The TOT SINGER of TORCH SONGS

If you tune in late on one of eleven-year-old Mary Small's programs, you may mistake her for Merman

CINDERELLA had to have a foot the exact size and shape of the Prince's slipper to move into the magic palace—Alice had to step through the looking-glass to meet the Duchess and the White Queen. Mary Small has stepped into a magic fairyland more enchanting than either Cinderella or Alice dreamed existed. And Mary's as human and normal for a girl of her age as your own daughter.

Over-night Mary flashed into fame, when radio listeners from coast to coast heard her sing over the air on Rudy Vallee's program. Her praises were sung by all who heard her—from the critics whose job it is to tune in and appraise, to the humble owners of one-tube sets in Pudunk. And what happened? Mary, who had listened to Vaughn de Leath, the Three X Sisters, Ethel Merman, Ruth Etting and a flock of other celebrities, became one of them. They took her to their hearts instantly, and made her one of their enchanted inner circle of radio celebrities.

What was the magic wand that Mary waved? Did she have the exact foot that fitted the Prince's slipper? Far from it. She merely stood up before the mike and sang.

If the truth must be told, Mary would much rather skip down the street and play hop-schotch or jacks with the other little girls of her own age. In Baltimore, where she lives, she has many friends. And to her credit it must be recounted that she had a host of friends before she dreamed of singing over the air. She's all healthy normal eleven-year-old, is Mary.

And here's a secret about her that few people know: Mary would rather collect autographs than do anything else. She started her collection with the autograph of the milkman on her street, the corner grocer where her mother buys Mary's spinach. (Oh no, Mary doesn't eat her spinach; she kicks about that the same as do other little girls elsewhere!) These men were celebrities in her life.

Do you know what happened on the very night that Mary electrified the country from coast to coast, with her sensational debut? Vaughn de Leath came up to embrace her as soon as she had finished singing. And what did Mary do? She asked Vaughn, celebrated radio star and Mary's idol for years: "Please will you give me your autograph?"

"Gladly. I'll be only too pleased, Mary," Vaughn told her. And—wonder of wonders!—Vaughn added: "But, Mary, it will be an honor to have yours. Will you please me by signing my autograph book?"

It was then that Mary realized that she had pleased her audience, for what greater compliment could anyone pay her than to ask for an autograph? This was talking Mary's own language!

Mary had the same beginning that millions of other girls have had in American homes all over the country. She showed no unusual kinks. No efforts were made to make of her a child prodigy; her parents were much too sensible for that. It is doubtful if Mary ever was called upon to recite "The Charge of the Light Brigade" when the parson came to call. Certainly she never was asked to entertain the visitors with a song.

Bearing this out, another secret from Mary's astonishing young life—incredible as it may seem!—is that Mary's own mother didn't know that Mary had a singing voice of professional quality, up to the time Mary obtained her first engagement to sing over the air. True, when Mary was five, she attended a children's party, where she sang a popular song. Mary's mother was amazed that Mary had picked up the words and could carry a melody. But that was cute and amusing—at a children's party, when Mary was only five.

THEN one happy evening Mary's father—who had once been a singer himself, by the way—came home and told her mother that he had taken Mary to the leading radio station in Baltimore. Told her also that the result of one audition there, had won for Mary a chance to sing over the air. No one was more astonished than Mother.

The night that Mary sang, keeping that first engagement, she was heard by the Three X Sisters. They were unstinted in their admiration. Later, when the Three X Sisters were playing a vaudeville engagement at the Hippodrome Theater in Baltimore, Mary's parents took her backstage to meet them. In the group was George Browning, dramatic critic of the Baltimore Post, one of Mary's ardent boosters. Mary really went back-stage to get the Three X Sisters' autographs.

They asked her to sing. She had their autographs, so why not? Mary did. From her little throat, there issued the volume and the substance of a mature voice, equal in depth and in quality, it is said, to the best that Ethel Merman and Ruth Etting have produced.

All heard—and looked at her in awe. Surely this must be a woman full grown, to produce such stirring notes. They couldn't believe their eyes when taking a second look at her, they saw a child not yet into her teens, producing such a flaming, heart-quickenning billow of torch song.

The sisters took action at once. They called in their professional manager, Ed Wolf—summoned him by phone, in fact. He came at once to listen (and he admits he came also to scoff). He left as Mary's manager. And he managed to get her on the Rudy Vallee program that blazed Mary's name into radio history.

Since then Mary has sung on a number of network programs. She has been a guest at the mansion of no less a person than Mayor Jackson of Baltimore, and Governor Ritchie of Maryland. She has met Buster Keaton, Fay Bainter, Moran and Mack—and a host of other celebrities. And she has the autograph of every one of them!

WE share the enthusiasm for Mary that is rightfully Mary's due. And in strict justice it must be charged that our enthusiasm has carried us to unnecessary heights of glowing praise; pause and consider the full fact:

Singers of torch songs are known to give more of themselves in the singing of one of their numbers than even an opera star who sings a full role. The nature of the song requires it. Torch songs must stir—they must stimulate—they must electrify. Audiences must get every ounce a singer has, or the audience won't respond with electrifying, immediate reaction. And this is especially true with radio audiences, unseen to the singer who must stir them from afar—actually at second-hand.

Stars of musical comedy and stars of the air wear themselves out putting over torch songs. Adult stars. Strong women with the physical equipment necessary to sustain them through trying performances.

There is a real reason for this expenditure of unusual energy. Did you ever stop to consider what a torch song really is? It's the inspiration to the downtrodden—the fire that has incited whole nations to revolution—the divine fire that has moved millions to overturn world-history. To put over a torch song—and we mean to put it over!—requires the latent smoldering pain that comes from years of suffering from open wounds only partly healed. Torch songs have expressed in their essence the suffering of whole life-times, have expressed in one person the epitome of generations of suffering by a whole nation. Maturity—adulthood!

Giving torch songs their proper consideration in this light, the fire that must be in them can be readily understood.

With "Alice in Wonderland" and her doll in the back yard of her home in Baltimore, Mary is just like any other little girl of her age.

Yet here is Mary, a child of eleven. That child can stir an audience of torch-song fans extending from coast to coast, numbering millions. At second-hand. And she does it with apparently as little effort as it takes for one of her precious autographs!

Do you wonder that we rave? Tune in on Mary Small some time—and see if you don't share our enthusiasm!

Mis-Stepping the Way to Fortune

Isham Jones, mine boy, was careless and two ore cars turned over. If that had not happened, he might still be a miner instead of a bandleader

By Hilda Cole

WHEN a boy of five can play "Pop Goes the Weasel" on a bass fiddle that is taller than he is, and with only one lesson, at that, it just couldn't turn out any other way. He simply has to become a bandsman. So you have Isham Jones.

Look at him now. Big, serious, dreamy-eyed. Imagine how cute he must have looked when his coal miner father stood him on the dining room table one night after work, leaned the huge fiddle against his shoulder, placed the bow in his tiny fingers, and let him draw it experimentally across the strings. His little eyes lit as the deep sound filled the room. And before he went to bed, he had played, over and over again, "Pop Goes the Weasel". That was forty years ago.

The child had been begging for weeks to be allowed to play that fiddle, and once he demonstrated his remarkable ear for music, his father hurried home every night after a hard day far down underground, and applied himself to his son's musical education.

Pretty soon, father Jones could change the key on his violin, as he accompanied his young son, and the little boy, effortlessly, would change with him. Father Jones, who was reckoned quite a hand himself with the fiddle, had never seen anything quite like it.

He did not know then, the rugged miner, the years of struggle and despair which would bridge the gap between that five-year-old child's first young triumph with the fiddle and the fame that would come to him in later life. And I do not believe that he realized, there in that rough mining town, what a sensitive, artistic moody child he had sired.

There in his childhood town, all the men worked in the iron mines. Isham's father, and all his brothers, were miners. So, when he left school, Isham went down into the depths of the earth, too, with his dinner pail. It didn't matter that he hated it. He went. But always he was mousy and unhappy.

One day, while he dreamed idly, his mind far from the black mine pit, two ore cars were upset because of his inattention. Isham picked up his dinner pail, his hat, and his coat, and left the mine. He never returned.

When the family moved to Saginaw, Michigan, a short time after that, Isham resumed his schooling, and at night, after he had done his lessons, he sat up until far into the morning, composing. "Midsummer Dreams," his first published composition, was brought out when he was eleven years old.

While he attended school, young Isham taught himself to play every instrument available. He seemed even then to possess an incredible genius for mastering anything that would emit a musical note. Entirely self-taught, today he can pick up any instrument in the orchestra—piccolo, banjo, trombone, clarinet, what have you—and play it with a masterly precision that amazes the most finished musicians.

THE piano came to him naturally when he was nine years old. The family purchased a piano, and he just sat down before it and played it. That was all there was to it. When he was fifteen, he decided he would specialize on the saxophone, and after he had mastered that instrument, quickly, surely, just as he had mastered all the rest, he formed his own dance orchestra there in Saginaw.

When Isham finished high school, he went to work in the daytime, and kept on with his orchestra at nights. You can understand that better when you look at him. Big framed, rugged, only a youth with his tremendous reserve of vitality could stand the strain of playing dance music until one, two, three o'clock in the morning, and then piling out of bed at five o'clock to hurry off and do a hard day's work. "Ish" as they called him then, did it—for two years. When he was seventeen, he found he could make more money by sticking to his music, so he quit working in the daytime, and started, in earnest, to carve out his career. A long and laborious undertaking it was, too.

Isham played in bands around Saginaw, and saved his money assiduously. Finally, he had a sufficient cash reserve to warrant his belief that he was ready to storm Chicago. There he made the rounds of agencies. When they wanted a saxophone player, he was on the job. If they called for a banjoist, he was Johnny-on-the-spot. A piano, a fiddle, a trumpet; let them name the instrument, and Isham was on hand. The agents began to regard him as the answer to their prayer.

Free-lancing around with bands was all right, and it provided a living, but Isham had then, and still has, an overwhelming yearning to compose. In his spare time back in those Chicago days, he besieged publishers' offices, until one day he overcame the resistance of Henry Waterson, who put him on as a staff writer at $25 a week. Isham had been making more than that, but money then, as now, was not of paramount importance. He seized the opportunity eagerly.

The term "staff writer" has a much grander sound than Isham's real duties merited. For in addition to "staff writing", he found that he also had to man the piano and rehearse vaudeville acts using the Waterson tunes, as well as accompany song pluggers about the city, playing the company's hits while the pluggers dutifully warbled them.

But he was making progress, just the same, for it was at about that time that his earliest hits found their way into print. Remember "I'll See You In My Dreams" and "The One I Love Belongs to Somebody Else?" You hear them still. And then, during the war, while he drilled in khaki, through Isham's head hummed the melody of "We're In the Army Now." It was whistled and sung by dough-boys everywhere—here, in the trenches, in the streets and cafes of Paris.

SOME time, during the climb to fame of any given star of the air, the screen, or the stage, comes a decisive moment, a moment when opportunity seized means a skyrocket to success. For Isham, that moment came when he walked into a New York agency just in time to hear that Paul Beise, famous orchestra leader of the time, had gone off to New York and left the orchestra at the Rainbow Gardens without a baton wielder, and incidentally, without a tenor saxophone player. Isham had never before held a baton, but he could do about everything else, including some highly fancy work with a tenor sax, so the agency reasoned they might take a chance on his proficiency with the stick.

"Go on out, Farmer," they urged, so the Farmer went on out.

He was a little diffident about taking the baton, but soloing with every instrument in the band was right down his alley. The owner of Rainbow Gardens, Fred Mann, talked him out of his reluctance to act as leader, and that, briefly, is how Isham Jones, the versatile musician, became the Isham Jones, orchestra leader whom you know now.

Little by little, there at Rainbow Gardens, he worked in specialty musicians, and only he, I suppose, has any definite idea how many "names" were built up in that band. Louis Panico, first featured cornetist in any orchestra; John Kuhn, ace tuba player; Carol Martin, star trombonist; Roy Bargy, Paul Whiteman's Roy Bargy—they're just a few.

It wasn't long before Isham became melody monarch of the middle west. Five years at College Inn, Chicago, will tell you that. And the railroads waxed prosperous merely on the New York managers who made futile trips to attempt to woo him away from Chicago. He refused persistently until an offer came from the swanky El Fey Club, an offer so lucrative that it simply couldn't be passed up. The El Fey was then the hottest of all New York's hot spots. You couldn't get in the place any night unless you wore evening clothes. Frank Bering came all the way from Chicago for Isham's opening there, and they wouldn't even let him and his party in because they'd neglected to bring their dinner jackets! Isham pleaded and stormed, but Bering and his friends never got past the first door. That's the kind of ultra-ultra spot El Fey was in those days.

Five years ago, surfeited with triumphs, rich, Isham decided to give up the business of leading a band and devote all his time to writing. Remember, I told you before he'd always felt that way. Now he could gratify his ambition. So he bought a pleasantly luxurious home in Florida, and settled down there. You've known people, maybe, who always wanted to do something, and then, when finally they were able, found they didn't want to, after all. You've heard of men who worked and slaved for years so they'd be able to loaf through their declining years, and then, when the time came, were unhappy and restless because there wasn't any office to hurry off to every morning. Well, it was that way with Isham Jones. The lure of the life of a bandsman was too strong.

HIS present orchestra, which he organized when he decided to return to active leadership, is composed entirely of college men. From Harvard, Yale, Dartmouth, Purdue, Stanford—from all over, they come, these fellows. And they play as Isham wants them, alternately sweet and hot.

Isham has been happily married for thirteen years. A year ago the Joneses adopted a baby boy, David Richard Jones. They live in beautiful duplex apartment on the west side of New York, and Isham walks to his CBS radio broadcasts of "The Big Show," on which he appears with Gertrude Niesen and Lulu McConnell, and to his nightly appearances at the Hotel Commodore. "The Big Show," incidentally, despite his years of broadcasting, is Isham's first commercial, but this season he will have more periods on the air than any other Columbia remote band.

Golf is his passion, when he is not leading his orchestra or composing. He was runner-up a couple of years ago for the left-handed championship of the United States, and it is not unusual for him to shoot in the sixties. He golfs left-handed, but holds his baton with his right.

His composing is done whenever he happens to get the urge. Three o'clock in the morn- (Continued on Page 19)

They SAW LINCOLN BLOW the FOAM off HIS BEER

Or rather that's what they thought they saw. It was really Pedro de Cordoba, who had slipped into the Carnegie Hall restaurant for a stein during a short interlude in the dress rehearsal for "Roses and Drums"

By Hollister Noble

LEISURELY diners and patrons of the arts who wandered into the restaurant of New York's famed Carnegie Hall a few weeks ago were somewhat startled to see Abraham Lincoln sitting alone at a nearby table blowing the lace collar off a stein of Manhattan's best brew.

There was the great statesman, himself, with melancholy mien, deep lines etched in his distinguished countenance, his figure clad in a rusty old fashioned frock coat and baggy trousers. Quaint old shoes adorned his feet. The startled diners were even more startled when the dignified figure of our Civil War President drew what appeared to be important papers of state from the tail of his frock coat, glanced at them a moment and then, looking straight at the cashier, cried out:

"I tell you, Cameron, better war that that the Union of these United States be broken."

A moment later an elderly lady at a nearby table heard the great statesman mutter into his beer:

"Mr. Seward, I believe Grant can take Richmond."

Just about the time the diners were wondering whether to call Bellevue or the police, Lincoln adjusted his glasses, paid a check of twenty cents, and strode away into the gloom of Carnegie Hall's corridors. Someone finally broke the news to a startled populace that Mr. Lincoln was Pedro de Cordoba, the eminent actor, studying his script in costume for the fall inaugural program of "Roses and Drums," a carefully prepared broadcast with scenery and all presented on the stage of Carnegie Hall.

There is something in Pedro de Cordoba of the priest, something of the courtier. He is like a mellow, mildly ironic Spanish padre with a richly endowed nature, alternately tasting the joys of classical interests and then plunging into the humor and character of human types about him. There is something royal and sacerdotal in the temper of his mind—like a fine piece of steel from Toledo or a friendly aristocrat of Granada blooming in a modern environment. You've probably heard his friendly readings and philosophy with Will Osborne's Orchestra, or listened to his remarkable interpretations of foreign diplomats on the "March of Time," or in more intimate roles, appreciated his fine portraits of Lincoln in the "Roses and Drums" series of Civil War days.

PEDRO is tall, dark, distinguished, somewhat somber in repose. And as Abraham Lincoln, he is, curiously enough, more faithful to the legend of Lincoln than Lincoln himself. He has made a prolonged study of Lincoln, and Pedro's Lincoln is the portrait of a man who, in spite of bearing the sorrows of the world upon his shoulders, has a quiet smile and a bit of humor for everyone. His Lincoln is a grave and graceful man with a rich sonorous voice, whereas the real Lincoln was awkward and angular, with a penetrating, harsh, and high pitched voice. Moreover, Pedro's rich and colorful background as a star of the legitimate stage, as a veteran troupier playing Shakespeare in mining towns and George Bernard Shaw in rural communities, as a student of music and a great lover of poetry, has developed and brought out in him a strong personal philosophy of friendliness and fortitude which he has been able through the medium of radio, to carry far beyond the intimate circle of immediate friends who found his wit and wisdom so inspiring.

And yet Pedro de Cordoba, in spite of his marked Castilian appearance and Latin personality, was born in Manhattan in 1881, the son of a New York broker. There is distinguished blood in the family. Pedro's mother was Mathilde Bienbar, who has considerable talent for painting. Moreover, Pedro counts himself a direct descendant of Gonsalvo de Cordoba, a great military leader called "El Grand Capitan" of Spain. Pedro's early years—before he entered upon his brilliant career in the theater—were much like those of any other American boy. He went to public school in New York, conducted the DeWitt Clinton High School Orchestra—he plays the violin well today—played baseball on the school team, and enjoyed a great thrill when he visited Chicago's World Fair with his parents in 1893.

But when Pedro was about fifteen years old his artistic interests and his commercial career began to part company. It seems that Pedro discovered opera librettos, and the discovery deprived several New York business firms of a promising young office boy. For Pedro's first summer job was as office boy with an oil company for $3 per week. And having been filled with the glamor and music and atmosphere of the famous Metropolitan Opera House during the winter, Pedro smuggled opera scores, librettos, and songs by the score into his boss's office. Three weeks later he was fired for reading opera librettos during office hours. Nothing daunted, Pedro got another job even more to his liking. He had charge of two office boys—one six feet three inches high, the other three feet six inches high, according to Pedro's recollection. All went well until Pedro discovered Wagner and Beethoven and started studying their scores. He was fired because he failed to hear any one of a dozen bells, buzzers, and other signals summoning him to the inner sanctum.

MEANWHILE, as a student at St. Francis Xavier and Seton Hall College, de Cordoba found that he was a good Latin student and an even better baseball player. But his interests became more and more artistic, equally divided between music and the theater. In fact, one of his most prized possessions is a valuable old Dutch violin which he has used for years. But at the age of 21 young Pedro had his first taste of the footlights when he struggled into the tinny embrace of an old suit of armor and strode on the stage of a Toronto theater as a mailed knight in E. H. Southern's production of "If I Were King"—with three lines a night and $30 per week.

Pedro rattled and clanked without mishap through this minor part for several weeks and gradually there opened before him the beginnings of his brilliant career in the theater. In fact, the roster of Pedro de Cordoba's roles seems to list most of the outstanding companies and productions in the past thirty years. He toured with William Faversham's company in 1914. He has appeared time and again with Margaret Anglin and Mrs. Fiske. He played Lord Windermere in "Lady Windermere's Fan." For years he was a distinguished member of the E. H. Sothorn—Julia Marlowe Company. He has played Shakespearean roles and those of G. B. Shaw up and down and across the continent. More recently, he played in a number of Broadway productions, notably as "Hannibal" opposite Jane Cowl in "The Road to Rome."

And long, long ago he heard the call of Hollywood. In fact, one of the early calls almost finished his career. Most of us remember the first great motion picture version of "Carmen" with Wallace Reid and Geraldine Farrar. What more appropriate than a real, romanite Spaniard in the dashing role of Escamillo? So Pedro got the job. And Pedro, with his Spanish blood aroused by this melodrama of his ancient fatherland and by the excitement of Bizet's music, insisted as a real Spaniard upon entering the ring during the dashing bull fight scenes. Even the stony hearted movie directors urged Pedro to stay on the right side of the road. But Pedro strode bravely into the ring, bowed low to Hollywood's assembled "Sevillian" society—and dodged just in time to escape the rush of an enraged bull. The bull turned around and charged again. On the third charge the bull tore off a tassel of de Cordoba's jacket, and Pedro, along with everyone else on the lot, decided he had had enough.

He had another narrow escape while playing Shakespeare and Shaw in Butte, Montana. Always curious, Pedro went to one of the big mines, descended to a gallery, and was peering over the rail deep down into one of the pits when some instinct made him withdraw his head just as a huge elevator shot down the shaft.

From Hollywood to Broadway and back through the provinces, Pedro toured in one show after another. Then came radio, and this remarkable personality, so fond of the flavor of the past, but with an inexhaustible curiosity concerning the present, was soon heard over the air waves—his first broadcasts, a series of Shakespearean readings. And it is in radio that the many facets of his brilliant career have all been brought into play. For instance, Pedro considers his musical training and intuition of inestimable advantage in presenting successful broadcasts of poetry and philosophy.

... like a fine aristocrat of old Granada ... in a modern environment ...

The timbre of the speaking voice, the shading of a phrase, the accent of a syllable, all employ musical qualities, especially in reading or speaking, as Pedro so often does, to orchestra accompaniments. Moreover, Pedro speaks French, Spanish, and Italian like natives of those countries. He has read the literatures of these lands in their native tongues, and this background brings to his personal philosophy a richness and depth and sense of tradition most unusual today.

He married Eleanor Mary Nolan a few years ago and their favorite pets today are three active youngsters, Pedro, Jr., nearly five years old, Paul, 2 years old, and Michael, a little more than a year old. From their father they all inherit a passion for tapioca pudding, and the whole gay family likes nothing better than a vacation in the country, a tramp through the mountains, or an informal tour of Europe. With all his tastes for the classics, de Cordoba follows the baseball scores and the movies—proclaiming Edward G. Robinson his favorite movie actor, with Helen Hayes and Katharine Hepburn runners-up and Katharine Cornell his favorite on the stage.

In fact, Pedro de Cordoba is like some humorous priest of old Spain walking our streets today—vastly entertained and interested by today's people and events and interests and thoroughly a part of them. His quick appreciation of radio's possibilities, his great versatility in different programs and roles, all attest his talent for the air waves. But most important of all, some profound part of Pedro embraces the past and draws nourishment for the present from the music, the poetry, the theater, and the rich drama of those distant days and lands which have all helped to create and develop in him one of the most richly endowed personalities of the air.

HOME LIFE vs. CAREERS—It's a DRAW

YOU'D think that when a couple of the great stars of the stage, really and truly in love, settled down so definitely and finally that they named their lovely rural estate "Dunrovin," they'd stay settled, wouldn't you? Of course you would—but you'd be wrong.

At any rate, you'd be wrong in the case of Frank Crumit and Julia Sanderson, two more shining instances of stage stars who have achieved immeasurably greater stardom through the belated medium of the radio.

For Frank and Julia quit the footlights. They quit with a finality that no managers' pleas could move. They quit to stay quit. That Dunrovin pretty well establishes that. And if you need any further evidence that their departure from the glamor of the footlights was for good and all, consider the fact that Frank entered the brokerage business in Springfield, Mass., and commuted daily from the Crumit estate in Long Meadow, to his office in the city.

Frank and Julia were no longer of that nebulous group we call "stage people". They became just folks—like you and me; somewhat better situated financially, perhaps, but just folks, all the same. While Frank was at the brokerage office, Julia was giving teas, attending to her rock garden, going to ladies' aid meetings, and her sewing circle, and now and then spending an afternoon at bridge. That kind of people; you know the life they lead. Gone forever was the mysterious glamour of curtain calls, first nights, after-the-show suppers, rehearsals, travelling, and all of that.

One peaceful night, in the luxuriously appointed library of Dunrovin, Julia was ensconced in her favorite easy chair with a piece of diaphanous embroidery, and Frank, tiring of his book, strolled over to the console and twisted the dial. But let him explain.

"Somehow I caught the spirit of that program," he remembers. "My ambitions for activity sprung into being again. Thought I might get into radio. Julia and I talked it over, and it wasn't long before we were on the Acousticon Hour over the NBC network."

Just like that, it happened—this return to the public that once acclaimed them both when they rollicked together through "Tangerine," "No, No, Nannette," "Queen High," "Oh, Kay, and the other dramatic vehicles in which they starred so long on the musical comedy stage.

Strange people, these Crumits. An odd mixture of those two widely separated categories of humanity—just folks and stage people. And, not to be too trite, combining the best features of each. Let us consider them separately, and perhaps you will understand them better.

Julia was born to the stage. Her father played in a Philadelphia stock company, and she made her parents' lives pretty miserable until they ceased their objections to her following the stage as a career. At the age of thirteen, she attended school in the mornings, rehearsed in the afternoons, and played with Forepaugh's Stock Company at night. Another battle ensued when she was fifteen, and wanted to join the chorus of a Shubert show. She won that battle, too, and her unremitting effort won her two understudy roles, and finally a Shubert contract. From then on the climb to stardom, while perforce slow, was sure and uninterrupted.

THE CRUMITS AT HOME

The Crumits, with radio, have solved the problem that has shattered many a romance of the stage

By Dorothy Goulet

Her real career began when she caught the eagle eye of that great showman, Charles Frohman, who featured her in "Sunshine Girl".

"Marion Davies," she recalled, "was in the chorus of that show. When we opened in Washington, President Taft gave me an enormous armful of roses. Nothing but radio ever thrilled me so much."

SHE played in a long line of Frohman shows, until that master of his art met his tragic death in one of the world's historic maritime disasters.

She recalls Frohman's extraordinary technique in the handling of his stars. None of the fanfare, the build-up, the press agency that attends the present-day crop of stage notables.

"I was brought up in the Frohman tradition of being seen as little as possible," Julia reminisces. "Mr. Frohman even used to send my dressing room furniture from one city to another so I would feel more at home. Always there was a carriage or a car waiting at the stage door so that no beau could have the opportunity of escorting me home."

After Frohman's death, Julia, like the other Frohman stars, was at something of a loose end, and she drifted about in a half dozen mediocre shows until she finally was starred in "Tangerine" with Crumit. It was love at first sight.

"Life began then," she sums it up simply.

Frank Crumit's first personal appearance—just imagine the big kid—was on a high school football field in Jackson, Ohio. He hit that line like a couple of pile drivers on the loose, and he was no slouch on the baseball field or the track, either. Let's skip his educational career. He was graduated from the University of Ohio as a full-fledged electrical engineer, and thus equipped, joined two of his fraternity brothers in a team that played midwest vaudeville houses as "The Three Comedians". I don't know about the two frat brothers, but Frank was one comedian from the very start. All he had to do was to go out there, and they started to laugh.

"Betty Be Good," the "Greenwich Village Follies" and phonograph records that sold in the millions were further steps up fame's ladder. Then "Tangerine". There Crumit met the beautiful Miss Sanderson, and it was just one of those things. They don't happen often, but when they do— He fell in love with her at precisely the same moment she fell in love with him. He parrots after her:

"Life began then."

A long career of stage work followed their marriage, but they will both tell you that if they hadn't quit the footlights when they did, their marriage would have gone the way of a good many other romances of the stage. Trouping doesn't make for domesticity, and it was domesticity that they both wanted. So they quit, definitely and finally, as I told you before, and built Dunrovin.

And they are still, for that matter, done rovin'. For radio, their new vehicle, is not (Continued on Page 17)

JACK of ALL TRADES but HE'S the MASTER too

Deems Taylor, a study in contradictions, has burlesqued and also written grand opera. He is a philosopher with a sense of humor and one of radio's newest sensations

THE college boy who regaled fraternity smokers with an uproarious burlesque of grand opera, using as 'props' a varied assortment of straw and felt hats; the 'master of ceremonies' of the current Kraft program with Paul Whiteman, who keeps both actors and audience in gales of merriment with his pungent wit—who would believe these are the famed Deems Taylor, America's outstanding composer of serious music and one of the foremost composers of the world?

The versatility of this rare and extraordinary man has upset no end of traditions in this hard-headed world. Not enough was it to prove that, even in the least regarded of American professions, a composer can raise himself to fame by his bootstraps. And that without sensationalism, without compromise of good work, he could actually make his living by it. This is just the best known of his achievements. Once for all Deems Taylor has smashed that old saw about the jack of all trades, for never was genius more versatile. Yes, it sounds like a paradox, but at one time or another Taylor has made himself extremely successful as a newspaper man, as critic, as linguist, as translator of prose and poetry, as painter, as editor, and as public speaker, as well as composer.

It's a long list, and it would be impossible to any one less practical and clear-thinking than Deems Taylor. In fact, he destroyed another tradition when he proved that a man may be essentially practical in his manner of living, thinking, and working, and yet achieve international distinction as a creator of highly imaginative music.

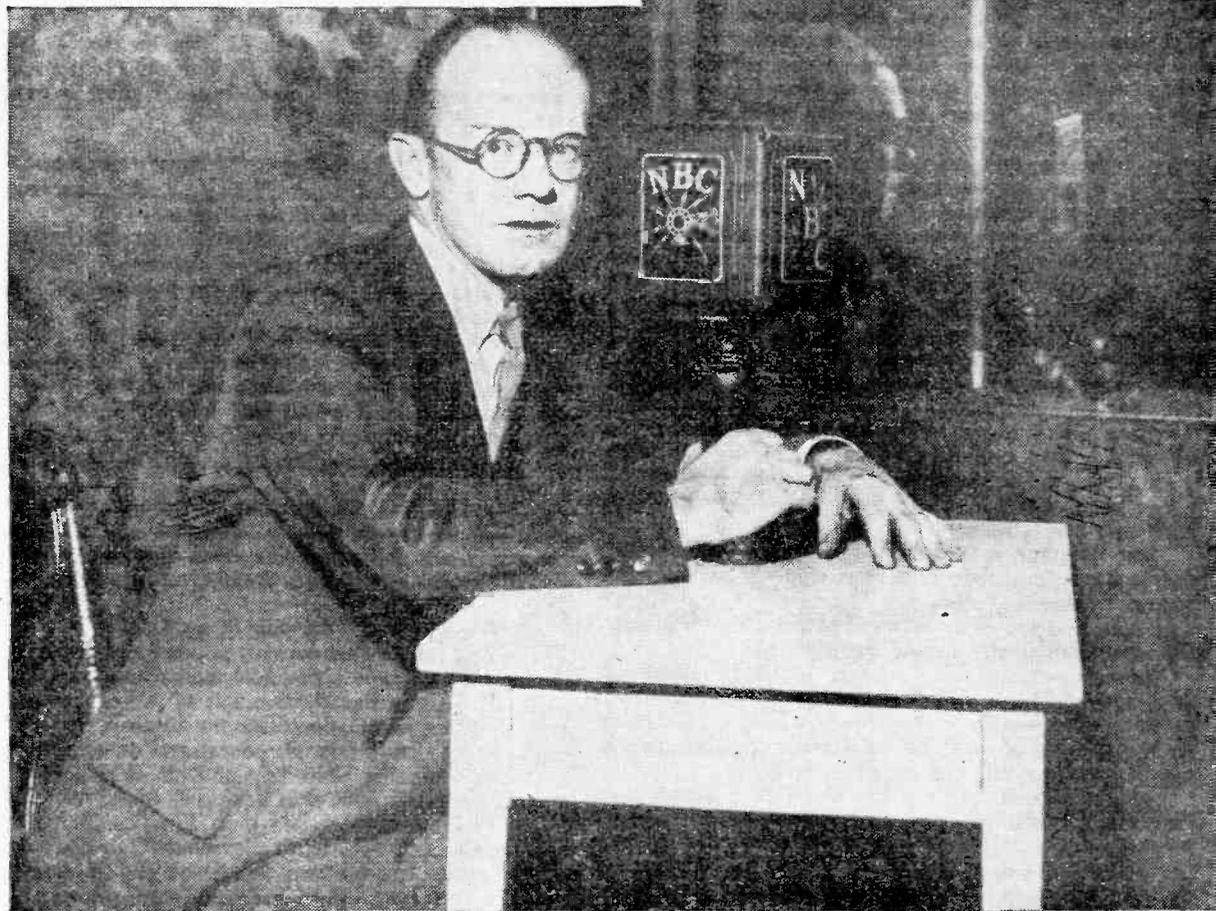

So far from the popular image of the pale, long-haired, effeminate, temperamental composer, Deems Taylor has keen, clear-cut features, eyes that are always laughing behind his seriousness. He is a philosopher with a grand sense of humor, who delights in the whimsicalities of the world—a witty and keen philosopher who has never wasted any time trying to impress people. His well-colored mind is as clear-cut as his simplicity of manner. Its actions are as quick and direct as his movements. It's easy to see how he accomplished so much.

DEEMS TAYLOR knew plenty of the serious side of life. The days after college were a struggle between the meagre salary paid a budding journalist and the ever-rising cost of living. But those years were the foundation of a distinguished journalistic career. Four years as editor of a house organ for Western Electric Company put him on his feet. Successively he wrote a humorous column, and made a name for himself as music and dramatic critic in 1927 that gave him the editorship of Musical America. He even found time for two exciting and adventurous years as war correspondent for the Tribune in France.

The desire for musical expression, however, never let him lose sight of his objective of musical composition. Within five years after his graduation from New York University he was studying harmony and counterpoint under Oscar Coon. Characteristically enough, instead of logically following up these studies with further technical instruction, Deems Taylor accomplished the rest of his musical education through his own research. As a composer he is entirely self-taught, and it is the opinion of reliable critics that he has done an extremely good job of it.

To that opinion the whole musical world has given tremendous approval. In 1927 his opera, The King's Henchman, was performed at the Metropolitan. Brilliant as such events usually are, this world premiere was accorded wild enthusiasm and recorded as one of the most dazzling of operatic premieres. Not long afterward, Deems Taylor stood with Secretary of State under President Coolidge, the Chairman of the Board of General Electric Company, the President of the American Museum of Natural History, and the professor of literature at Yale University, to receive his doctor's degree from a great American university.

Convincing testimony also that a few days following that famed premiere the Metropolitan Board of Directors commissioned him to write another American opera. This was Peter Ibbetson, performed in 1931. Like The King's Henchman, this opera received high admiration from critics both here and abroad. Even the hostile British critics recognized its unmistakable marks of genius.

Altogether, he has written more than fifty compositions. He is one of the few American writers who have had their compositions performed abroad. He has proved to the world not only that "commercial-minded" Americans will honor and support well-directed musical talent, but that the country which builds motor cars at the rate of one per minute can also produce music to take its place with the best of Germans, French and Italians.

EVEN this wide-spread success, however, was known only to music-lovers. Most Americans learned to know Deems Taylor just a few months ago, when he made his first radio appearance on the Kraft program with Paul Whiteman and Al Jolson. The combination, to say the least, was unusual. Taylor himself was astonished when the idea was first put to him. What was he to do? Just what he was supposed to do was never made very clear. The first broadcast and the Deems Taylor versatility settled that. It was up to him and nobody worried.

Ostensibly, his part on the program consisted of merely introducing artists and musical numbers. Not much opportunity for display in that. And with the characteristic Taylor simplicity he didn't try to make any. But those few two- and three-minute spots he packed with wit so keen and pungent that for the first time in radio performers missed their cues for helpless laughter. When he calmly announced that "Romona, her back to the wall and her fingers full of piano keys," would attempt to sing Dinab, it was not hard to picture her struggling with a fit of laughter in the pause before she sang.

Small wonder that Deems Taylor is one of the few men in radio work who is given the privilege of ad-libbing at will over the big networks. Up to the last minute not even he himself knows what he will say. During rehearsals he often answers his cue with: "Mr. Deems Taylor will announce the next number, with comments to be thought up later," and so continues until his time is up. That night he never fails to produce the promised remarks and equally unflinching laughter.

AS A music critic, Deems Taylor interpreted many symphony programs by radio. He says his present job of interpreting the modern and semi-classical music Whiteman plays is much harder. It is simply a matter of audiences.

"Working with the symphony or the opera on the radio meant I had a very definite type of audience," he says, "which knew at least the fundamentals of music. Naturally it was not difficult to explain in language with which they were familiar. This new audience is made up of a very different group. They may be just as appreciative of good music, but their knowledge of it is limited. At the same time I know I am talking to thousands of music lovers who are eager to learn something of the modern music Mr. Whiteman has been playing. So I must make my discussions clear to one and worth while to the other."

Deems Taylor is immensely interested in the development of American musical composition. He believes in the young composer and has helped many of them in placing their work. The advice he gives them—unusually enough—is just what he has practiced all his own life: "Get to be professional," and "Make every thing you do count."

How closely he hews to his own favorite maxim is nowhere better illustrated than in his radio work. For, there before the mike, his time limited to a couple of minutes, he must, above all else, make every word he speaks count. And how well he succeeds is best measured perhaps, by the instant and tremendous popularity into which he has leaped as a radio personality.

Mr. Taylor's reputation primarily as a music critic was something of a handicap when he first came to the airwaves, for in the vast territory lying west of the Hudson river, there was little suspicion that one so notoriously erudite could, at the same time, be so glibly entertaining. That is an impression of the versatile Taylor made short work of in overcoming.

World's Greatest Music Class—6,000,000 Pupils

Dr. Walter Damrosch's Friday morning broadcasts to the school children of America are heard every week in 65,000 class rooms. He humanizes classical music touched upon. He seeks to establish a relationship of affectionate intimacy between the listener and the music as a part of his own life; afterwards it is not difficult to focus the listener's attention on the music as a work of art.

Such is the theory underlying the four courses included in the Music Appreciation Hour. Series A, for beginners, introduces and explains the orchestra and shows how it may be made to speak a language that all can understand. Series B, for second-year students, begins where Series A leaves off and proceeds to arouse interest not only in the emotional values of music but in the structural elements of which it is composed—melody, harmony, rhythm and form. Series C is devoted largely to the study of form, describing and illustrating all the major forms from the canon to the symphony and symphonic poems; and Series D presents a chronological survey of music and composers from the 16th Century to the present time.

This has been the basic plan of the broadcasts from the first, but in detail they have changed and developed considerably. One of Dr. Damrosch's most characteristic traits is freshness and variety of approach. He is never content to repeat, he is never at a loss for a new idea. Each year in building his programs he finds a dozen ways to make them even better than the year before. This season, for example, he has introduced "review" numbers in the programs of Series A. These will be repetitions of numbers from the preceding program, selected by vote of the listeners themselves. This season, too, he has added to the usual repertory of orchestral compositions a wide variety of vocal music, ranging from the simplest folk-song to many-voiced madrigals, motets and fugues, and also much chamber music, including sonatas, trios, quartets and quintets.

The listener who follows the course from the beginning of Series A to the end of Series D can claim acquaintance with representative examples of practically every type of composition except complete operas and oratorios.

FROM all this it is evident that the Music Appreciation Hour is not merely a series of concerts broadcast over the radio. It is a carefully organized course with a definite objective, founded upon the scholarship and vitalized by the personality of one of the great musicians of the world. What will be the outcome?

It is generally agreed that exposure to good music is ordinarily sufficient to develop a love for it. The difficulty in the past has been that so few of our people could be exposed. Only those living in or near the largest cities had more than an occasional opportunity to hear a symphony or an opera.

But radio now brings the best of them into countless homes and thousands of schools, and, in addition, it brings a Damrosch to interpret them. The result can hardly be in doubt though it may not become fully apparent for ten or even twenty years. Of these youngsters who today constitute the Damrosch class of six million few will become professional musicians—fortunately for all concerned. Some, no doubt, as they grow up will tend to become devotees of the popular dance tune and will be inclined temporarily to regard good music as the bunk. But after they have settled down they will be likely to recall the beauties they once glimpsed in the works of the masters and wonder whether they may not be worth while to recapture.

MUCH has been written about Dr. Walter Damrosch and his Friday morning broadcasts to the school children of America. It is common knowledge that his has proved the most successful of many ventures into the field of educational broadcasting, and that it recently began its sixth successive season over the coast-to-coast networks of the National Broadcasting Company. It is also generally known that Dr. Damrosch's class is estimated at more than six million students, but it may be of interest to explain how this figure is reached.

The difficulty of determining the number of listeners to any radio broadcast is obvious; however, in the case of the NBC Music Appreciation Hour there is a factor which makes it possible to count noses—or ears—with rather less than the normal probability of error. This is the Instructor's Manual, furnished to schools by the National Broadcasting Company. A record is kept of the distribution of manuals, and when a school reports the number of pupils listening to the broadcasts it is a simple matter to establish the ratio of listeners to manuals for that school. Records for the past year show that the average ratio for schools throughout the country was 100 to 1 and that the number of manuals distributed was more than 65,000; whence the figure quoted above.

Somewhere in one of his lesser works Mark Twain tells of a shipwrecked "Portugee" who, when rescued after days of famine, was reported to have eaten 148 bananas. The report, says the author, was exaggerated. The actual figure was only 147. Now, there may be some who consider that the Portugee's claim to greatness was nullified by that revelation, but it seems probable that most of his admirers still feel that his exploit was impressive.

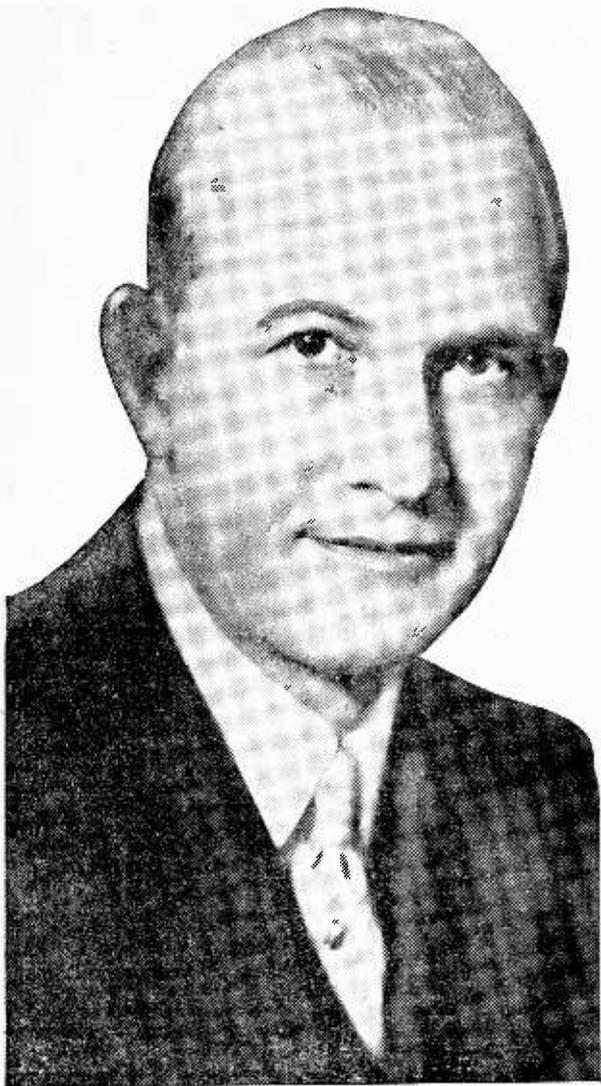

Similarly, the total of Dr. Damrosch's pupils would remain staggering even if liberally discounted by the sceptical. Suppose we reduce it by fifty per cent—it still represents an increment of three million to the musically minded population of the country, and that is not counting the indeterminate but unquestionably huge number of adults who follow the Damrosch courses in their homes.

What is the secret of Dr. Damrosch's success with his vast unseen audience? It can hardly be his national prestige as a musician. That would attract but would not hold listeners; and that he does hold them is evidenced by the steady increase in their numbers from year to year. The explanation probably lies in his unique ability to humanize his subject. He regards music not merely as an esthetic experience but as a medium through which an enormous range of experiences may be interpreted. The objective of his teaching is to cultivate in his young listeners "not only a general perception of music as an art but, above all, a love for it as an expression of their own inner lives." He therefore dramatizes it before he analyzes it.

The instruments of the orchestra are introduced as anthropomorphic members of his "Musical Family" before their various functions and technical characteristics are discussed, and the expressive power of the music they produce is revealed before its structure or its history are

Your Friend and Adviser
THE VOICE OF EXPERIENCE

Unappreciated

DEAR Voice of Experience:
I am the mother of two fine boys, one 19 and the other 13. I am unfortunate in having been sick for 18 long years and cannot get out of the house for I am something like an invalid but can do everything the home needs like a well person.
My trouble is that my husband is never satisfied no matter what I do for him, because I am not able to go places with him. The fact that I have dragged myself around the house in order to keep a home for him and the boys means really nothing to him. Time after time he has laughed at my sickness, calling it laziness, and God knows there is nothing that hurts me more. I am trying to make the best of life, even though in sickness. I attempt to be as cheerful as possible. Now I would like to be well, but it seems that no doctor can really tell me what is wrong with me.

ANSWER: Certainly your husband is reprehensible for calling you lazy and for laughing at your illness, because even though you do not appear to be ill to him, there is something evidently wrong.

Two statements attract my attention in your letter: the one in which you say that you are "something like an invalid, but can do everything at home like a well person;" and the other that "no doctor can really tell what is the matter."

If I were you I would call the County Medical Society and ask them to recommend a good psychiatrist, and I think in all probability that you will be surprised at his findings. All that I have to go by of course is just the few lines that you have written to me, but I think that I read much between those lines and I feel certain that if you do go to a psychiatrist you will never cease being thankful that I made the suggestion.

Taboo

Dear Voice of Experience:
I saw an advertisement recently in a magazine referring to the Rosicrucians AMORC. Please can you supply me with any information about this Society? I always listen with interest to your broadcasts and enjoy reading your page in RADIO GUIDE very much.

ANSWER: I appreciate, Curious, you having followed my broadcasts and your interest in my page in RADIO GUIDE, and, having followed me for this length of time, stop and think for a moment: Have you ever heard me deal with a subject which was controversial from a religious standpoint? Certainly not.

I have studied carefully the teachings of the Rosicrucians, both the exoteric and the esoteric branches, and they have many followers in this country as well as in the Orient, but for me to discuss the religious views of the Rosicrucians would be untimely either in my broadcasts or in these columns. Not knowing what your religious views are I would be most ill-advised in suggesting that you study Rosicrucians unless you are religiously mature enough to make a comparative study not only of this religion but of many others.

I have said that I believe that there is much good in every religious creed and much harm in the intolerance that one religious group will have for another. Because of that intolerance which is so widespread, I have refrained from discussing the beliefs of any special group, although I have had questions asked me about a number of different religious faiths.

I, therefore, ask that you be tolerant in your attitude toward me for not making any specific comment on your question.

May — December

Dear Voice of Experience:

I am a young girl 21 years of age, and am in love with a man who is around 40. I have been going out with boys of my own age since I was around 15 and really found nothing attractive in them. I always felt that they were too young. This man that I love knows my feelings in this regard and likes me very much, but he always keeps saying that I am too young, that I only imagine I like him. How can I make him understand that I do love him and that age doesn't matter at all?

ANSWER: But, A. L., you ask, "How can I make him understand that age doesn't matter at all?" Age matters far more than you realize—of course not right now because you are just attaining maturity and he is still within the boundary of middle age. But ten or twelve or fifteen years from now things will be much different, and the very time when you are in your full bloom of maturity, unless he is a very unusual exception to the rule, his interests in the things that would at that time be most interesting to you will be practically nil.

I have in my files thousands of letters from girls who thought that they were in love with a man fifteen or twenty years older than they, and then found their disillusionment in marriage. I have a few where this great difference in age existed who have been married for a number of years and are still happy in that marriage; but as compared to the thousands, these few that I could count on the fingers of my hands are just enough to prove the rule.

A difference of six or eight years, if the woman is quite mature for her age and the man youthful for his, is not a deterrent as a usual thing to a happy marriage. But the difference you refer to is nineteen years—he is old enough to be your father. I can understand your admiration and respect and love for him, and I realize that it is mighty hard for you to see the great possibility of failure and the very small possibility of success should this man treat you seriously and offer you marriage. I dislike to disillusion you, but I would be most unfriendly if I did not offer you facts. I am not doubting your love for the man—I think he is wrong in saying that you are too young to love him—but I am questioning the life of that love should you two get married. Court his friendship—that's fine, but don't get serious, is the only sane advice that I can offer.

Be Brief, Please

I have before me a letter asking for an answer in RADIO GUIDE, which closes like this:

"He says that I am jealous and that I should get over it. I am a little jealous, but not as much as he says I am. Please advise me what to do. Answer as soon as you can." And it is signed, "Mrs. E. B."

Before coming to that statement, however, there are twelve pages of material. At the rate that the mail is coming in, let me sound this note of warning: Make your letters as brief as possible. Get all the facts in, but do it as though you were writing a telegram. Then you will be much more likely to get a reply. I am not deliberately passing this by, Mrs. E. B., but I simply have not the time with all my many activities to read so long a letter as you have written. Condense it for RADIO GUIDE and get your reply. Again let me say, if you will re-write your letter and make it brief, I will answer you in an early issue.

Interference

Dear Voice of Experience:

My granddaughter, 24 years old, eloped with and married a man of whom her parents disapproved. Then there was a child born. Later we learned that he was a married man at the time he married this girl, so she returned to her parents. Then she began seeing him on the sly, and now she is to become a mother again. She is making things most unpleasant at home in her arguments with her parents over this man. If her parents refuse her a home with them, she will return to him immediately.

As her grandmother, please advise me what to do.

ANSWER: While I appreciate, Mrs. A. W., your interest in your granddaughter which is only natural, I could answer your letter in one word, were I so inclined. You have asked what you should do, and my answer would be "nothing."

This girl is 24 years of age, is a free moral agent, she knows that the man was married at the time that he married her, she has made her own bed, she does not ask outside interference even from her parents; in fact, she resents it. Therefore there is just one thing for all of you to do—allow her to live her own life as any free moral agent of legal age should be permitted to do.

I know this isn't the kind of advice you expected, but it is the only sane advice for me to give.

No Personal Replies

I have before me a letter with the full name and address of a man and his wife living on a farm in Illinois. The letter explains an accident that occurred on the farm in which the man was hurt and had to spend much time in a hospital. The farm was formerly owned by one man, is now owned by another, but full payment has not been made to the original owner. The question asked is which of these two men could be sued for the accident which was caused by the unsound condition of a building on the farm.

I am further admonished to answer by mail because these people do not want their names in print.

The only names that you will ever see me put in print in RADIO GUIDE are those of missing persons for whom relatives are seeking, or names of individuals of national importance to which reference is made regarding the NRA or something of that kind. I never divulge the names of those who write to me.

But I do not answer personal mail either. Just remember, I am not only getting the mail that comes to me from this column in RADIO GUIDE, but we are averaging about 3,000 letters per day in response to my broadcasts, and it would be an utter impossibility for me to even attempt to answer a small part of the many who request personal replies. My advice, then, to this farmer and his wife is that this is a legal matter and would require the advice of a lawyer or a Legal Aid Society. I am not in position to give advice of this kind. I am sorry.

Blood and Water

Dear Voice of Experience:

My husband and I have been married for 14 years. My mother has been kind and considerate to him at most times. Probably there have been occasional misunderstandings, but nothing of a serious nature. Yet he has never called her "mother," although while his mother lived I always called her by the name of "mother," even though we occasionally had our misunderstandings.

Likewise I have an only sister who has one little boy. My husband never recognizes this boy even to say "hello" to him. But my husband has nieces and nephews to whom I always try to be nice and fuss over, and they show me their dolls and toys and report cards and I never fail to show my interest and appreciation of things that they are engaged in. My husband is a man of strong likes and dislikes, but one's own people are close and it hurts me so for him to treat them with such contempt that I have felt tempted to write to you many times.

Please answer in RADIO GUIDE and tell me how you would meet a condition such as that. Your answer will be of much consolation to me.

Distressed.

ANSWER: Your problem, my friend, is one that has distressed many, many wives before you, and I guess will continue to harass the minds of women as long as marriage exists. It is just another case of blood being thicker than water in the estimation of a man who is not emotionally grown up and one whose mother has very falsely trained him. If there were some way that I knew of by which he could be converted I would be glad to submit it to you. But a man of that type is not susceptible to argument, and no matter what you may do the chances are he will remain unchanged.

However, I would not allow that to affect my attitude toward his people at all. The fact that husband proves intolerant, egoistical, biased and emotionally immature, while it will cause you distress, should not influence you into accepting these negative characteristics either in a spirit of revenge or by virtue of your being mentally hurt. In fact, the one thing that might cause a change in him would be your ignoring his insulting attitude toward your people and continuing your friendly and sympathetic attitude toward his. After all, when each successive day is done and you rest your head on your pillow and recapitulate the events of the day, I know that you will be better satisfied if each night you can know within your own heart that you have treated your husband's people respectfully and have returned good for ill, than if you allowed his narrowness to impregnate itself into your actions. And when one has done his or her best, despite what others may have said or done, at least there is the self-assurance of having practiced the golden rule in the fact of adversity.

The VOICE that PASSETH UNDERSTANDING

If all radio performers were like Ireene Wicker the sound engineers would be unemployed. She can reproduce all their noises with her vocal cords

ASK a million radio listeners-in what they think of pretty little Ireene Wicker, and when you tabulate the votes, you'll find, it is sure, that they'll say she's a lovely lady. Then ask H. G. Ashbaucher. He will emit a low growl.

Which shows, if it could be said to show anything at all, that much depends on the way you look at things. Take those million radio listeners-in. They know Ireene Wicker as The Singing Lady, and they are nearly one in their appreciation of her musical interpretations of the old familiar Mother Goose tales.

But, on the other hand, H. G. Ashbaucher is a sound effects expert, and he sits around the NBC studios in Chicago completely surrounded by heaps of washtubs, strawberry boxes, bicycle pumps, and other gewgaws necessary to his trade, implements of the illusions he creates. Mr. Ashbaucher can make of a fragile strawberry box a turbulent mountain stream; he can transform a prosaic washboard into a rippling, bubbling brook. But he is not in sympathy with the diminutive Miss Wicker.

Not that Mr. Ashbaucher dislikes Miss Wicker personally. Not at all. But Mr. Ashbaucher cannot help remembering always that if all radio artists were like Miss Wicker, he, Mr. Ashbaucher, would be out of a job. For when Miss Wicker gets up there before an NBC microphone, the master sound technician and all the little sound technicians can go across the street and get a cup of coffee. Miss Wicker has no use for sound technicians. That does not mean that she has no use for sound technicians personally. They may, as far as she is concerned, be sterling fellows. But they play no part in her broadcasts.

WHEN, in the course of her Mother Goose tales, it becomes necessary to create the illusion of an avalanche of rocks tumbling down a tree studded mountain side, or the giants of the sky roar thunder from on high, or for shrill-voiced folk of the forest to revel in the moonlight, Miss Wicker does these things with her remarkably flexible voice. And Mrs. Ashbaucher scowls enviously.

Many, many stories above the roar of Chicago's busy traffic, in the world's largest building, is a room of simple design. Softened by diffused lights and thickly carpeted, it contains a few inviting chairs and a piano. It might be the studio of a concert pianist. But the presence of a microphone reveals it as a broadcasting studio.

A demure and charming young woman stands on tip-toe before the microphone, her scant five feet two inches making her seem a tiny elf in the vastness of the high ceilinged room. She sings softly, sweetly, with great expression, into the microphone, and as she sings, volatile gestures, almost Latin in their expressiveness, make her seem to be singing to a visible audience. She is The Singing Lady—Ireene Wicker.

A little apart, at the piano, a man's light fingers caper over the keyboard, his eyes glued on Miss Wicker's face for his cues. He has no written music, and what he plays might be from "Aida," from "Trovatore," a bit of Beethoven, or an obscure folk song. Or it might be a composition of the man at the piano—Allen Grant.

Then you will see the girl at the microphone suddenly raise her hand to her mouth, her fingers spread, palm held closely as from her throat issue sounds which, if you will close your eyes, will take you to a high, tree-clad hilltop, where a brook tumbles its vagrant way down the hillside.

Ireene Wicker's long training on the stage, her singing range of three octaves, and a natural ability to mimic enable her to perform difficult transitions in voice with rapidity that is almost unbelievable, and with remarkable verisimilitude.

Miss Wicker writes, directs, takes all the roles, and sings the numerous parts in all her programs.

An illustration of The Singing Lady's rare versatility occurred a few weeks ago when she completed a Singing Lady program which she had written herself, hurried down in the elevator, sped in a taxicab to another station, and rushed into the studio there just as the clock pointed to the hour when she was scheduled to take a leading role in excerpts from Hendrick Ibsen's "Doll's House," "Anna Christie," and play "The Life of Greta Garbo" all within a twenty-minute period.

In her two years on the air, Miss Wicker has written more than five hundred thousand words of continuity, has collected nearly a thousand volumes of legends upon which she bases her broadcast scripts after exhaustive study, and has composed more than two thousand songs.

She works prodigiously. She spends hour upon hour in research in the voluminous library of her home before she writes the stories, simple little stories, too, for her Singing Lady broadcasts. She spends other countless hours practising and rehearsing until she is letter-perfect in the numerous voice changes the interpretation of the stories requires. She studies arduously classical and modern ballads for another program. And to her, it is all in a day's work, for she loves it.

AN OLD fashioned music box was the homely beginning from which the Singing Lady program sprung. Ireene and her girl chum used to hurry home from school, to dramatize plays which Ireene even then wrote prolifically, if not too artistically. Together they would race to Ireene's home, books dangling from straps, don Ireene's mother's dresses, and the play would go on.

It was often necessary for Ireene to double in Cinderella—her own version—as the wicked step-mother and Cinderella herself. That, perhaps, marked the beginning of her wide versatility. She even recalls occasions when, beside the wicked step-mother and Cinderella herself, it was necessary because of the mechanical limitations of these early dramatics, that she take as well the parts of the fairy godmother, and the prince. The "orchestra" was the music box.

From those school days, Ireene's love of the stage and its people grew, and its growth

in her role as The Singing Lady

culminated in a tremendous success on the legitimate stage in the role of Cleopatra in George Bernard Shaw's "Caesar and Cleopatra." That success led to an invitation to play the leading role in the first television broadcast from Chicago.

That broadcast was Ireene's first appearance before the microphone, and it was not until two years later that she made her first commercial broadcast. Her radio idea was born then, but she wanted to perfect it. She went about that task as systematically as she always has tackled whatever problem has presented itself to her, and the manner of her solving it was, as usual, highly effective.

She left unanswered several offers for lucrative stage appearances which followed in the wake of her triumph in "Caesar and Cleopatra" in order to join the Goodman Theater Group in Chicago.

She specialized in plays for children, and carefully, painstakingly, she watched the reactions of her audiences, making careful mental note of them. She observed their likes and dislikes. She found their imaginations vivid; learned that they were, oddly enough, far less gullible than the average adult audience. She came to a realization of their desire for knowledge, of their persistent, unsatisfied curiosity. And upon what she learned in this way, she based the idea of her Singing Lady programs.

The two main conclusions to which her studies led her were that the programs must be educational, and that they must be equally entertaining.

BIG PAY IN BROADCASTING

IF ISN'T necessary to be a "star" to make good money in broadcasting. There are hundreds of people in broadcasting work who are practically unknown yet they easily make $3,000 to $5,000 a year. Of course, the "stars" often make $15,000 to $50,000 a year.

If you have talent—if you have a good speaking voice, a pleasant personality, a good radio cast, write, direct or sell—then here is an amazing new method of practical training that fits you—right in your own home in your spare time—for the job you want.

Millions of dollars paid to trained talent every year. Men and women unknown today will be the high salaried radio stars of tomorrow. The Floyd Gibbons School will train you in the technique of broadcasting so that you, too, may qualify for one of the big paying broadcasting jobs open to men and women of talent and training.

Our FREE book gives full particulars regarding our course. It tells you how to prepare for a good position in broadcasting—how you can turn your hidden talents into money, without giving up your present job or making a single sacrifice of any kind. Send coupon for free book.

Floyd Gibbons School of Broadcasting, 2000-14th St., N. W., Dept. 3P31, Washington, D. C.

Without obligation send me your free booklet "How to Find Your Place in Broadcasting" and full particulars of your home study course.

There was a Commander named Settle,
 Who had a gondola of metal,
 To pierce stratosphere,
 He tried nigh a year
 Until he had listeners a-nettle.

The announcers who were to relate
 The stratosphere flight could be late
 Because the balloon,
 Though it may ascend soon,
 I doubt they will ever inflate.

PERHAPS you've noted the increased concentration on the kilocycles the past few weeks of the proprietary medicine makers and the get-fat-get-lean aid salesmen?

If you've wondered, here's the answer. A proposed amendment to the federal pure food and drugs act would bar medical advertising from the airwaves (and other media as well). So, just to take advantage of a good thing before Congress convenes and passes (if it does) the bill, the proprietary remedy lads are buying all available time on the air.

They hope to sell while the selling's good. What their next move will be is in doubt, but they are going together to lobby against the legislation. Failing, no doubt there will be a test case pushed through to the Supreme Court to establish the constitutionality of the act.

One wonders what such a law would do to many favorite programs with a good health appeal. What will happen to Rudy Vallee's Variety Hour, the Crime Club, Yeast Foamers, Galaxy of Stars, Gene Arnold and his Commodores, Circus Days, the NBC Barn Dance, the Big Show, American Album of Familiar Music and Albert Spalding?

It must have been "hard" for Columbia to issue that statement that they would not carry hard liquor advertising after the repeal . . . How about NBC?

What's What:

EVERYONE'S COMMENTING on Jack Pearl's "Meet the Baron" film, so here goes: It isn't half as funny as his broadcasts, and why was Durante injected? . . . Bernie's handsome chorister, Frank

CAL SCHEIBE

The baritone of The Cadets quartet likes flowers—and our candid camera caught him in the act of plucking the "Last Rose of Summer." Aw gwan!

Prince, dropped 26 pounds on advice of his doctor, and now can't quit losing weight. Add to that a threatening appendix. . . . One of her admirers insists that Irene Beasley is so good she shouldn't sing on Ford programs . . . only Lincoln. Heh! But the gal is good.

Moscow's getting all set to exchange programs with us when the recognition is arranged. Typical American tunes will be featured in the relayed shows.

CLIFF "SHARLIE" HALL has been stealing so many laughs from Jack on the program that Jack's being ribbed about how good a straight man he is for Cliff. . . . Howard Petrie received a flock of congratulations on his birthday, the 22nd. . . . Al and Lee Reiser, the two-piano team, are not brothers but cousins. . . . We wonder what the woman who reads the tea leaves each week for Alice Faye, Vallee's missus and hot-charmer, tells her. . . . This isn't a fairy story, but once upon a time Dick Humber managed Vallee. Now it's just the opposite—Rudy has taken Dick under his wing.

Inside Pickups

REASON SPONSORS have balked at hiring the Casa Loma band is that they have to sell for $3,000 because they're out of town men and would have to pay stand-by musicians. . . . Ruth Etting is under a two weeks' option at $1,750 to a prospective sponsor. . . . NBC spent a whole year building up Borrah Minnevitich and his mouth harp choir, only to have his manager sell them to a New York local sponsor on WOR.

Rumors continue to float through about big executive changes in the larger of the large networks, but why bother you about them. You're not interested.

DESPITE THIS COLUMN, Don McNeill eats prunes for breakfast. . . . In a few days, Harlow Wilcox will become a staff NBC announcer. . . . What local CBS mickman has suddenly become an "aspirin" addict? . . . Phil Baker'll be airing from N'Yawk shortly in order to fill RKO theater dates. . . . And what was the trouble which flared last week between Olsen and Johnson and those who foot the bill? . . . That steamboat whistle you'll hear with the Byrd broadcasts is a phonograph record. A preview of that show, by the way, causes us to warn you not to miss it. . . . Real Silk set for a change. . . . And how did Pat Flanagan get glass in his eye at the Notre Dame-Purdue game?

Plums and —

NBC IS TO BE congratulated upon the excellence of the programs dedicating the Radio City studios. Armistice night, we spent several enjoyable hours listening to the festivities. The London two-way relay, with General Harbord and Owen D. Young conversing with David Sarnoff, was of rare quality. One weak note—or make it two—were the contributions of Amos 'n' Andy and Will Rogers. The former were fine until they told a couple of bewhiskered jokes that fell with a dull thud, and Rogers was noticeably nervous, not himself.

The top third of the radio audience, if they have not already done so, should tune in Alexander Woollcott's CBS "Town Crier" series. They will find in his pronouncements something which is lacking from the usual radio programs—intelligence.

We fear we have been negligent in awarding plums to two orchestras which certainly deserve them. One is carried over the NBC networks from KOA at Denver—Carol Lofner's music makers. The other is the present setup of Ace Brigade's band, picked up by WBBM, Chicago, and fed to the CBS network. Both have unusually danceable rhythm, and they play arrangements wherein the melody is not lost in a maze of symphonic gingerbread.

Vallee wins plums again, this time for Richie Craig's grand comeback appearance on Thursday, November 9.

LAST, BUT NOT least, here are many plums for the present series of Easy Aces. They are better than ever.

10:30 A.M. WEDNESDAYS

A DELIGHTFUL SURPRISE for HOUSEWIVES

Behind the Scenes in Chicago Studios

By Rollin Wood

HOUSEWIVES take notice! If your chowder tastes as if somebody tossed their overalls into it, or your pies resemble box-car wheels, just throw your can-opener away and listen to Betty Thomas who explains just how to make those tasty tid-bits in her broadcasts on the Sprague-Warner "Feast of the Air" cooking school, Fridays at 3 p. m. over WBBM. The cooking school is a success if the many telegrams received are any indication. General Electric equipment is used exclusively.

Transplanting its success born at the World's Fair, the Old Mexico Cafe opened Wednesday night, November 15, at 64th and Cottage Grove, at the location formerly known as the "Music Box". Eddie and Fannie Cavanaugh, the radio gossipers heard weekdays at 1 p. m. over WBBM, will continue to stage their celebrity parties at "Old Mexico" on Tuesday, or possibly Thursday nights. A floor show, featuring a living chandelier of girls, is a current attraction.

Not to be outdone by another Tony, Tony Carlo of WCFL's Tony and Joe team, has challenged Tony Cabooch, of WMAQ and NBC, to a "World's Championship Spaghetti Eating Contest," weapons, location and date to be selected. It seems

THE THREE LITTLE MAIDS, EVE, EVELYN AND LUCILLE OVERSTAKE
This popular WLS close harmony trio is appearing in person at the State-Lake Theater, Chicago, during the week beginning Sunday, November 19. The girls, all in their teens, have starred on the WLS National Barn Dance for the past two seasons, and previous to that were heard over WJBL, WJZ and WTAX.

that Cabooch and Carlo had a preliminary heat in which the former charged the latter with skullduggery, i. e., putting tabasco sauce on the Cabooch spaghetti.

One of the cleverest dramas ever aired is Vera Caspary's "Caught in the Act," to be heard next Monday night, November 20, at 9:30 o'clock over NBC and WENR. You may make three guesses as to the outcome of the situation created by the celebrated Miss Caspary—and still the odds are that you'll be wrong. In the cast of the radio play are: Arthur Jacobson, the boy; Irene Wicker, Grace, the girl, and Doug Hope, the mysterious Englishman.

Lucy Gillman, tiny radio actress star who has made the role of "Lucy Moran" famous in "Today's Children," broadcast at 10:15 mornings over WENR, is the celebrity to be interviewed by Evans Plummer on the Radio Guide program Saturday, November 18, at 11:45 a. m., over WJJD.

The football game between Northwestern and Notre Dame will be featured by four Chicago stations, Saturday, November 18, beginning at approximately 2 p. m. WGN, WMAQ, KYW and WBBM will carry the game. WJJD will carry the Illinois-Chicago game at 2 p. m.

Jobny Harrington, assisted by Jack Burnett, will be at the WGN mike during all the hockey broadcasts from the Chicago Stadium. The closing forty-five minutes of all home games will be aired, starting at 9:45 p. m. and ending at 10:30 p. m. On the test broadcast last week, Harrington asked for listeners to write if they would care to have the program continued. Over five hundred letters, from almost every point in the country, have arrived so far.

When you hear Danny Russo and his Oriental Gardens Orioles playing their latest number, "The Cutest Little Nudist," they are not referring to a fan dancer or a member of an Indiana nudist camp. The "cutest nudist" referred to in the song is a new-born babe.

WAAF's listeners will hear an unusual musical broadcast Sunday, November 19. A double quartet of Swiss yodelers, members of the Chicago Swiss Male Chorus, will present a quarter-hour program at 10 a. m. The eight male voices will be combined in presenting a program of distinctive Alpine music.

Listeners who have heard the Five Star Melody program, featuring the Melody Masters quartet, Herman Julius, Jr., violinist, and David Calvin, on WBBM, Sunday to Thursday at 9:30 p. m., have undoubtedly noted the beautiful tones of the violin. The instrument is a genuine Joseph Guarnerius, made in Cremona in 1743 and valued at more than $40,000. The maker called himself, "The Jesus of Violin Makers" and added the letters IHS and the Roman Cross to his labels. He made a dozen or more that rank with those of Stradivari. There are only a few of these violins in the United States. The one belonging to Julius came from the famed Caressa Music House in Paris. With it is a guarantee issued by that house 90 years after the instrument was made.

Happy Jack Kay, heard on Sears' Sunshine program over WLS, Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 8:30 a. m., is the proud papa of an eight-pound three-ounce baby girl. Mrs. Kay is reported doing very well.

The Arcadia Gardens, located on Chicago's north side at 4444 Broadway, is being re-opened and will be operated by the Uptown Amusement Corporation. Leon Bloom will supply the music but the Chicago radio outlet is undecided as yet.

BILL BAAR VISITS "THE BIG TOP"
Bill Baar, whose Grandpa Burton sketches entertained you from WBBM last winter, now broadcasts his "The Big Top" program week nights at 5 o'clock over WENR. Baar spent the summer with the Hagenbeck-Wallace Circus gathering color and authentic material. Here he is shown visiting the clowns as they apply their makeup.

Tony Diccio, celebrated Italian chef of the Kinzie Grill, one of the radio stars' favorite haunts, proclaims that, like their predecessors of the footlight and grease paint era, mike performers are always hungry. He observes that their favorite dish is steak a la Diccio.

A lifeguard with an arm that might go "bad" on him at any moment is not much use in an emergency so this lifeguard, Jack Owens, turned to singer. Owens was picked, from a group of more than 1,000 aspirants, for the coveted spot of featured soloist on the College Inn comedy program. The last College Inn contest resulted in the discovery of Dixie Lee who went at once to Broadway and later married Bing Crosby. There's no telling what this Owens boy might do.

Among Cheri McKay's most devoted fans are a group of blind people, members of a Chicago colony. Cheri, the popular contralto who sings with the Merry Macs over WMAQ every Tuesday and Thursday from 11 to 11:15 a. m., received a letter from a blind woman more than a year ago. The friendship that developed through the letter has caused the group to be adopted by the blind group and they now receive birthday cakes and Christmas presents regularly.

Donald Novis will play a return engagement at the Chicago Theater, opening November 17. Leo Carillo, villain and at times hero of countless motion pictures, will share the billing honors with Novis.

The Institute of Radio Service Men, headquarters division, will hold an open meeting, Monday, November 20, 8 p. m. at the Hotel Sherman. William Hutter, of the Revelation Patents Corporation, will give a technical talk.

Here are some facts about the Cadets, Phil, Cal, Sam and Lonnie, the popular quartet. Two of the boys are Atwater-Kent Foundation contest winners, two are ministers' sons, one is a licensed Methodist minister and there are five college degrees in the group. The boys have held an engagement as an entire church choir in Winnetka for more than two years. The average age of the four is less than thirty years.

Rex Maupin, KYW orchestra leader, is still wondering whether he's an executive or whether his friends took advantage of his good nature. Realizing that the spring painting job on his kitchen wall was beginning to dull, Rex invited his friends over for a "painting" party. Upon arrival, each guest was presented with an apron, a bucket of paint, a brush and told to go to it!

Surveying the job next morning, Rex was unable to decide whether he liked the results or not—but he still thinks the idea was pretty good.

BANDSTAND AND BATON

A HECTIC week of Ted Weems and his men has just concluded. Weems, with two special nights at the Walnut room of the Bismarck, and a stage engagement at the Palace theater, has been very busy. A new floor show is an added attraction at the hotel, where Weems seems set for the entire winter. Elmo Tanner, Country Washburn and the remainder of the bandmen also take part in the floor show.

THINGS WERE NOT quite right for Clyde Lucas at the Blue Room of the LaSalle. Receivers of the hotel demanded a cut in expenditures, so the floor show, featuring Lilyan Wolfe and others, went. A little later, work for the band was reduced to dinner dancing from 6 to 9 p. m., except on Saturday nights. Added to this are the acoustics in the Blue Room, which, Clyde says, are far from what they should be. So he is not exactly sorry to be leaving for Houston, Texas, with stop-overs on the road. Clyde, by the way, hasn't even felt the late cold wave in Chicago; he has been so busy with the arrangements, which he does himself, and other work incidental to the orchestra that he hasn't left the hotel for more than a week. The orchestra is due back in Chicago after the first of the year.

THE MOST CLEVER and entertaining band Chicago has seen for many a year will leave its spot in the Windy City shortly after Christmas, according to latest reports, when Benny Meroff hands the Morrison Hotel Terrace Gardens baton over to a successor as yet unnamed. Meroff will do a tour of stage appearances, with further engagements undetermined. Meanwhile, he continues on his NBC commercial.

DON CARLOS, at the Drake after many prophets reputed to be wise had guessed he would be gone and forgotten, is building up a fan list. His marimba music is going over well with the Chicago audience. Together with Clyde McCoy and Virginia Hamilton, he gives the Drake hotel a formidable offering to night lifers.

THAT PICK-UP from Colosimo's, on 22nd street, goes quite a way before it reaches Chicago listeners' radio sets. WIND, Gary, has taken up the wire, and so far is the only relayer of Jose Riva's Mexican style music. The Gary station has also added the Cafe Venice to its Chicago remote control list, with Maurie Sherman's orchestra as the feature. Sherman's band is also heard several times each afternoon from the Cafe de Alex over WGN.

ACE BRIGODE is doing well enough in Chicago. His contract has been renewed until April, and he now has several coast-to-coast pickups on CBS, besides numerous mid-western programs and local WBBM pickups. Abe Lyman is given a bit more in the matter of large networks than his predecessor at the New Yorker, Barney Rapp had. Lyman goes network thrice weekly during the later hours.

MARK FISHER opened at the Baker hotel, Dallas, November 11, over WFAA. . . He is another who is press agented for a return to Chicago in time for New Years. . . Herbie Kay and Bernie Cummins have as yet found no permanent employment for the winter. . . Artie Collins and Karl Rich do their musicking from WLW and Cincinnati spots now.

HENRY BUSSE will make his bow to Chicago fans when he opens the re-decorated Granada Cafe November 16. The former Whiteman trumpeter deserted the Schroeder hotel, Milwaukee, his home during the last two winters, for this job, which has WBBM wires.

HOME LIFE VS. CAREERS

By Dorothy Coulet

the stern taskmaster that they found the legitimate stage. For it is in the quietude and peace of Dunrovin that they prepare their script for the Blackstone Plantation and the Bond Bakers programs which they have made so popular. Then they go to New York for their broadcasts, and hurry back home. None of the long sleeper hops, incommensurate hotel rooms, and hastily snatched restaurant meals. Not a bit of it. You ought to see Dunrovin.

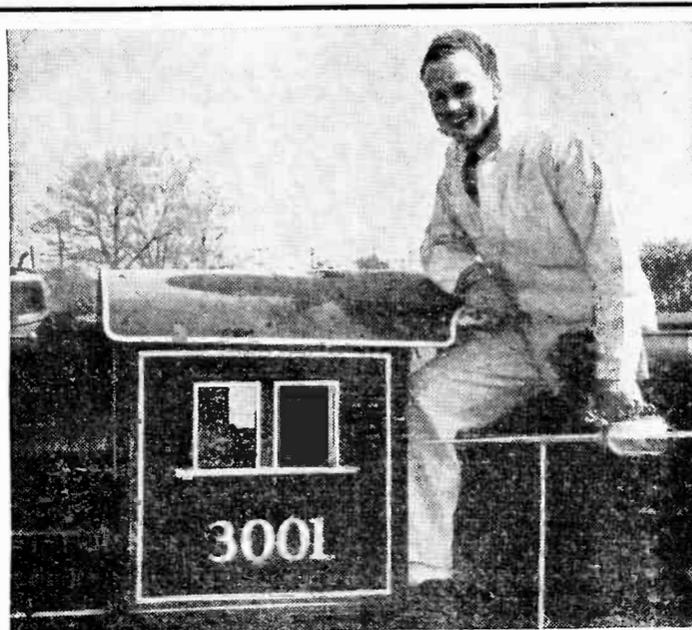

They both have hobbies that contribute to their happiness and contentment. Frank likes a good stud poker game, and in the upholstered basement of Dunrovin is a spacious room where such gatherings can be, and are, held regularly. Frank also clings to his brokerage business, and finds time to sandwich its details in with his radio work. He writes songs—seven or eight a year. He has always maintained that average. Indeed, it was Frank Crumit who wrote the famous "Buckeye Battle Cry" which has sent so many of his Alma Mater's football teams out to victorious gridiron battles. And in collaboration with Grantland Rice, his lifelong friend, he also wrote "Come on Commodore," for Rice's Alma Mater, Vanderbilt University. Frank's golf game is almost good enough to land him a pro job at a country club if he ever tires of radio. He shoots consistently in the 70's.

Julia has not given up her sewing circle, her bridge clubs, her ladies aid, or any of the other affiliations which are a part of the life of the well-to-do suburban matron.

By the way, that giggle of hers—some of you like it and some of you don't—but you who don't will just have to make the best of it. There is nothing of the stage about that giggle. It is just her own, like her blonde hair, her big gray eyes, and her shell-like pink and white complexion.

But there they are, the two of them, with their memories of glamorous stage nights, and perched on greater heights of fame than ever they were in what they would have called their hey-day. A pretty picture, they make—two people very much in love.

MUSIC IN THE AIR

By Carleton Smith

E GON PETRI will play this Sunday evening the Busoni transcription of Bach's Concerto in D minor and the Choral Preludes: "Awake, the Voice Commands," "In Thee is Joy," "I Call to Thee" and "Rejoice, Beloved Christians," with the NBC Symphony, under the direction of Frank Black. (WJZ at 7 p. m.)

Bach is a composer whose works show to advantage the Dutch pianist's philosophy of interpretation. Bach's music reflects an enormous discipline in emotion and in craftsmanship. So does Mr. Petri's piano playing.

"As nearly as an artist can, I should like to resemble a perfect wireless set, one that reproduces the music without any fault or imperfection, and without coloring the interpretation by temperament or by personality."

This statement by Mr. Petri suggests as nearly as words can his notion of piano-playing. In short, his is objective playing. Mr. Petri offers an intellectual approach to works of art. Grasping the composition, in large and in detail, he keeps his own personality quite in the background, letting the music tell its own story.

This does not mean that Petri lacks emotion. In order to play Bach, Chopin or Liszt as he does, he must have an understanding of musical ideals in the time of these composers, and especially of their individual ideals. From this comprehension he necessarily feels the work which he interprets. Thus he recreates, according to his lights, the mood, the desire, the aspiration of the composer.

Petri's artistic objective is different from that of the performer who seeks to make his own powers of magnetism felt. His is not the same sort of interpretation as you get from the singer, for instance, who says: "I am not concerned with the composer's markings. My job is to make an impression on the consciousness of my audience."

We, as radio listeners, are more familiar with the latter method of interpretation. It is more colorful. A personality is always interesting, sometimes charming, intriguing. It at least arrests attention. We want to feel "it" on the stage, in politics, in the movies, as well as in the concert hall. We are in tune with the sound of "big names," the product, in part, of publicity. Exploited personality, however, does not always serve well the cause of art. Especially, it does not suit the works of Bach.

Petri's Bach

YOU WILL FIND that Mr. Petri elevates the Bach concerto far above mere ingenious laboratory experimentation. Of course, whether it is a useful thing for a piano to attempt the reproduction of organ effects is an open question.

Busoni, who was Petri's early teacher, achieves with superb musicianship and ingenuity his objective in making the transcription, as well as in putting the feeling of the original words into the choral preludes. His arrangement of the concerto is rich and full, extremely difficult, but at least exemplary of the texture and the grand character of Bach's music.

Mr. Petri plays the work with strict demarcation of dynamics, as if he were using an antique instrument of several keyboards. In like spirit, he gains the effect of sharply distinguished registers, and quite wonderfully suggests upon the piano that technique of emphasis natural to its mechanical opposite, the organ.

The end of this is to remind us to Bach's own era, and to give us through his music that healthy feeling of being a small part of the cosmic.

Gossip

WRITING OF BUSONI calls to mind the story of the girl who, when introduced to the great pianist's wife, inquired, "Oh, are you Mrs. Bach-Busoni? . . . Perhaps Lucrezia Bori had something to do with the choice of "Peter Ibbetson" for the opening of the Met season on December 26. . . . If you enjoy choral singing and some exquisite music, tune in Father Finn's Paulist Choristers next Monday evening (NBC-WJZ at 7:30 p. m.) . . . Lawrence Tibbett, winner of the American Academy of Arts and Letters' gold medal for good diction on the stage, has been around the country this season singing a recital program entirely in English. The six former winners of this award are dramatic actors, this being the first time that the medal has gone to a singer. . . . Howard Hanson, whose opera, "Merry Mount," is to have its first stage presentation at the Met in February, may be heard directing the Eastman School Symphony Orchestra (NBC Thursday at 2:15 p. m.) . . . An addition to the broadcast repertoire of Nino Martin is the famous Preis lied from Wagner's "Die Meistersinger" (CBS Sunday at 8 p. m.) . . .

PAPA DAMROSCII plays very lovely pieces for his children these Friday mornings. The Series C concert, on Dance Forms (NBC, Nov. 24, at 11 a. m.) includes the Gavotte from Gluck's "Iphigenia in Aulis," the Bouree, from Bach's "Suite in C," the minuet from Lully's "Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme," Rameau-Mottl's "Tambourin" and Bach-

JOSEF LHEVINNE

The distinguished Russian pianist will be guest of the N. Y. Philharmonic Symphony on Sunday, November 19, at 2 p. m. over the CBS-WBBM network.

Holst's "Fugue a la Gigue." The D Series (at 11:30 a. m.) presents Mozart's Symphony in G minor.

JOHN M'CORMACK chooses his own selections. Without having the slightest information, about it, I'll venture that no advertising agent, nor sponsor's wife, gives him advice on songs to sing. Consequently, his programs are natural, spontaneous . . . his own. His advance list for this week (Nov. 22, NBC-WJZ at 9:30 p. m.) includes the aria "Gloire Al Canto Mio" from Peri's early opera "Euridice," Schubert's "Ave Maria," and Cadman's "Candle Light," and "Nelly my Love and Me," "Soft are your Arms" and "The Irish Emigrant" . . . Too bad Albert Spalding isn't allowed to play uninterruptedly for a half-hour, or at least for fifteen minutes, without the abrupt and insensitive clash of mood and music that destroys the effectiveness of his playing.

Chamber music devotees will be glad to know that the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation of The Library of Congress plans to have one weekly broadcast for eighteen consecutive weeks, beginning early in January.

CHARLES WAKEFIELD CADMAN's fantasy for piano and orchestra, "Dark Dancers of the Mardi Gras," impressed many hearers at its recent New York performance. Ossip Gabrilowitsch will conduct it in Detroit with the composer at the piano. Mr. Cadman is now on tour, conducting his radio opera, "The Willow Tree" in performance throughout the middle west.

Programs

JOSEPH LHEVINNE will play Chopin's piano concerto No. 2 in F minor on the Philharmonic program November 19 (CBS at 2 p. m.). Bruno Walter will conduct Bach's Weiner Tocata in C major. The symphony on this program is Beethoven's Seventh, which Wagner termed the "apotheosis of the dance" . . . Mr. Walter conducts only four more broadcasts before he leaves for a tour of Europe, which includes all the principal musical centers except those in Germany.

There is a Philadelphia Symphony broadcast Friday, November 24 CBS-WBBM at 1:30 p. m. and on the following Tuesday (CBS-WBBM at 8 p. m.) Mr. Stokowski starts his nightly series.

FREDERICK STOCK will not conduct the broadcast performance of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra during the NBC welcoming festivities to Radio City (NBC at 9 p. m. November 18). There will be a guest conductor from Austria.

The "Symphonic Strings," an exchange concert broadcast from Canada, should be well received by music-lovers throughout the country.

MIS-STEPPING TO FORTUNE

By Hilda Cole

ing, four o'clock, nine o'clock—if he's in bed when the fancy seizes him to compose, he gets up and composes. That's how his best known tunes were born, tunes such as "It Had To Be You," "Swinging Down the Lane," "I Can't Believe It's True," "If You Were Only Mine," "I'll Never Have To Dream Again," "Let's Try Again," "Why Can't This Night Go On Forever," "Honestly," and a score of others. Writer of the decade's most vivid and glamorous song hits, Isham Jones physically is a striking example of what you would not expect such a composer to look like. You could understand his writing "We're In the Army Now" but never, for instance, "I'll See You In My Dreams." Or picture the man you think would have written "The Wooden Soldier and the China Doll." You would never for a moment ascribe that to a tall, muscular, ruddy fellow in a startlingly plain blue serge suit, would you?

But if you would look more closely, look into his moody deep blue eyes, then perhaps you might understand.

He laughs at inspiration, at the "Muses."

"The muses never bothered me," he will tell you. "I'll just be clowning around the piano, and come across a melody."

But those who know him will dispute that, and I suppose you will have to judge for yourself.

has been heard in programs which, were they presented at the rate of one a day, would cover a period of ten years.

She tabulates her fan mail to determine the varying popularity of her radio offerings, and on the basis of her listeners' written appreciations, she finds that the most popular of all is still the "Cinderella" of her school days. "Snow White" is second, and third comes one of the Singing Lady's own creations, "Copper Toes," an Indian legend. Of late, she has noticed a change in the trend of her hearers' favorites, which she cannot understand, and which call for "Beethoven's Moonlight Sonata," "Michael Angelo," and "Handel."

Often it is amusing to ask someone who works hard—and offhand it would be difficult to name any one who works harder than Irene Wicker—what she would do if suddenly she found herself possessed of a million dollars. And Irene's reply to that question is a whole story, a story of her life and of her work told in a few brief words. For she will tell you she would keep right on being The Singing Lady.

That may be the secret of why she brings glad smiles and happiness to all but Mr. H. G. Ashbacher.

These two ladies won $600 in the Radio Guide Star Static Game, awards for which were announced in a recent issue. Left, Faye Scott, 227 Linn St., Peoria, Ill., winner of $500 first prize and right, Virginia L. Robinson, 1730 Fifth St., Portsmouth, O., winner of $100 third prize. Although many entries were received none was entirely correct.

REVIEWING RADIO

By Mike Porter

WITH Walter Winchell unfortunately off the job here in New York, I thought I might keep tradition alive by going around this week looking into keyholes. Imagine my surprise when on each occasion my eyes came into a direct line with the prying lamps of Marty Lewis—on the other side of the doors.

That drove me to keyholing exclusively in the kilocycle kiosks and I discovered, among other things, that Fred Allen will be out of job after December 1. And Col. Louis McHenry Howe, the medieval gnome, will fade out November 26.

To compensate, as you might say, for these vanishments, there'll be the fact that Donald Novis is back, and Jimmy Melton, too, with a Sunday sustaining, and Frances Langford is warbling hereabouts again with Dick Leibert massaging the console as a background. I discovered, also, that before you're through reading this, Roxy and his legion will have a week-night program in addition to his Sunday waftings.

Among other things one learns by eavesdropping on the band leaders in this region is, that while they love and respect Paul Whiteman, and praise him for offering a scholarship to composers who turn out the best stuff a la Grofe, Suisse and Johnny Green, few of them, least of all George Hall, believe Whiteman is on the right track of an American idiom.

Jazz concertos, graphic musical pictures of speakeasies, night clubs, etc., will perpetuate the gangster age, and not be idealistically representative of this country, it is pointed out. . . . What the bandsmen say is needed is more melody and a modified rhythm.

* YES SIR, IT'S CHARLIE CHAPLIN

Just to put it on the record, here's a photograph of Charlie when he spoke for the first time, it is believed, over a national network. CBS made the comic audible when he talked for NRA. Did you note his British accent?

Among the bright sayings I recorded, was one by a mag writer who pointed out that since radio went in for big business, free air is a term that became obsolete, except as applying to auto tires. It could apply to Plummer, too, but we won't go into that. I see that Evans was kind enough to place my name ahead of his in his list of things radio could do without. Frankly, I don't think radio could get along without Plummer.

Everything must have an opposite. You know: "Heat and cold," "dry and wet," "up and down," etc., and "entertainment and Plummer!"

Definitions

PEEPING INTO THE new NBC home in Radio City, I saw them grooming their newest find, Dell Campo, a baritone. Give him a listen on Tuesdays and see what YOU think.

It is interesting to note how Leon Belasco, the man who butchers the language more unmercifully than "Oy Ratwell," sizes up a radio studio. He says it is the tonsorial parlor where artists go to get their salaries shaved. And the trouble with radio artists, say the Funny-boners (at least their press agent says it), is that if you give one a finger he expects a big hand. But I like Meyer Davis' crack best. He quips: "Radio gives those who hate jazz an opportunity of enjoying it in secret."

Hot Stuff

RETURNING FOR A MOMENT to Radio City, there's a laugh in the experience of George Milne, divisional engineer. He got into his new office on a cold day. He knew that the radiators were controlled by thermostats, which in turn are regulated by thermometers. If the room temperature falls below 72, the radiator is turned on.

Milne knew the heat was on in the building, but he sat in his room and shivered for two hours. And then he began to inspect the thermostat. He finally discovered that his radio set has been installed beneath the control, and that its tubes were keeping the thermometer up to 80 degrees, while the rest of the room, with the radiator blissfully stopped, was only 61!

If you take a sly look and give a surreptitious listen to the music publishers, you'll find that in the past seven years the song hits have been as follows: 1927, "My Blue Heaven;" 1928, "Sonny Boy;" 1929, "Carolina Moon;" 1930, "Springtime in the Rockies;" 1931, "Good-night Sweetheart;" 1932, "Shanty in Old Shantytown," and — yep, you guessed it, 1933, ah! "The Last Roundup."

Camel Plans

AH, SO YOU'VE HEARD that Camel has purchased two half hours a week at Columbia, have you? And now, the question is, who's going to fill 'em? Frankly, nobody hereabouts knows exactly. The auditions have been copious and frantic, but the outlook, as I see it, seems to favor the employment of Glenn Gray and his Casa Loma orchestra, and Mildred Bailey as the warbler. . . . Mae West, by the way, is actually dragging down $7,500 a week for that Honey Almond Cream broadcast which starts next month, or as soon as the sponsor can clear time to one network or another.

Did you notice that Ed Wynn's "opera" last week was titled for a real giggle? It was called, "A Fool and His Money Are Soon Parted." Or maybe you've forgotten the Amalgamated!

RADIO GUIDE wants the honest opinions of listeners everywhere about the entertainment value of important sponsored programs on the networks. Fan mail is an uncertain guide because, with few exceptions, the people who do not like a program do not write to the sponsors or the stations. The sponsors and the broadcasting companies are doing their best to give you the kind of programs that you want but, in many cases, they are shooting in the dark because they do not know what you prefer in the way of entertainment.

RADIO GUIDE is now launching a campaign to improve radio programs by obtaining first-hand information for sponsors about your reactions to their presentations. You have a very definite opinion about every program to which you listen regularly. You have expressed it many times to your own family and friends. But the editors of RADIO GUIDE cannot meet you in your living room and talk it over with you. They must depend upon you to sit down and write your honest opinion about a certain sponsored network program each week—why you like or dislike it and your suggestion for improving its entertainment value.

Each week, RADIO GUIDE will select a sponsored network program upon which you will be asked to comment. In an adjoining column, you will find the rules of the contest and a summary of the weekly prizes which you can win.

Remember, literary ability will not influence the decisions of the editors, who will act as judges in the contest. Not the manner in which you express yourself but THE VALUE OF YOUR IDEAS is the important thing. TELL YOUR FRIENDS AND OTHER MEMBERS OF YOUR FAMILY TO ENTER THE CONTEST, TOO. The more, the merrier.

The program upon which you are asked to comment this week is:

The Armour Program

Phil Baker, Harry (Bottle) McNaughton, Beetle and Mabel Albertson, with music by Roy Shield's orchestra, the Neil Sisters trio and the Merrie-Men quartet, Friday at 9:30 p. m. EST, 8:30 p. m. CST.

CONTEST RULES

1. Letters must be written in ink or typewriter on one side of the paper only and must not exceed 200 words in length.
2. Everyone is eligible except employes of Radio Guide and members of their families.
3. Each letter must be accompanied by the entry blank printed below or your tracing of the same.
4. You may consult copies of Radio Guide at the offices of this publication or at public libraries. You do not have to purchase Radio Guide to enter the contest.
5. The editors of Radio Guide shall be the judges in each weekly contest and their decision shall be final in each instance.
6. All letters regarding the "ARMOUR" program must be in the office of Radio Guide on or before Saturday, December 2, to be eligible. Awards will be announced in the issue of the week ending December 23, on sale December 14.
7. Address all entries to BETTER RADIO CONTEST, Radio Guide, 423 Plymouth Court, Chicago, Ill.
8. Radio Guide reserves the right to publish any or all letters submitted.
9. We cannot enter into any correspondence regarding the contest and no manuscript can be returned.

More Collectors

Dear V. O. L.:

We have been enjoying RADIO GUIDE for several months and especially appreciate the guide to programs for each day in the week. We should like very much to see pictures and write-ups of Ted Weems and Frankie Masters, two of our favorite orchestras. We have enjoyed the articles and pictures of George Hall, another of our favorites.

We were interested in the letter of Mr. Gill of Ontario because we are also enthusiastic collectors of pictures and letters from radio stars. And we can beat your record, Mr. Gill. We have 105 photos and 90 cards and letters. We have found most of our favorites most kind in sending their pictures and in writing letters and cards, including Christmas Greetings. We wonder if anyone can beat our record?

We hope to see this printed and wish the best of success to RADIO GUIDE.

Only Amusement

Springfield, Illinois

Dear V. O. L.:

Will take this opportunity to tell you how we appreciate RADIO GUIDE. It is the one weekly we allow ourselves to afford. The radio is our only amusement these days and a magazine like RADIO GUIDE makes it more interesting. It saves our nerves not to have to hunt for a good program. We just depend on the list you have, and we also feel that we know our favorites personally through your interviews with them.

Chicago, Illinois

Dear V. O. L.:

I have been a constant reader of RADIO GUIDE for quite a long time, but never once have I seen anything mentioned about Glen Cross, who sings with the "Leaders Trio". I think he is one of the best vocalists on the air and I sure do hope to hear him soon. I also want to send a bushel of plums to the swellest orchestra on the air, Eddie Duchin.

We're Tolerant

Marengo, Iowa

Sirs:

For some time I have been hunting a RADIO GUIDE, and seeing this on a news stand I bought it with the idea of subscribing for it. But I find the enclosed picture and paragraph. The loyal American citizens voted out booze a long time ago and as an American citizen I cannot subscribe for a paper printing such paragraphs. Sorry, for I think the programs seem fine.

Mrs. Pearl Spurlock

Watch Out, Evans

Mayfield, Ky.

Dear Sir:

This is to inform you that you are going to be minus one nickel each week if Plummer doesn't stop picking on Al Jolson and Eddie Cantor. While I am not particularly fond of Cantor, I know many people do enjoy his programs and I can see no reason for Plummer's continual razing. Jolson, however, is one of my favorites. I have been using Kraft's Miracle Whip since his first broadcast, but let them remove him from their program and I think I shall hie myself to the nearest grocery to call for some of Fred Allen's mayonnaise.

I think Marty Lewis is grand because he always writes such nice friendly things about the stars. In fact your whole magazine would be one hundred percent perfect if Plummer would be just a little less critical.

Sax Tooting Art

Chicago, Illinois

Dear V. O. L.:

Thanks to F. L. D. of Atlantic City, N. J., for mentioning a subject dear to the heart of all sax tooters, their importance in the orchestra. It takes keen ears to recognize good quality in all ranges of the sax, although the best is produced in the baritone.

Now all the lovers of Wayne King's music know that he has excellent tone quality. How does he produce that deep, rich harmony that accompanies most of his string solos? How many of his audience know just how valuable his two baritone players are? Not many. But, should he omit his saxophones for just one number, his popularity would be as dead as an orchestra never heard.

Let us also give credit to the trombone that forms so much a part of his perfect, smoothly rounded-off harmonies which make his orchestra. Do we of the audience realize that without those three musicians his beautiful music wouldn't be. I do, and I'm here to state that a more perfect tone quality cannot be found anywhere other than in Wayne King's orchestra.

So that is what we mean by the importance of the saxophone in the orchestra.

Another sax tooter,

Lucille Rider

Who's Worst?

Paterson, N. J.

Dear V. O. L.:

Being a RADIO GUIDE enthusiast and a habitual reader of your V. O. L., I am forced to write. Time and time again I have read letters concerning the best dance orchestra and leader on the air. Now that we know who is the best, why look any further? Let's find out who is the worst dance orchestra and leader on the air while we're at it. (now don't crowd me). What the air waves need mostly: female baritones and good wood wind music.

Al Derrick

How It Works

Geneva, Illinois

Gentlemen:

Lauri Laukkanen suggests that we express our appreciation of real music by writing in to this department. But after you have written it, how are you going to get it printed? I have written in praise of standard and symphonic band and orchestral programs, but only once got past the office waste-basket.

I have just figured out the game the broadcasting stations are playing. It goes like this:

The station publishes its schedule, and sprinkles in a few really good programs—the Singing Strings, one of the national service bands at Washington, maybe a symphony. Each of these counts one. Then, when the time comes, they substitute the Chinless Wonder, in hillbilly songs, or the Rank Sisters, in three-part harmony and voices like rusty files, or some cooking expert who tells how to make cheese-cake with only $4.98 worth of ingredients. The punker the substitute program, the wider the contrast between what they promise us and what they actually give us, the higher score they rate; and if they can only substitute a ball game of some sort, it counts them a grand slam.

The CBS can not be too highly praised for standing pat and refusing to prostitute their service by cutting out part of the symphony's time and putting on some advertiser's junk. More power to them.

AWARDS IN THIRD BETTER RADIO CONTEST

The Third Better Radio Contest, covering the WLS National Barn Dance, drew letters from 1,381 readers of RADIO GUIDE. These letters were not up to the standard set by the comments received on "The Big Show" and "Myrt and Marge." The judges feel that entrants should make more careful analysis of the individual parts of the program; tell what is good and what is bad and why, and give more specific suggestions for improvement of the program as a whole.

First prize of twenty-five dollars in cash is awarded to D. W. Casady, 335 Sherman Ave., Council Bluffs, Iowa, for his criticism published herewith. The judges, despite the fact that Mr. Casady's comment was far from representing the general sentiment of the contestants, considered his entry the best of those submitted because of his clear thinking and constructive suggestions.

Gaylard L. Bogardus, Box 861, Rutland, Ohio, wins second prize of ten dollars for his careful analysis. It is obvious that Mr. Bogardus gave thought to his review.

The three cash prizes of five dollars each go to Edward C. Commers, Snowy Range Ranch, Livingston, Montana; L. Gertrude Stanley, 2745 Collis Ave., Huntington, W. Va., and Wales J. Carver, 3129 Hazel St., Erie, Penn. Each of these three entrants gave good analyses of the NBC Barn Dance broadcast and suggestions for improvement.

The judges feel that HONORABLE MENTION should be accorded the following, as reward for the excellence of their comments:

Mrs. G. J. Korn, 617 N. Main St., Berrien Springs, Mich.

Mrs. F. G. Burt 1510 Medora St., South Bend, Ind.

Leslie C. Miller, 347 N. Felto St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Fred C. Glass, 910 Belmont St., Davenport, Iowa.

Gwen Vandarwarka, 830 E. Hancock St., Appleton, Wis.

Lela Hall, New Diggings Wis.

Mrs. Rulauf Resetar, 607 W. Elm St., Carbondale Ill.

Louis E. Altwein, 1206 N. 13th St., St. Joseph, Mo.

Helen C. Lauber, 183 Shady Ave., Louisville N. Y.

Edna Brunow, 3361 N. 36th St., Milwaukee, Wis.

Owing to the fact that not even twenty percent of the letters told what artists they disliked as well as liked, it is impossible to give a correct summary of who are the ranking NBC Barn Dance favorites. However, 1,221 of the 1,381 letters or 88 percent voted for the program and 362 out of 383 letters, or 94 percent indicated a preference for Uncle Ezra. The table lists other preferred artists.

Perhaps the next most significant information yielded by the contest were the 167 letters, or twelve percent of all received, that complained of too much advertising.

The winners of the Fourth Better Radio Contest, covering the program "Dangerous Paradise," will be announced in RADIO GUIDE next week.

To me, the National Barn Dance, Program is a complete waste of time both to sponsor and listener. I live in a so-called "farming" section, but failed to recognize anything in this portrayal resembling any entertainment which goes on out here. To my notion, this program serves more to antagonize listeners in the great farm belt, likewise the "hillbilly" section, neither of which it typifies. It might amuse some easterners having a false conception of other sections of our country, but even this is doubtful, as the humor, music and artists presenting it are greatly inferior to the average.

Their advertising states this broadcast has been on the air for eight years; I am glad it has escaped me, heretofore.

The "National Barn Dance" program last Saturday evening, October twenty-eighth, was one of surprising variety, considering the name of the program.

The two poems were appropriate; the one about Hallowe'en had a bit of philosophy in it that could be taken to heart by ultra-sophisticated folk.

The music for the most part was enjoyable; "Ida, just as sweet as apple cider" was a bit too jazzy to suit my taste, but "Over the Waves" pleased as usual, and the three songs of sentiment were pretty one of which I liked particularly well, "Keep a Light in Your Window for Me."

The two characters on the gram which I thought were standing were Spareribs, Negro characterization was so and real as to be deceptive; Lula Belle, who possesses not wonderful a voice, but one which appealing, and particularly adapted to the kind of song she sang.

All in all, it was a good program—so enjoyable to me that I shall "listen in" regularly, although I never had before, being misled by the name of the program, and thus not realizing the variety presented.

ALONG THE AIRIALTO

THIS column is being written the morning after the night before. In other words, the night before was quite hectic.

It was the night that Smiling Abe Lyman and his music makers opened at the Hotel New Yorker. The lanky ork pilot is one of the most popular of the baton wavers Along the Airialto, which accounted for the huge turnout. Everybody who is anybody was among those present. If another couple tried to get in they would have had to climb onto the chandelier.

A few minutes after the clock struck twelve, a burst of applause rang out from the throng. The reason for the enthusiasm? Two of Lyman's colleagues were walking across the floor to take their places at a ringside table. They had left the respective night clubs where they were working and took time off to pay homage to their friend. When Abe saw them he jumped down from the bandstand, ran over to their table to extend a cordial welcome. Who were they, did you ask? Rudy Vallee and Paul Whiteman.

If I attempted to mention all the names of your ether favorites that were there, you would read nothing else but names for the rest of the column. Sooooo I'll just give you a columnist's eye view of what I saw as I made one attempt to dance around the crowded floor.

There certainly must be romance in the air. Last night, as at several other openings I've attended, I saw Phil Regan, the handsome warbler, and Vera Van, who seemed to be enjoying each other's company immensely. How's about it Phil and Vera? I'm sure my readers are interested. Then there was another couple that always seem to be enjoying each other's company (even though they are married)—Lee Sims and Homay Bailey. Bumped into them the other night at the St. Moritz Hotel, where Leon Belasco is drawing the crowds, and then again last night. Their perpetual smiles never seem to wear off. I certainly miss hearing them on the airwaves. Don't you?

Martha and Vel Boswell were also enjoying themselves. You know they just returned from the coast and Martha told me she met my boss on the train and said some nice things about me to him, not knowing he was my boss at the time. Thanks, Martha. I always did say you were a swell gal. I'll give you a cut when I get my raise. All told, it was one of the biggest turnouts ever to greet a maestro on his first night, and a good time was had by all.

Many columns ago I told you about Ella Logan, the gal whom Lyman found on Hal Kemp's podium in Chicago and whom he took to the coast with him. I told you of the sensation she created at the Coconut Grove in Los Angeles. Well, that night, making her initial appearance with Lyman in the cast, she had the mob around her when she did her warbling in front of the mike. This gal has a style that's plenty different. Remember her name and remember it was Marty Lewis who predicted she'd get to the top.

Studio Chatter

PRION HOPKINSON, THE young lass who plays the part of Mrs. Roosevelt on the March of Time, turned down an offer last week to go on the stage in order to continue with the news dramatizations. . . Which reminds us that another typewriter sponsor is planning to take to the CBS air with a Saturday night series of half-hours.

That much ballyhooed trip of Bing Crosby's from Hollywood to New York, with weekly announcements of his postponement of plans, now seems to be little more than ballyhooey. Bing has now decided that he wants a rest; he's very tired. So tired, in fact, that he is trying to get a furlough from his broadcast of four weeks or so. He has completed work on his picture, "Going Hollywood," with Marion Davies, and now is commuting weekly from Palm Springs to Los Angeles to do his airings. . . He probably won't come to New York at all until the beginning of 1934.

FRED WARKING AND HIS GANG will spend two weeks in Ohio making personal appearances at the end of November and the beginning of December, one in Cincinnati and the other in Cleveland. . . That thick French accent of Claire Maquette, mistress-of-ceremonies on the new CBS "Evening in Paris" Sunday half-hours, is the real thing. Her friends can assure you that she talks that way all the time. . . They say that M-G-M and Twentieth Century are both likely radio prospects for the coming season. . . That radio set manufacturer has renewed Boake Carter's CBS newscasts for the entire length of 1934. . . "Threads of Happiness," featuring Andre Kostelanetz, Tommy McLaughlin, and David Ross, may be a Sunday feature before long.

They're predicting big things for Patricia Dorn, who gets her first important assignment on the air in a new CBS commercial, due to start soon. But I'll lay even money they change the name to Patricia Dawn.

THE SPONSORS OF "Marie, the Little French Princess" are so pleased with the way that romantic series is going that they've signed on the dotted line for another long-term renewal. . . The recent elections in New York, involving LaGuardia, McKee and O'Brien, confused Jane Ace considerably, for she asserts that her father voted for William Jennings O'Brien all his life, and it was about time for him to stop trying. . . With the expression, "Where's Elmer?" running wild around the country, Gracie Allen has been asked frequently if Elmer is by any chance her missing brother. Gracie denies it, however, and says she doesn't want to be involved in any more man-hunts.

AMONG THE GUESTS of honor at the dinner celebrating Major Fiorello LaGuardia's election in the hotly-contested New York City mayorality battle, was Nino Martin, Columbia's young Italian tenor. . . A salute to Plymouth—one sponsor that's open-minded enough to follow advice of the radio critics. Notice how they've changed the Elmer Everett Yess scripts, with a new cast and an entirely new spirit in the scripts. My one constant reader will remember my beefing about the show when it first started. Plenty of the radio critics panned it, so the sponsors went ahead and changed the whole spirit of the program in mid-course an unprecedented step.

George Hall's wife believes in the saying, "Do as I say, but don't do as I do." She has helped quite a number of people along Radio Row take off much excess weight with her excellent diet but she herself can't resist the temptation to partake of sweetened victuals. Me too.

The newcomer will have his own orchestra and will be heard over the Columbia network as soon as they can clear the channels. . . Rosemary Lane, of Fred Waring's gang, took a screen test for Fox last week and it looks as if she will go to the coast to join her sister Lola, whom you've probably seen on the screen many times.

Whiteman's Award

FOR THE BENEFIT OF THOSE who may not have heard about the new Paul Whiteman award for the best American music, we print it here.

Declaring that there was urgent need for substantial encouragement of American composers seeking serious expression of the modern mood in music, Mr. Whiteman announced the institution of an annual award for the best American composition in modern form. To the winner, who must not be over thirty years of age, and who must be an American citizen, he will award annually a gold medal, to be known as the Whiteman Medal, together with a scholarship to one of the five important musical conservatories and sufficient money to finance and sustain him or her for a minimum period of one year.

Whiteman, who introduced Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue," and who otherwise has been a pioneer in fostering modern American music, has invited a tentative committee, of which Deems Taylor will be chairman, to help him select the prize-winning composition. Other members whom Whiteman hopes to have are Leopold Stokowski, Edwin Franko Goldman, George Gershwain and Robert A. Simon.

Professionals and amateurs both may compete, if they meet other qualifications. The compositions entered must be scored for orchestra, although the contestant does not have to score it himself. Piano copies alone will not be considered.

More Chatter

YOU READ HERE MANY COLUMNS ago that the Rhythm Boys may quit Whiteman when their contract expired. Said contract expired, hence you now hear a new set of Rhythm Boys. These are John Mercer, Jack Goodman and Jerry (brother of "Stormy Weather" Harold) Arlen. You probably recall Whiteman's first set of Rhythm Boys which included Bing Crosby, Harry Barris and Al (brother of Mildred Bailey) Rinker. . . Freddie Rich is using his own "Penthouse" suite (which has attracted so much favorable comment) as his new theme on those four CBS periods he does each week. The number took him two years to write! Freddie is now at work on his latest effort, "Moods of the Range."

What's to become of the old, NBC studios in New York? Sound Studios, the largest radio transcription outfit, is reported dicker-ing to rent several studios to make 5,000 recorded sustaining programs using a new process.

Program Bits

EACH TUESDAY NIGHT at 9 p. m. CST, over the NBC network, the Cunard Lines are going to take you on a mythical voyage out to sea. The scene will be the night club aboard ship. The talent will be the same that Nat M. Abramson, who is in charge of the entertainment for the steamship company, used on their summer cruises. Bernard Granville, well-known on the Broadway stage, will be master of ceremonies, and Sid Gary, who, you may recall, impersonated Eddie Cantor on those Ziegfeld broadcasts and was on CBS for half a year but couldn't get a break, will help entertain. Sydney Mann, whom they call "The Girl with the Violin Voice," will do the warbling, and Michael Markel's Society Orchestra, a newcomer to the airlines, will play for her as well as Gary. After the third broadcast the program will actually be broadcast from the Mauretania while on one of its cruises. A novel stunt and the idea sounds good.

I wonder if Ed Wynn listens to Phil Baker's broadcast, and if Phil listens to the Fire Chief's program? Wynn pulled a gag on Tuesday that Phil repeated Friday night and on the following Tuesday Ed Wynn told one of Baker's. And poor Milton Berle takes the rap for stealing gags!

Eddie Cantor's return, previously scheduled for last Sunday, was deferred a week to permit the comedian to complete his moving picture duties and come to New York for the first broadcast. Cantor and Rubinoff will travel east and take the microphones at the new Radio City studios of NBC in New York beginning this Sunday, November 19.

The Boswell Sisters, Connie, Martha and Vet, are back on the air and can be heard once more over a nationwide Columbia network every Monday and Friday from 10:15 to 10:30 p. m. CST.

Alexander Woolcott, the "Town Crier," who has been spinning his odd and entertaining yarns over CBS each Wednesday and Friday evening, starts on a new time schedule Monday, November 20. The new set-up brings him to the microphone from 8:15 to 8:30 p. m. CST every Monday and Wednesday. . . and I'll be back with you at this same space next week, so until then, HAPPY DAYS.
