Dear TV Programmer Guy,

My name is Rick, but everyone calls me "the Rick". This lucky lugnut came from Mark Martin's pit at the Sears Point Raceway the day he broke his streak of 42 straight losses by owning turns 7 and 11. It's brought me great things, like ESPN, espn2 and a swollen molar which kept me out of work long enough to see the final Craftsman Super-Truck race of the season. And if I was to wake up one morning and find the only 24 hour sports news network worthy of a guy like Mark, on my tv, who knows? You may wake up and find this lucky lugnut in an envelope with a return address of "the Rick".

Thanks, the Rick

P.S.: ACT NOW! IF I get ESPN NEWS within the week, you could get this straw from a can of WD-40 that Dale Jarrett's pit crew threw out.

Family, Nick square off
New Family Channel targets kids, parents; Nickelodeon expands kids into prime time

By Lynette Rice and Joe Schlosser

Haim Saban is gearing up for cable’s version of family feud with veteran contestant Nickelodeon.

The new Family Channel parent is developing up to 12 prime time shows to cap a soon-to-be-revised lineup that will target kids and parents. Nickelodeon, meanwhile, is extending its kids franchise deeper into prime time.

Saban is keeping the new Family Channel schedule close to his vest because he wants to unveil his strategy at the Western Cable Show (Dec. 10-12 in Anaheim, Calif.). He’s targeting a spring launch. But sources say The Family Channel’s programming day will feature a morning block of kids shows more like Saban’s new FCC-friendly Captain Kangaroo than they are like Mighty Morphin Power Rangers and other signature violence strips that have helped to build the Fox Kids Network.

The new kids block will be a far cry from The Family Channel’s current weekday morning lineup, which includes an early-morning exercise block, Rescue 911, The Waltons and The 700 Club.

Afternoons will likely be devoted to teen shows in the vein of Saban’s Sweet Valley High—which airs middays on UPN. By 6 p.m., however, the focus will be on general adult programming with an emphasis on reality-based nonfiction shows, an insider says. Half-hours remain a priority, and Saban may also be considering game shows.

During the past month, Saban has received hundreds of pitches from creators, which he has narrowed down to 12. News Corp. President Peter Chernin apparently had a hand in picking the finalists. It’s unknown what role was played by newly hired executive-in-lying Rich Cronin, who has been tapped to be the new CEO of Family and Fox Kids networks. Cronin’s old bosses at MTV are trying to block the move in court.

“They [Saban and company] were going to pick at least the initial batch of shows before Cronin was going to come on board,” says a potential supplier.

Saban is expected to meet with The Family Channel senior programming executive Gus Lucas—a carryover from the old regime—to narrow the list to six to eight projects. “I think they are sort of using the Nickelodeon model, where during the days it’s all kids; then at 6 they kick into Nick-at-Nite kind of stuff,” says a supplier.

But the Nickelodeon model is changing as well. Following up on last year’s expansion into prime time, Nickelodeon is planning to take another half-hour from Nick at Nite. Beginning in September 1998, Nickelodeon will begin airing children’s shows at 8:30-9.

For years, Nick ceded the air to Nick at Nite’s cleverly packaged sitcom and drama reruns after 8 p.m. But in October 1996, the network started showing its original cartoons in the 8 p.m. time slot to great success.

“Kids aren’t a priority at the broadcast networks,” says Nick President Herb Scannell. “There’s a big available audience. We’ve proved that at 8 p.m.”

New programming for the 8:30-9 slot will include The Wild Thornberrys, live-action puppet comedy Cousin Skeeter and live-action series Animorphs.

The 8-8:30 switch boosted Nielsen household ratings from roughly a 1.8 for Nick at Nite in 1996 to a 2.7 for Nick. Nick’s kid demos fetch higher ad prices than Nick at Nite’s 18-49 audience, so adding another half-hour is likely to be more profitable.

Scannell says that even though Nick will be further robbing its sister network of an adult lead-in audience, he doesn’t believe that development will damage Nick at Nite. “They’ve always been married at the hip,” Scannell says.

New ‘Feud’ may sign Dolly Parton as host Remakes planned of ‘Password,’ ‘Match Game,’ ‘Feud’

By Joe Schlosser

Pearson All American is close to signing Dolly Parton and two former talk show hosts to lead a trio of game shows into January’s NATPE convention, sources say.

With the Mark Goodson game show library in hand, the newly merged syndication company is planning to bring out remakes of Family Feud, Password and Match Game for syndication in fall 1998.

Parton is reportedly in negotiations with Pearson All American executives about hosting a new version of Family Feud. Sources say Parton has “done a few walk-throughs and shot some tape” on a new Feud set. Comedian Sinbad, who last month was named host of Columbia TriStar’s late-night show Vibe, was reportedly Pearson All American’s top choice for Family Feud.

Pearson All American officials and Parton’s representatives had no comment.

Sources also say former talk show host Gordon Elliot is being prepped to be the new host of Password. Elliot, whose talk show with CBS and Twentieth Television came to an end this past September after three seasons, will host Family Feud if Parton and Pearson All American can’t reach a deal, sources say.

A number of Hollywood syndicators last week spoke glowingly of Elliot’s talent and said he would be a perfect fit for a new version of either game show.

Michael Burger, who co-hosted ABC’s morning program Mike and Maty, says he has been chosen to host Paramount All American’s remake of Match Game. “I am going to host it. All American has it. Nothing is official as far as an airdate or pickup date. All we know is, I am hosting it when it goes.”

Povich peeved at Paramount

By Joe Schlosser

It will not be an amicable parting.

Maury Povich, whose talk show will jump from Paramount to Universal next fall, told Broadcasting & Cable last week that Paramount has virtually abandoned the show.

“They looked upon this year as a lame-duck year, and unfortunately they have treated the show that way,” Povich says. “It is unfortunate.”

Since cutting the deal with Universal in June, The Maury Povich Show has seen little or no assistance from the promotions department, reps and stations say. What’s more, the show has been downgraded or has changed time periods in New York, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Boston, Washington and nine other top-50 markets. On wNBC(TV) New York, Povich now airs at 10 a.m.; last year, it aired daily at 3 p.m. On WMAR-TV Baltimore, the show was moved from 10 a.m. to 1:30 a.m.

Paramount would not divulge what it is spending on Povich this season, but Dick Kurlander, Petry’s vice president and director of programming, says the burden is not on Paramount’s shoulders: “It’s up to the stations to promote Maury. The stations decide whether to promote it, not Paramount. That is ludicrous.”

“It has been a very difficult time for me, to say the least,” Povich says. “It has been the most difficult time of my life professionally. The good news is that where we have remained in the same time periods, we have done wonderfully in the face of many obstacles.”

Season to date, The Maury Povich Show has averaged a 2.8 national rating, according to Nielsen Media Research. For October it averaged a 3.1 rating/13 share, improving in the time period from last year’s 2.8/13. But even with some positive signs, Povich is not content.

In a prepared statement, a Paramount spokesperson said, “We are as actively involved in the production and distribution of The Maury Povich Show as we have been [during] the last six seasons.”

If Paramount has lost interest in the show, it is not without cause. Povich first told executives at Paramount Domestic Television that he was giving up his talk show after the 1997-98 season. Povich and his wife, ABC news anchor Connie Chung, were lured by DreamWorks to host a syndicated news magazine slated for next season.

After DreamWorks executives found they were having trouble clearing the project, they lost interest in it. Povich opted for a return to the solo talk show genre. But by that time, Paramount had given the green light to a talker with comedian Howie Mandel.

So Povich turned to Universal Television, where he signed a multiyear contract reportedly worth $8 million–$10 million a year.

Steve Rosenberg, head of domestic distribution for Universal Television Enterprises, says Universal would have handled the Povich situation the same way Paramount has: "They said they are not going to spend a lot of time promoting and upgrading a show that they are not going to have long term. We would have done the exact same thing. I understand that."

Rosenberg is busy preparing for Povich's move to Universal next season and has cleared the show in more than 80% of the country on 129 stations.
Universal officials say nearly 90% of the stations signed on are incumbents.

"When we first signed Maury, we immediately went to the major [station] group heads who have supported his show over the years," Rosenberg says. "When they heard the show was coming back, almost all of them renewed it. We all know that it is much more difficult to make a new show work than it is to build an audience with an existing franchise."

Povich is getting a new studio in New York, a new director and a new "Everything about the show will have a fresh, new quality to it; we are basically going to launch a new show," Povich says. "I think the stations will be proud of it. I admire my staff for overcoming huge obstacles that were none of their making."

Love coupling hopes for late-night magic

By Joe Schlosser

Love Connection is back, and heading to late night.

Telepictures Productions is reviving the '80s relationship series, pairing it with a new show, Change of Heart, and selling them as a one-hour block for fall 1998.

Telepictures already has cleared both shows in more than 40% of the country, including WPIX
(TV) New York, WJWR-TV Chicago, WPIL-TV Philadelphia and WLIW-TV Boston. Sources say a battle for the shows is brewing in Los Angeles, where KCOP(TV) and KCAU(TV) are bidding on the block. Executives of neither station would comment. The block is being sold on a pure barter basis.

"We are the lone ranger out there for late night next year," says Scott Carlin, executive vice president of Telepictures
Distribution. "Late night is still a conquest waiting to happen. Love Connect-ton has a wide appeal. It always did well in ethnic households and Hispanic homes. It is clearly the kind of show that has the custom-tailoring for late night."

Carlin says Telepictures chose late night over early fringe and fringe time periods because "there was more real estate" available in the 11 p.m.–1 a.m. hours.

Pat Bullard will replace Chuck Woolery as host of Love Connection. Woolery last hosted the show in 1995, when it finished its original run in syndication.
Love Connection aired from 1983 through 1995. Bullard, a former sitcom writer at Carrey-Werner, had his own talk show two years ago. Eric Leiber, the original producer of Love Connection, is back for another round.

As for Change of Heart, Carlin calls it the sequel to Love Connection.
"It begins where Love Connection leaves off," Carlin says. "It is about people who have been dating for a while and are looking at each other and wondering if they should see if there is something else out there."

Change of Heart will accept only couples who have been dating for less than six months. Carlin says, because Telepictures doesn't want to be blamed for "driving a wedge between couples."

Telepictures is currently auditioning for a host for Change of Heart. ■

New CBS will sell industrial assets

Westinghouse announced Friday that it has scrapped its planned spin-off of industrial assets into a separate publicly traded company.

Instead, those assets will be sold. Effective with the third-quarter results (issued Friday), the remaining company is reporting to the Securities and Exchange Commission as a pure-play media concern.

It has been announced that between CBS Corp. and on Dec. 1 it will start trading under the CBS stock symbol. The company also announced the $1.5 billion sale of its Orlando, Fla., power generation unit to Germany's Siemens AG. The rest of the industrial portfolio will be sold by mid-1998.

Third-quarter results show substantial improvement for the CBS broadcasting properties, with the cable networks the only "down arrow," as company CEO Michael Jordan told analysts. The broadcast network showed a 42% cash-flow gain, to $47 million, on a 20% revue gain, to $672 million. For the first nine months, network revenue was up 5%, to $2.1 billion, while cash flow dropped from $134 million to a loss of $3 million.

The TV stations turned in a third-quarter cash-flow gain of 35%, to $78 million, on a 15% revenue gain, to $195 million. For nine months, station cash flow was up 7.5%, to $244 million, on a 3% revenue gain, to $585 million. Radio division cash flow was up almost 200%, to $147 million, on a 175% revenue gain, to $374 million. Same-station radio sales were up 18% for the quarter, analysts say. Radio's nine-month numbers: cash flow up 192%, to $359 million, on a 165% revenue gain, to $1.065 billion.

Cable cash flow dropped 83%, to
$2 million, on a 16% revenue gain,
to $58 million. For nine months,
cable cash flow dropped 75%, to $11 million, on a 19% revenue gain, to $170 million. Jordan said that building Eye on People and TeleNoticias is a "slow and costly process," and is being "continually evaluated." Sub count for Eye is 7 million–8 million, with future commitments to 17 million, analysts say.

Stations ready to spend for DTV
But study says investment will fail to reverse broadcasters’ loss of viewers to cable

By Richard Tedesco

Stations are getting ready to spend up to $6 million each to lose more viewers in the digital age, according to a new study.

“It’s going to continue the decline in ratings and influence of the networks,” says Josh Bernoff, Forrester Research senior analyst, digital TV.

Forrester’s new study says broadcasters are not expecting a mad rush of consumers to run out anytime soon to buy digital TV sets, but stations are prepared to spend $3 million—$6 million to upgrade their facilities to transmit high-definition or other digital programming.

The Cambridge, Mass.-based firm reports that local broadcasters expect that 19% of their viewers will own DTV receivers by 2001.

But the study predicts that more viewers eventually will be tuning those receivers to cable channels. “Local stations will find their antenna and transmitter adjustments go for naught as 71% of households in 2007 eschew rabbit ears in favor of cable’s broad offerings,” the study says.

The report also predicts the Big Three networks’ audience share will drop to 40%.

While predicting dwindling viewer-ship, the report shows some broadcasters voicing an interest in expanding the industry’s services.

Among executives at the 25 stations interviewed by Forrester, 60% indicate that they plan some form of datacasting in the next three years, and 72% feel that interactive applications could improve program content. But they are still dubious about datacasting or interactivity, according to Bernoff. He says that local broadcasters still believe in TV in its passive present tense.

The only consensus on the DTV future among local broadcasters, national broadcast networks, cable networks and programmers is that there is nothing certain about it. “What they all agreed on is that it’s impossible to predict the future,” Bernoff says.

Forrester foresees very slow growth in DTV set and converter household penetration over the next decade, breaking the million-unit mark after the turn of the century and approaching 50% household penetration by 2007. It expects product prices starting at $4,000 to keep penetration below 1.5% over the first three years.

Forrester also foresees a fitful introduction of DTV transmission, with a four- to five-month lag being reported on orders for new antennas and transmitters. And Forrester expects half of the stations working to achieve DTV capability by next year to back off. “Those 26 stations that are supposed to go up in ’98, they’re not all going to do it,” Bernoff says.

PBS is the only broadcaster that’s bullish on multicasting, according to Bernoff, who believes that the first two years of DTV services will be largely experimental, no matter what broadcasters do with the spectrum.

Forrester thinks that the delivery of true HDTV by broadcasters may ultimately be undercut by cable programmers who will launch premium HDTV services. “The cable guys aren’t going to sit still,” Bernoff says. He bets that cable will adopt a universe of 12 HDTV channels along with 100 standard-definition channels to maintain itself against the broadcast competition.

MSTV to ask FCC for DTV changes

Broadcasters are getting ready to ask the FCC to take another shot at passing out channels for digital TV.

The Association for Maximum Service Television on Friday decided to suggest that regulators revise their plan for matching each TV station with a digital TV channel. The group has been worried that the FCC’s current plan—issued in the spring—will result in too much interference among digital TV stations.

The group has developed a revised plan aimed at fixing those problems, although several in the industry have been concerned that submitting the plan to the FCC could cause more problems than it solves. FCC officials predict that evaluating a new table of DTV channel allotments could push back the introduction of digital broadcasting by several months.

Broadcasters insist that the commission could review its suggestions without delaying digital TV. They say their proposal is not intended as a substitute for the FCC’s table, but rather is aimed at highlighting the interference problem and suggesting a possible solution.

“We did not rebuild the [allocation] table,” says MSTV’s Victor Tawil. “The goal is to show that the problems could be corrected.”

“Now one’s trying to stall the process, but there are stations that have some real problems,” adds Hubbard Broadcasting Chairman Stanley S. Hubbard.

A larger group of broadcasters this week will sign off on the plan before the industry gives it to the FCC. Industry sources predict the Broadcasters Caucus will elect to move forward with the plan and will submit it to the FCC early this week.

NBA not quite a loss leader for NBC, Turner

Networks will pay more than double current rights fees, and will profit less

By Steve McClellan

A lot more money for the league and less profit for NBC and Turner Broadcasting System. That's the bottom line on last week's announcement that NBC and Turner have renewed their National Basketball Association packages for another four years.

Both NBA incumbents will pay more than double the current rights fees to renew their carriage agreements, ponying up a combined $2.64 billion for four seasons, starting with the 1998-99 season.

NBC's payment climbs from $750 million for the current four-year pact to $1.75 billion for the following four years. Turner's payments climb more than 150% to $890 million a year.

It is clear that both Turner and NBC will make less money under the new pacts than with the current agreements. NBC Sports President Dick Ebersol says NBC will "break even or make a small profit" on the deal.

Turner Sports President Harvey Schiller says Turner will profit under the new deal. But Sanford C. Bernstein media analyst Tom Wolzien, in comments to clients on the NBA deal, said that the deal will trim 5 cents a share from parent Time Warner's earnings, starting in 1999.

Some cable operators are not happy with Turner's hefty renewal payment. "I'm very disappointed on behalf of the people who are my customers," says Leo Hindery, president, Tele-Communications Inc. "I'm not going to say it's irresponsible, because it's their prerogative, but it's wrong. God almighty, if you think the NBA is going to bust our chops, the NFL is going to be triply hard to swallow."

While Ebersol was not specific at last week's press conference announcing the agreement, network sources confirm that NBC will make roughly $200 million under the current NBA deal. That includes half of a $300 million pot the network split with the league in a revenue-sharing agreement after NBC reached a certain sales threshold.

The NBA's total rights fees under the current NBC deal, with revenue sharing, came to $900 million. The revenue-sharing provision with Turner generated more than $100 million. That added a little more than $50 million to the league's coffers, for a total rights take from the cable package of more than $400 million, according to NBA Commissioner David Stern.

NBC sources confirm that the network stands to make significantly less under the new pact—probably less than $100 million.

Advertisers will help to defray the rights increases by increasing their rates. NBC's Ebersol says a 30-second spot in the finals now costs just under $400,000, up from about $200,000 when NBC first picked up the NBA. "Assume that that will grow 10 percent a year for 4 years, which is very reasonable," he says. Ebersol also says that a regular-season spot, now about $100,000, also will grow 10% annually.

Agency executives say Ebersol is essentially firing the first shot in negotiations over future rate hikes. They agree that increases are inevitable because the NBA is, without question, the best second-quarter sports vehicle on television for reaching younger males with spending power.

For its money, NBC will get an additional seven regular-season games, for a total of 28, and an additional eight playoff contests, for a total of 31. More prime time games are included in the new package.

Turner, which airs games on WTBS(TV) and TNT, will lose eight playoff games (but still have 40) and gain 10 regular-season games, for a total of 80. But Turner Sports President Harvey Schiller says the loss of the playoff games is more than offset by the gain of complete weekday exclusivity for NBA contests throughout the season. "Exclusivity is extremely important to the value of the package," Schiller says. "For us, it is must-have programming."
UPN to get new Baltimore affiliate

United Television is scrambling to keep its part-owned UPN network's distribution base from losing ground to The WB.

United is buying HSN Inc.’s whsw-tv Baltimore (ch. 24) for $80 million. The buy is United's second in two weeks.

UPN already has an affiliate in Baltimore, but that station is subject to an agreement between station-owner Sinclair Communications and WB President Jamie Kellner to switch affiliation to The WB in January.

Adam Ware, HSN Inc.’s executive vice president of broadcasting, says that according to standard formulas, whsw-tv is worth only $35 million–$40 million. He adds that the sale price “truly validated what this real estate, this spectrum, is worth.”

Parties with interests in The WB and UPN have been in hot pursuit of similar UHF stations to provide a guaranteed venue for their programming. So has Paxson Communications, which is announcing details of its planned seventh network this week.

Ware says HSN Inc.’s new network project City Vision didn’t fit the Baltimore market. However, HSN will look for larger markets for City Vision distribution.

In terms of developing HSN Inc.’s current television properties, Ware says: “We’ve been trying to take this group of assets and shape them and mold them to shape City Vision better and the USA/Universal vision better." Rumor has it that HSN Inc. is also thinking about selling its 50% of Savoy Television’s four VHF Fox affiliates. Fox owns the other 50%. Ware refused to comment on those rumors.

TCI’s money up, subs down in 3Q

By Price Colman

Tele-Communications Inc. lost 47,000 subscribers during the third quarter, substantially better than the 65,000–85,000 the company had projected.

TCI President Leo Hindery has repeatedly stressed the need to revive growth, with the caveat that it wasn’t likely until after Labor Day. The turnaround may be imminent: TCI gained 30,000 subscribers in September, and Hindery said the MSO will add 60,000–75,000 in the fourth quarter.

Subscriber growth is crucial because TCI, since its financial crisis a year ago, has cut cable-related expenses to the bone, virtually eliminating marketing. That action has resulted in solid improvements in cash flow and free cash flow (operating cash flow minus interest expense and capital expenditures). Cable operations generated $246 million in free cash flow during the third quarter and $849 million for the year. That’s on target with Chairman John Malone’s year-ago prediction of $750 million–$1 billion for 1997. Marketing spending will gear up to $25 million–$40 million per quarter beginning in the fourth quarter.

For the third quarter, cable opera-

Judge stops Paxson interference

By Sara Brown

Lowell “Bud” Paxson may have permanently damaged the bidding process for the upcoming Global Broadcasting bankruptcy auction, according to trustee James Copper-smith and bankruptcy judge Prudence Carter Beatty.

Beatty issued an injunction against Paxson Communications Corp. to stop the company from interfering with the auction this Wednesday (Nov. 19). Paxson has been ordered to pay for the distribution of Global’s press release about the injunction hearing, held Thursday, to the Paxson mailing list. The company also must post the release on Paxson’s Website and indicate that it was placed there by court order. At press time, no release on the injunction had been posted. Officials at Paxson refused to comment.

The injunction was prompted by a press release distributed by Paxson declaring that the company had an agreement with Pine Mountain Christian Broadcasting for a time brokerage and option to buy WPMG-TLV Knoxville, Tenn. That station is subject to an acquisition contract with Global, the rights to which will be auctioned Wednesday, along with acquisition contracts for three other stations. Also auctioned will be two Global stations, KCMN-TLV San Francisco and WRAY-TLV Raleigh/Durham, N.C.

After Paxson had been placed under a temporary restraining order regarding the Knoxville station, Whitehead Media, owner of WOAC-TLV Cleveland, denied bidder Shop at Home Inc. access to the station, also under contract to Global. Global’s FCC counsel Betsy Cameron says the denial was prompted by Paxson, who owned the original option contract to buy the Cleveland station.

Judge Beatty also issued an injunction forcing Whitehead to allow bidders to inspect WOAC.

Says Cameron: “If Mr. Paxson wants those properties, and obviously he does, he should come to the auction.”

Stern offends Canadians

By John Merli

In the loudest controversy in Canadian radio in years, the Canadian Broadcast Standards Council (CBSC) last week issued an 86-page decision that found that “every daily program” of the Howard Stern Show monitored over a two-week period “breached” the voluntary program standards of the CBSC’s broadcaster members. Eventually, the CBSC’s action could lead to cancellation of the show in Montreal and Toronto, despite the American shock jock’s high ratings in both markets.

More than 1,100 complaints have been noted by the CBSC since the Stern morning program premiered in September on CHOM-FM Montreal and CHQ-FM Toronto. The decision by the CBSC—a nongovernmental group made up of six broadcasters and five members of the public—is based on monitoring Stern’s first two weeks in Canada. It cites “numerous discriminatory comments directed at French-Canadians and other groups, sexist remarks,” and unsuitable remarks aired when children might be listening.

The CBSC cited Stern’s first show in Canada on Sept. 2, when the host referred to French-Canadians as “peckerheads,” “scumbags,” and “pussy-assed jack-offs” (in violation of clause 2 of the Canadian Association of Broadcasters’ code of ethics). Also targeted, the decision states, were Japanese, Arabs, Sikhs, Poles, blacks and gays.

The decision states: “The freedom to swing one’s arm ends when it makes contact with one’s neighbour’s nose. The length of that arc is what the CBSC determines from case to case.”

Fines are not an issue in the Canadian controversy. Apart from attempting to move the show to late-evening hours or canceling it outright, there appear to be few (if any) options available to the Canadian broadcasters.

The entire 86-page CBSC decision is available online at www.cbsc.ca.

FCC likely to tackle access

Tougher rules on access to cable programming could be at the top of the new FCC’s agenda. Officials say the commission may propose revisions to its program access rules at the Nov. 25 meeting, the first open meeting of the overlaid FCC. The rules are aimed at giving cable-system competitors access to cable programming. The FCC’s proposed revisions follow a May petition from Ameritech calling for speedier review of program access complaints at the FCC and the establishment of fines for violations of the rules. Last week, officials said the proposal to modify the rules was on track to make the Nov. 25 agenda, although the item still could get sidetracked before the meeting.

Tough year

Producer Robert Morton—currently developing a comedy/variety hour for ABC with Homicide’s Barry Levinson and Tom Fontana—would prefer to forget the first year of his development deal with the network. “It’s been a very rough year for me, with all the gossip about my relationship with Jamie [Tarses],” says Morton, now split from the entertainment president. “I was already a very hard-working guy who never had anything given to me. I’ve worked really hard for 25 years. ... All of a sudden I got my deal at ABC—and I got it before Jamie was there—and the press associated my deal with the relationship. It’s really insulting and very hard to overcome.”

Morton, who’s already developed a pilot called Missing Links and the failed Over the Top series for ABC, says his latest project mirrors the old SCTV Network in that it’s an hour-long tale about a fictitious variety show. Of his experience on Over the Top, starring Tim Curry and Annie Potts, Morton says: “I would say parts of it were probably the best experience I’ve had in the business and parts were probably the worst.”

Murphy’s swan song

Though months away, speculation already has surfaced on how Warner Bros. Television will sign off its long-running Murphy Brown in the spring. There has been talk about Candice Bergen’s character dying of cancer, although the studio likely will not go for the idea, an insider says. On the show, Murphy is in treatment for breast cancer. Whatever the outcome, series creator Diane English—now a consultant on the 10-year-old show—has been chosen to write the final episode.

John to party at NATPE

King World Productions is bringing Elton John to NATPE with a Tuesday, Jan. 20, party/concert at New Orleans’ Superdome. King World officials had no comment, but Superdome officials confirmed that the syndicator has rented the stadium on that date for a “private dinner party.” John performed at the House of Blues in New Orleans last year for MTV during the NCTA convention.

Powell airs doubts about FCC liquor inquiry

By Chris McConnell

One new FCC commissioner wants to target televised liquor advertising in an FCC inquiry. Another is not so sure.

"Have we really been told [by Congress] to do this?" Commissioner Michael Powell asked during a wide-ranging discussion of communications issues last week. Powell said he would prefer that the commission consider the issue of liquor advertising as part of a broader investigation of the broadcast industry's public interest obligations.

"We have a lot to do here," Powell added, maintaining that he does not feel comfortable with the idea of launching an FCC inquiry without knowing precisely the commission's authority once the inquiry is completed.

Powell's comments came a week after FCC Chairman William Kennard said he wants the FCC to serve as a forum for a debate on broadcast liquor advertising. Kennard said he would be consulting with his new colleagues on the issue during the next few weeks.

While Kennard said that no one believes more hard liquor advertising is good for the country, Powell indicated that the government can address the issue even if the FCC does not. "Congress can do anything," Powell said, adding that any FCC authority in the area is, at a minimum, shared with the Federal Trade Commission.

One other commissioner—Susan Ness—voted previously to launch the alcohol inquiry. Commissioners Harold Furchtgott-Roth and Gloria Tristani have not yet weighed in on the issue.

While appearing to differ with Kennard on liquor advertising, Powell agreed with the chairman on the issue of broadcast industry consolidation.

Kennard has said he is concerned with the pace of mergers in the industry. Last week, Powell said he too is concerned.

"The pace is scary," Powell said, adding that the speed of consolidation has made it difficult for regulators to keep up.

Powell, former chief of staff with the Justice Department's Antitrust Division, stressed the need for FCC regulators to examine the impact of mergers on diversity in the marketplace. He also cited, however, arguments that mergers in some cases can increase the number of voices in a marketplace.

"Consolidation is often an element of getting competitive," he added.

Discussing broadcast public interest obligations, Powell said there is uniform agreement on the need to reconsider how government addresses the public interest obligations. Powell anticipates that review will include "a clean, honest discussion" of the constitution issues involved.

On the issue of video competition, he said competition is evolving "sooner than it should be.

"There really are pieces of what should be a competitive market," Powell added. He proposed no specific remedy but said the FCC should try to write rules that are technologically neutral.

Congress probes FCC move

Lawmakers question lobbyist, investor influence in relocation

By Chris McConnell

Lawmakers are asking the FCC's new chairman about the commission's controversial move to new headquarters.

In a Nov. 7 letter to William Kennard, House Commerce Committee Chairman Tom Bliley (R-Va.) asked the FCC chairman to provide a series of records relating to the planned move to the Portals office complex in Southwest Washington.

The request comes as another lawmaker—Telecommunications Subcommittee Chairman Billy Tauzin (R-La.)—is asking the Department of Justice to launch its own probe into the move. Tauzin plans to request the investigation this week.

Most of the information sought by lawmakers concerns the relationship between one of the building's investors—Tennessee real estate developer Franklin Haney—and Washington lobbyist and former Clinton/Gore campaign manager Peter Knight. Congressional investigators want to know whether Haney paid Knight $1 million to lobby for the commission's move to the Portals, which is scheduled to begin next spring.

"If you paid Mr. Knight $1 million in one lump sum as a performance fee, we would have serious questions about the services for which you were paying Mr. Knight on this federal contract," Bliley and Oversight and Investigation Subcommittee Chairman Joe Barton (R-Tex.) wrote in a letter to Haney the same day they wrote Kennard.

Committee investigators say they have been told by Knight's law firm that Knight billed one of his clients for $1 million in January 1996 and then received a $1 million check—written to him personally—on April 4, 1996.

The firm—Wunder, Knight, Levine, Thelen & Forscy—has not confirmed that the check came from Haney.

Last week, neither Knight nor Haney returned calls. But earlier this month, Time magazine reported that Haney admitted to the payment and said it was for "general legal work" on the project.

House investigators want more details. And in this month's letter to Haney they voiced frustration with his response to their calls. "The committee has been attempting to contact you by telephone this week but has not received a return telephone call despite leaving at least three messages over the course of this week," Bliley and Barton wrote.

The lawmakers asked Haney whether he had made any payments to Knight and if so for how much. The letter also requests information on any communications between Haney and officials in the Vice President's office or the FCC.

Similarly, the lawmakers asked Kennard to provide records of any contact between Haney and the FCC as well as any contact between the FCC and the White House concerning the Portals. Last week, committee staff were planning to meet with at least one FCC official to discuss the move.

Communications lobbyists long have opposed the move, which would move the commission far away from most of their offices. Earlier in his FCC tenure, FCC Chairman Reed Hundt suggested that Congress might devote the moving costs to other commission initiatives.

Receiving line
TV's top lobbyists were out in force this month to watch the Vice President formally put the new FCC chairman in place (although William Kennard actually been in office for five days). Among the throng gathered to observe the swearing-in: NAB President Eddie Fritts, NCTA President Decker Anstrom and MPAA President Jack Valenti. The event also featured a swearing-in for Commissioner Gloria Tristani. As expected, Republican commissioners Michael Powell and Harold Furchtgott-Roth sat out the ceremony. They were on hand in the audience, however.

Kennard's father-in-law, James Kennedy, delivered an invocation before Gore administered the two oaths. Kennard was joined onstage by his wife, Deborah Kennedy. Tristani was joined by her husband, Judge Gerard Thomson, her daughter, Vanessa, and her cousin, Cissie Coy, who delivered the benediction.

During his remarks to the Washington wonks, Gore put in a few plugs for free political airtime. 'We all have a responsibility to carve out meaningful public space on the public airwaves,' Gore said. He also said the agency's importance has never been greater and urged the new group to "work in a bipartisan manner."

Rapid transition
The interim staff that Commissioner Harold Furchtgott-Roth unveiled this month hardly will have time to unpack their paperwork. Last week the economist-commissioner pulled the curtain back on his permanent staff. Heading the team as senior legal advisor is Paul Misener, currently manager of telecommunications and computer technology policy at Intel. Misener, who starts on Dec. 8, will handle international issues. Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher lawyer Helgi Walker will be Furchtgott-Roth's mass media and cable advisor, while Kevin Martin of the FCC's office of the independent counsel will be his common carrier advisor. Martin and Walker start Dec. 1.

Wallman leaves White House
The telecommunications business has a new consultant. White House economics and telecommunications adviser Kathleen Wallman is leaving her post in the Clinton administration to launch a telecom consulting firm. Wallman, a one-time front-runner for FCC Chairman William Kennard's job, has been advising the White House as chief of staff of the National Economic Council. Before moving to the White House, she was chief of the FCC's Common Carrier Bureau.

Try, try again
Even after the Supreme Court ruled the Communications Decency Act unconstitutional, lawmakers still are working on ways to keep the Internet porn-free. Senator Dan Coats (R-Ind.) last week introduced a bill that would make it illegal for pornographers to make their content available to people under 17 years old. Coats said in a floor speech that filtering software does not work because of the speed at which Internet sites are coming online and the ease with which children can hack through filtering software. Coats was one of the original sponsors of the CDA, which placed the burden of monitoring the Internet for pornographic materials on Internet providers.

Right wing, wrong job
NET, formerly known as National Empowerment Television, earlier this month ousted its founder, arch-conservative Paul Weyrich. He will continue to serve on the board, but he no longer will be the network's president and lead commentator. NET Chairman Bob Sutton will stay on at the conservative public affairs network. Republican board members increasingly had been upset by Weyrich's attacks on Republican party leaders, including Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott (R-Miss.), Speaker of the House Newt Gingrich (R-Ga.) and Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch (R-Utah). One of Weyrich's earliest political achievements was founding the Heritage Foundation, the think-tank most directly opposed in philosophy to the liberal Brookings Institution. Weyrich left Heritage after less than a year and went on to start the Free Congress Foundation. NET is a spin-off of that foundation that Weyrich launched three years ago. NET is a for-profit, privately owned cable network that serves 13 million—14 million cable and satellite subscribers.

Mel Karmazin makes (and accepts) NO EXCUSES
His goal: Make CBS the most profitable TV station group by 1999

By Steve McClellan

Mel Karmazin is a confident man. This is his prediction for 1999: The CBS station group will be number-one-ranked in revenue and profits, if not ratings.

"There was a time when [former Capital Cities president and chairman] Dan Burke and Thomas Murphy were perceived as the quintessential operators—and those CapCities stations were great," Karmazin says. "In 1999, CBS will be there."

As Karmazin readily admits, the 14-station group has a long way to go. The stations in the top three markets have been also-rans for years. Cash flow for WCBS-TV New York is about $100 million less than that of crosstown rival WNBC-TV, he says. (See page 34 for B&C's exclusive interview with Karmazin.)

There already have been some improvements since Karmazin took the station reins from then-CBS Inc. President Peter Lund in May.

Third-quarter earnings show nearly a 10% gain in revenue for the stations over the same period last year and at least a 25% gain in operating cash flow. While that comparison is relatively easy (given NBC's dominance with the Atlanta Olympic Games in third quarter 1996), the CBS stations also are expected to show an increase in the fourth quarter. There the comparison is tougher because of all the political advertising in last year's fourth quarter.

Analysts estimate that the CBS group this year will have revenue of roughly $800 million, about flat with last year, and cash flow of $350 million-$375 million, versus last year's $280 million. Next year, with the Nagano winter Olympic Games and political campaign money, the group should generate cash flow of $450 million-$500 million, at least 28% higher than in 1997, while revenue should top $925 million, for a gain of at least 15%.

And for 1999? Up "at least" 20% over 1998, Karmazin says. That's 20% despite the loss of 1998's Olympic and political money. If you do the arithmetic, that's more than $1.1 billion. No wonder his general managers are already planning for 1999.

Analysts say achieving that goal will take a miracle. "They might be able to hit that number if they get the NFL back," says one Wall Streeter who follows the company. "Without it, they'll be lucky to be flat," having to make up at least $100 million in Olympic and political dollars combined. But one analyst admits, "I've been wrong [by] underestimating Karmazin before."

To achieve his goal, Karmazin says he's not relying just on a super sales effort, although that's clearly part of...

Right: Jonathan Klein, president of CBS Television Stations, is pleased with the ratings direction of his stations.

the strategy. “We’re going to invest a whole lot more money in the community and in news, because that’s what you need to do over a long period to make your station number one.”

The most notable programming investment to date is a three-year, 12-station commitment to King World Production’s new version of Hollywood Squares, set to debut in fall 1998. Estimates are that CBS will invest nearly $30 million a year in the program. The station group also has acquired The Rosie O’Donnell Show for Boston, Pittsburgh and Denver and the new Howie Mandel show for New York, Los Angeles, Miami, Baltimore and Salt Lake City.

“I’m not happy it will take (until) 1999,” Karmazin says of the group’s climb to the top. “In order to make the stations as good as they need to be, they need programming and news. It will take time. Some of the programs we’ve invested in won’t be available until the fall of 1999.”

In local news, CBS executives point to Chicago to demonstrate Karmazin’s willingness to spend. WBBM-TV was able to lure Carol Marin several months ago, after the popular Chicago newswoman’s much-publicized departure from crosstown rival WMAQ-TV, the NBC-owned station. But to do so, WBBM-TV GM Hank Price says he asked Karmazin to allocate dollars not in the budget, because he wasn’t willing to fire anyone else to get Marin: “Mel wanted to know how it fit into the overall plans and why it was important. I told him and he immediately gave it to me. That sends a signal we are serious about news.”

In Karmazin’s office in New York, at Infinity Broadcasting’s headquarters (about four blocks away from CBS headquarters), sits a plaque with the word “excuses” on it. Though the word is a slash to signify “no excuses,” which is Karmazin’s creed. The plaque was given to him by Ed Goldman, whom Karmazin appointed general manager of WBBM-TV Boston shortly after assuming responsibility for the stations. “All of his salespeople have this sign on their doors.” Karmazin says.

Al Bova, general manager of KYW-TV Philadelphia, says the no-excuses attitude already has him focused on ways to replace the Olympic and political money in 1999. “Because I don’t want to be in a position where I’m wondering in February of 1999 where the money is, because Mel will say: ‘You knew in May of 1997 that you would have this problem, and what did you do about it?’”

Karmazin’s response: “He’s right. And it’s great that my managers are thinking ahead.”

Indeed, Karmazin’s zero tolerance for excuses is legendary. He’s also known as a man who doesn’t beat around the bush and who hates wasting time. He doesn't suffer fools easily, and his manner can be abrasive. His style can be unmoving to subordinates, sources say. But it's a style that many believe is just the kind of kick in the pants that the CBS-owned TV station group needs to transform it into an industry powerhouse.

There are signs that some of the ratings-challenged CBS stations—WPIX-TV New York, KCBS-TV Los Angeles, WBEN-TV Chicago, WHZ-TV Boston, KPIX-TV San Francisco and WFOR-TV Miami—have, if nothing else, stemmed declining viewership. That's seen as good news for the group by industry analysts.

"Things have not gotten worse," says Bill Carroll, vice president/director of programming at Katz Television. "If you look at CBS for the past couple of years, that's got to be considered a victory."

In a few notable instances, things have actually improved, says Jonathan Klein, president, CBS Television Stations, who reports to Karmazin. He cites WPIX-TV, where the morning news was up 2 share points, year to year, in October, and where the syndicated Judge Judy court show has boosted the 4-4:30 p.m. slot by 44%. That, in turn, has boosted Hard Copy's performance at 4:30 by 3 share points, which has given the 5 p.m. local news a slight bump. He cites similar anecdotal ratings evidence for Chicago and Los Angeles. In all three cases, however, the stations still are well behind their ABC and NBC counterparts in most time periods.

"Our ratings base is relatively low, and we've got a long way to go, but, directionally, it's encouraging," Klein says.

Since taking control in May, Karmazin has visited all 14 of the network's TV stations at least once. Some of those trips have generated colorful anecdotes. For instance, a story circulating at KYW-TV Philadelphia had Karmazin meeting with sales managers who presented sales projections for the rest of 1997 and 1998. Apparently unimpressed with the aggressiveness of the sales goals, the story goes, Karmazin interrupted the presentation with a question: "Should I fire you now or wait until you are finished?"

Karmazin says he doesn't recall any such incident. If it happened, says Al Bova, it didn't happen in his presence. Bova recalls one KYW-TV sales rep asking Karmazin how he expected the station to beat last year's fourth-quarter ad sales, which benefited from a huge amount of political advertising in 1996. Karmazin's response: "Did I say you couldn't sell politics?"

Other sources report meetings in which Karmazin has told his general managers to hit the streets and make sales calls—just as he still does. Karmazin confirms these stories: "I think everyone at our television stations should be selling advertising. Many of the general managers at CBS came from areas other than sales. So we've encouraged them to spend more time with sales, not at the expense of news or programming or community relations—they're all very important."

Alan Bell, president of Freedom Communications' broadcasting division, has known Karmazin since they both worked at Metromedia more than two decades ago.

Mel Karmazin, chairman of CBS Radio and Stations Inc., is one of the hardest executives in the business to pin down for an interview. However, Karmazin agreed to an exclusive interview with Broadcasting & Cable's New York Bureau Chief Steve McClellan that mostly addresses his efforts at the TV group and the group's impact on the broader performance of the company. Questions about internal politics—specifically how he and Westinghouse Chairman Michael Jordan get along—were out of bounds. Still, it is a lively interview, with Karmazin feistily predicting that the TV stations will be the best-performing group in the industry by 1999 (see story, page 28). He also explains why he wanted and got responsibility for the TV stations, what he thinks about the TV business so far, and specific steps he plans to take to try to ensure that his prediction comes true.
Broadcasting & Cable  November 17 1997

Cover Story

Back in May you were given responsibility for the CBS TV station group. Why did you want that responsibility?

It’s called a $16 stock price—which is what the Westinghouse stock price was then, although now it’s hovering close to $30.

The company had some great assets. The radio business was doing terrific. Part of the reason that the stock was not performing as well is that the investment community believed we had this very large asset, these terrific television stations that were dramatically underperforming.

How big is the gap?

To give you an example, channel 4 in New York [atv] has annual cash flow of about $165 million, and channel 2 [wcrs-tv] has about $65 million in cash flow. That’s huge upside potential for us, but the sense was we needed to make a huge improvement in our television stations. There’s a $350 million [cash flow] difference between CBS and the number-one TV station in the top three markets. That’s huge.

That gap will close by 1999?

I believe so, yes. Some of our managers may be very nervous about 1999. But that’s why I’ve told them to start worrying about 1999 now. Because ’98 is done. It’s in the bank.

Why you?

The feeling was that because of my experience in advertising and in dealing with the same advertisers [in radio as in TV] I might be able to do it quicker than anybody else. [Westinghouse Chairman] Mike Jordan and I thought this would be in the best interests of the company.

Do you like the television business, and do you see yourself in it for a long time to come?

I’m enjoying myself. I think it’s easier than I thought it would be. Every weekend I spend most of my time working on a way to charge viewers to watch our shows. Until I do that, the only way I generate revenue is through advertising. If you were to make a list of who I deal with on advertising on television, what a surprise: It’s the same people I deal with on radio.

What’s your day-to-day involvement?

I don’t pick the records our radio stations air and I don’t write Don Imus’s material and I’m not involved in micro-managing our television stations. But I do know how to hire executives, I do know how to motivate people, I do know [how] to generate revenue and I do know how to deal with costs and generate cash flow. So television or radio, add a zero. It’s really not any different.

How challenging and how difficult has the TV learning curve been?

I didn’t think it would be that difficult going in, but I thought it would be more complicated. Really, it’s all broadcasting. There are people in this business who manage both radio and television properties, including my friends Nick Trigony [of Cox] and Lowery Mays [Clear Channel]. John Kluge, Tom Murphy and Dan Burke all started out as radio guys. Basically I see myself as a broadcaster or businessman. And there’s no difference with TDI [the recently acquired outdoor advertising company].

What else do you bring to the table?

A fresh viewpoint. There are television people who look at a 12 rating and say “Oh my God, it’s only a 12 rating.” I look at a 12 rating and say “Wow, it’s a 12 rating!” I’ve never seen such big ratings. So there’s a mind-set where you’re able to deal with marketing and sell a lot more competitive- ly than people in television historically have, where there are six competitors versus 30 in radio.

Some people at the company wonder just how much you’ll be willing to invest in the company. What’s the answer?

We are dramatically upgrading our television stations. There was a period when Larry Tisch was operating CBS for the purpose of selling CBS.

So that’s not your plan?

I’m a broadcaster. I’ve been a broadcaster for 31 years. We are now taking a totally different approach toward the stations. We are going to make more money by growing the cash flow, not through reducing expenses but by investing in programming, news and the community. If you take a look at some of our stations, like WCCO-TV Minneapolis, KDKA-TV Pittsburgh and WJZ-TV Baltimore, they are institutions in their market that consistently outperform the network.

How closely linked is the station group’s turnaround to future network performance?

The network is really going to drive these stations. The plan is, we are going to be a whole lot more competitive. We are already. CBS is far more competitive going into these November sweeps than we were a year ago; there’s no doubt.

Where are you more competitive?

We’ve made improvements with news with Dan Rather. Our morning news, still a huge, huge distance from where we want to be, is showing progress. Andrew Heyward has done a good job of improving that. That benefits our stations. So if you believe CBS is on a roll, then our 32 percent [of the country covered by the owned stations] is on a roll. Combine it with more money for programming and news and a highly motivated sales force and I don’t think it’s that hard.

The local newscasts in the major markets are poor performers. What’s the problem?

Part of the battle is to get a good lead-in. Les Moomes is addressing that in prime time. Part of the reason many of the ABC stations have done so well in early news is having Oprah as the lead-in. We will have better lead-ins.

What about the newscasts themselves?

When the opportunity presents itself to hire desirable news... talent, we will jump at it—like we did with Carol Marin in Chicago. If anyone takes a look at my track record over the past 30 years, there is nobody more willing to invest more money in building up an asset. That’s because we know how to sell it better than anyone else. We can sell advertising better than any company I know of.

At the same time, you are adding salespeople. How many and why?

I would say we’ve gone up at least 50 percent, and by year’s end [we will] double the number. At one station we will triple the number as quickly as we can find qualified salespeople.

Why?

A salesperson in Los Angeles is able to make only a certain number of in-your-face calls a day. Maybe that number is three or four. We have made a list in every market of the number of accounts and people we want to be seen by our TV station. Clients, brand managers, not just the media buyers. And we want to see these people no less than once a month. Maybe there are people we want to see every day, because they are so important and spending so much money. In order for us to do that in Los Angeles, we need 25 salespeople. We had seven. We’re at 14 or 15 now and going to 25. The Los Angeles Times, by the way, with less circulation, is selling more advertising. Newspapers are doing it every day, and they are generating a whole lot more money than CBS television stations are. So if we just focus on newspapers that’s a huge opportunity for us. And that’s the way we are approaching it. We are not waiting for the agencies to give an avail call.

What’s the attrition rate for advertisers at a television station?

It may be 20 percent to 25 percent. So if you know you are going to lose 20% to 25% of your customers each year for whatever reason, you need to have customers to replace them. So we’re being very aggressive in business development. We have programs in place in Chicago and Los Angeles to deal with classified advertising using an interactive service combining radio and television and the telephone.

Are you bringing a radio sales model to TV?

It’s a business model. I don’t know if it’s radio or not. We learned that if you want to hit your number you have to do something other than wait for the media buyers to call you.

With outdoor advertising, people don’t wake up in the morning and say “Gee, I have to buy bus advertising.” Too many television companies have relied on the advertising agencies’ preference for buying television. We need to go out and sell more.

Sell around the agencies?

No. We love media buyers. They are our best friends. I pray for media buyers when I go to bed at night. But there’s nothing wrong with visiting the clients and the account executives, the account supervisors and the media planners, so that we can influence where people are putting money. That’s what we’re doing. And you can’t do it with seven people at a television station.

Karmazin joins CBS

Westinghouse Electric’s Michael Jordan brought Karmazin into CBS in June 1996 by buying his Infinity radio group for $4.9 billion. The deal made Karmazin a major Westinghouse shareholder.

You’ve put all your salespeople on straight commission. Why?

One of the cost savings that Westinghouse had was in not letting salespeople make a lot of money. The reason to pay people a salary is to control the costs. My view is, if the salesperson is making a ton of money at 3 percent, then I’m making a zillion dollars at 97 percent.

What was the reaction?

The reaction from 90 percent [of the salespeople], maybe even more, was terrific. Because it gives them the opportunity to make a lot of money. Those people who didn’t like it—that was terrific for us. Because we couldn’t find a faster way of identifying the people who weren’t performing.

It’s not a new concept, is it?

It’s pretty common.

Let’s talk programming. You’ve made a major investment in Hollywood Squares.

That rumor about me being in the center square—we’ve talked about it, but Roger King just won’t pay me enough money.

You couldn’t afford the pay cut. But seriously, you’ve put a big bet on a genre where Wheel of Fortune and Jeopardy! have killed the competition for more than a decade. Why?

Because our stations wanted it. This is not Mel Karmazin saying this is the answer. Jonathan Klein [president of the TV station group] and the station general managers all wanted Hollywood Squares. They believe it has the best shot to win of anything available to us. And the reason is, it has a lot of the same benefits as Wheel and Jeopardy! People like to play along. They all know it. Better than Wheel and Jeopardy!, which tend to skew older. Depending on who you put in the squares, you can control the demographic of the show.

What's your financial commitment to Squares?
It's huge. It's the best new syndication program opportunity, in the opinion of most television people, and we preempted it. I think that makes a statement that the company is absolutely committed to doing what it has to do to make its stations number one.

What's the demo target, adults 18 to 49?
Probably. But I don't really care. Our sales organization is going to sell whatever demo they have. We are not going to let that influence us in our sales effort. But clearly the more under-50 audience you can deliver the better. In radio, the same advertisers that buy TV buy 25 to 54, and really that's the number-one demographic for spending power.

Are you looking at King World's 1999 talk show project?
We are looking at any way of strengthening our stations' programming. We are talking to [co-owned] Eyemark Entertainment, and we're talking to all the outside companies. Everybody knows we have a commitment to be number one. We are no longer relying on just what syndicators may bring to us. We are very proactively looking at what we need on our TV stations.

Does Eyemark enjoy most-favored-nation status?
No. Eyemark understands that I have a responsibility to improve the TV stations. Les Moonves is now in charge of Eyemark. That's a terrific advantage because he's an extraordinary programmer, and from dealing with me on a regular basis he also knows our stations' needs. But we would not hold a time period just because we own a piece of the show. We're going to put on whatever is going to win.

How much easier would rebuilding be at the stations if CBS got NFL rights back? How likely is that?
We don't know. We have more owned-and-operated TV stations in NFL markets. We certainly would like it. The way the contracts are written, we may never have a shot.

You continue to be active on the acquisition front with the purchase of ARS. Are there more to come? What about TV stations?
Part of the issue was we wanted to demonstrate to shareholders that we know how to run TV stations before we went out and bought more. I believe we will satisfy the investment and banking community that we know how to run television stations. We have 32 percent coverage and we would like to get to 35 percent. We'd like the FCC to change the 35 percent limit so we could buy even more stations.

How about outdoor advertising?
We have a great manager in Bill Applebaum. He's capable of doing far more, and we would like to buy more outdoor. If the opportunity to expand presents itself attractively, then we will. Buying these things is easy. The key is getting shareholder value and running them.

Does outdoor fit into the cross-media sales strategy?
Absolutely. In fact we've been using Bill Applebaum as a focal point for getting salespeople in TV and radio to sell more than just ratings. Nobody is measuring the ratings of bus advertising. We're selling salesmanship and a terrific

Karmazin raises the radio bar

While CBS stations chief Mel Karmazin's goals for the TV group are extraordinarily ambitious, his plans for radio expansion also remain aggressive: "We'd like to make some more acquisitions."

In September, the company announced it will pay $2.6 billion (including $1 billion in debt) for American Radio Systems, bringing its station count to 175 outlets in major and midsize markets. But, says Karmazin, "we'd like to fill in some more. There's no [single] company out there we'd like to buy. At this point we think the acquisitions will be more strategic, in specific markets." The CBS radio group is by far the largest cash generator in the business, with roughly $800 million in 1997 cash flow.

 Asked about the cash flow going forward, Karmazin says: "If we don't make one more acquisition, we will have a billion dollars in cash flow in radio in 1999." It's aggressive sales activity that will get the group to that point. In 1997 national radio spot is expected to come in about 18%-20% ahead of last year, while national TV spot is expected to turn in a low-single-digit performance. Asked why radio seems to doing so much better, Karmazin responds, "because radio is selling more advertising this year than last year ..." "Why is television forecast to be up only 6 percent next year and I'm saying radio will be up 10 percent? I've convinced all our radio salespeople they need to sell at least 10 percent more," he says. "Now we need to convince every television salesperson they need to sell more than 6 percent. As an industry, we need to raise the bar for our salespeople and expect them to be able to sell." —Steve McCiellan product. So the more I involve Bill and that mind-set in television, the more successful we will be—having the salespeople less dependent on the overnight.

But don’t ratings represent the eyeballs that advertisers want to reach?

It doesn’t matter. I know this is not popular to say, but we’re going to have to hit our numbers whether our ratings are good or bad. It may be harder to hit the numbers if they’re bad. But we’re going to hit the numbers.

How do you do that if the ratings are bad?

Why is it so hard? If we’re unable to sell against channel 4 in New York, then we’ll sell against the Daily News and the New York Times. We have great shows and a great network. I believe that in 1999 we will be the number-one network. Maybe sooner.

Do you think TV duopoly will happen? Do you care that much?

I care, but no one really knows enough about the makeup of the new FCC to know what their viewpoint is. So I don’t know if it will happen or not. I’d like to see less regulation in every area. I’d like to see the ownership rules changed. I’d like to see crossownership change. If somebody wants to own two or three television stations [per market], that’s OK with me.

How will you exploit duopoly if it comes to television?

I have a viewpoint, but not one I particularly want to share. All that would happen is [the press] would spread more rumors about me and Barry Diller. I really don’t care; there’s nothing to them. I speak to him regularly and I called him to congratulate him on his deal.

How dramatically is digital going to change the television business?

Clearly it’s an opportunity. Our company has a very smart approach toward it. We are making the transition as quickly as we can at the TV stations.

Any initial conclusions about high-definition versus multicasting opportunities?

We’re keeping our powder dry. We certainly will do some high-definition television. We think that the marketplace and consumers will decide what it is that they will want. If the consumer embraces high-definition television, then we will certainly want to give the consumer what they want. We have said that we would also look at other opportunities, such as data transmission and multiplexing, an assortment of things.

Is there a smaller head count at the TV stations since you took over in May?

No. We have more. The old mentality here was the fewer people the better. It’s people that are getting us the money and the ratings. It’s not like I’ve operated the radio stations inexpensively. We have the rights to 12 NFL teams; nobody else has three.

We pay talent more money than anybody. That’s the attitude we’re putting into our TV stations. We want desirable content. We understand it’s expensive. We want more salespeople. We want to make these TV stations into institutions, and you can’t do that without strong news departments.

What about Detroit, where you are on a low-rated station high on the UHF dial?

We’re waiting for the tower to be fixed. Once we get on a new tower we will put news on that station. Is it going to cost us money? Absolutely. But we will do it.

NO EXCUSES

He describes Karmazin as “an extremely talented and very focused individual. The anecdotes you’re getting are his way of dramatizing concepts. I know people who have made presentations to him where he has said: ‘Are you deliberately trying to be stupid or are you going to explain this in just a minute and show this was just a step along the way?’ He does that. Sure it’s upsetting, but it’s his way of making a point—Mel-isms rendered as performance art.’

“I have an expectation of excellence,” says Karmazin. “And I’m willing to pay for it.” Hence, the group’s new all-commission compensation policy for sales reps. Karmazin, who worked for CBS Radio earlier in his career, says he left the company “because they kept cutting my commission, telling me I was making too much money. What I’m saying to my salespeople is go for it. If you want to make a million dollars, then just sell the proportionate amount of advertising that enables you to do that.”

“Part of me says: Go, Mel,” says a former executive from a CBS station in one of the top three markets. “I saw a lot of waste—software systems the news department just had to have and then never used, for example. The group seemed to lack any consistent vision or long-term plan.”

A high-level executive at a competing network, who’s known Karmazin for years, says he’ll be good for the group and the television business. “He’ll force everybody in the stations division to shake off all complacency. He’s in your face, but in a good way, and will never stab you in the back. He’ll stab you in the chest. But you know where you stand. I’ll take that any day.”

Meanwhile, since Karmazin took control of the stations, only one general manager switch has been made. Ed Goldman replaced Bill Aber at wiz-tv Boston. Over the past year, says Klein, there have been several other new GMs installed, at the group’s stations in Minneapolis, Chicago, Philadelphia, Los Angeles, Chicago, and San Francisco (see chart).

At the same time, several recent changes have occurred among the general sales management ranks, including all of the top-three-market stations, as well as Boston and Minneapolis.

THE 1997 BROADCASTING & CABLE
HALL OF FAME

Thirteen men and women who shaped TV and radio in profound ways were welcomed into the Broadcasting & Cable Hall of Fame last Monday evening during a gala dinner at New York's Marriott Marquis hotel. The newcomers: Tom Brokaw, Don Burke, Mary Hart, Robert Johnson, Peter Lund, L. Lowry Mays, Akio Morita and Marlo Thomas. Honored posthumously were John Chancellor, William Conrad, Sheldon Leonard, Brandon Tartikoff and Danny Thomas.

ABC News's Sam Donaldson emceed the induction ceremonies for the seventh time. Hosting and handing out the awards were Broadcasting & Cable Publisher Peggy Conlon and Editor at Large Don West.

With the addition of 1997's 13 new members, the honor roll stands at 164 (see page 45). Proceeds from the event are being donated to the International Radio and Television Society and the Broadcasters' Foundation.

"I chose the profession because it excited me," said NBC's Tom Brokaw. "I had an enormous curiosity about the world, and [35 years ago] I thought I could someday earn $10,000 a year ... Television is a powerful and empowering medium—not just a window on the world but a wall of windows on the world. The viewer takes us seriously, and we have to take them seriously because they want us to keep them informed, entertained and engaged."

While Daniel Burke is enjoying his retirement from CapCities/ABC (he owns two minor league baseball teams), it was an enthusiasm for radio and television that propelled him to the top of his profession. "I loved being in the business. It was very, very good to me, and I hope I was good to it." The stockholders of Capital Cities Communications probably think he was. CapCities bought ABC in 1986, when Burke was president, for $5 billion. Ten years later (under his watch as CEO), the combined CapCities/ABC was purchased by Disney for $19 billion.

BET Holdings Inc. Chairman Bob Johnson saved part of his speech to thank Tele-Communications Inc. Chairman John Malone, who staked Johnson from BET's inception by investing $500,000. But as those familiar with Malone knew, "half of that was in debt." Johnson quipped. He also took the opportunity to affirm his stance against "voluntary" TV content ratings, asserting that he continues to see it as a First Amendment issue, with most cable and broadcast networks knuckling under to Congress and regulators. Johnson pointed out NCT Chairman Bob Wright in the audience—who has also refused to go along with the detailed content ratings plan—saying that he was "proud to be standing with you on these ratings."

Mary Hart is in the midst of her 15th season as co-host of Entertainment Tonight, but in Hart's acceptance speech at the Hall of Fame, she made it sound like it was her 50th season. "I feel really proud to have gone from tape to digital," Hart joked. "I've been in the biz so long, some of my tapes have disintegrated." The former Miss South Dakota and high school English teacher has been in television since 1974, when she got a job reading the news at KELO-

Lund thanked his wife and colleagues from CBS radio and television stations and remarked that "the most important requirement for a Hall of Fame inductee is great support, and I've had that in spades."

L. Lowry Mays got his start in the radio business in 1973, buying what is now KAJA (FM) San Antonio, Tex., for $125,000. "I guess this is a long way from that $125,000 FM station we bought 25 years ago," Mays said in accepting his award. "It's been a nice journey, but we're not at the destination yet," he added, crediting some 7,000 Clear Channel employees with the company's success. Mays also paid kudos to his wife, Peggy, along with Clear Channel's senior management, for fueling his personal success in the radio business.

Sony Corp. President Nobuyuki Idei accepted the Hall of Fame Award on behalf of Sony honorary chairman and co-founder Akio Morita, who was not able to attend. The self-effacing Idei said he couldn't hope to compete with the great speech Morita would have made if he were present, but Idei made a valiant effort nonetheless. "Mr. Morita is a man of a lot of curiosity and vision," said Idei, who has worked for Morita for 38 years. "One of the biggest things he did was naming 'Sony,' which was a combination of 'sonny boy' and 'sonus' in Latin. He made a synchronization of the product name and the company name. The same goes for the innovation of the Walkman, which at the time we joked was a half-Japanese/half-English name. Now 'Walkman' is in the Oxford English dictionary."

"When I first did That Girl," said Marlo Thomas. Broadcasting & Cable named me most promising star of the year. "I'm glad I came through." Thomas, who was inducted into the Hall of Fame along with her father and was preceded in that honor by her husband, Phil Donahue, said her father had planted the seeds of her love of acting. The senior Thomas was working on a film with [child star] Margaret O'Brien, and Marlo helped him run his lines on the way to the studio. "You do that just as well as Margaret O'Brien," he said. "I prayed that she would fall down in a dead faint so that I could do the part." She said that her father and his longtime partner and fellow honoree Sheldon Leonard showed her the "love, passion and fun" of working in television.

Lilly Tartikoff tearfully accepted for her husband, Brandon, the celebrated NBC programming chief who died last summer. She remembered him as...

PolyGram set to launch ‘The Crow’
Adaptation from movie series is studio’s latest first-run offering

By Joe Schlosser

PolyGram Television is becoming the McDonald’s of the syndication business, adding more franchises to its quickly increasing list of first-run syndication programs.

A television adaptation of Ed Pressman’s film “The Crow” is the latest one-hour weekly in PolyGram’s fold. Already coming from PolyGram next season is the TV version of theatrical release “Total Recall” and a newly announced music series with Motown Records. PolyGram TV is currently distributing new episodes of the former CBS show “Due South” in syndication and likely will bring it back for another year.

“The Crow—Stairway to Heaven” is a co-production of PolyGram TV, Alliance Communications Corp. and Pressman Film Corp. Twenty-two episodes of the so-called action hour with a heart will be produced for fall 1998. Pressman, whose producing credits include “The Crow,” “Wall Street,” “Reversal of Fortune” and “Talk Radio,” will be the show’s executive producer.

PolyGram President Bob Sanitsky, who started the Dutch conglomerate’s expansion into domestic television last March, said he “fell in love with the ‘Crow’ franchise.”

That franchise includes a cartoon and two films. “The Crow” and “The Crow—City of Angels,” which combined to gross more than $150 million worldwide. And Pressman is developing a third installment, entitled “The Crow, 2037,” due to hit theaters next winter. The film has established a cult following in the U.S., with a large young fan club and 32 Websites solely devoted to the films.

“The TV series will be going back to its roots with the character played by Brandon Lee,” says Pressman, who is making his debut on the television scene with PolyGram and Alliance. “We are using the original film as a starting point and working within that framework.”

The series will follow character Eric Draven, a young musician, and Shelly, his fiancée, who were brutally killed on their wedding day. She has ascended to heaven, but Draven is still on earth searching for a way to be reunited with Shelly. Draven is not only a musician but also a highly skilled martial arts expert who turns into the crow when confronted by bad guys.

“The Crow will feature rock music throughout, and there is a soundtrack CD coming from PolyGram. “We call it Rocked by an Angel,” says Sanitsky. “Music will be an integral part of the show, but we see the music aspect of it as a bonus. This is really about the public’s fascination with the millennium and the spiritual world.”

“The Crow” joins a crowded weekly one-hour syndication field that includes Universal’s two giant hits, Xena and Hercules. Sanitsky believes that The Crow will work not only for the traditional male 18-49 viewers, but also for women: “Because of the love story, we believe it will attract women. It is about a guy’s undying love and his desire to be reunited with his own love. We think this is a great combination.”

‘Springer’ rises in October

By Joe Schlosser

The little-talked-of October syndicated sweeps numbers are in, and Universal Television’s Jerry Springer has stolen the show.

Springer’s talk show, which seems to have a tight or lover’s spat on every episode, was up in almost every category.

In early fringe, Springer rose to a 5.4 rating/17 share, up from a 3.8/11 a year earlier, according to Nielsen Media Research. In daytime, the show climbed to a 3.8/14, up from a 2.6/10 last October. And in late fringe, Springer sprang to a 4.2/16, improving on last year’s 3.2/12.

In every demo, the show’s numbers improved, and in many categories they doubled. In early fringe, Springer’s women 18-49 numbers skyrocketed to a 4.1/25, up from a 2.7/16 a year ago. In late fringe, among women 18-49, Springer climbed from last October’s 1.8/15 to a 3.4/25.

“Springer is the story of the month,” says Dick Kurlander, Petry’s vice president and director of programming. “If there is a headline, Jerry is it. He’s really going for it now. His show is what it is, and he’s making no apologies.”

In daytime talk, Warner Bros. The Rosie O’Donnell Show made more upward strides and continued to reign over the time period. Rosie scored a 6.2/21 for the month, up from a 5.3/19 in the time period a year earlier.

In early fringe, Oprah Winfrey stayed atop the ratings for yet another month. Although Winfrey slipped a little from a

It's about time.
It's about...
Introducing the Origin™ video computing platform from Silicon Graphics. It's time you had everything you wanted, everything you needed and everything your competitors didn't want you to have in one, rack-mountable, digital broadcast platform.

Time will tell which digital video formats become the standards of our industry, so the Origin platform supports them all. From the biggest uncompressed formats to the most multi-channel playout streams, from HDTV to low bit-rate MPEG, run them all today.

Time also changes everything, so we've given the Origin platform more scalability and flexibility than any dedicated box. Store months of on-line video, fast-network to any local desktop, run world-class applications, support standard automation systems and StudioCentral™ asset management environment. Want advanced graphics? Origin will let you add it. That's power and flexibility.

When you're ready to see what the best system in the industry can do, visit us on the Web. But don't wait too long. Time is money and of the two, we can only make you more of the latter.

year ago, her 7.6/21 still beat the closest competitor by more than 2 ratings points. Last October, Oprah claimed an 8.1/23 for the month of October.

"She still remains the queen of talk," Kurlander says. "The slip probably doesn't mean anything. She has slipped before and bounced back. Let's see what happens in November."

In access, the downward trend continued among reality magazine shows. Paramount's long-running Entertainment Tonight stayed above the rest with a 6.2/12. ET was down for the time period from the year earlier, when it had a 6.7/12. Paramount's Real TV scored a 3.7/8 and showed good signs in the key demos, according to Kurlander. King World's Inside Edition saw the biggest drop-off, going from last season's 6.2/12 to this year's 5.3/10.

As for sitcoms in access, Columbia TriStar's off-network airings of Seinfeld showed no sign of letting up. In its third year in syndication, Seinfeld remained even at a 7.6/13. The sitcom improved in all demos except teens. Paramount's syndicated debut of Frasier claimed a 5.2/10, a drop for the time period from 5.6/11 a year ago.

Rather re-ups through 2002

Another big name is out of CNN's sights

By Steve McClellan

Ending off an aggressive bid by CNN, CBS News has re-upped CBS Evening News anchor and managing editor Dan Rather for another five years, to 2002. In the past year, CNN also has pursued Tom Brokaw and Peter Jennings, only to be rebuffed.

Rather got a huge pay raise to stay. Sources say he'll make nearly $7 million a year, roughly double his current salary and more in line with the salaries paid to Brokaw and Jennings.

The new contract guarantees Rather the Evening News anchor seat only until 2000, sources say. After that, the network is free to put someone else in the chair if it so chooses. At this point, however, no heir is apparent.

Rather's renewal comes amid good news on the ratings front for the newscast. Mired in third place for years, the Rather broadcast recently has closed the gap. Last week it surpassed ABC World News Tonight in total viewership for the first time in more than five years.

For the week, the CBS broadcast drew an average 11.15 million viewers, according to Nielsen Media Research, while ABC World News Tonight drew an average 10.97 million viewers. On a household basis, the shows tied with an 8.2/16. NBC Nightly News was first, with a 9.1/18 and an average 11.93 million viewers.

‘Dellaventura’ vs. ‘ER’

CBS's freshman drama Dellaventura and 48 Hours will trade 10 p.m. time periods. Dellaventura (7.6 Nielsen household rating/13 share) will likely benefit from the older demo that CBS generates with its Thursday lineup of Promised Land and Diagnosis Murder. It starts in the new time slot Dec. 4. 48 Hours, meanwhile, moves to Tuesday at 10 on Dec. 9.

‘Practice’ makes schedule

ABC has given a sign of faith to its sophomore drama The Practice by picking up the David E. Kelley show for the entire 1998-99 season. The drama, produced in association with 20th Century Fox TV, has averaged a 6.4 Nielsen rating/12 share in households in its 10 p.m. Saturday time slot. "We scheduled The Practice in a very difficult time period, and the risk paid off," says Jamie Tarses, entertainment president. "This pickup is testimony not only to our belief in David Kelley and the series but to our commitment to its stellar cast." ABC says The Practice has given the network its best Saturday night numbers in the time slot since 1995.

CBS has its say

CBS has nabbed the broadcast rights to "Having Our Say," the Broadway play adapted from the best-selling book that chronicles 100 years of American life as seen through the eyes of the Delany sisters. Camille Cosby and Judith James, who produced the play, will executive-produce the teleplay for CBS. The book by the centennial sisters—first published in 1993—stayed on the New York Times bestseller list for more than two years.

Danza returns

NBC's The Tony Danza Show—pulled last month after earning a 10 share on Wednesday at 8 p.m.—will return to hump days beginning Dec. 3, while the freshman drama Sleepwalkers has been yanked from NBC for good. Original episodes of Danza will air at 8:30 p.m. Dec. 3, 10 and 17 and will be teamed with repeats of 3rd Rock from the Sun at 8 p.m. and originals of 3rd Rock at 9 p.m. The freshman drama Sleepwalkers—the latest player in NBC's Thrillogy lineup on Saturday—has averaged a 10 share since its Nov. 1 debut. NBC will fill the hole this Saturday with a National Geographic special from 8 to 9 p.m. and run The Pretender at 9 p.m. Over at Fox, The Visitor has been yanked from the 9 p.m. Friday time slot after averaging only a 9 share in its freshman year. The 20th Century Fox drama was from the creators of "Independence Day." —Lynette Rice work in prime time and to a lesser degree in the morning, where This Morning has shown modest growth.

Over the past year, CBS Evening News is up nearly 10%. "This has been a gradual build," says Evening News executive producer Jeffrey Fager. "We started noticing an upward trend last spring." It didn't get much attention outside the network then, Fager says, because "everyone was watching the battle between NBC [Nightly News] and ABC [World News Tonight]."

As to why the Evening News has closed the gap, Fager says that "it's always a combination of things, and there are always factors out of everyone's control that influence the numbers," including lead-ins, baseball playoffs and prime time.

"But we're definitely seeing people coming to the Evening News, and clearly part of it is that Dan Rather is as good as or better than he's ever been, and the broadcast is of very high quality. When more people watch and talk about it, that has an effect."

Fager, who has executive-produced Evening News for two years, says that in terms of content nothing has changed or is likely to change in the near term. "We just try to give people a solid look at the day's news one day at a time." ■

'Diagnosis Murder' beating the odds

CBS's counterprogramming strategy on Thursday is attracting the show's best numbers

By Lynette Rice

In a section of Los Angeles better known for its airport noise, low-cost housing and Home Depot ware- house, Dick Van Dyke offers a weekly lesson in network survival.

This insignificant place—an aging gray studio in the north end of town—is where Van Dyke tapes Diagnosis Murder, CBS's solution to NBC's Thursday powerhouse. Production of the Viacom drama has plugged along quietly here, the neighborhood more apt to notice a speeding black and white along the boulevard than the luxury cars parked in the studio lot.

Not that Van Dyke and the creators of the five-year-old drama have found a need to make noise.

Diagnosis Murder has managed to stay afloat this season in one of the toughest time periods in network television—opposite NBC's Seinfeld—by offering a steady stream of lighthearted mysteries to its dedicated following. For those who haven't found the show—and there still are many—it features Van Dyke as a full-time doctor and sometime sleuth.

Although the drama is no sponge for advertising dollars—its 30-second spots generate a mere $55,000-$60,000, compared with Seinfeld's $575,000—Diagnosis Murder is an example of counterprogramming at its best, media buyers say. The show attracts an older demographic not amused by the youthful antics of Kramer, George and Elaine.

"If you're going up against Seinfeld and the highest-rated new show, Veronica's Closet, it ain't a bad idea to go for the different audience," says media buyer Paul Schulman. "ABC is knocking its head against the wall trying to get that 18 to 49 demo. Fox is trying the same thing, and look what happened to 413 Hope St.

"Counterprogramming is still a very good idea, in spite of what the networks have said," Schulman adds. "Look at Monday night. The CBS and NBC comedies are really going for the same audience, and all they're doing is fragmenting it."

Since its debut on Oct. 23, 1993, Diagnosis Murder has never lacked for households: in its first two years at 8 p.m. Friday, the drama averaged a 10.4 Nielsen rating/19 share. That dropped to 8.8/15 in the 9 p.m. time slot in its third year—a phenomenon that could be attributed to a late debut in December.

The drama barely lost a step when it moved to 8 p.m. Thursday last season, averaging a 9.3/15 opposite NBC's Friends. This year represents its best run to date—averaging a 10.3/16 and ranking as the number-two drama in both households and the key demos. In a time slot dominated by Seinfeld and Veronica's Closet, Diagnosis Murder also has improved over Maloney's averages last year, both in households (up 16%) and in adults 18-49 (up 11%).

"It wasn't too long ago that Simon and Simon ruled CBS in this same time period. They've had a record of success," says Fred Silverman, the former NBC president who now is the show's executive producer along with Dean Hargrove and Van Dyke. "Honestly, I do believe NBC at this point has peaked on Thursdays. Their numbers are slowly coming down. They've also shown no aptitude for coming up with new hits.

"I think the combination of Promised Land and our show will—as the season plays out—be one of the biggest surprises of the season," Silverman says.

Van Dyke was never keen on the show moving to Thursday, which he saw as a final resting place for veteran CBS dramas like Murder, She Wrote. That Universal drama was moved from 8 p.m. Sunday to 8 p.m. Thursday in 1995 before star Angela Lansbury—who was steadfast in her belief that Murder belonged on the weekend—decided not to return at the end of the season.

"The networks used to believe in habit viewing. I remember the days when Milton Berle was on Tuesday night and that was it. To move things around to beat the competition is self-defeating," Van Dyke says. "I didn't think we had much of a chance in there, but our audience came with us. It's just amazing with that strong opposition that we manage to hold our own."

CBS attributes some of the strength of Diagnosis Murder to stunt casting, as the show often features older TV actors to help spin the weekly mystery. Last Thursday's spy episode, for example, featured Barbara Bain from Mission: Impossible, Robert Culp from I Spy and Patrick Macnee from The Avengers.

Certainly helping matters is the drama's run on The Family Channel, though Viacom is looking to leave the basic cable network in favor of its new deal to provide programming to Paxson Communications. Diagnosis Murder is one of many new dramas—CBS's Touched by an Angel and Promised Land, among them—that Paxson will strip on its new broadcast network.

As stress-free as his three-day-a-week taping schedule may be, Van Dyke isn't always pleased with the results. He wasn't particularly happy with the Nov. 6 episode, which generated some press for its tale of a murdered female network president. The comparisons to ABC's Jamie Tarses were undeniable, a ratings ploy that Van Dyke found too insider-ish and "mean-spirited."

In fact, Van Dyke's not particularly supportive of any ongoing press coverage, either. The show doesn't generate many magazine covers, and that suits the venerable star just fine: "I think it's to our advantage. I think everybody suffers from too much hype and too much exposure. There's a point at which it becomes counterproductive. I think the audience likes to feel they've discovered something for themselves. They found it. Nobody pushed it down their throats."

The household numbers alone for Diagnosis Murder provide CBS with a decent promotional launchpad for weekends—though Murder is more apt to help Nash Bridges at 10 p.m. Friday than the younger-skewing Family Matters at 8 p.m. Mostly, the show is appreciated around the network for keeping the circulation up, because "that's what we try to do," says Kelly Kahl, head of scheduling. "To say you're not losing money hand over fist to NBC is not such a bad thing."

The Third Way

A commentary by Mark Effron, vice president, news, Post-Newsweek Stations

Ask any group of news directors what their biggest problem is and they'll tell you it's attracting young, smart producers with at least a passing knowledge of what happened the day before yesterday, a smattering of news judgment and good writing skills. Stories abound about producers not knowing who John Denver was, let alone knowing who was John Kennedy Jr.'s father.

Yet, these same people quickly "get" the newest computer system and have it doing backflips in 15 minutes. These same people who aren't sure why many of us worship at the Edward R. Murrow altar are conversant in implementing schemes to hold on to prime time lead-ins and to maximize ratings by getting past the all-important quarter hour. They understand demos and research-driven strategies. They understand how to get the hottest pictures on the air, but not whether that's always a good idea. Journalism can be a forgotten concept in the zeal to market, target and tell.

As recently as 10 years ago, most employees of most TV news operations had a shared sense of mission—tracing their lineage from Murrow through Cronkite and other giants. Most shared common beliefs about journalistic integrity and objectivity, even if the interpretations were varied.

We can't assume anymore that the good, smart folks who work for us necessarily share these same journalistic values. So we have to impart them.

This state of affairs, however, shouldn't surprise us.

People who started their local broadcast journalism careers roughly around the time that Dateline was blowing up trucks have found their career choice constantly demeaned in the press as being too tabloid, too quick to chase the ratings and too slow to chase what's in the public interest. This assault has bred cynicism.

There are other reasons as well. The fragmentation of the audience has caused us to use all of the research tools available to delve into what the audience's informational needs are—and how to meet them. That's fine when more-seasoned folks are balancing these marketing concerns with basic hard-news journalistic values. It's not so fine when the talk of newsrooms is more on the marketing than the storytelling.

When that balance is out of whack, the news director has to reestablish the priorities for the staff.

News directors have a special set of responsibilities as we enter the 21st century. First and foremost, we have to be the teachers and coaches of our newsrooms. We have to pass down the traditions, even as we're building new ones. We have to talk to our staffs about the stories we've covered, the ethical dilemmas we've faced and how we arrived at the solutions. We have to remind younger producers why this is a noble effort, and why people continue to rely on us for coverage of their communities and their lives. We have to talk about ethics. This should be part of our daily conversations, but we also should consider a Journalism 101 for new staffers, one that combines an overview of broadcast journalism with the goals of our own organization. It could be put on tape, or computer, or done live, or a combination of all three.

We have to teach our staffs that good stories come from all over—not just the consultant's playbook. Some of the best ideas come from letting good people run loose and ask a lot of questions.

Right now, there seem to be two polarized camps. One says: "The old days were filled with integrity, and now it's all shameless." The other side says: "Let's do whatever we need to do to get and hold an audience." We have to bring our younger staffers into a third camp that believes that there is nothing inherently contradictory between good journalism and strong marketing and research. The best broadcasting companies have always known this. It just takes mature leadership inside and outside the newsroom to balance all of the sometimes conflicting needs.

Finally, we have to convey to our younger staffers that the future of local/news is bright. That if we do it well, and are gutsy, and stay close to both our roots and the audience, we provide a needed and coveted service not available anywhere else.
A good idea can become more than just a good idea.

Many of us in journalism talk about the book we intend to write or the project we’ve been brainstorming in rare quiet moments. Good ideas held captive by the daily demands of our working lives in journalism. Good ideas that remain just good ideas.

The Media Studies Center fellows program was designed to bring good ideas to life; to provide the time, the environment and the resources for the productive development of ideas.

Since 1985, residential fellowships at the Media Studies Center have enabled news media professionals and scholars to transform research and ideas into books and projects that enrich the knowledge of practitioners and the understanding of the public. Media Studies Center fellows have produced more than 80 books, launched broadcasting ventures and created innovative computer software.

Fellowships can be awarded for an academic year or for shorter periods. Fellows receive a generous stipend and staff support, including research assistants, and work in a collegial, challenging environment.

We’re inviting proposals for our 1998-99 fellowships. The deadline is Feb. 1, 1998. For an application and more information, contact:

NBC and Hicks Muse are embarking on a joint venture to which each will contribute one station: KNSD(TV) and KXAS-TV respectively. NBC will own 79.62% of the equity in the stations, and Hicks Muse will own 20.38% of the equity, but each will have equal voting interests. In return, NBC's sister company, General Electric Capital Corp., will loan Hicks Muse $815.5 million in a 25-year interest-only loan, and NBC will extend the Hicks Muse stations' affiliate agreements until 2010.

Battling for single-digit-age listeners

Radio Aahs and Disney struggle over kids formats

By John Merli

The recent announcement that the Children's Broadcasting Corp. (CBC) would end its full-time satellite-networked Radio Aahs children's format in January (B&C, Nov. 10) signals the end of an ambitious and moderately successful enterprise. But it will not signal the death of national children's radio if the Walt Disney Co. has its way. And according to CBC, therein lies the problem, and the heart of a pending lawsuit against Radio Disney that could reach a Minneapolis court by early 1998.

A handful of other children’s radio ventures, such as the short-lived Imagination Station earlier this decade, had high hopes but went dark quickly. And earlier this month, the weekly kids program Rabbit Ears Radio announced that it too will fold in January. Lack of future funding is the reason. Rabbit Ears, distributed by Public Radio International (PRI), was heard on 250 public radio stations. Both PRI and CBC are based in Minneapolis.

Some of CBC’s stations (known as the Radio Zone) regularly aired Rabbit Ears, which featured the talents of Mel Gibson, Robin Williams, Morgan Freeman, Meg Ryan and other well-known actors. In late October, PRI said it had received the death notice “unexpectedly” from Rabbit Ears producer MicroLeague Multimedia Inc., which produces software, audio and video tapes, books, toys and board games.

CBC’s Radio Aahs at its peak boasted 32 affiliates (including its 13 stations) in 29 markets for its 24-hour kids fare. Major markets included New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, Dallas, Detroit, Washington, Minneapolis-St. Paul and Philadelphia. CBC, which launched in 1990 and went national via satellite in 1992, had a goal that was easier said than done: to provide educational and entertaining full-time radio programming for the demographic that radio has ignored for decades—the single-digit crowd.

“We stuck it out,” says CBC CEO Christopher Dahl of the dying Radio Aahs. “We had a mission to bring this to the top 100 markets. We got to about 40 percent coverage” and then, Dahl says, Disney entered the picture. Two years ago, CBC and Disney’s ABC Radio Networks entered into a joint operating agreement. According to CBC, ABC was to assist in national advertising (which Dahl saw as a key to Radio Aahs’ long-term success), promotion, research and future technology. Less than a year later, in September 1996, CBC began the long process of suing Disney for “alleged deliberate attempts to misappropriate CBC’s unique radio programming format and force CBC out of the children’s radio market.” Depositions are under way, and the case likely will go before a judge early next year.

Also expected in early 1998 is the sale of CBC to Global Broadcasting Co. of New York for slightly more than $72 million. The sale is subject to shareholder and regulatory approval. Dahl, who will continue to own five radio stations in Maui, Hawaii, after the Global sale, says Radio Aahs was getting close to breaking even, but his sources of capital had dried up in recent months.

Dahl says he was not discouraged by the number of affiliate sign-ons to Radio Aahs since 1992: “It really isn’t any different from any other medium. It took USA Today about 10 years to get on its feet. It took CNN about that time—and the Gulf War—to take off. We were pushing hard toward getting national advertising” and Radio Aahs’ audiences were growing, he says. Although there are no Arbitron ratings, Dahl says independent research indicated that young kids were listening.

Dahl says that radio has long ignored the under-12 demo. He doesn’t think that recent shifts through group consolidations have helped matters: “It’s a sad thing about the radio industry. Unlike the computer industry and others that embrace new ideas, we were bringing a whole new audience to radio, but the industry is so busy consolidating they couldn’t see it.”

All but one of the Radio Aahs affiliates are on the AM band. Do kids today even know what AM is, considering the band’s current formats? And what about the competition for children’s attention from CD-ROM games, the Internet and TV programming that targets youngsters, especially on PBS and Discovery Channel? Dahl says that when it comes to radio and youngsters, there has always been a natural attraction. “What do kids do when they reach 11 or 12?” Dahl asks. “They turn on the radio. Kids love to listen to the radio. We were just getting them to tune in a few years sooner.” Dahl adds that more AM outlets were open to trying major format changes than FM.

Radio Aahs (“Aahs” comes from the expression “voohs and aahhs”) could continue in some short-form format with new owner Global or elsewhere, yet Dahl says the real key to attracting kids over the long haul is to provide a full-time format. “It works just like any other format. You can’t splic it up. It has to be there all the time.” Listeners are conditioned to expect that, he says.

Radio Disney, which would not comment on the pending lawsuit with CBC, is counting on the considerable resources and well-known Disney characters of its parent company to go where others have failed. A year ago Disney began test marketing its own kids product in four areas—Atlanta, Minneapolis-St. Paul, Birmingham, Ala., and Salt Lake City. According to Radio Disney VP/GM Scott McCarthy, by the end of that six-month test period last spring, the stations were averaging about a 1.8 rating.
McCarthy says that earlier this fall, with some market research under its belt, his company began seeking other affiliates around the country. To date, Radio Disney has 11 stations (three of which are ABC O&Os) programming its format round-the-clock. Besides the original test markets, additional outlets include Los Angeles, Boston, Seattle, a "Long Island affiliate near New York," and smaller markets. (There is reason to believe that other stations may have signed agreements, pushing the total above 11; a formal announcement has not yet been made.)

All of Radio Disney's new affiliates are AMs. This is not only because more AM stations are willing to take a chance on alternative formats, McCarthy says, but because "most young kids do not recognize or mind the fidelity [difference] between AM and FM. In fact, only about one percent of kids said they didn't like the quality of AM."

McCarthy, unlike CBS's Dahl, believes the current climate of consolidations actually benefits Disney in its affiliate recruitment efforts: "The timing is proving very beneficial. Now we may have an owner with multiple stations in a single market and he or she's looking for something creative to do with one signal, but not create too much competition against his other stations." McCarthy's current goal is to add about 25 affiliates a year to the new network.

The Radio Disney executive says the company is putting "significant expenditures" into marketing, audience research and promoting the new service—including a major campaign in each affected local market—usually including billboard, television, parents magazine and direct mail. McCarthy says his core audience is ages 2-11, but it skewed more 5-11 ("elementary school kids"). Among the stats that Disney cites to prospective stations and advertisers from various researchers, including Simmons, Stratford Research and Statistical Research, are:

- 78% of kids listened to the radio "yesterday";
- 73% of kids own their own radio;
- 39% of kids 5-9 use a portable or Walkman-type radio;
- more than 60% of kids 5-9 have a radio in their room; and
- most kids listen to the car radio routinely.

Radio Disney hopes to "expand the market for local ad dollars" by bringing new advertisers to radio. At the same time, stations looking for an alternative niche format are reminded by Disney that network-fed programming, in general, could mean reduced overhead and production costs—as well as reduced personnel. Without being specific, McCarthy says ad sales on the network level are "going very well. Charter advertisers that signed on for the initial test marketing phase included McDonald's, Hershey's, Kraft Cereals, Nickelodeon, Golden Books and two of Disney's own units—ABC Television and The Disney Channel.

Like most previous children's radio ventures, the vast majority of Radio Disney programming is music—and most of the music does not have to be specially produced. Disney's selections break down to about 55% pop, 20% oldies, 15% soundtracks and about 10% children's songs. Kids are featured on-air a few times an hour to request songs, answer questions, win prizes (including trips to Disney theme parks) and talk with the hosts.

McCarthy vows that Disney's venture into kids radio will be a long-term success, especially if the company maintains its four major priorities: Programming must make listening habit-forming; affiliates' signals must provide good penetration of their respective markets; marketing and promotion must be ambitious and effectively executed, and significant expenditures must flow into constant audience research "to keep on track."

Sports network to feature 'online' programming

In what may be a first for radio syndication, an established sports-talk radio network and an online sports publisher are combining forces to create an eight-hour daily block starting Dec. 1. SportsFan Radio Network and SportsLine USA--producer of CBS SportsLine "broadcasts" on the Internet—have announced an exclusive multyear agreement to allow SportsFan to syndicate to terrestrial radio broadcasters the 10 a.m.–6 p.m. sports-talk block to be produced by the online provider.

When the two-year-old SportsFan begins to terrestrial syndicate what originally began as SportsLine's Internet radio (audio) programming, it will be an unorthodox approach to program distribution. Usually it works the other way around, with terrestrial on-air programming being simulcast or winding up online as a secondary venue. Yet CBS SportsLine plans to simulcast the new terrestrial sports-talk programming on its Website, where it's always been (www.cbs.sportsline.com).

The new block is expected to premiere on 30-40 stations. Five minutes of national commercials and as many as nine minutes of local spots per hour will be formatted.

SportsFan has featured such personalities as John Madden and James Brown in its current round-the-clock talk format, while CBS SportsLine has published online content (graphics and audio) with Shaquille O'Neal, Joe Namath and Pete Samparas. These and other athletes and commentators are scheduled to be regular contributors to the sports-talk block, which will replace two SportsFan-produced talk shows.

New shows to be produced by CBS SportsLine include Sports Uncensored with Craig Carton and C.J. Silas at 10 a.m.–2 p.m. ET, and The Drive with Scott Kaplan and Sidney Rosenberg at 2-6 p.m. Both upcoming "broadcast" programs have been available only online at CBS SportsLine's Website. SportsFan Executive VP Jonathan Goldman, in a conference call last week, said the new all-day talk block will complement SportsFan's evening and overnight sports fare, now being carried in various daily or weekly blocks on a few hundred stations.

Primestar still targets DBS

Mega WorldCom deal won’t alter license status at FCC

By Chris McConnell

WorldCom is taking over MCI but not its DBS license. That permit remains earmarked for Primestar, although regulators first must sign off on the contentions bid to shift the high-power DBS channels to the cable-owned satellite TV provider. FCC officials, who have been reviewing that application since it was submitted in August, will continue to review it independently of any application they get to transfer MCI’s various FCC licenses to WorldCom.

But onlookers say last week’s $37 billion merger may still have some impact on the DBS permit that MCI has held since last December.

“It eliminates the foreign ownership question,” says Gigi Sohn, executive director of the Washington-based Media Access Project.

Cable companies relied last year on foreign ownership restrictions in an effort to block MCI’s acquisition of the DBS license. MCI originally claimed the license in an FCC auction early in 1996.

After the auction, cable companies objecting to MCI’s application to acquire the DBS license cited the company’s plans at the time to merge with British Telecommunications.

Last December, however, the FCC said the restrictions on foreign ownership of U.S. broadcast licenses do not apply to licenses to provide subscription DBS packages.

The Clinton administration later asked the FCC to reevaluate its policy on DBS and foreign ownership, but commission officials have never launched such a review.

While last week’s deal between MCI and WorldCom removes the foreign ownership issue from MCI’s possession of the license, it does not remove the objections that DBS companies have lodged against Primestar’s bid to acquire the license from MCI.

EchoStar and other groups are opposing the application on the basis it would hamper video competition. “It is as if Bell Atlantic was seeking authority to merge not only with NYNEX but also with a joint venture encompassing all of the other Baby Bells as well as GTE,” EchoStar said in its petition against the deal.

Primestar also is seeking to acquire a DBS license currently controlled by one of its partners, TCI Satellite Entertainment. That license would give Primestar 11 DBS channels at an orbital location covering the full continental United States.

Philip Verveer, a Washington lawyer representing Primestar, says the company hopes to have FCC approval of that application by year’s end. Less certain is when Primestar expects a decision on its application to acquire the DBS channels from MCI. “I don’t think we have a time frame in mind,” Verveer says.

Showtime gets black box injunction

Showtime Networks and Showtime Event Television won a preliminary injunction from a regional U.S. District Court in Texas in their pending lawsuit against “black box” distributor Millennium Enterprises President Brenda Abboud.

Issued Oct. 20, the injunction prevents Abboud and Millennium from selling, advertising, distributing or transporting equipment used to descramble cable signals and enable consumers to receive free premium cable and pay-per-view programming.

“Signal theft is an industrywide issue,” says Jeff Wade, executive vice president of sales and affiliate marketing for Showtime Networks Inc. “We will continue to take action against companies that engage in the sale of devices used for the unauthorized reception of program services and pay-per-view programming.”

Targeted media strategies and new technologies are making cable buys more efficient than ever before. Spending on local, regional and national cable advertising is growing at a record pace, expected to climb to $7 billion by the end of 1997. As a result, cable executives are focusing on how to take advantage of this lucrative revenue stream.

ESPN-WAC dispute illustrates problem for small conferences

By Paige Albinak

Someone forgot to tell the Western Athletic Conference (WAC) that you have to own something before you can sell it.

ESPN is threatening legal action against the Denver-based collegiate sports conference if it can't get local broadcasters to give ESPN satellite coordinates of all its conference basketball games. ESPN owns the national rights to WAC games and has a contract with DirecTV to provide it with local games for its Full Court basketball package.

The sticky situation in the West shows how cable sports networks’ insatiable appetite for exclusive access to sports programming is forcing local broadcasters to rethink their commitment to local sports.

In a memo to local television rights-holders, WAC Commissioner Karl Benson says that “ESPN legal counsel recently informed the WAC that it and its member institutions are in violation of the contract. Further, ESPN expects full compliance of the contractual obligations regarding the DirecTV issue.”

Three years ago, the WAC cut a deal with ESPN for the national broadcast rights to the basketball games of its 16 schools. Within that contract was a clause promising ESPN the satellite coordinates of locally televised games for DirecTV.

Since then, that clause has left a legal vacuum. Local broadcasters, whom some of the WAC’s universities sell local television rights, say they won’t give ESPN the satellite coordinates unless ESPN gives them the right to broadcast games in their local markets simultaneously—a concept known as “side by sides.”

“I don’t have a contract with the WAC,” says John Tischendorf, director of programming for the New Mexico Broadcasting Co., which runs five New Mexican television stations, including CBS affiliate KROE-TV in Albuquerque. “I have a contract with the University of New Mexico. Some guy in Denver can’t sell what isn’t his.”

“Speaking for our company, if ESPN wants to litigate the question we welcome it,” says Harry Pappas, owner of Pappas Telecasting in Fresno, Calif. “I challenge them to find a jury that would find that their behavior is justified by their contract.”

Meanwhile the legal headache grows for the WAC—which, unlike bigger conferences, can’t afford all the local and national television rights to all its schools’ games.

WAC Associate Commissioner Jeff Hurd says that the “landscape has changed considerably on both ends since the initial year of this contract. This is a situation where most people weren’t aware of the ramifications of this contract.”

The number of WAC games broadcast nationally has increased from six to about 25 in the past three years, Hurd says. The WAC failed to anticipate both the number of games carried nationally and local broadcasters’ resistance. “Knowing what we know now, we would have approached it differently,” Hurd says.

So far, ESPN’s negotiations stop with the WAC. “It’s unfair putting that kind of pressure on the WAC itself and [on] Karl Benson,” Pappas says. “I feel sorry for the WAC. I think they got bamboozled a little bit,” Tischendorf says.

ESPN had no comment.

ESPN and other sports networks refuse to give side by sides because exclusivity is a bargaining chip in gaining carriage. Fox Sports, a new rival sports network jointly owned by News Corp. and Liberty Media, also takes games and refuses to allow side by sides.

The proliferation of sports networks has cost local broadcasters the opportunity to present the most competitive (and therefore most appealing) games in their local markets.

ESPN, Fox Sports and the broadcast networks pick their games close to the beginning of the season, after the local broadcasters have set their schedules and sold the advertising. When that happens, local broadcasters have to give the advertisers a make-good for lost games or rip up advertising contracts altogether.

Besides disallowing the side by sides, ESPN also will not compensate local broadcasters for up to $20,000 that they spend to produce a game, but ESPN still expects the broadcasters to hand over the satellite coordinates of those games for free.

Local broadcasters are unconcerned about ESPN's threat against the WAC, but the diminishing return on college sports is causing them to lose interest in producing games for the hometown market.

At the start of the 1997-98 basketball season, the situation is getting serious enough that Tischendorf is considering making this year KRQE's last as the official home of the UNM Lobos basketball team. KRQE is finishing a four-year contract with the school, whose basketball team this year is nationally ranked and thus more attractive to national broadcast television and cable networks.

"This is the last year of our contract, and then we have to renegotiate," Tischendorf says. "It's not cheap to do a game. If the only ones we get to do are the leftovers, then economically that doesn't make sense."

If local broadcasters stop producing the games, communities stand to lose free, over-the-air access to university sporting events.

"This really tells the tale of the ethical and moral position of the parties," Pappas says. "The broadcasters have not asked for money. They simply have asked for side by sides [so that they can] carry games for free for the people in our area."

Dreaming of a ‘white area’ Christmas

Senators threaten to be less ‘polite’ unless battle gets less ‘intense’

By Paige Albinia

Broadcasters and satellite television companies need to reach a final agreement on so-called white areas by Christmas or face bipartisan legislation from Senate Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch (R-Utah) and ranking member Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.).

“The chairman and I are being very polite here in suggesting that we would like to see you work something out by Christmas,” Leahy said during a hearing on cable and satellite compulsory copyright licenses in the Judiciary Committee last week.

“We could be a little bit less polite. I suspect Senator Hatch and I will have a bipartisan bill that will get a lot of support and may not make anybody happy.”

Hatch and Leahy want to get the white-area issue out of the way before drafting legislation next year that will rewrite the Satellite Home Viewer Act, the law that governs the satellite industry. The SHVA expires in December 1999.

Broadcasters and satellite television providers have a long-standing disagreement about how to determine “white areas”—locations where consumers cannot receive Grade B-intensity broadcast signals off the air.

White areas have proved difficult to nail down, however. Some engineers say that just because a household cannot get a signal via its rooftop antenna doesn’t mean the picture is coming in clearly in the living room.

Prime Time 24 President Sid Amira told a copyright panel last spring that he thought white areas should be determined through a picture-quality test, but the panel found that idea impractical: It is costly and requires testers to enter subscribers’ homes and evaluate their television pictures.

The two sides reached an agreement in principle on the matter last April, but the final details have yet to be worked out.

Broadcasters have taken one satellite television company, Prime Time 24, to court in Florida and Texas over the issue. A trial started last week in a lawsuit filed by NBC affiliate KAMR-TV Amarillo, Tex., against Prime Time 24. KAMR-TV claims that Prime Time 24 is selling packages with local signals to subscribers who do not live in white areas.

In a report on cable and satellite compulsory copyright licenses that was commissioned by Hatch, the Copyright Office said it expects technology to solve the problem. In the meantime, the report suggests that Congress write a law to allow satellite broadcasters to retransmit local signals into local markets.

Two companies—Capitol Broadcasting and EchoStar Communications—have suggested proposals to do this.

One broadcast lobbyist suggested that the local-into-local idea presents Capitol and EchoStar with a chicken-and-egg problem: Congress wants to see a business plan before legislating, and the companies want legislation before crafting a detailed business plan.

The Satellite Broadcasting and Communications Association, the National Cable Television Association and some broadcasters have expressed conditional support for local-into-local.

If Congress decides to allow this,
NCTA wants either less regulatory obligations for its industry or more regulatory obligations for satellite carriers.

"We do not oppose amending the copyright law to allow DBS companies to retransmit local broadcast signals," testified NCTA President Decker Anstrom.

"But fair is fair and everyone should play by similar rules. Unless cable's regulatory responsibilities are applied to DBS operators that transmit local broadcast signals or [unless] those restraints are removed from cable, there will be no parity of treatment."

The National Association of Broadcasters has yet to articulate a position on local-into-local, but William Sullivan, vice president of Cordillera Communications, agrees with the NCTA.

"We can only support such a plan if it includes rules [for such issues] as must carry, syndicated exclusivity and network non-duplication that provide adequate protection for localism and program exclusivity," Sullivan testified.

The NAB plans to hammer out a position on local-into-local at its annual January board meeting.

Comcast cash flow up despite start-up costs

By Price Colman

Comcast Corp.'s third-quarter financial results show that while cash flow continues strong, investments in start-up businesses continue to be big cash drains on the cable operator.

Comcast reported operating cash flow of $365 million, up 23.4%, for the third quarter ended Sept. 30, compared with the same quarter last year. Of that, about $248 million was generated by the cable business. The cash-flow growth came on revenue of $1.2 billion, up 23.6%. Cash-flow performance continues to be the key measure for capital-intensive growth firms such as Comcast.

For the quarter, Comcast reported about $13 million in free cash flow (operating cash flow minus interest expense and capital investment). "We were essentially at the cash-flow break-even level," says John Alchin, Comcast's treasurer. "With cable capital expenditures and so on, we're not running the company at a deficit level of cash flow. It's all coming from internally generated funds."

Microsoft's $1 billion investment earlier this year helped Comcast reduce debt from $7.1 billion to about $6.7 billion, giving the company a debt-to-cash-flow ratio of roughly 4.75:1.

The Microsoft/Comcast deal has prompted speculation that Comcast will favor a Microsoft-made set-top box or a Windows CE operating system for advanced digital set-top, but Comcast President Brian Roberts told analysts the technology will be the key.

"Whoever gets the best box out at the lowest price is probably going to win," Roberts reportedly told analysts. "The CableLabs board is united in having an architecture that allows a variety of participants" Roberts is on the executive committee of the board.

An average $2-$2.50 increase in basic-cable rates that Comcast enacted on Nov. 1 will help the MSO's fourth-quarter cash flow. But Comcast also is looking at a bulge in fourth-quarter capital expenditures—about $270 million out of an estimated $600 million in 1997—which will hurt cash-flow numbers for the period. Nonetheless, Comcast expects to maintain cash-flow break-even going forward, Alchin says.

Comcast's third-quarter net loss increased significantly from the same period in 1996, growing more than 500% to $62.2 million, or 18 cents per share. Comcast cited $85.9 million in losses—up 197%—at money-hungry affiliates, including Sprint PCS and Teleport Communications Group, as a key reason for the larger loss. Other contributors: costs associated with the start-up of regional customer service centers; deployment of new products, such as Comcast Digital TV and the @Home high-speed Internet service, and higher depreciation and amortization expenses from last year's acquisition of Scripps Howard's cable operations.

Comcast's cash-flow margins for cable remained solid at 48.1%, essentially the same as a year ago.
HSN, Univision go shopping

Two companies will launch international Spanish-language shopping channel

By Donna Petrozzello

ith visions of expanding into Latin America and Spain, Home Shopping Network and Univision announced plans to jointly launch a full-service Spanish-language TV shopping network early next year.

HSN will control 50.1% of the Spanish Shopping Network, while Univision Communications Inc. will control 49.9%. HSN primarily will manage the operation, while Univision, a leading Spanish-language TV broadcaster and station owner, will be responsible for securing U.S. distribution.

HSN aims to tap some 540 million Hispanic and Spanish-speaking consumers globally, including 7 million U.S. Hispanic cable homes, says Michael McMullen, president, HSN International. Other key markets include Spain and cities in Latin America, where the network will roll out in the coming year.

In 1997 the number of basic cable and multichannel homes in Latin America was estimated at 15 million, according to Baskerville Communications data. In Spain 2.5 million households are cable-ready, Baskerville says.

Unlike some unsuccessful international shopping ventures—particularly QVC’s try at a Spanish shopping network in Mexico—McMullen says HSN and Univision’s planned launch into multiple Hispanic markets worldwide should bolster the network. HSN has given the venture three years to break even, he adds.

McMullen acknowledges the cost of hiring Spanish-speaking talent to host network segments and sell merchandise on-air. As with HSN’s English feed, the Spanish Shopping Network will feature live hosts rather than dubbing segments from English to Spanish or running subtitles.

HSN launched its first international channels less than a year ago in Japan and Germany, two of the world’s largest economies. McMullen says HSN saw Spanish-speaking consumers as its “next priority.”

And similar to those first two international ventures, HSN will tap Univision’s partnerships with broadcasters Televisa in Mexico and Venevision in Venezuela to ease transition of the channel into those countries. For its German venture, HSN teamed with European catalog company Quelle and with Kirch Media Interests of Germany.

“We as looked to develop this venture, our logical choice was to team with Univision, because they are the strongest Spanish broadcasting group in the U.S. and because of their partners in Mexico and Venezuela,” McMullen says.

McGrath shakes up MTV

Schoun out, Toffler up in reorganization at music network

By John M. Higgins

M

TV has squeezed out once-touted programming whiz Andy Schoun in an executive shuffle that boosts production chief Van Toffler into a newly created number-two slot.

MTV President Judy McGrath triggered the shuffle in another attempt to strengthen MTV’s programming, which has stalled in the Nielsen ratings for more than a year. One goal is to set a more consistent tone by naming a single executive to administer all of the network’s shows—series, music and news—which had been divided among three people reporting to McGrath.

“We’ve never had a single programming executive,” McGrath says. “I believe in nontraditional organizations, but with all these different parts we should have at least the same voice.” For example, she says, should the tone of programming lean toward cutting-edge or popular?

Insiders say that Brian Graden has the inside track on the top programming job, but McGrath wouldn’t say whom she planned to name.

Toffler, formerly executive vice president, programming enterprises, and president, MTV productions, moves to the new post of general manager. He will be responsible for the day-to-day operations of the network and report to McGrath.

Schoun had been executive vice president of programming, primarily in charge of the MTV’s music programming. A former program director of Los Angeles rock station KROQ-FM, Schoun was seen as bringing new energy in the network at a time when pop music was starting to get bland.

Sources say that with Toffler moving ahead of Schoun and Schoun being told he wouldn’t get the top programming position, he quit.

“Andy was great and he’s going to go off and be great,” McGrath says. “He did a lot of strong, good things. I like where we’ve been going since September at least.”

America's Health improves
Network revived by investment from former Columbia/HCA executives

By Donna Petrozzello

America's Health Network says it will be resurrected with a cash infusion from investors formerly linked with Columbia/HCA Healthcare Corp.

Columbia Healthcare founder and former chairman Richard Scott and Columbia's former president David Vandewater announced last week that they will give the ailing network capital to stay afloat.

Scott and Vandewater earlier this year supported Columbia's proposal to buy out A.H. Belo Corp.'s majority 65% stake in AHN for $50 million. But the hospital giant backed out at the last minute under pressure from a government investigation into alleged Medicare fraud. Scott and Vandewater subsequently resigned as the probe continued.

With Columbia's proposal shelved, AHN laid off 161 of its 300 employees and aired reruns. A.H. Belo purchased AHN from the Providence Journal Co., but Belo's support waned after AHN lost $75 million during its first year in operation.

While not divulging the amount of Scott and Vandewater's investment, AHN Chairman Webster Golinkin says the network should reach a cash-flow break-even point by early 1999. This past summer, Golinkin said AHN needed about $25 million to break even.

The capital also will be used to develop original programming in the form of live, hourly Health News briefs, prime time specials on Sundays and a new series on women's health, exercise and nutrition. The network also plans to launch a Website early next year, says Joseph Maddox, president of AHN.

Scott and Vandewater's investment is the network's second cash injection this year. In September, a company controlled by Howard Milstein invested significant cash in the ailing AHN to keep it alive.

Golinkin and Maddox launched AHN in March 1996. The network serves some 6.5 million house-holds. AHN was principally owned by Providence Journal until it merged with A.H. Belo in early 1997. By attracting other investors in the network, Golinkin and Maddox were able to purchase Belo's interest and secured interim financing from Milstein.

Investors in AHN include Access Health Inc., Allen & Company Inc., IVI Publishing Inc., Medical Innovation Partners, Milstein, Golinkin and Maddox. AHN says these parties will remain significant shareholders in the network after the investment by Scott and Vandewater.

AHN chairman Webster Golinkin hopes to hit cash-flow break-even by 1999.

KHQ-TV going to DVCPRO

Spokane station spending $740,000 on Panasonic digital cameras and editing equipment

By Glen Dickson

NBC affiliate KHQ-TV Spokane, Wash., will begin converting all of its field acquisition and editing to Panasonic's DVCPRO next month. The Cowles Publishing Co.-owned station has purchased $740,000 worth of Panasonic digital gear, which will replace aging MII equipment in its news department.

KHQ-TV's order includes 13 AJ-D700 DVCPRO camcorders, 14 AJ-D650 studio editing VTRs, six AJ-D750 studio editing VTRs, seven AJ-D230 desktop VTRs and seven AG-A850 edit controllers. The station also purchased a Panasonic Postbox elite nonlinear editor for its promo department, where it will replace a Matrox editor running three MII VTRs.

KHQ-TV President Lon Lee says his decision to buy DVCPRO began in the station's edit bays, where old MII decks badly needed replacement. Lee initially considered Tektronix NewStar's EditStar, a server-based journalist's workstation with cuts-only editing capability, but realized "that wouldn't have improved the quality of our pictures." So he decided to buy DVCPRO for both editing and acquisition.

"In our mind, for its price and value, it was a better buy than any alternatives," says Lee. "Once we're in the digital realm, that sets us up to go to file servers later."

KHQ-TV will install the AJ-D650s in its five edit bays, as well as in an SNG truck, in a remote news bureau and in the station's promo department as a source deck for the Postbox system. One AJ-D750 will be put in the SNG truck, with the rest being used to play back news segments to air. The AJ-D230 desktop VTRs will be used to record satellite feeds in the newsroom and will also serve the sports department and the station's Web producer.

Lee says he's still interested in buying Tektronix's EditStar product in the future: KHQ-TV already is a NewStar for Windows user. He's also planning on bolstering the station's field editing capability by purchasing some Panasonic DVCPRO laptop editors in 1998.

KHQ-TV will continue to use MII machines (which still are performing well) in master control for commercial playback, program record and delay. Lee eventually expects to replace the master control decks with video servers.

Group W gives digital demo

Tells its customers it can handle HDTV transmissions

By Glen Dickson

Group W Network Services (GWNS) in Stamford, Conn., held a closed-door seminar on high-definition television last week.

GWNS wanted to inform its customers as they make their DTV plans and to assure them that the program origination and support center will be able to transmit HDTV if and when cable networks decide to offer it.

"We have to be prepared to handle a digital product," says GWNS President Allan Stalker, who already has overseen the creation of an all-digital GWNS plant in Singapore and is leading the conversion of the Stamford plant to a fully digital infrastructure. He says GWNS, which is owned by CBS Cable, could be ready for HDTV program origination in a year.

"There aren't any significant transmission issues with HDTV," adds Stalker. "It's more the standpoint of what individual clients will require in playback."

To help clients make that decision, GWNS held several technical demonstrations of HDTV display devices and assembled a collection of expert speakers from the professional and the consumer sides of the DTV fence. The event was attended by representatives of Discovery Networks, A&E, The History Channel, Outdoor Life, Speedvision, Home Team Sports, TNN, CBS, Viewers' Choice, NHK, Major League Baseball and the National Football League.

Speakers at the seminar included Dr. Joe Flaherty, CBS senior vice president of technology; Bob Rast, vice president of technical business development, NextLevel Systems; James Bonan, vice president of new business development, Sony Electronics; Henry Mathier, associate director of development, CBS Engineering: Wendell Bailey, president, Strategic Technology International and Michael Petricone, deputy general manager and staff director of government and legal affairs, CEMA. GWNS was represented by Stalker and by Barry Fox, vice president/GM for entertainment.

GWNS held four DTV demonstrations with the help of consumer manufacturers and CBS. The first was a high-end home theater system from Sony with a high-definition-capable projector, widescreen projection screen and a multispeaker sound system that showed off HDTV’s five channels of Dolby AC-3 audio (a system that sells today for about $25,000). Footage included ATSC demo tapes and some clips from CBS prime time shows, among them Brooklyn South and Nash Bridges, which were transferred from 35mm film to Panasonic D-5 tape.

The second demo displayed different formats on a 30-inch Sony consumer HDTV set now sold in Japan. The flat-faced CRT unit was used to display 1080 I HDTV, a VGA (or 480 P) input from a laptop computer, and 480 I NTSC, which was upconverted within the set to improve the picture quality.

“The reason we were showing this capability to the Group W folks and the network people is to show technologies that exist and are commercial and can be applied in the consumer set market here,” says James Bonan, vice president of new business development at Sony Electronics. “They need an understanding of what’s possible in the consumer set so they can make decisions about what to transmit.”

Other demos included HDTV on a Pioneer 52-inch flat-panel display, the same one demonstrated by the Association for Maximum Service Television in Washington late last month, and a large projection screen and Sony HDTV projector showing CBS footage of different film and video sources that had been converted to 1080 I. The large-screen projection demo showed the 1080 I display of Super 16, 35mm film and HDTV video, and compared upconverted 480 I widescreen with HDTV video in a split-screen segment of footage. The CBS material also showed how upconverted 4:3 pictures with blank side panels looked on the big screen.

Panasonic D-5 machines with add-on HDTV processors were used to play back the source material for most of the demonstrations. Stalker expects either D-5 or Sony’s HDCAM to be GWNS’s initial playback format for HDTV. While he doesn’t expect HDTV-capable file servers anytime soon, Stalker thinks the rest of the equipment needed for HDTV program origination, such as switchers, encoders and conditional-access gear, will be ready in the next year. GWNS is telling clients that the HDTV gear will probably cost an average 30%-50% more than current NTSC equipment.

Panasonic is reorganizing its professional and general-use video equipment divisions next year to compete more efficiently in the digital marketplace. The two Japan-based divisions, Broadcast Products Co. and Image and Sound Communication Co., will be merged into the Broadcasting and Professional Systems Co., effective Jan. 1; Sony is also establishing Digital Network Solutions Co. that will focus on digital satellite broadcasting and computer networks. According to Larry Kaplan, senior VP of broadcast systems for Sony’s U.S.-based Business and Professional Products Group, the reorganization won’t have any immediate effect on Sony’s U.S. operations. Kaplan refuted the suggestion that Sony’s reorganization is in response to the market share it has lost in the broadcast tape market to Panasonic’s DVCPro format; Sony has consistently marketed its equivalent DVCAM as a business and industrial format while pitching the more expensive Betacam SX to broadcasters.
MTV says it's making money, but only a handful of other media companies say they are close to being in the black.

By Richard Tedesco

When asked about the prospects for Internet profitability, major media groups sound like many sports fans: wait till next year.

CNN, Warner Bros., Disney, ESPN, USA Today and other media powerhouses claim to be nearly in the black on Web ventures. MTV is the sole major media proprietor of online property that claims it's making a profit—and says it has done so since launching its site in 1994—but declines to discuss numbers to back it up.

Otherwise, the list of sites claiming to be profitable is short and comprises uniquely positioned Web programmers with particular audience targets, niche interests or unusual formulas. As far as broad categories go, pornography is the only clear online winner.

"It's a true value-oriented application," says Gregory Wester, director of Internet market strategies at The Yankee Group. "You don't need sunglasses or a trenchcoat, and there's a ready market for it."

With more than 1,200 adult-content sites online, pornography has become a burgeoning industry on the Web, with gaming the only

Celebrity Sightings sees early success

Like the celebrities to whom it offers exclusive access, Celebrity Sightings is a hit at a young age.

Not quite 11 months after its official launch, Celebrity Sightings is generating one million page views per month. The site, already in the black, is poised to attract even more traffic as part of Warner Bros.' potent online brand. It also will have addresses on America Online and Internet Explorer 4.0.

"The name of the game is carriage and distribution," says Robert Landes, Celebrity Sightings founder and CEO. "It's been a hell of a journey."

While its members range from age 8 to twenty-something, the site's core audience of 50,000 is 12-16-year-olds, who pay $12 yearly for the privilege of chatting up their teen idols. Homing in on that prime 'Net user demographic has been the key to the site's relatively quick rise.

"No other online service [has] created something where kids could communicate directly," Landes says.

For their $12, Celeb Sightings fans have been able to engage in chat sessions with (and send e-mail to) such teen stars as Jonathan Taylor Thomas (Home Improvement), Jodie Sweetin and Candace Cameron Blue (The WB's Full House) and Sarah Lancaster (Saved by the Bell)—something they can't do elsewhere on the 'Net. In addition, they can chat with each other and play trivia online games built around the TV stars. They also receive some merchandise and access to more—exclusively—on the site.

Celebrity Sightings has been funded by Landes and three partners who are MIT alumni and by Cambridge Partners Technology. Landes also serves as CEO of Guidance Solutions, for which the same team creates integrated online businesses for companies including Wells Fargo and Silicon Graphics.

The Celebrity Sightings venture turned the corner into profitability two months ago, according to Landes. Given its avid audience and distribution sources, it figures to remain one of the 'Net's early entertainment success stories. —Richard Tedesco comparable category in distinctive appeal and return traffic. With small up-front investment and modest maintenance costs, these categories are creating millionaires.

Forrester Research estimates that nearly 7 million consumers are crowding online sites such as NineCo's Gamesville or Berkeley Systems' You Don't Know Jack, with total game revenue hitting $127 million this year. Forrester estimates transactions from adult sites at 136 million this year, up from 100 million last year.

Games and pornography have achieved the kind of success that few Web entrepreneurs have been able to match. "Either you have a bomb-proof brand that has little or no competition or a tiered plan that is a site targeted at your best customers," says Mark Mooradian, Internet analyst for Jupiter Communications. "In the case of major media sites, it's just not going to happen that soon."

ESPN's success with its SportsZone site has capitalized on the tiered approach, segregating some content—including video clips—into a premium area for a $5 monthly or $40 annual subscription fee. It has seen more than 50,000 sports aficionados ante up for that access, or pay $19.95 to participate in one of its sports fantasy leagues. "We've always considered this business to be targeted at the very serious sports fan," says Tom Phillips, president of ESPN Internet Ventures.

Subscriptions represent 30% of ESPN's Web revenue, with advertising revenue somewhere north of $4 million for 1997. A strong fourth quarter is pushing the service toward profitability next year, although Phillips emphasizes, "Our view is to the long haul." And he is quick to point to the "gray shades of accounting" that Internet entrepreneurs can apply to their businesses.

CNN Interactive could have easily proclaimed profitability by now, according to Mark Bernstein, vice president of operations for the unit, but it has been consistently plowing revenue back into the business. Its editorial and technical staff has increased from 120 to 180 this year, and more staff additions are expected next year, when CNN Interactive expects to double ad revenue.

Jupiter Communications' WebTrack survey of Website ad revenue estimates that CNN Interactive ad dollars hit $4 million as of last month, but Bernstein says that figure is low and that profitability is "right around the corner." But he says CNN has always operated its online business at, or near, break-even, conserving its resources.

Obviously, CNN Interactive has the resources of the mature CNN cable operation to tap into, but both CNN and ESPN report that their budgets account for some allocation of resources from their respective cable operations.

USA Today has hit the $4 million revenue mark this year too, according to Jupiter's figures, and is capitalizing on print/online ad packages to push toward break-even this year.

USA Today's site is following a weak third-quarter sales performance with a strong fourth quarter, according to Larry Sanders, director of business operations for USA Today. He says the current unpredictability of the market defies reliable revenue projection. "I'd have to be a soothsayer to predict that," says Sanders. Nonetheless, he says prospects for profitability next year are good.

Most newspapers plan to rely on revenue from online advertising for the foreseeable future. The Wall Street Journal charges $29 for annual subscriptions to the electron-

N2K spins hot mix of marketing and music

In the mercurial ebb and flow of Internet entertainment, N2K's mixed music formula plays loud and clear through the clutter.

On its Jazz Central Station site, N2K combines marketing—from a menu of 185,000 CD and cassette titles and related merchandise—with streamed music events and online instruction. The potent potpourri landed N2K's IPO on the hit list of hottest new issues, pushing the opening price of $19 last month to $31 before it settled back to the low $20s last week.

But expectations remain high for this Silicon Alley start-up, despite its accumulated deficit of $37.4 million, as of June 30. Net loss for the quarter ended June 30 was $5.6 million on $1.8 million in revenue, a considerable difference from the $3.5 million loss it recorded on $313,000 in revenue for the same period a year ago.

Those expectations rest largely on a network of alliances that N2K orchestrated before going public, including a partnership with MTV that made N2K's Music Boulevard the music video programmer's point of sale. And N2K is the exclusive music retailer on America Online's Music Space channel, as well as being an anchor tenant on AOL's shopping channel. It also enjoys anchor tenant status as sole music marketer on the @Home Shopping Guide, has a preferred spot on WebTV, handles online fulfillment for Virgin Records and is designing a Music Boulevard clone for Netscape Navigator.

N2K's marketing-centric online offerings range from Classical InSites for high-brow fare to Rocktopolis for live pop music events, in addition to Music Boulevard and Jazz Central Station. N2K also has created sites for the Rolling Stones, David Bowie and the late composer Leonard Bernstein. Rocktopolis offers PC users live cyberviews and interviews with pop stars in addition to online chat sessions with them.

But the key to N2K's business is how many of those sampling the 30-second snippets of the 340,000 available tunes take out their credit cards to create income for the online music marketer. In a business built on firsts, N2K has created the first online music label, N2K Encoded Music, which is reselling music via download as well as in more conventional ways.

There is plenty of risk in the venture, with the AOL deal a prime example: N2K is due to pay AOL $18 million over the next three years to do business on the online service's prime real estate. But with Jupiter Communications projecting the online music business at $71 million this year, growing to $2.8 billion through 2002, N2K could be on the first step of an online escalator.—Richard Tedesco revenue over the three-year life of the service. "We've been profitable since day one. That's a tribute to the strength of the brand," Farber says.

Over the past year, MTV has added to its advertiser roster Intel Corp., GT Interactive, Sony Pictures, N2K Music Boulevard and Ford. The N2K relationship is a two-way street that includes links on MTV's site to N2K's Music Boulevard, giving MTV surfers access to online music purchases and auxiliary income for the music video programmer. Carriage deals, including the one that made MTV a featured Active Channel on Microsoft's Internet Explorer 4.0 browser, are part of the picture too.

The name of the game in online revenue is developing diverse streams. Disney is an example of that formula, with growth in advertising set to surpass the million-dollar mark on Disney.com, according to Jupiter's figures. Sources say its Disney Blast subscription service on MSN has been a disappointment, but Chuck Davis, Disney Online senior vice president for ad sales, says the Blast hasn't bombed. And he points to Disney's licensing deal with Microsoft to be an Internet Explorer 4.0 channel as another form of subscription revenue.

Disney also is working on "deep" sponsorship deals that could include Disney Internet Family Fun Kit CD-ROMs customized with interactive ad messages. But the ace in Disney's hand could prove to be online merchandising, which is now producing the equivalent of the revenue averaged by a total of three "brick-and-mortar" Disney stores, according to Davis. Disney Online now sells everything from Pooh-grams, the venerable bear bearing a personalized message, to $500 family passes for Disney theme parks. "We're very bullish on electronic commerce," Davis says.

Deals for space on Internet Explorer 4.0 and AOL have helped drive Warner Bros.'s online ad revenue past the million-dollar mark, but the studio's online unit claims another facet of its strategy is also driving it into the black. "It's the result of content partnerships that bring content into our site from beyond Warner Bros.," says Jim Moloshok.
 Warner Online senior vice president of marketing.

The Warner site now contains the Internet Movie Database, a comprehensive compendium of background about popular cinema carrying the Warner brand. It is creating original animated characters with a New York software startup called togglethis, and has adapted a togglethis creation called Bozlo Beaver as another avenue to ad sales (“Telemedia,” Nov. 10). But its biggest coup for outside content is the inclusion of a popular Web destination for teenagers called Celebrity Sightings.

In less than two years, Celebrity Sightings is turning a profit as a repository of proprietary content about 16 of television’s most popular teenage stars. For 12- to-16-year-olds, it is the only site where they can access information about teen idols that include young WB Network celebs Christine Lakin (Step by Step), Tamara Mowry (Sister, Sister), Tatyana Ali (Fresh Prince of Bel-Air) and others. Surfers can play games on the site and—

WCCO-TV sets its site on profit

WCCO-TV Minneapolis is making money with its Channel 4000 Website, Edina, Minn.-based Internet Broadcasting System, which created Channel 4000, claims the site is profitable on a month-to-month basis, although it backs off discussing hard dollars.

IBS builds Websites—which it owns and operates—for stations. In addition to wcco-tv’s site, it has built ones for CBS affiliates KCBS Los Angeles and KOMO (TV) Portland, Ore. Its formula is to collect other local content on its sites to drive traffic and attract advertisers.

Channel 4000 is the official site for the Minnesota Twins, Midwest Sports Channel, the Minneapolis Zoo, and magazines Minneapolis/St. Paul, Minnesota and Twin Cities Business. Advertisers include the Twins, Marquette Banks and AT&T.

Notwithstanding the multiple content providers, wcco-tv’s content is the site’s focus. “We are TV-centric,” says George Johnson, IBS president. “We believe these local Internet properties will have value similar to local current media properties.”

So IBS is content to amortize the cost of creating the sites—approximately $500,000 apiece. The company expects to recover that cost over two or three years as it pursues other projects. It is currently in discussions with three other broadcast station groups, according to Johnson, pitching the same formula that’s paying off in Minneapolis.—Richard Tedesco “Talk about a major change.

Going digital can shave both budgets and production time.”

Controlling production costs has always been a hair-raising experience for Hollywood. Or for any business that relies on creative work. Finally, there’s a solution. IBM Digital Library—a series of new technologies that are dramatically changing production.

Imagine everything, in all your libraries, condensed into digital files. Files which can then be accessed from your desktop or sent over a network to collaborators anywhere. Suddenly, steps are trimmed and expensive production time is compressed.

Now all your work, whether it be film, art, sound or photography, is in one place. Giving you greater control of your assets.

So what are you waiting for? See how you can get more from your assets in a digital world at www.ibr.com/solutions. Or call T300 IBM-2163, ext. JAB3.
Financial success on the Internet is a matter of pushing the right brand or maintaining the right demographic focus with targeted content in what is still a limited universe of users. "No one has discovered the magic formula for making money on the Internet," says Peter Krasilovsky, vice president and analyst for Arlen Communications. "The companies that are making money on the Internet tend to be bare-bones operations. They're not really making a major investment in the Internet."

But sites are creative about what they're doing, as in the case of nineCo with the Bingo Zone and Picturama on its Gamesville site. PC users can—and do—play for no charge on the site indefinitely for cash prizes: $2 per bingo game and $4 for Picturama. And all nineCo has done is draw 600,000 players to register on the site and sponsors such as AT&T, Lands' End and Sprint to support it in less than 18 months online. "On TV game shows, three people play while the world watches," says Steven Kane, nineCo founder. "On an Internet game show, the world plays."

And in some cases, a large percentage of Internet users is curious enough to rush in, hang around and keep coming back. It's a formula that Columbia TriStar uses on Sony's The Station site with online versions of Jeopardy! and Wheel of Fortune. Some 50,000 college students have registered for a Jeopardy! tournament that is a prelude to bigger competition online.

That's the key to Internet success for small and big players alike: to attract users, subscribers and free-spirited surfers to sites that are compelling or unique—and habit-forming. Except that the medium is interactive, the dynamics are not too different from the TV network model.

Microsoft fires back
Software giant rebuts DOJ but ducks questions

By Richard Tedesco

Microsoft Corp. fired back at the Department of Justice last week, arguing that the government is obstructing product design in trying to force it to segregate its Internet Explorer browser from its Windows operating system.

"If the government is allowed to engage in product design, there will be a stifling of innovation," William Neukom, Microsoft senior vice president for law and corporate affairs, declared.

But throughout a press conference about its 48-page response to the recent DOJ antitrust allegations that it violated a 1994 consent decree, Neukom and Brad Chase, Microsoft vice president of developer relations, deftly dodged questions about the $50 stand-alone version of IE 4.0 now on retail store shelves. "Just because something is made available cross-platform doesn't mean it can't be included as part of an operating system."

Asked whether marketing an enhanced stand-alone version of IE 4.0 belied the argument about the government stifling innovation, Neukom retreated to Microsoft's party line on the Explorer controversy. "To the extent there is any feature that has customer demand," he said, "we seek to deliver that functionality in a way that customers want, it, which could be integrated."

Chase declined to say whether Microsoft would eventually consider video streaming capabilities an integral part of its operating system. It is incorporating its NetShow streaming technology into the Windows NT system and is expected to follow that tack with other versions of Windows.

The DOJ also is currently examining possible antitrust implications of Microsoft's recent acquisition of VXtreme and purchases of equity stakes in RealNetworks and VDONet, all streaming technology firms.

Microsoft Chairman Bill Gates initially sounded as though the Redmond, Wash.--giant might acquiesce to the DOJ demands about breaking its browser out of the operating system. But last week's 48-page manifesto suggested that Microsoft is ready to fight for high-tech freedom of development with consumer-advocacy rhetoric.

"History supports the proposition that companies should continue to look for functionality that customers want," Chase said last week.

Microsoft claims that the government knew of its plans to integrate the IE browser into Windows and that it preserved its right to integrate it when it signed the decree intended to encourage competition.

Meanwhile, the state of Texas has filed suit against Microsoft, claiming it's being impeded in its separate antitrust investigation by secrecy clauses in Microsoft's contracts with computer makers.

CNBC becomes a 24-hour part of Intercast
Technology's there, partners now look to expand content

By Richard Tedesco

BC and Intel Corp. are taking their Intercast project to the next level, incorporating CNBC into the mix on a round-the-clock basis.

PC users with tuner boards enabling delivery of the TV-enhancing service to their PCs will now be capable of accessing their stock portfolios in real time while watching CNBC. They'll also be able to access all CNBC Website content, as well as company earnings reports, updated CNBC guest lists and breaking news that goes beyond that site's content and the cable net's on-air reports. And they'll do it all as they watch CNBC in a window on-screen.

"We're one of the few networks where you see the data and take action on it," says Bruno Cohen, CNBC senior vice president, adding. "It takes our programming from being linear to being nonlinear."

That's not to say Intel doesn't think Intercast has taken a practical turn before this. MTV is actively participating now, providing additional information about artists' recordings as accompaniment to its programming.
"I think some of the things out there today are pretty darn practical," says Ron Whittier, Intel senior vice president. "But you're in a market-creation category, and it takes time to create a category."

In fact, Intel isn't certain just how big a category that is. The company estimates that there are 30,000-100,000 Inter- cast users who have installed $100 tuner boards built by Hauppauge Computer Works and others.

As CNBC enters the mix, Intercast gets a technical shot in the arm from Compaq Computer, which will start installing boards in some of its high-end Presario machines and promoting plug-in boards to present Compaq owners.

CNBC's entry is being sponsored by EDS Internet Services, which is in the business of building Websites and Web commerce. EDS becomes a test case on CNBC as the first company to try to link users to Websites during an on-air ad spot. The spot appears on CNBC's on-air portion of the PC screen with a company icon the user clicks on, and the EDS site appears at the bottom of the PC screen. "By going first, we see some enormously significant applications," says Craig Turner, EDS executive vice president.

Ancillary information for weekly National Football League telecasts on NBC is the most recent content application added to Intercast, along with content to complement The Tonight Show with Jay Leno. But Lifetime, The Weather Channel and other content partners who've signed on to participate have yet to actually develop any content as part of the service. Compelling content would seem a necessary ingredient to drive penetration if Intercast is to become more than just another interactive curiosity.

Internet rises for au pair verdict

Real-time announcement delayed by power failure

By Richard Tedesco

Web surfers went online in record numbers again last week, tuning in to learn the recast fate of convicted British au pair Louise Woodward.

The controversial case translated into record page views for Fox News and ABC.com, and put Woodward's final day of reckoning high on CNN Interactive's hit list too. In fact, CNN claimed 10.7 million page views, somewhat lower than the numbers it recorded on the stock market's Bloody Monday and the day after Princess Diana's death.

Fox fed the frenzy and garnered 3.4 million page views, with a peak of 5,000 users tuned in to the streaming video of the final sentencing by Judge Hiller Zobel on Monday afternoon. "On this one, the video really gave us a boost," says Scott Ehrlich, Fox News director of issues, information and online services.

ABC.com drew 1.5 million page views on 350,000 visits, a 7% increase over the record traffic it drew the day the market dropped 555 points. "People's desire for news on demand is what's driving traffic and growth in this medium," says Jeff Grulnick, ABC News vice president, who reported that 20% of the site's users were there for the outcome of the case.

Release of the verdict online fueled the flood of "Net activity. Court TV doubled its Web capacity to cope with it, but a technical glitch temporarily dimmed its big moment. A power outage in Brookline, Mass., one minute before Judge Zobel's opinion was to be transmitted delayed the sentence-reduction announcement by an hour on Monday morning. But Court TV's site ultimately claimed record numbers.

WorldGate wins deals with Charter, Shaw

WorldGate Communications struck its first cable affiliation deals last week, with Charter Communications and Shaw Cable's satellite service.

Charter bought into WorldGate's low-cost Internet access software solution in a five-year pact that will cover all of Charter's markets. Deployments of General Instrument CFT-2200 advanced analog boxes incorporating WorldGate's Internet access software will start in Charter's major markets, including St. Louis and Los Angeles, next year.

Charter had tested the service with consumers in St. Louis and found the results "extremely convincing," as Charter President Jerald Kent put it.

For Canada-based Shaw, the WorldGate service will be introduced in a Calgary, Ontario trial early next year using Shaw's digital cable box, with a broad rollout to follow.

The two MSOs serve approximately 3 million subscribers and will have free rein to set retail rates on the service.

WorldGate offers "Net access via set-top remote control for a suggested monthly price of $4.95 for five hours. WorldGate suggests an $11.95 price for unlimited monthly access.

These are the first of several major MSO deals WorldGate expects to close this year, according to Hal Krisbergh, WorldGate chairman. "Until the industry says this is real, it's just a nice idea," says Krisbergh. "I think we're past that stage now."

WorldGate poses a serious challenge to the pricier Internet TV services from Microsoft's WebTV and NetChannel, partnered with Oracle Corp.

New radio/online venture

In what may be a "first" for radio syndication, an established sports-talk radio network and an on-line sports publisher are combining forces to create a new eight-hour daily block starting Dec. 1. SportsFan Radio Network and SportsLine USA—producer of CBS SportsLine "broadcasts" on the Internet—announced an exclusive multi-year agreement to allow SportsFan to syndicate to terrestrial radio broadcasters the 10 a.m.-6 p.m. sports-talk block to be produced by the on-line provider.

When the two-year-old SportsFan begins to terrestrially syndicate what originally began as SportsLine's Internet radio (audio) programming, it will be an unorthodox approach to programming distribution: Usually it works the other way around, with terrestrial on-air programming being simulcast or later winding up on-line as a secondary venue. Yet CBS SportsLine does plan to simulcast its new terrestrial sports-talk programming on its website, where it's always been (www.cbs.sportsline.com). The new eight-hour block is expected to premiere on 30-40 stations. —Richard Tedesco

HELP WANTED PROMOTION

WE'RE STORMING THE BEACH IN MIAMI!

Barry Diller, the creator of the Fox Network, is making television history again. Beginning early next year in Miami, Silver King Broadcasting launches VIEW!, the nation's first and only truly local Television station. We have twelve hours of network quality entertainment shows, news, and sports to produce and promote every day and every day. The few, the proud, the elite will work in a brand spanking new state-of-the-art all glass studio in South Beach.

Silver King is one of the nation's top ten largest broadcasting groups. With twelve full power stations in the top twenty markets, Miami is just the beginning! We're looking for innovative, passionate, hard driving pioneers to be part of the station that's the talk of the industry. You always want to be at an MTV, FOX or CNN right from the beginning. If you've got the right stuff, here's your shot at a once-in-a-career ground floor opportunity.

First, you need to be a great writer! Second, a great cutter! And third, did we mention a great writer? You'll cut creative image, topics, generics, launches, IDs, POP's, and presentations on souped up AVID's. Best of all, you're not a new jockey/seesaw slave. You'll promote an unconventional newscast plus all of our original entertainment shows. What would you expect from the coolest job in television?

Do you just ooze personality? Do you drip ad-lib? Then you might be just the person to host our broadcast day. Plus, just like Ed McMahon, you'll do live commercials, comedy improv, live promos, and guest shots on other shows. No talking heads here! Show me the funny.

As a kid, you colored outside the lines. As an adult, you were Mad about Mac's. Now, should you accept this awesome mission Mr. or Mrs. Phelps, you will design a station look and a staff like none other. Promo and branding are just for starters. We'll hurl! Show opens and innovative news packaging, and live action shoots your way. Management and mentoring skills are a must! This is hand-to-hand design, so bring your mouse.

You'll be the envy of the next BDA. Mundo creative freedom and the strongest graphics firepower in your arsenal: AVID Illusion, Matador, After Effects, Electric Image, Photoshop, etc. However, you're not just mac savvy. You're a good communicator, and someone who gets the marketing.

Send all the usual suspects: Resume, References, and Reel (VHS or Quad) to: Chris Sloan, Silver King Broadcasting, 605 Lincoln Road, Ground Floor, Miami Beach, FL 33139

Sorry, no phone calls or C.O.D.'s are accepted for this limited time offer. Tapes will not be returned. Silver King Broadcasting is an Equal Opportunity Employer. We strongly support workforce diversity.

Bain Capital Inc. is betting that Ric Gorman knows how to make money. It’s a safe bet. He’s been doing it for a long time.

At 16, as leader of his church’s Christian Youth Organization, Gorman organized weekly dances for his fellow high school students, charging a small ticket fee. Every Friday night he booked a band, once hiring then-unknown Three Dog Night. Gorman’s dances brought in more money every week than the Sunday collection and church bingo night combined.

He hasn’t lost his touch, Gorman’s company, GOCOM Communications LLC, is building revenue as it builds its property base. The company has closed on its purchase of Cottonwood Communications LLC’s three TVs—KCPM (TV) Chico/Redding, Calif., KSJR (TV) Springfield, Mo., and KMDT (TV) Midland/Odessa, Tex.—and has agreed to buy WKBW-TV and five radios in Youngstown, Ohio. In just six months, the company’s holdings have grown to nine TVs, three FMs and two AMs, from its original five TVs.

When it comes to managing the properties, Gorman says he is “driven by experience.” That experience began in 1975 at WGAP (AM) Maryville, Tenn. There, Gorman took his first job in radio at age 24 after teaching broadcasting and theater for a year at Vincennes (Ind.) University. It was there that sales manager Chuck Larson taught Gorman his first lesson in management: “Don’t waste my time.” Gorman has fashioned his own version of this mantra: “Life’s too short.”

Gorman moved on to become sales manager of KLIF (AM) Dallas. He continued to work in radio until he was hired by the Providence Journal Co. to manage sales for KMSB-TV Tucson, Ariz., in 1985.

Gorman has worked in TV ever since. In 1988 he joined Clear Channel Communications Inc. as vice president and general manager of the group’s first television station, WPAM (TV) Mobile, Ala./Pensacola, Fla. He was also corporate director of sales development for Clear Channel Television from 1988 to 1992. During those four years, Gorman saw Clear Channel’s television holdings increase from one to seven stations and served as a member of the Fox Network Affiliate Board of Governors.

If there is one significant role model for Gorman, it is Clear Channel President L. Lowry Mays. Gorman says Mays has “built a tremendous organization [by] getting people excited about being part of a company, not about individual day-to-day jobs.” Gorman wants to impart such enthusiasm to his own employees.

Leaving Clear Channel, Gorman moved to Indianapolis to join Sinclair Broadcast Group as vice president and general manager of WTTV (TV) and WTTK (TV).

In 1995, Gorman was consulting with River City Broadcasting when he made contact with BCI Growth. Together they purchased Macon, Ga.’s WGXS (TV). Gorman’s goal for that station was to develop the news department. The station, which switched affiliation from ABC to Fox, now has the fastest-growing late news show of all Fox affiliates.

Gorman continued his interest in undermanaged stations, signing on with Bain Capital Inc. in November 1996. Bain has agreed to invest $150 million in GOCOM, creating more than $500 million in equity with which Gorman can continue his aggressive acquisition plan. GOCOM started in television but is “interested in any media (including radio), particularly where we own TVs,” Gorman says. “If we can increase our shelf space in the same market, that makes sense for us.”

Since partnering with Bain, Gorman has doubled the size of the company and is working to acquire more properties, primarily in small to midsize markets. “I’m much more preoccupied with how good we are than how big we get,” he says.

Gorman says the focus on smaller markets allows him “stronger bonds with advertisers” and more control of local sales, which he says make up 70% of the stations’ revenue.

That Main Street mentality feeds Gorman’s desire for “people in the organization to live well-rounded lives.” That philosophy governs his own life as well: “If I’m a lucky man, in 10 or 15 years [when] somebody else is running Gocom I’ll still have a very solid relationship with my family.”

That somebody else may be part of the family. Gorman’s 14-year-old son Ryan has already expressed an interest in the business. Gorman says he is thinking of taking Ryan to some upcoming affiliate meetings, but he will not push him into the business. “I hope he does what makes him happy,” Gorman says. If he does that, he’ll be following in his father’s footsteps.

DEATHS

Ralph Burton Rogers, 87, Public Broadcasting Service founder, died Nov. 4 in Dallas. He suffered from heart ailments. In 1972 Rogers persuaded and subsequently united more than 200 independent public television stations to form the Public Broadcasting Service. At the time Rogers was chairman of KERA-TV Dallas.

Ron Tindiglia, 51, broadcaster, died of cancer Nov. 10. In the early '70s, Tindiglia was part of the news team at WABC-TV New York that developed the "Eyewitness News" format which was copied by stations around the country. He subsequently held news director posts at WABC-TV and WPVI-TV Philadelphia. He went on to become station manager at KCBS-TVs Los Angeles and general manager of WCBS-TV New York. In the mid-1980s Tindiglia served as VP, news, for the CBS-owned TV stations, before starting his own consulting firm in 1987.

Tommy Tedesco, 67, studio musician, died of complications of lung cancer Nov. 10 in Northridge, Calif. Tedesco, known as one of Hollywood’s recording elite, was a regular on Fernwood 2 Nite, Martin Mull’s variety show. He appeared under the pseudonym Tommy Marinucci. Tedesco played the guitar solo on the original Bonanza series and did the acoustic work on “Suicide Is Painless,” the theme song from M*A*S*H. Other Tedesco recordings include Batman and Green Acres. His soundtrack work includes “The Godfather” and “Field of Dreams.” Tedesco is survived by his wife, Carmie, and four children.

Charles Woods, 85, staff announcer, died Nov. 10 at home in Manhattan. Woods worked at ABC in New York from 1948 until his retirement in 1976. He hosted the ABC series Books on Books, which debuted in 1968 and was one of few book review programs on network radio at that time. Woods’s radio career began at WTAM (AM) Cleveland as a staff announcer. He also worked at WVLW (AM) Cincinnati, broadcasting news and a late-night poetry and music program, and at WOR (AM) New York as the 11 p.m. newscaster. Woods is survived by his son, Jeffrey.

Hugh E. Davis, 70, broadcaster, died of cancer Nov. 9 at his home in Yakima, Wash. Davis formed Columbia Empire Broadcasting Corp. in 1959, operating KNDU (TV) Yakima and KNDU (TV) Richland/Kennewick, Wash. He also operated the NBC affiliated stations until they were sold in 1988. Davis was active on the board of KMTV (TV) Eugene, Ore., a station in which he had invested. He is survived by his wife, Allie Lou, and three children.

Broadcasting & Cable November 17 1997 107
Parent and child advocacy groups last week sent letters to NBC President Bob Wright and BET President Bob Johnson, encouraging the two holdout networks to adopt the revised TV ratings system. The groups also would like to set up a meeting directly with the networks, without association negotiators. At press time, neither NBC nor BET would comment. On Oct. 1 every other broadcast and cable network added to the age-based ratings S for sexual content, V for violence, L for foul language, D for suggestive language and FV for fantasy violence. The advocacy groups, encouraged by Senate Commerce Committee Chairman John McCain (R-Ariz.) and Rep. Edward Markey (D-Mass.), also plan to start a grass-roots letter-writing campaign to get NBC affiliates on board. So far, NBC affiliates have heard from neither the groups nor their viewers, says Doug Adams, president of the NBC affiliate board.

The FCC received $186.5 million in funding for salaries and expenses for the next year, with the House finally approving 282-110 the Justice/Commerce/State Appropriations bill after a long debate over how to conduct the 2000 census. Out of total FCC appropriations, $162.5 million comes from fees paid to the FCC, and $23.99 million comes from the federal government. The funds do not include approximately $40 million for the FCC’s move to the Portals, an office complex in Southwest Washington (see story, page 19). The General Services Administration, which administers all government real estate operations, will loan the FCC the money. GSA is discussing reimbursement possibilities with the FCC, the Office of Management and Budget and the relevant congressional oversight committees. Voting on the bill was Congress’s last act before adjourning for the year. The House and Senate plan to return Tuesday, Jan. 27.

The Library of Congress will consolidate its television and film archives, now scattered throughout the country, in a facility formerly used by the Federal Reserve Bank of Virginia to store gold and currency in Culpeper, Va. The House and Senate last week passed legislation that allows the LOC to accept the building and 41 acres of land surrounding it as a $5.5 million gift from the David and Lucille Packard Foundation. The LOC still has to raise money, $4.5 million of which also will come from the Packard Foundation, to refurbish the building’s heating, ventilation and air-conditioning systems.

The House of Representatives voted 241-185 late Wednesday to allow radio and television coverage in all hearings. The change overturns a 40-year rule that let subpoenaed witnesses in the House ban cameras and microphones in hearings. The House was spurred to action when three witnesses refused to allow broadcast coverage during recent House hearings on campaign finance abuse. “I am busy with my own hearings, and I certainly want the opportunity to see for myself what is going on in the campaign finance hearings,” said Rep. George Ganske (R-Iowa). Ganske introduced a bill similar to the one that finally passed, which was sponsored by Rules Committee Chairman Jerry Solomon (R-N.Y.). In the Senate, committees and subcommittees have the authority to decide whether to admit broadcast reporters to hearings.

The House Commerce Committee late last week extended its probe of the FCC’s Portals move to include the General Services Administration. In a Nov. 13 letter to the GSA, the committee asked the agency to turn

Arbitron details preferred listening

A new study released Friday by Arbitron on its diary keepers’ most-preferred (“P1”) stations finds that for a typical station, diary keepers listing P1 choices represent only about 36% of all diary keepers, but they account for about 72% of all average-quarter-hour (AQH) listening. The study cites “wide differences” in P1 listening patterns, depending on station formats. Urban, soft AC and country formats hold a higher-than-average percentage of P1s (75%-plus), while news and album rock hold a lower percentage than the norm (less than 65%). P1 listening percentages based on formats are greatly affected by the listeners’ locations—work, home or vehicle.

Arbitron’s Tom White says the study “underscores the importance of P1 listeners by comparing the relatively small percentage of a particular station’s P1 listeners with the large percentage of quarter-hours attributed to them. ... These variations show how ratings results for a station depend heavily on format.”

The gap between a station’s P1 and P2 (second station of choice) listeners also may vary widely according to format. The new report—“America’s Top Stations: A Format Profile”—is based on 17,336 diary keepers listening to 223 “successful” stations chosen by format in the top 100 markets.

Among other findings:

- Diary keepers, overall, listen to an average of 4.1 stations weekly.
- The average time that diary keepers spend listening to their respective P1 stations is 16 hours, 47 minutes, or about 68% of all time spent listening (TSL). This varies from up to 20 hours for urban AC to less than 13 hours for news.
- On average, a diary keeper will tune in his or her P1 station 10.6 times weekly, for an average of 1 hour, 35 minutes per tune-in. Spanish and MOR formats hold listeners for longer periods than all others.
- Classic rock of the ’70s has the highest percentage of P1 listening at work; MOR is highest at home; sports tops in vehicles.

The new study is detailed on Arbitron’s Website: www.arbitron.com/topstations.

President Clinton last week signed into law the Labor/Health and Human Services/Education appropriations bill, which includes $300 million in funding for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting. The bill also includes money for PBS educational programs—$7 million for Ready to Learn and $2.035 million for Mathline—as well as $34 million for Star Schools, which contributes funding to PBS. This marks the first time CPB has received an increase in appropriations since 1995, when Congress froze CPB’s funding at $250 million for fiscal years 1998 and ’99. Even with the increase, says a CPB spokesperson, CPB funding will only remain equal to what it was in the early 1990s once it is adjusted for inflation. The White House also last week nominated Winter Horton, president of the Young Oak Foundation and special-projects director for Senator Robert Bennett (R-Utah), for a seat on CPB’s board.

Senators last week asked the Justice Department and the FCC to scrutinize Worldcom’s $37 billion offer to buy MCI. Senate Antitrust Subcommittee Chairman Mike DeWine (R-Ohio) and ranking member Herb Kohl (D-Wis.) sent letters to Assistant Attorney General Joel Klein and FCC Chairman Bill Kennard, asking both to make sure their agencies “closely scrutinize the final proposal, to ensure that consumer welfare is preserved in competition in long distance and other communications markets.” That subcommittee earlier this year held hearings investigating whether the Justice Department was too lenient in allowing mergers of telecommunications companies and whether the Telecommunications Act of 1996 was working to encourage competition.

Reps. Rick Boucher (D-Va.) and Tom Campbell (R-Calif.) Friday introduced legislation to update the Copyright Act to include digital transmissions. The bill, “The Digital Copyright Enhancement Act,” implements a new international copyright treaty that 160 countries signed at the beginning of this year. The bill also would exempt online service providers from liability for copyright violations—a provision that content providers are sure to protest. For example, according to the bill, if an America Online subscriber sold copyrighted song lyrics from his personal Website, the songs’ authors would have to prosecute the Website author and not America Online for the violation.

Federal regulators are having a hard time plugging the plug on a California pirate radio station. Last week a California court rejected an FCC effort to take Radio Free Berkeley off the air and said it wants to hear more from the FCC and the broadcasters. The U.S. District Court for the Northern District of California requested further briefing on the broadcaster’s argument that the FCC’s rules are unconstitutional because they prevent stations from using 10 watts or less from obtaining a license. “We are extremely disappointed with yet another delay in a case that was argued 19 months ago,” NAB President Eddie Fritts said of the ruling.

ESPN has extended its contract with sports commentator Dick Vitale an additional seven years through 2004, says the network. Vitale hosts specials including Dick Vitale’s Slam Bam Jam Preview and Dick Vitale’s Fast Break during SportsCenter broadcasts. He also contributes commentary and game analysis to the cable network and ESPN Radio affiliates.

CNN landed its first corporate sponsor, Ford Motor Co., for its upcoming Cold War documentary series, slated to debut next September. Ford will be featured in promotional spots during the 24-part series, which will run through April 1999. CNN expects to land three additional sponsors before the series premiers. Ford will be the exclusive automotive sponsor.

Lifetime Television President Doug McCormick will be honored by the National Women’s Political Caucus with its “Good Guy Award” at the group’s annual dinner at the Mayflower Hotel in Washington Wednesday (Nov. 19). As head of cable’s “Television for Women” network, McCormick "is being recognized for his efforts on behalf of women’s advancement and his commitment to issues of concern to women and families," says the caucus.
Raising minority ownership

Bill Kennard tells this magazine he would like to do something to increase minority ownership of TV and radio stations. That should surprise no one. He is the FCC’s first African-American chairman, and as a private communications lawyer in the 1980s, he actively promoted programs and policies that sought to put licenses in the hands of minorities.

As Kennard is well aware, minority ownership is low and getting lower. By the Commerce Department’s count, only 2.8% of commercial stations are in minority hands, down from 3.1% in 1996. But there may be little Kennard can do to improve the situation. Congress, the courts and state legislatures are turning away from preferences for minorities in hiring, contracting and college enrollment. FCC actions to boost minority ownership through licensing or regulation would likely be met with stiff and possibly insurmountable political and legal opposition.

So we think it’s up to the broadcasters—not because it will win favor at the Kennard FCC, but because it’s the right thing to do. All segments of our society must have a voice. And in the end, only those who own the press (or transmitter, in this case) have a guarantee that their voice will be heard.

Here are some ideas: (1) Increase the funding of BROADCAP, the industry-sponsored minority broadcast lender. It’s been stuck at $1 million and could use an infusion to keep up with rising station prices. (2) Step up the hiring and training of top-level minority executives. The idea is to create a pool of experienced broadcasters who could—with access to capital—seek to own stations. (3) Lobby to bring back the tax certificate, which allows station owners to sell to minorities and defer capital gains taxes. The IRS-issued certificates helped many buyers and sellers until abuses led Congress to nix them. Washington lawyer Erwin Krasnow, an expert in these matters, says the certificates could be resurrected with safeguards against abuses.

By raising the issue, Kennard has done his part. Now it’s up to the industry.

Open court

In the release of a pair Louise Woodward and his embrace of the Internet for the release of the decision, some see Massachusetts Superior Court Judge Miller Zobel as yet another star-struck jurist feeding—and feeding off—the considerable attention generated by a televised trial.

But Zobel’s deference to his own judgment is not unprecedented. According to the Boston Globe, he suspended a sentence for a child molester over fear that the small and youthful offender would be preyed upon by other convicts. And he reduced a murder conviction against a policeman to manslaughter.

We cite these instances not to praise or criticize the judge but to show that his decision to supersede the jury was not necessarily the result of the cameras. Indeed, Zobel opens his order with a quote from John Adams that the law must be “dead as to the clamours of the populace.”

Some will celebrate Zobel’s flexibility and his compassion for the defendant, while others will challenge his imperiousness and his lack of compassion for the victims—just as some will undoubtedly praise and condemn the actions of our representatives in future hearings. We celebrate the debate, and we praise the judge for recognizing the public’s interest in his Internet strategy. In a time when technology makes information more available than ever before, the public’s interest should not be limited by the size of a courtroom.
Broadcasting & Cable began publishing in 1931. When cable came on the scene, we were the first to report on this new industry. Thirty-something years later — 1967 to be exact — the first annual Western Cable Show was launched. To mark this 30th anniversary milestone, the 1997 Western Cable Show will focus on “30 Years of Change.”

Count on Broadcasting & Cable’s 67 years of editorial leadership to deliver the kind of insider's perspective you won’t find anywhere else. And our regular weekly issue and blockbuster trio of up-to-the-minute Western Cable Show dailies will give you the kind of industry exposure you won’t find anywhere else:

- Weekly subscriber distribution of 40,000 — plus in-room and convention floor bonus distribution at convention halls (15,000 copies)
- Bonus distribution in-room and on the convention floor of all three tabloid-sized Western Show dailies (15,000 copies)
