DDXD-West

Ahoy-hoy from the colder-than-normal Pacific Northwest. I hope everyone had a wonderful Thanksgiving with family, friends, pets, and other loved ones. We radio aficionados have much to be thankful for. Sensitive, selective receivers, loop antennas, syndicated programming, stations that never, ever give a legal ID, IBOC, electrical noise that never quits...oh, never mind.

Lots of great contributions this time. Judging from the quantity and variety of loggings, one might think Ty Thormahlen in Montana got a new piece of equipment or something. Maybe we need to look into this software-defined-radio-miracle-box-thing.

Welcome this week to new reporters Jerry Ervine and Neil Bell.

Welcome to the DX Tool Box Column number 11.
Greetings once again from the Heart of the Continent.

Perhaps one of the most overlooked aspects of setting up a listening post is a ground system. Any listener with a table top receiver will need a good ground system to operate their unit at its optimum level. This piece will deal with setting up a simple yet effective ground system that can be installed in a short period of time with a minimum number of tools.

The first thing you will need are four parts. The first is of course a good ground rod. You will also need a buss bar if you have more than one unit to ground. Next is a Coaxial Surge Protector. And finally some ground wire to tie the whole thing together.

Let us look at the ground rod. Not all ground rods are created equally. When I went to put in my present system, I talked with several people from our local hydro electric company to see what they were using. They all agreed on one thing, you need a full sized 10 foot or 3 meter long rod to be effective. This length will almost guarantee that the rod will stay in contact with moisture in all but the driest years. The ground can dry out to quite a depth during long hot dry periods, leaving shorter four to five foot ground rods useless. The rods must be kept moist to give a good ground, but more on this later. I also purchased a rod that had a built in connector so I did not have to purchase one to keep the ground wire attached. These work best and are easily found.

Next was the selection of the wire I was to use. I ended up selecting 10 gauge copper wire that was covered in a heavy vinyl jacketing. The area of what kind of wire to use is open to all sorts of opinions. I picked the 10 gauge as it was readily available and although stiff you could work with it fairly easily. A coated or insulated wire was chosen to make life easier for me. By using a coated wire it meant I could run the wire easier as I did not have to worry about it touching objects that are conductive in nature. Your ground wire must never touch any thing conductive as it will ruin the ground. A clear and unrestricted path from the radio(s) to the ground rod is a must and coated wire gives you more options of how and where to run the wire. Remember to strip the wire ends to attach to the ground rod and the buss bar or radio.

Shared tips and information from NRC members, both new and old

The buss bar can be installed if you have more than one radio to ground, or if you plan to add to or already have other equipment that may require grounding. The bar is usually made from copper because of its conductivity. The bar need not be large. Mine is 3/4 of an inch (2 cm) wide and 10 inches (25cm) long. I can ground five to six pieces of equipment on it with no problems at all.

Now that all of the parts have been purchased we can start on a simple but effective ground system that will last for years. You must first of all choose a site for the rod to be put in. One very important thing to consider is to keep the run of ground wire as short and as straight as possible. This will insure a better system. Keep the rod close to the side of the house in which your listening post is located. If your home is like mine and you may have underground hydro, telephone, and gas lines as well as water and sewer lines, so please call your local utilities to have them located before you start putting in a ground rod. You do not want to drive your ground rod into or near these lines. Putting a ten-foot metal rod into a hydro or gas line can ruin your day!

Once you have selected your spot you will have two options. You can pound the rod into the ground leaving about 8-10 inches (20 cm) of it above ground, or you can go for the deluxe option. I have gone for this latter route as it will over time help you keep the ground rod damp during dry times. This involves more work but if you live in climate like mine where the weather varies over a large spectrum or has long dry spells it is worth the extra effort. Also if you have heavy clay soils during rains the water will have an easier time to soak into the rock pit instead of running off. You can mark the ground where you wish to put the bar and measure one foot (30 cm) in all directions from this point. Mark the area off and then dig a hole in the area. This will result in a two foot (60 cm) square or diameter hole depending on how you dig it out. Either is acceptable. You should dig a hole that is about 2 feet (60 cm) deep, more if you wish. Once the hole is completed place the tip of your rod in the centre of the hole. You can now pound the rod into the ground leaving it the 8 inches (20 cm) above ground level (not the bottom of the hole). Have a friend help hold the rod as it will move around as you pound it in. Be careful not to hit your friend as this will hurt the relationship!

Once the rod is in place test it to insure it is in tight. Try pulling and wiggling it to see if it moves. If it is in tight you have been successful. If it is close to a foundation or is in loose or sandy soil it will move around. This will not produce a good ground so check it out. If you went the deluxe route you must now fill the hole with rock. Insure it is hard rock that will stay loose. Rock such as limestone is of no use as it will break up and form a hard packed area. You need loose rock fill that will not pack over time. You may also want to put in is a small bag of rock salt before the rock. This salt will not wet will start working on the rod to give better conductivity. This is optional and not needed for all situations. This rock pit is put into place for one important reason-moisture. During dry periods I water the rock pit to insure moisture is getting down to the lower levels of the rod. The neighbours do kid me about it so if you embarrass easily do it at night. I keep watering it but it never grows.

The next step is to install your buss bar in your listening post. If you are going to use one it is easy to install. You can make one or buy one ready-made. To build one just take your flat piece of copper and drill two holes in it. One at either end that will act as anchor points to mount it on the wall near as possible to you equipment. You can now drill as many holes as you have pieces of equipment plus one more for the common lead into the bar. This will mean if you have four pieces of equipment to ground you will need: (1) Two holes to mount the bar one at either end (2) Four holes for the equipment between the two anchor holes. (3) One hole for the common lead to the ground rod. Each of the holes excepting the anchor holes at the top and bottom will be drilled to put in a bolt and washer to attach the radios etc to. Use what ever you have at hand. Put in the bolts and washers into the pre-drilled holes. Using the two mounting holes screw the buss bar to the wall near to your equipment. Try to keep it centrally located to keep leads to the equipment as short as possible.

Now that the bar is mounted run short straight pieces of heavy wire from each piece of equipment to the buss bar. You should use coated wire here to insure no wires touch each other or anything else. This is very important. Attach the other end of the wire to the lowest bolt and work your way up to the top. Insure the wire is under the washer so it presses the wire onto the buss bar insuring a tight and solid contact fit. This is a must. You can now attach a run of wire to the common at the top of the bar and run it to the ground rod outside. Once again insure a solid contact. If your rod has no built in clamp you can use metal strapping to get a solid tight fit to the rod.

When you connect any end of the wire to any piece of equipment or the buss bar or ground rod insure you strip the wire and then using sanding or emery cloth clean the bare wire to insure there is a clean contact. You should use washers on binding posts to wire up the equipment. This will insure a solid contact. Loose contacts are of no use so make sure all contacts are good ones.
If you are using coaxial cable to feed your antenna you should mount a Coaxial Surge Protector into your ground system. There are many types you can use but they all work about the same. Attach the feed end of the coax to one end of the Coaxial Surge Protector. Then run another coax line from the other end of the Coaxial Surge Protector to your receiver. The Coaxial Surge Protector will have a ground on it and you can attach a short ground wire to the Coaxial Surge Protector and run it to the ground bar. This will help with static build up as well as nearby lightning strikes. Read the manufacturer’s directions carefully to insure a proper installation.

Your ground system is now completed. Maintenance is little if any. You should from time to time check the connections to insure they are tight and in the case of the ground rod connection there is no corrosion. It may need to be cleaned once a year. When it is dry water your rock pit or the ground around the rod to insure a good ground year round. I flood mine until I can see the water sitting on top of the rock pit. Happy and safe DX’ing to you all.

Yes, KWHN is a pest here but usually can be nulled. 1320 has a bunch of potential with non-directional daytime 5kwers: WJAS, KELO, WDMJ, KOZY, WRJW, WENN, and 1kw KCLI (one of my few unheard Okies). Listened to 1320 on the way home this evening and found c&w on top around 1710CST 02NOV09. Then at 1714CST a female announcer appeared giving a full sign-off with power, ownership info, transmitter location and call-letter ID as KNCD Vivian LA, followed by “Ladies and Gentlemen, our National Anthem” into instrumental SSB. Listening to the sign-off announcement and SSB really made me nostalgic for the “good ol’ days” when stations signed off—a real pleasant trip down memory lane! 73, Bruce Winkelman AA5CO ‘05 Honda Civic stock radio

Just to prove that you do not have to live on the West coast and have a beverage antenna out to get TP DX:

Date: Fri, 13 Nov 2009 06:23:27 From: Brent Taylor <vy2hf@eastlink.ca> Subject: Huge TP opening into E. North America this a.m. Korea 972 and Japan 774 blasting In to PEI 1017, 1089, 981, 1557 (big), 1413, 1206, and 1116 so far; as well as Japan and Korea down the band as mentioned earlier. As you can probably imagine, I’ve been a pretty busy boy for the last few hours, editing and uploading audio from this morning’s massive TP opening. This month’s DX Tool Box web site is: The Radio Attic http://radioattic.com/index.htm

This web site has a ton of information about all kinds of older radios. There are several sections that you can go through. There are radios for sale, a picture gallery with sections for all types of radios. Also included are galleries of some collectors with pictures and information on the radios in their possession. A large links area will help you find dealers and people to help with parts and restoration. The picture galleries alone are worth the look on this web site. There are great pictures of all sorts of styles and ages of radios. A good trip down memory lane for an old time DX’er or for the newer DX to find out why the best radios glow in the dark can be found at this site.

I would like to wish all my readers a very happy and healthy and of course DX filled 2010. And on a crazy aside if you own a Sony 2010 receiver this will be your year for DX for sure! Polish up your radios and go for it!

73 for this time Shawn
