver multiple channels of standard-definition digital programming instead of one high-definition signal.

ABC's Padden: Multiplexing is the key to digital success

In giving the keynote speech at the DTV conference, ABC Television Network President Preston Padden trumpeted broadcasters' strength in the analog marketplace and indicated how ABC aims to retain market share in the digital world: with a multiplex of widescreen SDTV channels, including subscription services. Padden said multiple channels will allow ABC to hold on to an increasingly fractionalized audience and get a fair share of the $30 billion subscription TV market while still offering far superior pictures to NTSC.

"Until recently, conventional wisdom was that broadcasters faced a stark choice between transmitting one high-quality digital program stream or multiple streams of much lower picture quality," said Padden. "But, because of the dynamic scalability of the Grand Alliance standard and because of advances in compression such as statistical multiplexing, the choice no longer appears so stark."

Instead, Padden said, ABC can offer multiple streams of widescreen pictures with CD-quality sound at a "picture quality virtually indistinguishable to the consumer from the highest resolution except when viewed on the largest and most expensive display devices."

Padden said that ABC wants to "drive the penetration of digital service" through two consumer products: widescreen digital receivers and inexpensive digital-to-analog converter boxes. He said that ABC will be working with MSTV and who-tv, the model HDTV station in Washington, to test the reception of DTV signals with a "consumer-friendly indoor antenna." Padden added that ABC will be conducting consumer surveys to see which DTV formats attract viewers.

While Padden didn't give technical details about picture formats, he is talking about either 480i (interlace) or 480p (progressive) SDTV. 480p widescreen is regarded as far superior in quality to the 480i widescreen format, and side-by-side comparisons of 480p and 1080i HDTV on midsize (34-inch) widescreen monitors have shown a negligible difference in picture quality. ABC engineers have consistently maintained that for an equivalent picture quality, progressive scan requires less bandwidth than interlace. But you could probably cram more 480p pictures into 6 mHz than 480p because of 480i's lower native data rate.

By saying it won't do HDTV, ABC becomes only the second broadcast network to make a definitive statement about its DTV plans. CBS has said from day one that it will support 1,080-line HDTV in prime time, although sources have indicated that Mel Karmazin is now eyeing multiplexing as a potential revenue source (B&C, July 28). Fox has stayed quiet on the subject, although it seems to be leaning toward multichannel SDTV. And NBC also hasn't announced its DTV intentions, although Tom Rodgers, NBC executive vice president, said at the Summit that NBC won't launch free multichannel service unless the new channels reach 30 million-40 million homes.

Sinclair Broadcasting President David Smith says that multichannel is the way to go for Sinclair's 29 stations.

ABC's Preston Padden wants to use digital to 'occupy more shelf space in the television marketplace.'
Sinclair to test multicasting

In a panel discussion following Padden's address, Sinclair Broadcasting President David Smith announced his station group's plans to offer a multiplex of DTV channels that include subscription services. Smith said that Sinclair will test multicasting at its Baltimore headquarters in January. "To demonstrate the multichannel game—how easy it is, and how cost effective it is," Smith didn't say whether Sinclair plans to transmit 4:3 or 16:9 pictures.

"I don't get the HDTV business model," Smith said. "Can I sell a spot for more because the picture's prettier? That's why we're focused on being a multichannel provider. It's already an established business with cable and DBS. It's simply up to the broadcaster to take his fair share of the subscription business."

Both Padden and Smith emphasized that business planners, not engineers, were now driving their companies' DTV direction. "I think the business guys have started to look at it," said Smith. "There's a lot of bad money in the DTV business. The technology is available off the shelf and can be done tomorrow."

Of course, that $1 million-per-station figure doesn't include paying for DTV spectrum, which Congress says broadcasters will have to do if they want to launch subscription services. Roy Stewari, chief of the FCC's Mass Media Bureau, acknowledged that the FCC needs to have a rulemaking on spectrum fees for subscription services, along with the vital decision of how cable must-carry rules apply to DTV signals.

While SDTV may be good enough for ABC and Sinclair, it may be bad for consumer electronics manufacturers, who are planning to roll out large-screen, HDTV-capable projection systems as their first DTV receivers. TV set manufacturers have said they need HDTV to drive sales of the first DTV sets because standard-definition signals won't have the visual impact that HDTV will have on large projection screens. Pictures in 4:3 SDTV format, for example, would be displayed with blank side panels on widescreen sets.

Nonetheless, Consumer Electronics Manufacturers Association President Gary Shapiro sounded unfazed. "It's not horrible or surprising," he said. "It's almost irrelevant. We expect broadcasters to be reluctant at first to embrace HDTV. But like stereo, advertisers will insist upon it."

Shapiro said that ABC's commitment to widescreen pictures is significant because the 16:9 aspect ratio will be the major selling point for new DTV sets. But he added that 480P still isn't HDTV, and he predicted that consumers will know the difference. "HDTV will win—there's no question in my mind," Shapiro said. "People will watch the best picture possible. But we'll build sets so they get everything."

The multiplex announcements by ABC and Tribune may breathe new life into the DTV proposal put forth by Compaq, Microsoft and Intel at NAB '97, under which computer manufacturers would build PC monitors that could receive and display 480P DTV pictures. Tom McMahon, a digital television and video architect for Microsoft attending the conference, predicted that by 2006 the bulk of DTV programming will be distributed in 480P format, even if it's shot on something else, because progressive compresses better than interlace.

"480P will be used to handle the distribution to viewers and also distribution within networks," McMahon said. "There will be encoders to de-in-

Some of the most advanced equipment in the field isn’t issued by the military.

Things are tough enough out there without having to lug around 150 lbs. of editing gear. Now Sony ends the battle with the DNW-A220 Digital Portable Field Editor.

This Betacam SX digital field editing unit is compact, surprisingly lightweight, and extremely portable. Its concise design incorporates two VTRs, two LCD screens and a built-in audio system in a highly durable package that’s made to withstand the rigors of field work. Whether it’s bouncing alongside you in a truck or being tossed into an overhead compartment on a plane.

For versatility on international assignments, the DNW-A220 easily switches from 525/60 to 625/50 operation. And, should you need to divide and conquer, its VTRs can be quickly separated to operate independently.

In terms of compatibility, the DNW-A220 can play back analog Betacam, Betacam SP, and Betacam SX.

And it performs frame accurate insert and assemble editing with the superb video quality of Betacam SX and four digital audio tracks. So your final cut will never be compromised.

The new DNW-A220. It’s a definite strategic advantage in the field.

Lucent joins DTV Team
The "DTV Team" of Microsoft, Compaq and Intel gained a new member last week, as Lucent Technologies' Microelectronics Group agreed to provide the computer faction with MPEG-2 decoder chip sets and 8-VSB demodulation technology, both of which are necessary to receive and display DTV signals.

With the DTV Team agreement, Grand Alliance member Lucent is on both sides of the DTV receiver fence. The company already is providing decoder chips to Mitsubishi for use in Mitsubishi's large-screen HDTV sets, which should go on sale in fall 1998 for $8,000-$11,000.

Cutting Edge

By Glen Dickson
Comark Digital Services and Microwave Radio Communications have agreed to work together to provide complete digital transmission paths to broadcasters making the move to DTV. Under the pact, CDS will sell MRC's digital studio transmitter links to its broadcast customers as part of integrated DTV transmission systems.

Mitsubishi Electric America has formed a new business unit targeting DTV technologies. The Digital Broadcasting Business America (DBBA) division will be headquartered in New Providence, N.J., and will market selected products to manufacturers of DTV broadcast and receiver equipment. The new division will be headed by Y. "Super" Yamaguchi, a senior managing director of Mitsubishi Electric Corp. in Japan. Tommy Poon will serve as DBBA's senior vice president for strategic planning, while Ralph Cerbone will be senior vice president/ GM of marketing and sales. Mitsubishi already has produced the first ATSC-compliant HDTV encoders, which have been purchased by CBS, and also plans to manufacture DTV television sets.

Fujinon's AT2 ENG lenses now feature a quick-zoom function.

Fujinon Broadcast has added a new quick-zoom function to its AT2 line of ENG lenses to allow simple focus setting. After a camera operator frames a shot, a push and hold of the AT2's quick-zoom button initiates a fast zoom to the telephoto position, allowing the operator to make a quick, accurate focus setting. When the quick-zoom button is released, the lens automatically returns to the initial frame position. The Fujinon lenses that include the new feature are the A10X4.8EVm Wide Power hand-held lens, the A15X8EVm hand-held zoom lens and the A20X8EVm telephoto zoom lens.

Acrodyne says that it can offer Adjacent Channel Technology (ACT) to broadcasters making the transition to DTV. ACT is a transmitter that can pass adjacent digital and analog channels through a single high-power amplifier. An ACT transmitter also will require only one antenna and one transmission line.

Vyxv has gained a long-term contract from ABC for video transmission services. The deal will increase and expand the video transmission services that Vyvx provides to ABC, primarily backhauls for sports and news events. Richard Wolf, ABC director of telecommunications and distribution services, won't disclose the terms of the contract, saying only that it "is multimillion-dollar and multiyear." Wolf says the contract includes dedicated fiber, occasional-use fiber and satellite distribution. ABC has been a Vyvx customer since 1990. In other Vyvx news, the company has completed the conversion of its satellite spot-delivery network to digital operation. Six hundred TV stations and cable systems have installed digital receivers to decode transmissions for on-site storage and playback.

Star TV of Hong Kong is now online with the Columbine JDS Paradigm management information system. The transition to Paradigm at the satellite program service is being done in stages, with full integration due by the end of the year. In April, three Paradigm products were installed on four IskyB channels: the Paradigm Taxfix module, Paradigm Program Control and Paradigm DVB. Three commercial channels went live on June 1—Channel V International, Star Plus South, and Star Movies South—and by Aug. 1 Phoenix and NSCC also were operational with Paradigm. Nine additional channels are scheduled to go live by Dec. 31. "When a broadcaster reaches the point of delivering more than 10 or 15 digital channels, the operation becomes so complex that you simply cannot fit enough people in the room to handle the multitude of tasks that have to be done," says Ron Higgins, Star TV's broadcast operations and engineering director. "Our quest for an integrated, multichannel management solution had become an absolute necessity." With Paradigm, Star TV now needs only one person per three or four channels per shift, compared with the previous requirement of two or three people per channel.

NextLevel invests in WorldGate

Deal lends support to Interactive Channel's digital applications

By Richard Fedesco

Continuing its effort to drive the digital-TV business, NextLevel extended its software ties last week to WorldGate Communications and Source Media's Interactive Channel.

NextLevel joined with Scientific Atlanta in making an undisclosed equity investment in WorldGate. The three companies are joining forces to push WorldGate's $5-a-month Internet access service designed to accommodate cable systems.

NextLevel also struck a deal to make its CFT2200 advanced analog set-top boxes capable of delivering Interactive Channel's digital programming applications.

The moves lend momentum to the fledgling WorldGate and Interactive Channel initiatives and come on the heels of NextLevel's million-dollar investment in ACTV. WorldGate is field testing its service in the headends of three major MSOs, while Interactive Channel is running what is effectively a commercial testbed in Century Communication's Colorado Springs system.

Making modules available for Interactive Channel's service holds the prospect of a jump start for its modem-free Internet access, e-mail and local information services. Once Interactive Channel's software is embedded in the NextLevel boxes, it's looking at launching in other cable systems by early 1998, says Tom Oliver, Interactive Channel CEO. "From our perspective, this enormously raises the marketing opportunity from digital..."
to analog," he says.

Interactive Channel's next launch will be in Cablevision Systems Corp.'s Boston system in October, according to Oliver, who says it will be packaged with Cablevision's Optimum digital TV service or sold on a stand-alone basis for $7.95 per month. Interactive Channel sells for $6.95 a month in Colorado Springs, where 20% of the subs purportedly use it daily.

Interactive Channel plans to market itself as a tiered cable service. Oliver says, adding that support from a group of national advertisers to be announced shortly also will help sustain it.

Cablevision is one of three MSOs testing WorldGate's service (at its 643,000-sub Long Island system). Comcast Cable has WorldGate in front of 35,000 subscribers in Philadelphia, and Charter Cable is testing it among 155,000 subs.

WorldGate plans to have the service in as many as 18 more cable headends before year's end, according to David Dill, WorldGate CFO, who says several of those will be abroad. Regardless of whatever acceptance the service gets, the support of NextLevel and S-A is essential, Dill says: "These are the dominant set-top suppliers in the world, and it's important for us to have a strong relationship with them."

WorldGate expects to make a major upgrade to the service this fall, Dill says, enabling near-digital-quality image resolution via analog boxes.

SportsZone adds pitch-by-pitch coverage

ESPN's SportsZone.com has quietly introduced GameTracker, a feature that enables fans to follow live baseball games pitch by pitch.

PC users can monitor any Major League Baseball contest in the baseball scoreboard area of SportsZone by locating the game and launching the GameTracker application. What appears on screen: a running box score; a graphic that shows the current situation on the baseball diamond; a current-inning summary in text, and the live pitch count on the batter, with photos of pitcher and batter.

Users also can access career statistics for the batter-pitcher matchup. Clicking on a base runner in the diamond graphic provides information on how he reached base and his stolen-base stats. Clicking on a fielder's name reveals the player at that position. Lineups and running stats also are displayed. Users can activate an audio signal that sounds whenever something of note happens during the game.

ESPN did not introduce GameTracker with a splash, but stayed low-key while debugging it, says Geoff Reiss, senior vice president of sports at ESPN Internet Ventures. The next step could bring GameTracker—and SportsZone’s baseball coverage—into another dimension, Reiss says: "One can imagine a world where the [game] audio is linked. That's the next logical progression."

NCI, Navio set to go on Enhanced TV

The Internet TV space is getting crowded, with Enhanced TV planning to jump in as one of three such services by year's end.

As Oracle Corp.'s Network Computer Inc. unit and Navio Communications officially merged as Network Computer Inc. last week, they demonstrated software for the planned service. As exhibited, Enhanced TV enables a user to watch a sport event or entertainment show, reduce that program to a window on the TV set and access information or engage in a chat session simultaneously on-screen.

Enhanced TV will launch by early next year at a cost comparable to that of Microsoft Corp.'s WebTV, $19.95 a month. Enhanced TV's next-generation set-top boxes, produced by makers yet to be announced, will cost about $300, according to an NCI spokesperson.

WebTV claims 120,000 subscribers. It will get its first competitor, NetChannel, when that service launches next month. NetChannel demonstrated a concept similar to Enhanced TV at an industry gathering in New York last week.

Thomson/RCA and Zenith will deliver the first generation of boxes for NCI next month, but the devices won't allow integration of TV signals and data content.

Among NCI's investors are Nintendo Co., Sony Corp., Sega Enterprises Ltd. and Acer Group, all of which held stakes in Navio and could suggest a direction in content for the NCI venture.

New Tech hopes Bikini.com takes off on TV

New Tech Entertainment has launched Bikini.com as the first of many—"bikini.com"—hybrid online/TV entertainment projects.

The site (www.bikini.com) combines marketing opportunities with a sort of camp Sports Illustrated swimsuit issue knockoff. It has a section featuring supermodels in bikinis, "bikinirama," where users can dress a caricature of a supermodel; a "bikinizione" of pictorials featuring other bikini-clad models; bikinichat; a bikini shop, and a photo section for a male-female model search (presumably to defuse the politically incorrect sexism it celebrates). It also aspires to become a beach party TV series—and already has a theme song.

Bikini.com is one of 20 content concepts that New Tech is looking to flesh out so they can migrate from the Internet and enjoy a simultaneous life on-air. The concepts include Crimebeat, Cartoonland; a sci-fi vehicle with Star Trek skipper William Shatner as host; Pop City, in development with Dick Clark Productions, and Las Vegas World, featuring Steve Lawrence and Eydie Gorme.

"All of our concepts for the Internet have a multitude of avenues," says Herman Rush, New Tech co-founder and principal. "All of the concepts lend themselves to TV as well as to the Internet."

The beach party show he hopes will emerge from Bikini.com would feature live music, profiles of top models, games and comedy. Rush may take the concept to NATPE next year. The former chairman of Coca-Cola Telecommunications, Rush is also executive producer of the syndicated Monteil Williams Show.

Most of the 20 concepts that New Tech has in the works are in development as Websites now, according to Rush, who envisions plenty of crossover in the new media as TV and PC technologies merge.

Bikini.com is produced by Sunshine Media Corp.—RT

Kudos for West

EDITOR: As we congratulate Don West on the occasion of his elevation to a high, new estate in your publishing group, we should also applaud the wise elders of BROADCASTING & CABLE's parent for ensuring that your altogether unique journal will continue to benefit from Don's brilliance and judgment as editor-at-large.

But before we let him go off to his new, broadened responsibilities and increased corporate portfolio, we should acknowledge the tremendous and overwhelming sense of gratitude felt by every broadcaster for Don's contributions to our profession (or industry, as some would have it).

During his tenure as editor, Don West continued the tradition—and teachings—of Sol Taishoff about the genius and worth of the First Amendment. He gave us the intellectual fire-power to resist government intrusion into the creative work and electronic journalism which proceeds from our being "the people's business" as public trustees.

The graceful, pithy pronouncements of Don West's bright, fine mind—together with the remarkable precision and fairness of his editing—elevated our profession and often made us better than we are.

We're also delighted, of course, to have Don in New York at least several days a week, especially since he always comes accompanied by a wonderful generosity of spirit, a keen intellect and that marvelous skeptical view of things temporal which is his trademark. By enabling him to concentrate on the great issues of the day, you have provided your readers with the gift of Don's great wisdom. And for that we continue in your debt. And his.

Don West gives you lineage and perspective. And his intelligence gives us meaning and worth. But having worked with the man for so long, I expect you know all this—William O'Shaughnessy, president, WVOX(AM)-WKV1(FM) Westchester, NY.

EDITOR: The intelligence, passion, commitment and personal knowledge that Don West has poured into your magazine all these many years has greatly benefited not only your publication and this wonderful business, but also those elements of government grappling with telecommunications policy. The net result has always and consistently been a journal of depth, breadth and vitality. Quite a legacy.

Sol made a terrific hire.—Shaun M. Scheckman, vice president/Washington, Tribune Co.

Cable’s do-it-yourselfer

From age 10, Ken Lowe knew he wanted to build things. But rather than tackle the common treehouse, Lowe built a radio station with a small transmitter and a control room fashioned from wooden planks. He named the station WGOB for “gobs of fun.” While it was a crude attempt at broadcasting, Lowe says WGOB introduced him to the business he’s “always wanted to be in.”

Lowe has come a long way from playing home-town disc jockey with his school pals. He oversees Home & Garden Television, a cable network he helped to launch in December 1994. His hunch was that there were other frustrated part-time home builders like himself who were eager to learn about the trade that was their weekend obsession.

In less than three years, HGTV has blossomed into one of cable’s fastest-growing networks. The Knoxville, Tenn., operation has sealed carriage agreements with operators serving 31 million households via cable and satellite TV. HGTV, which recently won its fifth international carriage license, is expected to launch a companion radio network next spring.

Lowe attributes part of HGTV’s success to its programming, which is entirely original during prime time and 85% original overall. HGTV’s “wholesome,” return-to-basics topics—home decorating, home repair and building, gardening and entertaining—appeal to the instincts of homemakers and putters around the globe, he says.

“With cell phones and faxes, and as overly communicated as we are in this society, there is very little left that is organic in our lives,” he says. “There’s a certain lack of the simplistic, how-to-hammer-a-nail programming that people are looking for.”

Lowe’s knack for tapping the demand for informational and entertaining programming for home builders and homemakers is not the product of accident. As a youngster growing up in Westfield, N.C., Lowe learned the value of working for the things he wanted. He took grueling after-school jobs and learned “how to be a person in charge of my own success.”

As a college freshman at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, Lowe roomed with Rick Dees, now an international radio celebrity, and met John Tesh, who became co-host of Entertainment Tonight. Working at the campus radio station with Dees and Tesh gave Lowe “an appreciation of talent” and a sense of how to work with talent, he says.

After college, Lowe was hired by a series of radio stations for on-air and managerial positions. In 1980 he became the manager of the Scripps Howard Broadcasting radio group. After Lowe had spent six years on the radio side, Scripps Howard merged its television and radio broadcasting divisions and named him vice president of TV programming, promotion and marketing. In that position Lowe learned the importance of developing original programming.

He chose to build five homes—three with his wife Mary—near several of the cities in which he did business. The experience gave him “firsthand knowledge of the frustration and lack of information” available to independent home builders, he says.

“I kept coming home to my wife [and] telling her that home building and decorating were big categories and there must be a lot of people who wanted to know about it. She suggested I put a network together.”

Lowe’s instincts were validated in conversations with friends who “talked with a sense of pride about what they were able to grow in their gardens,” but weren’t nearly as exuberant about their careers.

After years of refining his idea, Lowe presented it to the Scripps Howard directors. They agreed to launch HGTV with the help of retransmission-consent deals from their own nine TV stations and an outlay of $75 million.

From the outset, Lowe has been firm on his principles both on-air and off. He remains passionate about developing original shows that speak to a sophisticated, intelligent audience.

Lowe has worked hard to prevent HGTV programing from slipping into the “tabloid talk” genre that he says “does not give the audience the credit they deserve.” Lowe also abides by core company principles that value “integrity, compassion, shared responsibility and communication.”

Lowe expects HGTV to become profitable in 1998. “When I think of how fast we’ve grown, it’s a tribute to the people here. Hiring and nurturing good, creative people is the heart and soul of our business.”

DEATHS

Martin Malarkey, 79, a founder and former president of the national Cable Television Association and a founder of The Strategis Group, died June 27 of cardiac arrest at his home in Washington. In 1949 Malarkey’s interest in cable TV was sparked when he noticed, during a hotel stay in New York, that the television had excellent reception, unlike the sets at home in Pottsville, Pa. At home, he installed a headend on the highest mountain he could find, and ran a cable to his appliance store: his television business began to boom. In 1951 Malarkey and five others formed NCTA, of which Malarkey was president for the first five years. In 1987 Malarkey-Taylor Associates (an engineering firm formed with Archer Taylor) purchased Economic and Management Consultants International (EMC1) to develop synergies between the emerging telecommunications sectors of cable and wireless. Eventually the firm was renamed The Strategis Group, where Malarkey remained as a consultant. He is survived by his wife, Elizabeth; a daughter, five grandchildren, and three great-grandchildren.

George H. Newi, 62, former president, ABC Television Network, died July 22 of a heart attack while on a vacation cruise in Stavanger, Norway. Newi retired from ABC in 1995 after 32 years with the network. He joined the company's sales staff in 1963 and by 1969 was a VP in charge of daytime and sports sales. Newi became VP/GM in 1978 and president in 1985. Before ABC, he worked for Compton and McCann-Erickson ad agencies. Newi is survived by his wife, Sally; and three children: George Jr., Alec and Lisa.

Lyle Van, 92, radio announcer, died July 22 at his home in Clearwater Beach, Fla. Van began his radio career in the early ’30s at WGST(AM) Atlanta. He covered World War II for NBC, announced for H.V. Kalenborn and anchored the Pure Oil News. Van, known for his “news on the human side” style, joined WOR(AM) New York and the Mutual Broadcasting System in the ’50s, anchoring local and national newscasts. Van is survived by his wife, Lyvonne, and three children.

CBS has announced additional contributors for Public Eye with Bryant Gumbel, including Rita Braver, who is being replaced as chief White House Correspondent by Scott Pelley. Braver will continue to file reports for the CBS Evening News with Dan Rather and Sunday Morning as national correspondent. Also named contributors to the Gumbel show last week were CBS correspondents Kristin Jeannette-Meyers, Richard Schlesinger and Paula Zahn. Steve Hartman, reporter for KCBS-TV Los Angeles will also file occasional stories for the Gumbel program.

In an attempt to cross-promote CBS Eye On People, CBS will devote a special edition of its 48 Hours program to a documentary developed by the startup cable network. The episode, "Birth of a Militia," was culled from Eye's I Witness weekly series and will appear Sept. 3 at 10 p.m. The show will include cross promo spots for Eye that will include an 800-number they can call and be switched to their local cable operator to ask that the channel be added to their system's lineup.

Time Warner Inc.'s New York City cable system has balked over paying higher fees to Sports-Channel New York for additional New York Mets games and will have to block the games to its subscribers. This season SCNY, owned by Cablevision Systems Corp., was able to bump its Mets schedule from 75 to 100 games for an additional rights payment to the baseball team. Cablevision's Rainbow Sports said that

Time Warner's contract with SCNY expired in January but kept the service on while they negotiated a new deal. Time Warner has already aired nine of the extra Mets games but will not carry the remaining 14 beginning with Friday's Colorado Rockies matchup.

Determined to boost ratings, CNN may be courting CBS Evening News anchor Dan Rather to take over its prime time newscasts. After failing to recruit NBC's Tom Brokaw months ago, CNN is actively interested in bringing in a "strong anchor" to prime time weekday newscast, says CNN News Group Chairman Tom Johnson. Rather's spokesperson Kim Akhtar says she is "not aware of any contract being offered by CNN recently." CNN has sought Rather since 1989 without success, says Akhtar. Rather recently signed a multi-year deal with CBS extending through the year 2000. While CNN spokesman Howard Polskin did not comment on the network's alleged pursuit of Rather, he says "the network would be interested if Rather became available."

Outgoing FCC Chairman Reed Hundt says the Telecommunications Act of 1996 is failing to provide competition in local markets. During a speech at the American Enterprise Institute, a Washington think tank, Hundt called on Congress to pass legislation that defines the term "cost" on a national level so that "fair and final interconnection agreements [can] quickly be reached." defers to the FCC to interpret congressional intent and application of policy; forbids delay of judicial review of FCC decisions, and affirms that "no state or federal competition rule will be of value unless it's enforceable." Senate Commerce Committee Chairman John McCain responded that he didn't think "giving the FCC more authority to regulate is the answer." McCain plans to hold hearings on the effectiveness of the Telcom Act early this fall.

Federal regulators last week signed off on the Bell Atlantic/Nynex merger. The FCC conditioned its approval of the deal on a series of factors, including the provisions of regulatory reports to the FCC concerning systems necessary for new competitors to provide local phone service.

Another senior MediaOne executive has left in the wake of parent US West Media Group Inc.'s decision to relocate the MSO from Boston to Denver. Senior VP of finance P. Eric Krauss resigned last week, following chairman Amos Hostetter and president Bill Schleyer out the door (B&C, Aug. 11). Krauss will be replaced on Sept. 1 by Bob Kikes, CFO of US West Media's directory publishing unit and controller of its domestic cellular unit. He will have the title senior VP/CFO.

ESPN has named a replacement from within to succeed Keith Olbermann, now with MSNBC, as co-host of the network's top-rated show, SportsCenter. Kenny Mayne, who has been with the network since 1990 and has been an anchor since 1994, has signed a five-year contract and will co-anchor the show with Dan Patrick starting in late August. Mayne, a former quarterback at UN/LV and a salesman for MCI, had been hosting ESPN2's weekend shows RPM 2Day and RPM 2Night.

SeaGull bankruptcy petition dismissed

The U.S. Bankruptcy Court in Los Angeles last week denied SeaGull Entertainment's motion asking the court to dismiss a petition to force the company into involuntary bankruptcy. Separately, the general counsel for KCAL-TV Los Angeles told creditors' attorney it was joining the petition against SeaGull, claiming unpaid debts of $190,000.

Bankruptcy Court Judge Alan Ahart was not swayed by SeaGull's argument that the creditors, including Alice Entertainment and two dozen former SeaGull employees, had filed their petition in bad faith or in the wrong state. The creditors' attorneys also refuted statements by SeaGull that it had no debts more than 30-days past due and that the filing of the petition resulted in KCAL's canceling of Tarzan, SeaGull's weekly syndicated series.

During the hearing, Hope Aguilar, lead attorney for the creditors, told Judge Ahart that KCAL executives were prepared to testify that they canceled the series because SeaGull was trying to package episodes from a previous Tarzan series with its own show. Aguilar also said KCAL executives would testify that SeaGull owed the station $190,000 in compensation for carrying the show and that the debt was at least 90 days past due.

After hearing both sides, Ahart denied SeaGull's motion and ordered SeaGull to respond to the creditors' petition for forced bankruptcy by Sept. 2.

SeaGull attorney Martin Friedlander said he was "surprised" by the decision. Ahart gave no reason for the denial and Friedlander said he had "only a gut reaction that there were a lot of people who claimed they were unpaid by [syndicated program] Hollywood Connection and we sided with them on an emotional issue opposed to an intellectual level."

Friedlander said SeaGull continued to dispute claims by Alice Entertainment and former SeaGull employees Joel Smith and Donna Barrie but that the company was going over lists of claims and was willing to "pay in full" those that weren't disputed. He said KCAL's claim was the responsibility of a separate company, Keller/SeaGull Entertainment, which produced Tarzan.

Net service to do so. The new network will make advanced data service available to 5 million customers in 19 states for the broadband arm of US West Media Group. MediaOne Express Internet service is being offered on cable systems in Boston, Atlanta, Detroit and Jacksonville, Fla. The backbone has long-haul links with speeds of up to 155 Mb/s, with future enhancements to boost that speed to 620 Mb/s.

The Consumer Electronics Manufacturers Association has established closed-captioning standards for DTV to be used by captioning providers, CC encoder and decoder manufacturers, receiver manufacturers and signal processing suppliers. Because of the increased capacity of the DTV bitstream over analog signals, DTV closed captioning will allow simultaneous transmission of captions in multiple languages and at multiple reading levels. DTV closed captioning will be displayed in a computer-like caption "window" on the screens of DTV sets.

Tele-Communications Inc. reported a 3.1% decline in revenue but said its net loss narrowed by 17.6% and operating cash flow increased by 28.1% for the second quarter ended June 30. TCI reported a net loss of $154 million on revenue of $1,887 billion and operating cash flow of $716 million. The company cited two factors contributing to the revenue decline: electronic retailing services no longer consolidated in subsidiary Liberty Media Group's financial results and the spin-off of TCI Satellite Entertainment. Cable operations in the TCI Group contributed 85%, or $1.61 billion, of TCI's overall revenue and 98.6%, or $706 million, of overall operating cash flow. Included in TCI's overall financial performance were results from Liberty Media Group. Liberty showed a dramatic but not surprising 81.5% decrease in revenue to $59.672 million, the result of no longer consolidating results of electronic retailing. At the same time, Liberty reported a 64% increase in net earnings, to $6.5 million, or 3 cents per share. Liberty also contributed $13 million to TCI's overall operating cash flow.

We haven’t heard the last of the solutions for digital TV, but ABC’s Preston Padden has fired a shot heard ‘round the broadcast world. His thesis: TV stations and networks should adopt 480P (progressive) and get on with it. The quality is so much better than NTSC—indeed, to some eyes hard to distinguish from HDTV at 1080i (interlace)—that broadcasters, he says, should take advantage of the multiple-channel capability afforded at the lower levels.

But the Padden bid is far from preemptive: it is something like leading with a spade. There are a number of players in this high-stakes game. The computer industry, for one. The consumer electronics industry, for another. CBS, NBC and HBO already are committed to HDTV. Each is likely to have hole cards not yet shown.

We’re still holding out for broadcasting in the full range of digital capability, from 480i or P through 1080i. This country set out to create a new world TV standard and it should settle for nothing less. Creating an ertaziz digital world with set-top boxes cobbled to NTSC analog sets (as DBS does now) isn’t the marketplace we had in mind when the FCC voted all that spectrum for all that quality and flexibility.

What this industry needs is a consensus to make HDTV work, not a consensus to avoid it.

This Bud’s for us

If cable had a Mount Rushmore, former MediaOne chairman Amos “Bud” Hostetter’s face would be on it. He has been that much of a fixture on the cable landscape since he co-founded Continental Cablevision almost 35 years ago. His departure two weeks ago from the renamed MediaOne over “irreconcilable differences” with new management will be a loss to the company no matter the cause. “You don’t replace an Amos Hostetter,” said the NCTA’s Decker Anstrom on hearing the news.

The differences between Hostetter and his corporate parent may indeed have been irreconcilable, with Hostetter simply unwilling to preside over the uprooting of his management team (although life is rarely simple). Given the reputation of that team, now thrown into some disarray—MediaOne President William Schleyer and Senior Vice President of Finance P. Eric Krauss also are exiting—it may prove a high price to pay for physical co-location. Speaking of high prices, many thought the $10.4 billion UMG spent for the company was in part a salute to the people running it. If so, open season on golden geese is a curious asset management strategy.

As for Hostetter, he’s not pulling out the hankies. He is a man with enough brains and skill to write his own ticket and the resources to furnish the first-class transportation.

Speaking softly

We’ve already seen a lot to like in Bill Kennard, and we’ve said so twice on this page. With the caveat that we expect to disagree with the future chairman on various issues, we also can say that they will be respectful disagreements. The friendly and approachable Kennard—“an absolute prince of a guy,” says NAB’s Valerie Schulte—has the sort of résumé that should make him particularly qualified to weigh both sides of important issues.

But if he speaks softly, he is also likely to be carrying a bigger stick in the new FCC, with no Jim Quello in frequent opposition to a regulatory course still on the Clinton heading.

We reserve the right to assail whatever policies run afoul of our reading of the First Amendment or the best interests of the Fifth Estate (some of Kennard’s First Amendment writings would not find a home in our scrapbook). At the journey’s outset, however, we see a capable hand on the tiller. Now if only Senator Hollings will return to his senses when he returns from vacation. It’s time to get the new FCC in gear.
