International Yacht Races—Burial of a King—Marriage of a Prince and Princess—Coronation of an Emperor—Bigger Hours, More Stars, Wider Range of Entertainment—More Air Time Sold—What a Year Was 1934! . . . And 1935—

SPURRED BY a depression-scarred public, weak and wan from four preceding years of difficult times, radio broadcasting accepted the challenge of 1934 and last year reached to heights and achievements never before attained. By so doing, radio rounded itself out completely in the realm of music, drama, comedy, and the reporting of national happenings and world events—in every field conceivably open to the use of a microphone.

And 1934 went down in history as radio's record year in point of gross paid time used by sponsors. The listening public, its mind appeased by the stimulus of the arts brought to it by the loudspeaker, forgot its troubles and began to build anew on stronger foundations. There is no means of measuring the value radio's 1934 service has been to this nation. Suffice to say that when people had very little means with which to seek entertainment and culture, radio delivered the cornucopia—gave more than even a millionaire could afford to see and hear because of the time required.

Any first-class station, tuned in any evening of 1934, provided entertainment of the most balanced nature for the entire night, and free for the tuning!

DAVID SARNOFF, president of the Radio Corporation of America, sees radio as a strong stabilizing factor for 1934. Mr. Sarnoff says:

"Broadcasting, through its mass dissemination of information, has stood out as a stabilizing factor in all the period of economic readjustment, and especially in the year just ending. At a time when the average citizen is more interested than ever before in governmental and economic problems, broadcasting is taking into his living-room the actual voices of governmental and economic leaders.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT has spoken directly to the people, in his famous fireside chats, more often than any previous President. United States senators and representatives, federal officials, United States ambassadors and ministers, educators, state and local officials, and prominent citizens—all are being followed attentively by millions of listeners before home receiving sets. All the world's a stage for the speaker of today. Authorities in economics and government who were heard in America in the last twelve months included more from other countries than in any previous year, through the improved technique and greatly enlarged use of international programs brought to our shores by R.C.A. Communications, Inc., for broadcast on American networks.

"There is another economic contribution of radio which naturally occurs to a representative of the Radio Corporation of America, with its varied interests in research, manufacturing, broadcasting, and trans-oceanic, domestic, and marine communications. The radio industry is a large new force, speeding the messages of trade by radio-telegraphy, assisting in the sale of products through broadcast advertising, and giving employment directly to thousands of persons in its research laboratories, its manufacturing plants, and in the conduct of its services. In that, too, the radio industry is a stabilizing economic influence."

Is it any wonder that Merlin H. Aylesworth, president of the National Broadcasting Company, is proud of his network's accomplishments for 1934? Mr. Aylesworth, in reviewing the year, says:

"Radio broadcasting in the United States, through its influence upon the listening public, is bringing about a change in musical taste and appreciation which also is significant of radio's importance in other fields.

"Radio's influence in music has been so great that it is even causing a change in musical terms. Not long ago the phrase 'popular music' had a very definite meaning. In the minds of most people it meant 'jazz.' Now, however, through the cooperation of broadcasters and advertisers, music which formerly fell under the heading of 'classical' is also finding a place in the 'popular' column. This is a development which we had predicted and we are proud to see the prediction being fulfilled.

THREE YEARS ago this Christmas the NBC took a pioneering step when it began the first series of programs from the stage of the Metropolitan Opera House. For some years before that, the NBC had presented the leading symphony orchestras to the schools and homes by radio. The public response to this fine music increased steadily, and great American industries soon joined us, sponsoring programs of the best instrumental and vocal music. Not only are operas and symphonies now sponsored over the networks by national advertisers, but the presentation on the air of what we still call popular music, for lack of a better term, is the best to be found anywhere in the world.

"The radio audience demands and is entitled to every phase of fine entertainment, not only in classical and popular music, but comedy and the drama as well.

"We have been passing through a period of discouragement and distress, the dread of unemployment, the apprehensions of those who have been part-time employed, have brought worries and fears taxing mental strength to the breaking point itself. Under those circumstances, a new force entered the loneliest home and reached the hearts where anxiety reigned and I believe has given a new hope and new courage.

"The social values of radio broadcasting, growing every day in volume and in intensity, have affected profoundly the course of a great country and the trend of life itself. Our emergence from the world depression depends in large measure on the clarity of our conception of human behavior and the interrelationship of peoples in the world. Radio broadcasting, with its tremendous power of mass communication, has helped in this crisis to preserve the social order, if it has not indeed conserved the mental balance of individuals as they have fought a great battle against the fates. May we cherish this great art as a priceless gift entrusted to us by an advancing civilization."

WILLIAM S. PALFAY, president of the Columbia Broadcasting System, comprehensively covers the year's progress with this statement:

"Unusual problems and swiftly-moving events of vital significance to everyone during the past year have been giving radio unusual opportunities for broadened activity in the field of cultural and informative broadcasting, and also for the development of new theories of broadcast entertainment. Long and short wave channels are carrying to listeners discussions of domestic and international affairs by authorities of many lands to a greater extent than ever before. The air is becoming an increasingly important forum of public opinion. Momentous questions are being presented by speakers of opposing convictions. In 1934, for instance, an outstanding controversial subject has been the New Deal policy of President Roosevelt. Its supporters and its opponents have explained their views through the microphone. The President, himself, has regularly kept the nation's radio listeners informed of his administration's plans and accomplishments in a series of fireside talks prepared by him especially for the average citizen.

"The cultural requirements of listeners are being supplied with ever-increasing presentation of classical music performed by the great symphonic organizations of America and those from Europe, and by distinguished soloists of the concert and operatic stage. In 1934, in addition to the regular programs of the New York Philharmonic Symphony, Detroit Symphony and Philadelphia Orchestras, Columbia broadcast numerous concerts by noted chamber ensembles and quartets. A comprehensive instructive series has also been introduced, in which Howard Barlow conducts the Columbia Symphony Orchestra in outstanding works and accompanies the performance with interpretive talks. The series, entitled Understanding Music, is prepared with the cooperation of a distinguished committee from the Juilliard School of Music. It will continue in 1935.

DISCUSSIONS OF interesting international questions were brought to the American public from European capitals in such notable series as 'The United States and Europe,' in which Bernard C. Loder, Count Paul Teleki, Sir Evelyn Wrench, and the late Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss of Austria were speakers. George Bernard Shaw, H. G. Wells, David Lloyd George and the Right Honorable Winston Churchill were among those participating in weekly discussions of conditions in the British Empire under the title, Whither Britain? and the Ambassadors of Great Britain, Japan, Poland, Roumania and Finland participated in weekly discussions from Washington.

The American School of the Air concluded its fifth season and entered upon its sixth year of broadcasting a carefully planned curriculum to the nation's school children. The New York Philharmonic children's concerts were heard early in the year, and will be resumed in the beginning of 1935. A special series of Saturday morning educational entertainments staged for children in Carnegie Hall, New York, was broadcast by Columbia this Fall in co-operation with the United Parents' Association.

IN THE commercial broadcasting field there was much of cultural value during the past season. Program sponsors drew more largely upon fine music, current events, interpretations, economic discussions and child welfare problems for their material. The weekly broadcast to and from the Byrd Expedition continued throughout the year with extraordinary technical success. The reports from the men at Little America, 9,000 miles from New York, were received here with gratifying clarity.

"In a time when people were called upon more than ever before to help their neighbors, radio answered this call faithfully. Many public (Continued on Page 29)

Father Coughlin Speaks

ON SUNDAY, December 23, Father Charles E. Coughlin broadcast his Christmas Address from the Shrine of the Little Flower at Royal Oak, Michigan—"Following the Christ Child." In it he traced the revolution against Paganism brought about by the birth in the manger at Bethlehem; and he outlined the counter-revolution of Paganism under the leadership of the Caesars, in following a doctrine of "rugged individualism." "Christianity has flourished," he said; "and it will continue to flourish." But there is at work "right at our back door"—Mexico—"a counter revolution most diabolical."

"Whether you realize it or not," he said, "you have learned that Caesar Augustus—without his refinement and without his culture—has become incarnated. In the person of one individual—General Calles—a dozen Cromwells, a score of Neros, a hat-tallion of Machiavellis, walk again in this Lucifer let loose from Hell."

"There was not a cleric in all Mexico, not one Catholic priest for more than 50,000 lay persons, not a Catholic school open in all Mexico, but Calles was inaugurating the most astounding educational program in all history."

"As the little boys and girls walk daily into their classrooms they see printed in large type on the blackboards this sentence: 'There is No God.' That is the first principle. The second principle is the age-old companion of atheism, the heresy but nevertheless the psychological fact that through sins of sex, sexuality, even a child can be led away from his God. Therefore these communists have adopted the principles that such knowledge, such practice, must be inculcated early into the hearts and bodies of virgin boys and girls. Turn your minds from the manger at Bethlehem—come look with me into the Mexican revolutionary school, the antithesis to Bethlehem—the same school which Woodrow Wilson fathered when he paved the way for its functioning by lifting the arms embargo and making Mexico safe for the communists—the same school which Josephus Daniels helped to establish with the American Navy, at Vera Cruz."

"Blush not, my friends, for in your mind's eye you will see little children stripped naked—little children of both sexes not only taught to examine themselves sexually, but taught by public performance in the classroom how to commit copulation with each other. (I could hardly blame you for stopping up your ears.)"

"When I tell you, upon my word of honor, that in these revolutionary schools supported today by the Mexican government and as common as are public schools in our country, sexual perversion is openly practiced. Many other things of this sort could I tell you, but those things I shall pass over."

"Calles, this President of Mexico in disguise, so praised the work of the director of education who is perverting the children that he has given the director of education charge of all education in Mexico."

And the reason back of the Pagan revolution in Mexico, the revolution away from all that Christmas stands for? . . . Father Coughlin stated it clearly when he said:

"In our own times, to the lasting disgrace of his name, came Woodrow Wilson—with his democratic peace and practices of plutocratic luxury. I associate his name with that of Mexico because of his attitudes, because of his policies, which were practiced almost at the moment when vast fields of oil were discovered south of the Rio Grande, in 1912, two years before Wilson's election to the Presidency."

"It was found that the wealth of Mexico was associated not with the silver mines, but with her hidden liquid gold which, because of that trivial barricade known as an international boundary line, were barred from the Americans. But backed by the eminence of his followers, and motivated by men of greed, we Americans, through our President in that year of 1912 and the decade to follow, launched a diabolical propaganda which, through the columns

"The Herods Once More Are at Large," Says Father Coughlin. "It Is Your Duty to Be the Wise Men Who Will Remain Faithful to Christ . . . The United States of America Will Endure or Cease to Exist on Its Original Program of the Democratic Laws Upon Which It Was Founded . . . God Bless You—Merry Christmas"

The Shrine at Royal Oak, built under the guidance and through the efforts of Father Charles E. Coughlin of the press, fired the imagination of the American youth and the gullible American laborer and agriculturist with a so-called tyranny of absolutism of Mexico's President Diaz.

"Wilson raised the arms embargo in favor of two of this world's greatest scoundrels, Diaz and Carranza—two Dillingers if you will—two murderous masters who were paid to devastate the peaceful hill-sides and contented cities of Mexico."

"Then on April 21, 1914, Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the American Navy, ordered our navy, at President Wilson's command, to seize the port of Vera Cruz, which was Huerta's only channel for supplying the defense against the two Dillingers."

"Thus Woodrow Wilson raised the butcher in the President's chair of Mexico. It was Woodrow Wilson who muzzled the press of our own nation."

"He stopped the entire story of this intrigue from being printed in the columns of the New York World.—The same Wilson who at a later date was to expound to the world his fourteen points—the same Wilson who was to keep us out of war when with that campaign slogan still wet upon his lips he was entering us into the world's war—the same Wilson who traded the people who were too proud to fight while he was in the act of inciting revolutionists across the Mexican border . . . in the act of supporting anarchy and atheism against democracy—all for greed. We may as well have the truth."

In a story never before told in American journals, Father Coughlin said that two Catholic bishops were to be put to death in Mexico. Friends of the priests appealed to Wilson to intervene. Wilson refused to do this. Similar requests was made to Cecil Spring Rice, American Ambassador from the Court of St. James. Father Coughlin said the outcome of that appeal was this:

"Cecil Rice walked to his telephone, called the Japanese embassy, asked the Japanese Ambassador for immediate aid, and in less than six minutes—through the intervention of Japan, an alien state, at the request of England's ambassador—the lives of the two bishops were saved, when Woodrow Wilson refused to act."

"This pathological President was so intent upon the rape of Mexico that he persuaded Congress to reverse itself upon the Panama Canal. He cajoled our Congress into taxing our own American citizens for the use of our own canal to please England, in exchange for which England promised recognition of the revolutionary government of Carranza and gave a sort of brotherly benediction to Wilson's plan . . ."

After introducing what he said about General Calles, Father Coughlin said:

"Word comes from France, England, from every state of our union that Masons, Free Masons, from Presidents Polk and Buchanan down to President Franklin D. Roosevelt, are behind the scene to tear down the Catholics and to destroy the Christian religion. My friends, this I cannot—this I do not—believe. There is not an American Mason who could devise the plan in Mexico today. I have too many staunch friends in Masonry to permit me to believe this."

Father Coughlin then offered the co-operation of the National Union for Social Justice to "cry down this diabolical lie."

And he stated further, that "in the interests of social justice, in the interests of decency," our representative in Mexico, Josephus Daniels, should be removed.

"Christmas," said Father Coughlin, "is the beginning of the world's most far-reaching revolution. At the year of Our Lord's birth the Roman state finally had arrived at that point where legally the last trace of real religion had been destroyed. I mean that this was the occasion on which Caesar Augustus dared to call himself a god. This was the day when, by imperial decree, he forced the people of his empire to regard him as such. This was the very moment when he was ordering a new census of his citizens, believing that, like so many cattle, they belonged to the state—that children and their parents, robbed of all opportunity to worship the true God, must sacrifice their human rights to him. And like all other state possessions he identified with this new god, he had usurped the throne of the Creator."

This is what is being repeated in Mexico, according to the good Father.

"And," Father Coughlin stated further, "what's happening at our back door can happen in our back yard. Therefore Protestant, Jew and Catholic have all united in one common saying—remove this blot to our fair name. Remove from office one who aids and abets this atheistic communist crowned with the dignity of an American ambassador. We Americans will have no part in the socialization of the children of this nation, nor will we participate in the desecration of the sanctity of their innocent hearts. The world has not succeeded in getting along without God and in wandering astray from the Star of Bethlehem."

New Year's Eve at the White House

From Woodrow Wilson to Franklin D. Roosevelt Presidents Have Carried on the Tradition of a New Year's Eve Celebration—with One Notable Exception—and Always Meyer Davis and His Orchestra Have Supplied the Music. Which Presidents Danced, Which Did Not—Which Were Meticulously Formal, Which Were "Regular"—Together with Many Human Anecdotes About the Chief Executives' Parties as Meyer Davis Observed Them at First Hand—Make This a Set of Reminiscences Once Read, Always Remembered

A semi-nude girl brought into highlight by a light inside the bass-drum, was no incongruous note in the historic White House to Franklin D. Roosevelt, Junior

By Meyer Davis

When the transmitter of Station WJZ was no larger than could be accommodated on top of a kitchen table in Newark, New Jersey—as far back in radio as that—Meyer Davis was conducting the orchestra at New York's old, ultra-swank Waldorf-Astoria. And during the years since his programs were piped to that station at Newark, Meyer Davis has been identified with radio; millions of listeners have thrilled to his orchestral renditions—millions have appreciated as well his own musical compositions, chiefly those written for such special occasions as the return of Lindbergh immediately following the epochal flight to Europe, and the first Roosevelt New Year's Eve party at the White House. Always Meyer Davis' music has been distinguished by unique interpretation, and by selection of compositions of the better sort. Herewith are presented his reminiscences of gala New Year's celebrations at the Chief Executive's mansion at Washington:

The captains and leaders of World Affairs had departed from the East Room of the White House. It was 2 o'clock in the morning of New Year's Day in 1934, and the spacious room, which but a short time before had echoed to the laughter and dancing feet of a brilliant assemblage, now looked cold and austere in comparison; for only the immediate Presidential family and a few favored guests remained. The First Lady of the Land, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, defying White House procedure deeply imbedded in tradition, graciously strode over to the bandstand and personally thanked me and the boys in the orchestra for providing such "lovely and appropriate music" for the annual New Year's Eve party.

This may sound insignificant and unimportant to those who are not acquainted with the ultra formal rules of etiquette and the recognized styles and traditions which bind the occupants of the White House. Since 1918 it has been my honor and privilege to furnish the music for Presidential New Year's Eve parties, and always it was Irwin (Ike) Hoover, Chief Usher, or some secretary, who conveyed the President's pleasure, and not an immediate member of the Presidential family.

This is not the only precedent which the Roosevelts have smashed. Last year's party was the gayest affair held in the White House within the span of my experience. Whereas all the other Presidential parties were stiff and formal affairs, the Roosevelts insured a gay, spontaneous and joyful evening by inviting high-spirited youngsters from Groton and Harvard, and pretty sub-debs and debutantes from New York, Washington and Boston society.

What occurred in the White House last year after the main body of guests had departed, would have been impossible in the Wilson, Harding and Hoover regimes.

At the insistence of Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., a short, stocky Italian named Carlos Restigo, who made a living by pumping an accordion on a ferryboat plying between New London and Groton, Connecticut, had been invited to the party as an entertainer.

Restigo came to the party attired in the grand costume of what appeared to be a Spanish bull fighter. He wore flashy, blue velvet pantaloons, a gold satin blouse with a narrow red sash wound about his middle, and a gold turban set on his head at a gay angle. He was indeed a resplendent figure.

After the guests had departed, Restigo, the boys in the band, and Mario Braggiotti, the noted pianist, were invited to remain—by Mrs. Roosevelt, Franklin Junior, and Mrs. Anna Roosevelt Dall, the daughter of the President.

The heart of the poor ferryboat entertainer, bursting with pride and gratitude, could contain itself no longer. Seeking some means of showing his emotion, Carlos was seized with an inspiration. He grasped his precious accordion and began to sing and play lustily Oh, You Great Big Be-yoot-i-ful Doll, to Anna Roosevelt Dall.

For a moment the illustrious Roosevelts were shocked to silence, but in a second the First Lady had recovered her composure. Smiling at Restigo, she seized the hands of her son and daughter and led them into the song. They sang several choruses before Carlos packed away his accordion and departed.

The East Room of the Executive Mansion, where all the official entertaining is done—showing, in the background, the gold piano

Anna Roosevelt Dall then prevailed upon Braggiotti to play her favorite tune, April in Paris. As Braggiotti seated himself at the piano, Mrs. Dall hoisted herself atop the piano, where she perched a la Helen Morgan.

One further incident which will illustrate perfectly the new social deal of the Roosevelt family: Last year my drummer, Barney McWilliams, somehow forgot to remove the picture-painted canvas which graced his bass drum. We had set up our instruments and were busy playing the opening strains of Hyde Park Glide, a number I had especially composed for the occasion, when Chief Usher Muir approached us hastily and suggested in no uncertain terms that the light inside the drum, which exposed the picture, be extinguished immediately. It goes without saying that McWilliams obeyed the order immediately, for he had really forgotten all about the picture.

A few moments later young Franklin Roosevelt glided by and called the matter of the extinguished drumlight to McWilliams' attention.

"Hey, there!" called young Franklin. "Your drumlight is out!"

McWilliams nodded and the couple glided by. A few minutes later Franklin, Junior waltzed by again and noted that the light was still out. This time he called the matter to my attention, and I explained apologetically that the picture on the drum was rather inappropriate for White House purposes, as Chief Usher Muir had pointed out; and for that reason the light had been dimmed purposely.

Young Franklin's curiosity, naturally, was whetted by my mysterious reference to the picture, and he prevailed upon me to allow the light to be plugged in so that he could view the picture. His face broke out in a wide grin, and he disappeared for a few minutes. Finally he reappeared with the Chief Usher and I saw them engaged in earnest conversation. Usher Muir shook his head and then approached the ill-stand. He grudgingly consented to have the drum illuminated. The picture to which Muir objected was that of a semi-nude young lady!

Two large portraits of George and Martha Washington look down upon the guests. In the center of the room, against the wall, is a beautifully decorated Christmas tree. On two small mantelpieces rest the marble busts of Presidents Washington and Lincoln, also the busts of Benjamin Franklin and Alexander Hamilton. Ancient brass candelabra, heirlooms of President Jackson's time, flank the statues. Two huge windows on the north side of the room, and one each on the east and west sides, are draped in heavy gold brocade.

In the northwest corner stands a gold Steinway piano, presented to the White House about twenty years ago, and said to have cost in the neighborhood of $22,000. It is a beautifully carved and inlaid instrument, and on the inside of the drop is painted a striking scene of ladies of an imperial court in costume.

Up until 1918 the United States Marine Band had

Among last year's entertainers was Carlos Restigo, ferryboat accordionist, who in a moment of overwhelming emotion brought about a situation that will live in White House history supplied the music for the New Year's Eve parties in the White House. When Mrs. Edith Bolling Galt, a Washington society matron, married President Wilson, however, the custom changed. I had played at several social affairs for Mrs. Galt prior to her marriage to the President, and thus it came about that I was selected for the signal honor of supplying an orchestra at the Executive Mansion.

The Marine Bands played nothing but Sousa marches adaptable for dancing, and Strauss waltzes. Syncopation was just entering the melody field, so I ignored the Marine Band tradition and played several "hot" tunes, among which was Alexander's Ragtime Band. I may have shocked many staid guests, but I was content in the knowledge that President and Mrs. Wilson were well pleased by the change.

President Wilson was an austere individual, but withal very pleasant. He loved good music, and he requested his favorite tune several times. For I'm Going to Marry Yum-Yum, a song from Gilbert and Sullivan's The Mikado. President Wilson didn't dance—possibly because he was very ill at the time—but Mrs. Wilson, a charming hostess, danced with many of the guests. The Wilsons were grand hosts.

With the exception of last year's Roosevelt party, the Hardings conducted the gayest New Year gatherings. The Harding guest lists always were prodigious—as many as five and six hundred. President Harding was the only Chief Executive among the three I served—President Coolidge refused to carry on the tradition of the New Year's parties—who danced. He was an expert at the waltz, fox trot, one-step and two-step, and while I know of a certainty that he could tango, he sat out the Spanish numbers. Mrs. Harding didn't dance, but contented herself by mingling with the guests.

Peculiarly enough, President Harding's favorite tune was a Spanish number, a semi-classical serenade called

Meyer Davis says of President Roosevelt's party last New Year's Eve: "This was the gayest affair within the span of my experience"

La Paloma. Mrs. Harding's favorite tune was End of a Perfect Day, and both the President and Mrs. Harding requested these numbers several times.

The Hoover parties were sedate affairs. The President and Mrs. Hoover, very methodical people, figured out every detail to the nth degree. The Hoovers rarely, if ever, invited youthful people to their parties. Their invitation lists were almost exclusively made up of the staid dowagers of the residential society set, diplomatic members, attaches and military representatives of foreign countries. There always was plenty of gold lace and gorgeous uniforms in evidence.

President Hoover seldom remained for more than half an hour at these affairs. He usually stayed long enough to greet the arrivals, whereupon he would repair to his room and retire, leaving Mrs. Hoover to entertain the guests.

President Hoover's favorite tune was a popular ditty called Here Comes the Sun. Even after it had passed into the limbo of forgotten things, the song retained its favor with the President.

Whereas the Roosevelt children are extremely regular, and they insist upon my calling them by their first names, Herbert Hoover's son, Allen, is patterned along the stern lines of his father. One simply wouldn't think of addressing him familiarly. It was always "Mr. Allan" or "Mr. Hoover," and he in turn always addressed people as "Mr."

The Hoover parties always started and ended with military-like precision. The opening number invariably would be played at 10 o'clock sharp, and the closing number had to finish exactly at the stroke of 1 o'clock. Mr. Hoover always stationed an aide near the handstand to see that the affairs terminated on schedule. I recall that once I was forced to terminate a song number before it was half finished, in order to conform with this ruling.

Supper is served about midnight in the main dining room, which adjoins the East Room. Presidents Wilson, Harding and Roosevelt always served generous suppers to the men in the orchestra, who dine in a cellar room. President Hoover's suppers, however, were extremely frugal.

As an example, Presidents Wilson, Harding and Roosevelt always provided my musicians with full course meals—appetizer, meat course, vegetables, salads, coffee, pastry, ice cream and punch. Prohibition was repealed during President Roosevelt's regime, so last year we were served with schooners of beer.

The Hoover menu for the boys consisted of a salad, ice cream, and water!

These New Year parties are not at the expense of the State. The hills (Continued on Page 25)

ball (off Aunt Pandora's chandelier). Most prophets and seers are unreliable. Whoever takes them seriously becomes what Grandfather calls a prophet-taker, or, to use Aunt Pandora's term, a seersucker. However, my own predictions are strictly homemade and can be trusted. To a radio-ridden world, then, I submit the following prognostications:

THE YEAR WILL BE MARKED by bigger and better radio programs. (Note: that is just put in as a gracious gesture to NBC and CBS, and you don't have to pay any attention to it.)

TWO MILLION PEOPLE will become disgusted and stop listening, while another two million who stopped last year will forget they were disgusted and start listening again. Five hundred advertisers will discontinue their broadcasting, and a half a thousand will commence.

TELEVISION will be announced—for 1936, maybe. ROCKEFELLER will build no more cities. GEORGE ARLISS will turn down radio offers, and important European programs will be broadcast from 4 to 6 a. m.

DURING JULY AND AUGUST, programs from Little America will describe how cold it is there. TED HUSING will be even more boyish in his enthusiasm over sporting events, and GRAHAM MACNAMÉ will continue to get excited. Some gal will be elected Radio Queen, and nobody will be able to recall who was it last year. (It was IRENE BEASLEY, in case you've forgotten.) A certain announcer will win the diction medal and lose it in the bottom bureau drawer.

There will be NO MAJOR WAR, because FLOYD GIBBONS is busy and can't go. A radio performer will assassinate three program supervisors, but the affair will be hushed up. EDDIE CANTOR will drink various other brands of coffee. There will be no Christmas programs during the first week of July, and no July 4th material during December.

OUT OF 1439 "brand new ideas" submitted to 6,328 prospective sponsors, six will be new. Of these six, two will be put on the air. Twelve Hollywood Guest-Artists will collapse in blue funk before broadcasting, but will recover when reminded of the rule no-play—no-pay. A new singer will be discovered by either NBC or CBS in the Spring, and will be dropped in the Fall. ANDY will get mixed up with some woman, and AMOS will have a tough time trying to straighten him out. Fourteen comedians, including PERKINS, will pull the one about "who was that lady I saw you with last night?" or a variant thereof. Highbrow magazines will publish articles deploring the intellectual level of radio, but the public won't read them.

For the life of me I can't help getting Forty-Five Minutes in Hollywood confused with Hollywood Hotel. Can you keep them straight in your mind?

SHIRLEY HOWARD has joined the list of lady-singers with husband-managers. Her other-half, Norman, by profession a writer and newspaper man, is now devoting a part of his time to handling her business affairs. Other feminine carolers whose lords and masters direct their destinies managerially are JANE FROMAN, RUTH LETTING and ANNETTE HANSHAW. None of them ever has an argument about percentages. And so far I've never heard of a divorce on the grounds of breach of contract.

But it would seem funny to hear a marriage ceremony include a promise to "love, honor and obey with a commission of ten per cent."

Tini and Irene have invented the CROSBY cocktail—one drink and Bing! PHIL BAKER adds the JEKYLL, and HYDIE—one drink and you're another man. But in a place near Radin City they serve the Elevated Railroad—one drink and you're riding high.

Something actually new: that preliminary announcement campaign planted by PHIL COOK prior to the opening of his new program December 21, on the NBC red network. For several days Phil popped here and there into the 20-second station intervals between programs, always in the guise of one of the characters of his coming broadcast. A few seconds' dialogue between the character and the announcer conveyed to the audience that the new Cook show was on its way. Incidentally, Mrs. Phil Cook is now on the air with Phil. He acts as her manager, too.

Ray Perkins opens a new series entitled Feenamint National Amateur Night commencing Sunday, December 30, at 6 p. m. EST (5 CST) over the CBS-WABC network.

Plums and Prunes

By Evans Plummer

WE SEE by the desk calendar that 1935 is upon us, whereupon we take the liberty of setting down a few—not nearly all that are needed but a few regardless—resolutions for astute sponsors to make:

- 1.—A complete abolishment of studio applause and laughs.
- 2.—More gagged commercial announcements, or—
- 3.—If the program's type does not permit gagging, the employing of shorter sales talks into which have been worked at least an essence of interesting news matter.
- 4.—A continued progress toward dramatic perfection, as exemplified this past year by the Sunday Radio Theater series and previously by Roses and Drums and the March of Time.
- 5.—Dispensing with, or leaning less heavily on, the somewhat worn musical program formula of dance orchestra, girl blues and male singers. Variations of this program are not unwelcome—if they are really variations.
- 6.—The return of Charles Winninger as Cap'n Henry in the Show Boat hour.

Many thanks to the stars of the airlines for their many and splendid Christmas greeting cards, not forgetting the one from the champion listener, Niagara Nell. A number of the greeters have received prunes only, no plums, during 1934—which shows that they can take it! Hats off.

Morton Downey, NBC-WJZ network at 7:15 p. m. EST (6:15 CST) Tuesdays and 4:30 p. m. EST (3:30 CST) Sundays. Heard Tuesday, December 18. In Morton Downey's first commercial ether opus for many Carolina moons, he is supported by veteran actor Guy Bates Post in a distinctly new and Pollyannish narrator role, and accompanied by a fair-to-good orchestra under the baton of Ray Smatra. Downey's voice and choice of songs were as excellent as ever. But the piffing role and lines assigned to such a grand actor as Post were lamentable. As a whole, the production—even to the evening hour the Tuesday show is spotted—smacks greatly of imitation of the old Camel Quarter Hour. Too bad. Plums to Downey and orchestra; prunes to the miscasting of Guy Bates Post.

The Carnival, NBC split network at 11:30 a. m. EST (10:30 CST) on Thursdays. Caught December 20 staging Christmas Party that left nothing to be desired. This half-hour show is one of the outstanding efforts to popularize the daytime periods, and the sponsor deserves much credit for the array of talent he has provided—including contralto Gale Page, the King's Jesters trio, Roy Shield's orchestra and m. c. Don McNeill. Carloads of plums!

Phil Cook's Show Shop, NBC-WEAF network at 7 p. m. EST (6 CST) Fridays. Another old-timer returned to the dials on December 21 with a new vehicle which should carry him far. Gone are all the old characters of the multi-voiced Cook and in their stead are a brand-new set of mirth-provoking folk, all products of Phil's agile vocal cords. Clever was the greeting at the close of the premiere of one of Cook's famous old characterizations, Grandpa, who wished success to the voice juggler on his new enterprise. Plums aplenty, Mr. Cook, and keep your material up to that of the opener.

The League of Martin Porter Haters vs. Al Pearce argument over the All-American microphone eleven for 1934 came to a startling end with more dissected Porter columns sent to this calumniator than the editor informs were printed originally. Despite this mystery, here are the results of the popular consensus:

DANCE BAND: Approximately equally divided between Fred Waring, Hal Kemp, Ben Bernie, Wayne

King, Eddy Duchin and Jimmy Grier.

TENOR: Frank Parker at the top with Richard Crooks, Jackie Heller, Morton Downey, Donald Novis and Dick Powell close runners-up.

BARITONE: John Charles Thomas well in front. Also ran: Arnaud Girard, Everett Marshall and Conrad Tibbault.

COMIC: Undisputedly Jack Benny's berth. Substitutes: Fred Allen, Jae Penner and Eddie Cantor.

CROONER: Bing Crosby, with Rudy Vallee a handful of votes behind.

GIRL POPULAR SINGER: Confused with Balladist. See Balladist.

BALLADIST: Irene Beasley; Leah Ray leading the second team; Loretta Lee, Vera Van and Gertrude Niesen, scrub-substitutes.

SOPRANO: Gladys Swarthout, with Jessica Dragonette, Countess Olga Albani and Hazel Glenn in tackling distance.

MONOLOGIST: Alexander Woolcott. Although hardly to be classed here, Father Coughlin almost tied Alex. Also named: Franklyn McCormick and Lowell Thomas.

COMMERCIAL ANNOUNCER: Don Wilson. Still running: John S. Young, Bob Brown and Poul Douglas.

MICROPHONE QUARTERBACK: Ford Bond with Don McNeill and Harry Van Zell on the bench.

Tag Lines: Echo of Alex Woolcott's plea for the admittance to hotels and public buildings of blind men's dog guides is the Chicago city fathers' decision to pass a law recognizing the trained canines. . . . It took ten years for Tony Wons to miss a broadcast, but when lumbago laid poor Tony low on Thursday, December 20, it happened. . . . Jerry Cowan, late of the Crime Crows cast, has rejoined Chilton Webb in the Windy City run of As Thousands Cheer, the musical-comedy in which he understudied Webb and had a principal role while it was in New York.

Are You Listenin'?

By Tony Wons

It is appalling to think of the hold money has on the human heart. Just think... MONEY! How everybody struggles for it! How they sweat and suffer for it! How some cheat and lie for it! Money! We are all guilty. We can't help ourselves. It has been bored into our souls from the beginning of time that money is the greatest thing in the world. Wars are fought for it. They are quarreling about money right now, and a world war may spring from the quarrel.

A little girl gives an amusing editorial about men and women. She says:

Men are what women marry. They drink and smoke and swear, but they don't go to no church. Perhaps if they were bonnets they would. They are more logical than women, also more zoological. Both men and women sprung from monkeys, but the women sprung farther than the men.

An old lady stopped a ragged little boy on the street and asked, "Son, can you direct me to the People's Savings Bank?"

"Yessum, for a quarter."

"Isn't that rather high pay, my boy?"

"No, mum. Not for a bank director." (Signed: GEORGE JESSEL.)

There was a negro maid who got her first job with a swell family... you know, one with money. Well, on the second day the phone rang and her mistress asked her to answer. The maid picked up the phone, listened and said, "Yassum, Yassum. It sure am." And hung up. A minute afterward the phone rang again and again and she said into it, "Yassum, Yassum. It sure am."

"What's the idea?" asked her boss. "Who was that out the phone?"

"Oh, it was jest one of dem fresh country folks call up. She say 'Is dat Number 3478?' I say 'Yassum'. She say 'Is Mr. Jones dar?' I say 'Yassum'. She say 'long distance from Washington?' I say 'It sure am'. And ah hang up."

Someone says that by the time a man learns to keep still he knows much worth saying. Sure, that's true. Every thing is made backwards. When a fellow is young he struggles to get money. He could enjoy it then. When he gets old he may get money, but then his capacity for enjoying it is gone, his life is burned out—and there he sits with his gold.

People are funny. You can find in this world someone who will talk and write for—and someone who will talk and write against—any proposition that you can imagine. I don't care what it is, there will always be the pros and the antis. I have even heard an argument that two and two make five.

Someone here remarks that a trombone player is the only one who gets anywhere by letting things slide.

I have often wondered how strange it is that the more unfortunate a person is in the world, the more he has to pay for help. You would think that a race that prides itself on being civilized, Christianized and humanized would arrange things in just the opposite manner. For instance, if I am just a little bit sick, say a cold or a headache or a headache, and I have a doctor. He gives me some medicine and lets me go at say five dollars all told. Well, I am able maybe to pay fifty.

But if I am taken seriously ill with some disease that threatens my very life, and am laid off work for many days and my money vanishes—why, the bill I get from the doctor is $100,000. It's the same with the law business. If my offense is very small and does not worry me much, a lawyer will get me out of it for almost nothing.

But if it is a matter of life or death, I must add to my worry the predicament of having to face a huge bill if my case is successful. Of course the more difficult the case, the more work.

But it doesn't seem right to put a heavy premium on misfortune and suffering. It just doesn't seem right, that's all.

I have a new definition for an optimist. You know how it is when you go downtown on Saturday night, maybe to a movie, and every parking space on every street is taken; and so you're about ready to give up—when all at once you spy a nice big space just the place for your old bus. There it is waiting for you right in the middle of a long string of parked cars. Well, an optimist is a man who sees that and doesn't immediately conclude that there is a water plug there.

Martha Mears' attraction and popularity seem to increase with her radio experience. She sings over an NBC-WEAF network every Sunday.

More of Tony Wons' homey philosophy is heard on 'The House by the Side of the Road' Sundays at 5:30 p. m. EST (4:30 p. m. CST) over an NBC-WEAF network.

Reviewing Radio

By Martin J. Porter

THE COLUMBIA Broadcasting System has asked me to ask Radio Guide and its readers for a bit of help toward staging a ghost-to-ghost broadcast. Through the medium (no gas) of the readers, it is hoped that a real haunted house, located not too far from a telephone line might be made the scene of a spirit broadcast. The special events department of Columbia, haunted by PAUL WHITE, thinks it would be a swell bit of entertainment if it could put on the air the actual sounds, wails, moans, groans, chain-clanking, et cetera, which make up the routine of spooks.

Mr. White is not looking for a house which is haunted only occasionally. The place he is seeking must be a house in which the ghosts work on a vaudeville schedule of five or more appearances a day—a place, to be brief, where one can go—on one date—with a microphone and pick up the spectral doings without interfering with the rest of the Columbia schedule. Into such a place—if you readers will be kind enough to locate one—will traipse engineers, a couple of spiritualists, a scientist and an announcer. Old castles are preferred, but really any hangout for disembodied spirits will suffice. If you know of such a place, drop me a line—or better still, notify the editor of Radio Guide, or Mr. White, at CBS, 485 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

The French government has decided to make the most of radio, which has been a rather sickly sort of thing. In Paris the Foreign Minister has fostered the organization of a Francaise-Amerique Club, and in America, a sister club, American-France, has been organized.

Beginning the first week in January, an exchange of programs with American networks will begin. The programs will be inaugurated at simultaneous dinners—one in New York, the other in Paris.

But if you ask me, France is getting all the better of the arrangement.

By the time this gets into print, a deal probably will have been signed by the Montgomery Ward mail-order house, and the NBC, to inaugurate a Sunday afternoon series of Bible dramas, under the title of Sons of Jesse. NBC and Columbia have been in rivalry for this account for nearly four months.

Another new account for the NBC starts New Year's Day. It is to be sponsored by the RCA-Victor Company, and will consume a full hour in the afternoon. The following week the hour will be switched to Wednesdays. The first program will feature a galaxy of Red Seal record stars. The second show will be devoted entirely to PAUL WHITEMAN, and the third to RICHARD HIMBLER and his orchestra.

I was talking to a network executive today and learned an interesting plan from him. This gent pointed out to me that sponsors are flocking in such numbers to the radio nets that practically all the good hours are sold—and there is already a large waiting list.

"Consider that situation," said the executive, "and you will see how it gives the networks an opportunity to be independent and choosy. That's what we've been waiting for these many years. Now we can afford to do a little dictating. In 1935 we shall be telling prospective sponsors that 'we have room for this kind of a musical show, or 'there is an hour available in which you can put on a comedy feature.' It will be the networks who decide what kind of a show it will be, and not the sponsors. In this way we can balance the broadcasting day just as the manager of a vaudeville house balances his show. We shall choose the type of opener and closer, and all that goes in between—and will that be a big help to the radio listener?"

MAJOR BOWES started it, with the WJZ Amateur Hour in New York. WOR followed suit and put BIDE DUDLEY in charge of an amateur broadcast.

WJZ and its chain then came along and scheduled in a weekly amateur show from Harlem. Since then, half a dozen other amateur shows have bobbed up. Now comes the first network amateur show. It will be sponsored by Freeman, and will replace the Gershwin broadcasts. RAY PERKINS will be in charge of it. And there's a chance for EVANS PLUMMER to get on the air.

No less than fourteen manufacturers of medicine for children or baby food, have deluged DOCTOR DA-LOE with offers of radio contracts. He it was who brought the quintuplets into the world.

But to all of them the home-loving old doc has replied with an emphatic "NO." Altogether, within 1935, he could have piled himself up half a million bucks, but he's that kind of a guy—likes to stay home and smoke his pipe and let somebody else chatter up the airwaves.

PAUL WITGENSTEIN is here from Europe, and is going on the air once before returning. The date is January 2, the station WJZ and the time 10 p. m. EST.

Mr. Witgenstein, if you don't remember, is the concert pianist who has only his left arm. The right arm was taken off by an artillery shell in the World War. And Mr. W. is tickled pink that it wasn't the left one because with the remaining arm he can play stuff that he couldn't play if he had only the treble arm.

Witgenstein is probably the only pianist in the world for whom such composers as Ravel and Richard Strauss take time out to write special music. It is written for piano and is scored for one hand only—the left one.

ELSIE JANIS, who is the NBC's first woman staff announcer, had been studying the job inog at NBC for two weeks before I discovered who she was, what her plans were. She has taken the job to win a bet. Her first real assignment will be a broadcast from Ellis Island Christmas Day. JOHN ROYAL, who has the other end of the bet (that Elsie can't take it) is seeing that she gets all the tough breaks.

Inside Stuff

Along the Airialto

By Martin Lewis

IT WOULD be a pleasure for me to send a greeting card to each and everyone of my readers. Since that is impossible, will you please accept this as a personal greeting, along with my sincere wish that the New Year will bring you much joy, happiness and prosperity.

Amateur radio shows have cropped up as the rage in all parts of the country of late. Several New York stations have been getting more than their usual share of the limelight for their broadcasts of young hopefuls. Deluges of telephonic or post-card votes have been received for the cream of the tyros. And the old vaude hook, in the form of a gong or a bell, rings off the air the lads and lassies that are just too, too had. Now the trend moves to the networks, for the current GEORGE GERSHWIN shows will be replaced by a National Amateur Night broadcast over the CBS waves, under the banner of the same chewing gum laxative sponsor. The new series will start December 30 to be heard every Sunday from 6 to 6:30 p. m. EST (5 to 5:30 CST), with our own RAY PERKINS as the master of ceremonies. Each week votes cast by listeners by mail will determine the best performer of the half-hour. That performer will appear on the program two weeks later for pay. Undoubtedly this year is the biggest in radio's history for both the amateurs and the obscure professionals, with so many programs offering them opportunity for recognition.

Agency Blocks Hayes

Am I mortified! Am I Booin! Am I chagrined! No sooner do I get through telling you how elated I am in anticipation of HELEN HAYES' debut on a regular series, when word comes to me that the deal is off and this splendid actress will not be heard. Everything supposedly was all set, with the exception of the John Hancock on the contracts, when the sponsor shifted advertising agencies. Then things started to happen. The new set-up will probably feature CONRAD THIBAUT, VIRGINIA REA and DON VOORHEES' orchestras.

At the cost of a neat telephone call, EDDIE CANTOR valed to JESSE BLOCK and EVE SULLY over the transatlantic telephone from Switzerland last week. . . . He just called up to say "O-l-e-e-O-Lay-ee. . . . When Eddie broadcast from Italy recently, after his tete-a-tete with Mussolini, NBC rebroadcast his talk to America. And were their ears pink when Eddie talked about his forthcoming CBS series!

The fact that FRED ALLEN renewed his contract with his present sponsor won't be news by the time you read this—but there's a clause in his new contract that is news. It stipulates that the noble Allen, physique must be clothed in formal wear at every Town Hall broadcast. And his wife, PORTLAND HOFFA, must swish in satin. The comic was considering a break with the show because of the great amount of work entailed in writing, acting, and directing an hour's program each week, but reports have it that his new contract has a much larger figure, which was enough to persuade Fred to carry on until early next summer.

Bee to Sting Bores

Confirming my scoop in the last issue, the new Chesterfield set-up starting January 7 will feature a 40-piece orchestra under the direction of ANDRE KOSTELANETZ. A 14-voice chorus and a novelty quartet will harmonize in a new and distinctive style with the Kostelanetz music.

When BEATRICE LILLIE starts her nonsensities next Friday night, she will inaugurate a new kind of radio comedy in which she will burlesque our pet bores—the uninvited guest, the guy at a party who insists on getting up to sing, the fellow who knows all the answers before you even say anything—and such. CHARLEY WINNINGER (Captain Henry) good soul that he is, calls Bee Lillie on the phone several times a day with helpful advice as to microphone technique. Charley and Bee are old pals, and he's rooting hard for the radio success of the musical comedy star.

When FRED WARING made his debut on the airwaves two years ago, he popularized a vogue in radio with his male glee club idea. When Fred inaugurates his new weekly one-hour show, he will again introduce a number of new novelties—among them being a girls' glee club. This combination will work individually, as well as in co-operation with the male group composed of members of Waring's band.

East and Dumke, those perennial funsters, were caught napping by our candid cameraman early one yawning. The boys overslept and had to rush to the studios for their early morning broadcast in their nighties. Maestro B. A. Rolfe is waiting for them to break into the dance of the Woolen Nightie

KILDCYCLE CHATTER: The Sunday Sociable, projected title for a program which would have featured FRANK LUTHER and his wife, ZORA LAYMAN, will not replace the GENE ARNDLO show heard Sunday afternoons, as planned. . . . The Sponsor who pays SIGMUND RDMBERG'S salary will foot the bills for a show starting February 10, featuring MARIO CHAMLEE, operatic tenor, a male quartet and a little symphony orchestra. . . . HARRY RICHMAN is trying to decide whether he should spend his Winter in Florida again, if and when he does, RUDY VALLEE will step into his role in the Broadway musical, Say When. . . . ARTHUR TRACY, the Steel Singer, returns to the airwaves over NBC for a shoe concern starting early in January. He will be heard twice a week. . . . Mme. Schumann-Heink starts her regular weekly Sunday series for Hoover on January 6. . . . The following day, Lile Savers inaugurate their twice-a-week Monday and Wednesday series over the CBS network.

We've had some famous authors writing for radio. The latest to interest himself in kilocycle scripts is REX BEACH. So be prepared to read of an announcement that a series of Beach yarns will hit the airwaves soon. . . . Phil Cook's Show Shop is the title of a new weekly series heard each Friday night, featuring the man of many voices, Dkay Kernel! . . . Another new show heard before my breakfast time over the NBC-WJZ networks is a series written by DOCTOR ROCKWELL. The characters are a man and wife who read the news, and if you know the Doc as I know him you may expect something ridiculously funny.

A new order of the day from NBC headquarters prohibits announcers from identifying themselves on sustaining broadcasts. So from now on the familiar, "Your announcer is —" will be missing, even from commercial broadcasts, unless the sponsor insists.

News-caster BOAKE CARTER will stage two special parties this week. The first will be in honor of the New Year, of course, and the second will come on January 2, when he observes the second anniversary of his Columbia debut. And his colleague, EDWIN C. HILL, just invested in a retirement annuity policy that runs into big figures. . . . Understand that RUSSEL JANNEY, producer of the O'Flynn's, is feuding with the powers-that-be at CBS.

Believe it or not, DEEMS TAYLOR, who is translating the famous operas in the Chase and Sanborn coffee shows, admits that many of the operas lack sexiness (if there's such a word) and he's adding as much fire to the scripts as he can get away with. . . . DAVID ROSS, CBS announcer, has been bitten by the bridge virus. He devotes several hours a day to the game. . . . Here's some Reel news: JESSICA DRAGONETTE will be seen and heard in Paramount's Big Broadcast of 1935, which will feature many of your favorite ether stars. BABY ROSE MARIE, also has been engaged for this flicker. . . . LAWRENCE LIBBETT received a call from a Hollywood agent and has signed a five-year movie contract with them. . . . BLOCK AND SULLY have signed with Sam Goldwyn to do one picture a year, which will probably be with their pal, EDDIE CANTOR. . . . TITO GUZAR will also do some film work, having completed negotiations with Fox. Tito leaves for the coast about the end of February, and will continue his broadcasts from Hollywood. . . . And OSCAR BRADLEY, top pilot on the WILL ROGERS programs, has signed with the same company as musical supervisor, and leaves for Hollywood early next month.

Grofe to the Drake

BANDSTAND AND BATON: FERDE GROFE and his excellent crew of musicians invade the Windy City and settle down at the Drake Hotel, replacing EARL BURNETT. The deal for PHIL HARRIS and LEAH RAY to go into this spot fell through for the same reason that RAY NOBLE wasn't permitted to in the U. S. A.—union trouble. ALLEN LEAFER follows AL KAMELIN into the Tavern-on-the-Green and also will double at the famous Brass Rail with another of his bands. . . . ABE LYMAN is being heard these late nights on a sustaining schedule from the Paradise Restaurant in New York. . . . CLYDE LUCAS and his musical crew shift from the Netherland Plaza Hotel in Cincinnati to the Book-Cadillac in Detroit on January 4, and early in the spring Lucas will replace OZZIE NELSON at the New Yorker. . . . The PAUL PENDARVIS Band is back in the Chatterbox of the William Penn Hotel, Pittsburgh. He is heard on KDKA and on the NBC-WJZ chain at 12:30 a. m. EST (11:30 p. m. CST) Wednesdays. MAXINE GRAY, the charming songstress, deserted KAY KYSER at the Blackhawk in Chicago, and has joined up with her former boss HAL KEMP, at the Hotel Pennsylvania. . . . DEANE JANSI left Kemp to go into a musical comedy. . . . The sponsors of the three-hour Saturday night Let's Dance program will put on a special broadcast New Year's Eve for the same period over the combined NBC networks, so if you stay at home roll up your carpet and have a good time. . . . If you like your music in the Hot-from-Harlem style, tune in on NBC's new Harlemaestro, WILLIE BRYANT, every Tuesday and Thursday afternoon.

In a recent poll IRENE WICKER'S program was voted the most entertaining show on the air for the kiddies. The Singing Lady's popularity was confirmed recently when she had to take to her bed with an attack of la grippe. For several days after the announcement of her illness over the air, sacks of mail were delivered to Miss Wicker, all of the letters expressing the hope for her speedy recovery and an early return.

Ups and Downs of Radio

From time to time I've read letters in VOL from disappointed tuner-inners because their favorite programs left the airwaves. Not until it hit home did I appreciate their feelings. Can you imagine anyone getting up at 8 a. m. just to hear a radio program? (I shut the windows and go back to bed though). Well I did, and now the Breakfast Club no longer has a Chicago outlet, due to a commercial moving in—and am I mad! Come on, you Chicagoans, let's get together and yell—and loud!

I wondered why PAUL KENNEDY featured most of the old favorite tunes during his broadcasts. Now comes the answer from the Unmasked Tenor. "I feel that people get tired of hearing new songs repeated so often over a short period of time and forget them within a month or two. The best songs, the ones the people really like to hear, are revived after a year or two, so I rarely sing a song which is less than a year old." Pat, dem's my sentiments, and I expressed myself in this department months ago.

Mother Schumann-Heink

By Carleton Smith

"So Many Good Friends Have Helped Me, I See the Way Back as Dotted with Stepping Stones of the Kind and Loving Hands of Little People Who Have Helped Me." So Speaks the Companion of Kings

Madame Schumann-Heink as she may be seen in her dressing room today making up for a stage appearance

Married three times—mother of eight children, grandmother of eleven, great-grandfather of five—living to see her fame become legendary to a young medium of entertainment—friend of kings and commoners—universal mother: This is Madame Ernestine Schumann-Heink.

Few persons are better able than is Carleton Smith to tell her life-story—because of the closeness of his personal association with her, and because of the delicacy of his appreciation of her art and of her position in the musical world. All the wealth of his talents has been poured into that life-story, of which this is the second instalment:

THERE WILL be no soup for you today, my poor boy!" Mme. Schumann-Heink greeted me. "Mother does not cook now; there is too much work—the new radio contract, and much else beside!"

Her accompanying gestures repeated with unconscious fidelity the grief of "no soup," and the strenuous vigor of "too much work."

It is a great pity that she cooks no more, for she is an artist at it. I said so. "Ya! I know I can cook!" she says. But, having attained in full measure her childhood's ambition "to be one of the world's greatest contraltos," we can easily absolve her from duty in the minor arts. Yet—I thought laughingly of the soup served at our last meeting.

I asked her how old she had been when she first began to sing.

"Oh! I think I sang in my cradle!" she replied with a laugh. "In Austria the air is full of music. Everybody sings! But I think I cannot remember farther back than when I was three. From then on I sang always—and I danced always—and I acted! In my mother's kitchen, with a so-big kitchen apron draped about me for costume, I danced the Czardas! My mother said there was a devil in me—or a gypsy!"

NO—I did not go to the theater then—I was fourteen years old before I saw the inside of a theater. But there was much dancing, and there were circuses—Oh, did I tell you about the time I made friends with all the good, kind circus people?—all but one monkey who was what you call anti-social, and would not make up!"

Her chuckle was rich and fruity. "They had such good things to eat, and they were so friendly, the nice people of the circus! And at that age I was always hungry! When they saw that I was—oh, so willing to stay to supper they teased me and told me I must clean the monkey's cage. They thought I would not do it. But I cleaned it well, I tell you! The monkeys thought so, all but one who did not want to be so clean. He scratched my face! I am sorry to say that I came back many days to the circus to the good food so finely flavoured with garlic—and to ride the big, flat-backed horses. They were days when my parents sent me to school—playing what your boys call 'hookey'!

"My father found out—and did I get a thrashing! He did not like the idea of the theater for me. He just could not think of his little Tini as a truly great singer. My dear, sensitive mother understood, though she knew well the hard way I would have to go! So many good friends have helped me—many names you would not know. Oh, it is a long way, child, from there to here! I see the way back as dotted with stepping stones of the kind and loving hands of little people who have helped me, and the big, generous hearts of the great artists of the world!"

"You have known them all, haven't you, Mother Schumann-Heink?" I asked eagerly, for I wanted to hear of these legendary figures. "All the wonderful and famous artists of your generation have been your friends. Tell me of your first entry to the theater, and who it was you worked with?"

"There were many small starts, singing in church choirs, little hits like prologues or epilogues. In Hamburg I had such a hard, bad time. But then there came a great day for me, and a great new beginning of things. I met Hans von Bulow. He was a pianist of the first class, indeed, and an excellent composer and conductor. A pupil of Liszt he was; he married Liszt's daughter, Cosima, you know. She afterwards divorced him, and married Wagner."

"There was a festival in Hamburg. Along with symphonies and other compositions, there was the Rhapsody, with an alto solo, and male chorus at the end; and of course orchestra accompaniment—Hans von Bulow conducting. I sang the solo. The chorus was from the Cecilia Song Society of Hamburg, with Professor Julius Spengel their conductor."

IT WAS A great day of happiness for me, even though it came in the middle of my time of greatest trouble, just think! We were to sing the Brahms Rhapsody, and I had the big part. And who was sitting out in front but Johannes Brahms himself! And von Bulow conducting! Oh, the beautiful music, how I loved it! And how I poured out all my heart and all my voice for the wonderful man, Johannes Brahms, who had made this music for me to sing! The great good fortune I had, too! The people liked me, and called me back for an encore, and there was so much applause. Then Johannes Brahms himself came on the stage, and I had to take a bow between him and my dear Hans von Bulow. So much happiness! And I so young a singer!

"That was my wonderful, wonderful day! It was like our first love—nothing that came after that could equal the happiness of that young success."

"So good von Bulow was (Continued on Page 27)

Chief Ed Wynn the Perfect Fool

Ed Wynn Made a Fortune by Producing Some of the Most Successful Musical Comedies Broadway Has Seen This Century—and He Lost a Fortune Trying to Start a New Broadcasting Chain. Here Is the Story Behind Both Colossal Ventures

By Jack Banner

For all of his success in vaudeville, Ed Wynn took a long time to convince musical comedy producers that his talents were suited to their particular field. It was Florenz Ziegfeld, peer of glorifiers, who gave Wynn his first chance—only, at the eleventh hour, to cause him the most disappointing moment of his life. But an accident projected Wynn into an opportunity of which he made the utmost, with the result that his future as a musical comedy star was assured. This is the fourth and final instalment of Wynn's life story:

WHEN the Passing Show returned to Broadway, Wynn was confronted with a rather unusual situation. Another Shubert show, playing on the same block, was fading rapidly for lack of a suitable comedian. The Shuberts prevailed upon Wynn to double in both shows.

To expedite matters Wynn arranged for a running entrance through the front of the other house, taking the main aisle and leaping over the orchestra pit to make his bow to the audience.

Everything proceeded smoothly until the second theater changed doormen. The night of the change Ed came hustling down the street wearing an Alpine hat, a putty nose, and elongated, flapping shoes. The uninitiated doorman took one startled look at the weird figure and tackled him forthwith, thinking no doubt that he had captured a madman. After a short struggle Wynn broke away and ran into the theater and onto the stage. Minutes later, in the midst of his routine, two cups and an enraged doorman marched down the aisle and dragged him from the stage!

WYNN was appearing in the Shubert Gatties of 1919 when the actors' strike was called. The strike marked the real turning point in Ed Wynn's life. Up to then he was just another high-salaried comedian. After the strike he emerged as the successful producer of The Ed Wynn Carnival, The Perfect Fool, and The Grab-Bag, three outstanding smash hits that put him into the millionaire class.

During the strike he campaigned vigorously for the actors, fighting the producers and managers tooth and nail. He could have watched the struggle from the sidelines, as he was an established star and had little to gain by campaigning for his less fortunate acting brothers. His friends warned him that he would be ostracized by the producers because of his efforts in behalf of the downtrodden actors.

"Don't be crazy, Ed," they pleaded, "you have little to gain and everything to lose. Forget about taking sides." But Ed Wynn refused.

In a few weeks the actors and producers settled their differences, and everyone returned to work—everyone except Ed Wynn. His friends were right. Owners and producers blacklisted him from all their theaters.

Wynn had enough money to retire, but the thought of doing so never entered his mind. It took years of trouping to make of Ed Wynn a stage clown, but the transition between Wynn the actor and Wynn the producer embraced six weeks.

The Chief doesn't mind being surrounded by girls from his shows—any time, any place. This bevy is from his success, The Laugh Parade

A caricature drawn by Ed's fellow artist, Xavier Cugat, celebrated tango director of a Let's Dance orchestra

He retired to his Long Island home for those six weeks, and when he emerged he had written the book, lyrics and score of his sensational hit, The Ed Wynn Carnival. He leased his own theater, and the show ran in New York and on tour for 117 weeks—an all-time record for that period.

THE STORY of The Laugh Parade is an epic of courage and sublime faith. It was to be the most pretentious of all the Ed Wynn productions. . . . The Perfect Fool, The Carnival and The Grab-Bag were to be feeble efforts compared to this opulent offering. The Laugh Parade he called it, but the audiences didn't laugh.

A two-weeks' tryout on the road grew into a three-months' jaunt, for Ed Wynn feared to bring the show to New York. Even the hinterlanders called it a flop and a turkey. . . . how, then, would blase New Yorkers receive the offering?

Wynn couldn't scrap the show. More than $250,000 of his savings were represented in the effort. Night in and night out Ed Wynn tried to doctor The Laugh Parade. . . . desperately and hopefully, he attempted to inject the missing spark. . . . but the show went from bad to worse. Broadway shook its head. Wynn was through. He had overshot his mark.

BUT ED WYNN wasn't through. On the road he rolled up his sleeves and pitched in with renewed zeal. He rewrote the entire show—new score, new music, new lyrics, new gags. He wrote and rewrote a hundred new shows before he was satisfied; then he searched his brain for every comedy situation he had picked up in his thirty-odd years of trouping. Hundreds of gags and comedy situations were thrown away before he decided on one. Finally he was satisfied. By the time he took the show to New York the play represented almost a $350,000 investment.

But Ed Wynn wasn't worried—much. He felt confident now that he had a winner. And he was right. The turkey of the road turned into one of the brilliant successes of New York. The show ran on and on to capacity houses. Gradually the red notations in the ledger disappeared. Wynn had turned a $350,000 blunder into a success that netted almost as much as the investment outlay.

Then came his Texaco offer.

Since his entrance into radio two years ago, the fool Fire Chief has installed a great many changes and improvements. It was Wynn who began the practice of dressing to fit a role. He changes his costume as many as six times for a half-hour program, not because of any desire to impress his radio audience, but because he feels that changing into the clothes of the character he is acting, helps him live the part. Now most comedians follow that lead.

HE IS the most superstitious man in show business. His pockets are studded with scores of little good-luck trinkets—coins, rabbits' feet, medals, miniature elephants with raised trunks, and Chinese charms.

No story about Ed Wynn would be complete without a reference to his famous shoes. These shoes probably are the most dilapidated brogans extant, but Wynn wouldn't take a million dollars for them. Twenty-eight years ago the shoes were purchased by Wynn at a cost of $150 and to date the cost of keeping them in repair has reached a sum in the vicinity of about fourteen hundred dollars. There isn't a single piece of original leather left on them, for Wynn has worn them at every stage and radio performance since the day he purchased them. He has insured them for $100,000 against loss or theft.

Grace Moore

By Alice Pegg

This Charming Star of Stage and Screen and Radio Started Life Preparing to Carry Spiritual Uplift to the Chinese. Instead She Elected a Career in Music—But She Still Is the Essential Missionary. Here's Why

I'M OUT literally to knock the high hat off of music," declares Grace Moore, little blond rebel from the ranks of the musical purists. "I'm going to sing for, of and to the people—and not sing for the purpose of proving myself a lady or a great intellectual."

In announcing her debut on a series of regular Tuesday night sponsored broadcasts, to be inaugurated January 1, the National Broadcasting Company comments that Miss Moore "will have entire charge of the programs even to selecting her own songs!"

Which is correct in theory. But in practice it is not strictly so. The public will choose Miss Moore's songs. Grace Moore started in life as a religious missionary. Her medium has suffered a change, but she still is the essential missionary, one destined to carry the message that music has been removed as the scepter of a snobbish culture—that it stands revealed as a spiritual stimulant for all.

In the very shrewd mind of this Jellico, Tennessee, girl, opera is not on its last legs. It still is on its original legs, but they have collapsed without the required support of the masses. Its unhealthy survival at the expense of an opulent few was certain to come to an end once the public in general acquired a medium like radio through which it could derive the rich message in music.

Grace Moore is authorized to speak of music by virtue of her contact with it in every conceivable form. She has not always been the glorified songstress, the pet of the Met, and the toast of the musical sycophants. She has known the rigors of the village choir and the disappointments of indifferent success in musical comedy.

She has known, too, what it means to be repulsed at the very door of the great New York opera house to which she later was welcomed warmly.

HER broad-mindedness about bowing to mass taste is directly opposed to her own background. She was one of five daughters of a wealthy Tennessee hanker and mill-owner. There was every reason why she should adopt society's false attitude about music as a social stepping-stone.

But fortunately her early training controverted her point of view. At the outset of her career she became interested in religious activities, and was closely affiliated with a variety of church enterprises. She taught a Sunday School class, and spent her Sabbath afternoons leading a children's choir. When the question of her future had to be decided, she elected to complete her theological studies and carry the spiritual word to China.

Her choir work had revealed a voice of rare quality, but no particular attention was paid to its development until she went to Ward-Belmont finishing school in Nashville, Tennessee. There her mind was diverted to the potentialities of her talent. The change in aspirations was completed when she was taken to hear Mary Garden, then on a concert tour.

Amenable parents sent her to a Washington, D. C. school of music, where the possibilities of a career were fully revealed to her by the performance of Carmen by Geraldine Farrar. Opera became her goal. Her first step toward its achievement was a one-time appearance in the nation's capital with Giovanni Martinelli.

There followed shortly her first adventure in rebellion. To study music for cultural development was one thing with the Moore family. To follow it as a career was something else. Flight seemed the only means to circumvent her parents' objections, so Grace Moore resorted to it. She went to New York and for six months managed to escape detection by her father and mother. While she sought musical comedy work unsuccessfully, she sang for her supper in a Greenwich Village cafe. Here her parents located her but they were unable to prevail upon her to return home.

MORE job-hunting followed. Finally Charles B. Dillingham, won by her persistence, made her understudy to Julia Sanderson, in 1922, in Hitchy Koo. Miss Sanderson became ill and Miss Moore stepped into the role. Then came a trip to Europe followed by three seasons in music and comedy.

But she still thrilled to the thought of opera, so back she went to Europe, this time to Milan, where fate sent another agent in the person of the immortal Gatti Cavazza, of the Metropolitan. Through him she made her debut in La Boheme. This was in the very opera house where she had failed in a previous try-out. Now she was welcomed as a brilliant star. There she remained for the seasons of 1928, 1929 and 1930.

As had become habit with her, she studied her celluloid imperfections and determined to eradicate them. Her current picture, One Night of Love—and her newest radio contract—are the answers to that fine sense of self-appraisal and consequent growth which is the key to Grace Moore's accomplishments.

Grace Moore will begin her new song cycle Tuesday, January 1, at 9 p. m. EST (8 CST) over an NBC-WJZ network, in a program sponsored by the Vick Chemical Company.

Miss Moore scored one of the outstanding hits of her professional life in the recent movie, One Night of Love—from which the above camera study was taken

Famous Composers

By Mark Herringham

ANTON DVORAK (1842-1904) took the folk music of Bohemia and—through excellent musicianship in the art of composition—made it an acknowledged part of cosmopolitan music. All the world knows his New World Symphony—an excerpt from which will be played on NBC's Music Appreciation Hour Friday, January 4, under the baton of Walter Damrosch. He is perhaps best known for Humoresque.

Dvorak's life musically began among the songs of the people—for he was the son of a butcher and innkeeper—and not in a more exalted home environment where he might have been influenced by music of a vastly different sort. A natural enjoyment of the music he heard around him, coupled with great talent in reproducing it—turned the boy Dvorak to a deep love of Bohemian folk-tunes.

His father was annoyed. He wanted Anton to become a solid citizen like himself—a small man perhaps, but of assured position; he did not like to see him desert all thoughts and duties when a strolling player came along. But this is what he had used to do. Consequently, the boy quickly learned to sing. Next came mastery of the violin. Then he mastered the organ, and began to study harmony.

The youthful Dvorak went to Prague to continue his study. There for a while he lived the life of a struggling student—a life romantic in the estimation of people who never have lived it, but crushing in its poverty and deprivations when actually experienced.

Fortunately, however, Smetana—the first genuinely Bohemian composer—realized something of the young man's talent, and helped him. Liszt also assisted Dvorak. He performed his works and praised him.

Anton Dvorak

By this time Dvorak, the natural musician, had acquired something more than a peasant tunefulness. He had become an excellent musician well schooled in the German technique as exemplified in Mozart, Beethoven and Schubert—whom he had studied with complete thoroughness.

As a consequence of this Dvorak has reached greater heights than his predecessor, Smetana. While the latter remained a Bohemian composer, Dvorak took the music of his native land and gave it an international standing. Yet he never really deserted the songs of the countryside when he moved into more sophisticated musical company. He took them with him.

America owes a special and unique debt to Dvorak. For it was he who, with his cultivated appreciation for folk-music, taught this continent and the world the rich musical value of the American Negro's folk songs. In fact, the New World Symphony is based upon Negro folk ideas.

The composer's appreciation of the tunes of the transplanted black man was most evident during his tenure of office as director of the National Conservatory of Music in New York. By that time, of course the once-struggling student of music had come to enjoy the material fruits of his genius. His salary in the New York post was $15,000 a year.

Speaking of his success, his richness of talent, and his simplicity, one of Dvorak's biographers describes him as "... a veritable Schubert in fertility. It is pleasant to add that he got universal love in response to this more than Midas-like transmitting power of his, and that the poor Bohemian boy, after becoming rich and famous, died full of honors, but as simple at heart as ever."

Red Snow

Calling All Cars

By Jud Henry

Radio, Defender of Law, Sprang into Action Immediately after That Red Snow at Holt, Michigan, Was Discovered—and Almost as Soon, Radio Got in Its Work of Swift Retribution for a Terrible Crime

HURRY, mother! I must practice my Christmas piece before school." Twelve-year-old Leone Georgia Love tossed her auburn curls impulsively. Enthusiasm suffused her athletic young frame as with a visible glow. "Yes, dear." Her mother smiled as she tucked a sandwich and two generous slices of cake into the girl's lunch-basket. "And you have your Christmas seals to sell today."

Leone wrapped her arms around her mother and in a moment was dancing on her way, a quaint little bareheaded figure in blue and white checkered dress, tan stockings and black shoes.

This world's goods are not too plentiful with the Love family, but not even this could dampen the spirits of Leone, so eager to help persons even less fortunate than herself, by the sale of Red Cross seals, and to participate in the Christmas exercises at the Lott district school in Holt, Michigan.

But Leone's mother did not share her enthusiasm at that moment. She was worried, on that morning of December 5, 1934, as she gazed across the dimensionless glare of the first big snowfall of the season. Mrs. Howard Clifton Love always experienced a twinge of worry when her children left for school.

They had to walk a mile and a half, through a patch of timber and down the Michigan Central Railroad right-of-way—a path of potential danger. Mrs. Love sighed. Mothers can only hope and pray.

LITTLE Leone skirted the gaunt woodlot, crossed a frozen field, and approached the railroad tracks through a gate. All the world was white with new-fallen snow.

She had walked only a short distance along the track when that indefinable instinct that warns all beings in the hour of danger began to trouble Leone. She glanced back. A few steps behind was an excessively thin man, more than six feet in height, hawk-featured. His eyes had the expressionless stare of the possessed. In the crook of his arm was a .22 rifle.

Gasping in terror, Leone broke into a dog trot. He advanced on her. His loose lips spoke a monstrous proposal, its implications only dimly realized by the child. He beckoned toward the woods. His features flexed into an insane grin.

Scene of the murder of little twelve-year-old Leone Georgia Love—who died clutching the Christmas seals she intended to sell

Actual indentation in snow-covered earth, where Leone's body was forced in an attempt to give it permanent concealment

"You leave me alone!" The girl faltered. "I'll tell my sister on you."

His countenance darkened. He lifted the rifle and—

At sound of the shot ragged sparrows fluttered into the air, startled from their perches on the telegraph poles beside the tracks.

It was Miss Resine Gorton, of Lansing, teacher at Holt school who gave the alarm. Anxious because Leone hadn't arrived, along with a brother and sister, Miss Gorton telephoned the authorities. She then got in touch with Harold Love, Leone's eighteen-year-old brother, employed at the Holt Pharmacy. The youth started for home over the course customarily taken by Leone.

AT THE same time the voice of justice began to speak. Radio, upholder of peace and order, spoke with the tongue of Operator M. A. Roberts, of WRDS, Michigan State Police radio station—the first and the largest state-operated police radio:

"Calling all cars . . . Calling all cars . . . Missing persons report No. 3640 . . . Leone Love . . . L-e-o-n-e L-o-v-e . . . disappeared on way to Holt School at 7:47 a. m. today . . ."

Following a description, Operator Roberts requested all officers in Lansing and vicinity to be on the lookout. This was followed a few moments later with:

"Attention Car 57. Go to the Love home. Trace this girl's movements from the time she left this morning . . . Attention Car 57 . . ."

Troopers John L. Horvath and Joseph Pierce, cruising in South Lansing, wheeled obediently in the direction of Holt. Within a few minutes after little Leone had been missed—before the school clock had reached five minutes after nine, and while the little girl's trail should still be easy to follow—radio had set the search in motion.

Meanwhile, Harold Love proceeded on his quest. At their humble home his mother sat with face pressed against the windswept glass. All the fears she harbored became living torments. It was with the greatest difficulty that searchers had persuaded her not to rush out into the snow to look for little Leone. They did not want an hysterical woman impeding the search, and the mother had howled to their insistence. Now she could only wait, and that seemed hardest of all to do.

But her son's experience was more appalling by far. Starting from the school, young Harold Love began to search along the railroad tracks.

"Leone! Leone!" shouted the young man.

"Leone! Leone!" an echo mocked him from dense growths of timber, as the wall of trees threw back the sound. And the calm serenity of that white, snow-hurled landscape mocked him, too.

THE BOY seemed to be walking, dreamlike in a nightmare world of dazzling, formless whiteness. Then suddenly—there was red.

Blood in the snow! It was the one touch of color in all that shrouded countryside. A great, angry splotch of red—with tiny drops leading away.

Frantically, Harold plunged down the track, following the pitiful trail of red drops. Had the child been struck by a train and dragged down the track, he wondered? Suddenly he stopped and picked up a little folded piece of paper. Inside were thirteen pennies—the thirteen pennies Leone had shown him that morning, proud that she had sold thirteen Christmas seals to her friends.

No! It had not been a train, Harold realized suddenly—as the dreadful trail of red drops led away from the track. It went over the shoulder of the embankment, down its steep side and—the tracks of a man's large feet, Harold saw, now paralleled the line of red.

Recklessly, the boy hurled himself down that steep slope. Horror was in his heart, but his fists were clenched. He sensed what to (Continued on Page 28)

On Short Waves

By Ray Brennan

Time Shown is Eastern Standard

IN A RECENT dispatch to Charles A. Morrison, Allan A. Gulliland, Berlin correspondent of the International DXers Alliance, discloses some important information on the new Zeesen wavelengths. He states that DJN (the new Zeesen transmitter on 9.54 meg) has taken up a regular service on a beam directed to South Asia, but often heard here. It operates from 3:45 to 7:15 a. m. and 8 to 11:30 a. m.

Using a different aerial DJN beams on Central America from 5:15 to 10:45 p. m. This transmitter is not actually located at Zeesen hut at Königswusterhausen—two miles from Zeesen.

A new wavelength with the call DJQ (15.28 megs) will probably be put into regular use January 1, for an early morning program to Eastern Asia. The wavelength of DJI (17.76 meg) is used irregularly for special international program exchanges with South America.

DJD, Zeesen, has altered its wavelength slightly (to 11.77 meg) so as to avoid any interference with GSD Daventry, which employs 11.75 meg.

New Year's Shows

DJC, Zeesen, 16.02 meg offers "Die Märkische Truhe" (A Leisure Evening with the Brandenburg peasants at 7:30 p. m. on Sunday, December 30. On Monday evening, December 31 (New Year's Eve) DJC will put on a special national broadcast, "A New Year's Eve," starting at 5:35 p. m. and continuing throughout the evening. At 8 p. m. the German short wave stations will send their best wishes for good luck during 1935.

The next international good-will broadcast to be presented in the series arranged by the International DXers Alliance is scheduled for Sunday morning, December 30, from 9 to 10 a. m. when "MOSCOW CALLING," will be heard through U. S. S. R. stations RNE (12 meg) and RKL (15 meg). This special broadcast direct from Moscow has been arranged through the cooperation of the U. S. Embassy.

All day long on Monday, December 31, the short wave dialer will be hearing New Years ushered in in some part of the world. It would be well to remember that at 7:30 a. m. Monday morning it will be midnight in New Zealand; at 9 a. m. it will be midnight in East Australia; 10 a. m. EST is midnight in Japan; 1:30 p. m. is midnight in India; 5 p. m. is midnight in Moscow; 6 p. m. means midnight in Germany; 7 p. m. midnight in Great Britain; 10 p. m., midnight in Buenos Aires; 3 p. m. EST on Tuesday, January 1, mid-

BETTY LOU GERSON

She's from Birmingham, Alabama, this beautiful southern lass, and her accent is as pronounced as her pulchritude. Hear her as a dramatic actress on The Story of Mary Marlin, which begins on the NBC-WEAF network New Year's day and will be heard daily except Saturday and Sunday at 12 noon EST (11 a. m. CST) night on the Pacific Coast, and finally 5:30 a. m. EST will be midnight in Hawaii.

Reception Review

For period of December 13-20, as reported by Charles A. Morrison, International DXers Alliance:

For once we are able to report a great general improvement in short wave conditions for the period under review.

One of the most thrilling, and dramatic items of the weekly Byrd Broadcasts has been the two-way conversations between the men in that lonely Arctic outpost and their loved ones at home. During the closing minutes of Wednesday's broadcast on December 19, several of the "folks here at home" sent their Christmas greetings to their absent ones in Little America. Just what this actually meant to the men, separated by some 10,000 miles from the warmth of their own firesides, is not hard to imagine.

We were successful on this same broadcast in picking up the weak signal of KFZ on channel No. 11 direct for a few minutes, and although the fading was deep and slow, and intelligibility poor, we still got a great kick out of it.

This is the third time we have been successful in receiving KFZ direct at the official Radio Guide Listening Post at Bloomington, Illinois.

THE 19-METER BAND has been fair to good with GSE, Daventry (15.14 meg) and PONTOISE (15.24 meg) vying with each other for best performances during the early morning period of from 9 to 8 a. m. PCJ, Endhoven (15.22 meg) was the best we have yet heard them on Wednesday morning, December 19.

THE 25-METER BAND has shown a great improvement and GSE, Daventry (11.86 meg) has been a fine signal both on their early schedule of 6 to 9 a. m. and their No. 8 transmission from 9:15 to 10:45 a. m. PHH, Huizen (11.73 meg) has been exceptionally good during several mornings. RNE (12 meg) was heard with early tests with WQO, New York, on Friday morning, December 14. DJD was heard on 11.77 meg two different mornings during the week—a mighty good haringer of better conditions as this transmission is beamed on Asia.

THE 31-METER BAND also shows signs of waking up. DJA, Zeesen (9.56 meg) has been heard on different occasions during the week. GSB, Daventry (9.51 meg) has been best in the early afternoon. PRF5, Rio, (9.50 meg) remains surprisingly constant week in and out. One of the best signals in the evening is COH, Havana, Cuba, (9.46 meg)

THE 49-METER BAND for a change has been good both on the European stations and the South Americans. GSN, Daventry (6.05 meg) has been word perfect during some of their 6 to 8 p. m. transmissions. DJC, (6.02 meg) has ranked from fair to good. Best South Americans remain YV4RC, Caracas (6.37 meg); YV3RC, Caracas (6.15 meg); HJLABB, Barranquilla (6.44 meg); PRADO, (6.62 meg) and a new station, TIX, at San Jose, Costa Rica, Central America, that has been very good this week on 5.80 meg.

Tuning Chitchat

ZRO, Rome, Italy, on their 9.78 meg frequency has been excellent all this past week, being best from about 3 to 5 p. m. We suggest you put this station on your daily S. W. menu if you like your variety hours with a Continental Flavor.

This week's Big Thrill came on Tuesday afternoon, December 18, when a friend—Carl E. Whitehouse, of Normal, Illinois—called on the telephone and said he had a strange station on the 25-meter band speaking in some unknown tongue. By the time we had the signal tuned in the voice had stopped, but a two-tone signal with the last note a long, drawn-out quavery wail, was in progress.

We tuned in the tone signal for maximum strength and very shortly a guttural French voice was heard to say, "Allo-allo, Buenos Aires Cen. Allo-allo-allo, Buenos Aires Cen. Allo-allo-allo Buenos Aires Cen., Radio France, F-Say-Kah."

After calling a few more times, apparently unsuccessfully, Radio France ICK signed off. A search through several lists brought our conclusion that ICK is in Morocco, North Africa. This is indicated by the call prefix, although we were unable to locate it on our lists. If anyone else has heard this station, we would like to learn its exact identity.

Music in the Air

By Carleton Smith

SEVERAL READERS have taken exception to my remarks briefly stated about MR. BRUNO WALTER'S conducting of Wagner. I wrote, and I still feel, that he is not the ideal Wagnerian conductor.

Certainly, there is much that is enchanting in Mr. Walter's Wagner. But it lacks perspective and dimension, and, if I may say it, the true breadth and sweep that is Wagner at his best. Mr. Walter's indwelling sentimentality, which serves him so well when he is conducting Heber and Mendelssohn, is for me distasteful in his readings of Wagner.

Unlike TOSCANINI, he does not follow the composer's expressed intentions. He will upon occasion speed a climax until the music, instead of sweeping to its height as a great tide of life ascending from unimaginable depths, becomes a mere frenzy of sensual excitement.

Mr. Walter finds it difficult to project the emotional and imaginative content of Wagner's greatest pages when he concerns himself expressly with their constructive aspects. It is not that he slights details. On the contrary, he usually treats structural detail with delicate care. But let him stress, for example, the architecture of the music in the Good Friday spell of Parsifal and a large part of the mystery, the spiritual luxury, and the inner drama evaporate. Unfortunately, I cannot have the secure feeling with him, that I have with Toscanini, that to his way of thinking form and emotion are inseparably correlated.

Different Tastes

This is not to say that I dislike Mr. Walter. His familiar traits rank him among the most popular and deeply esteemed conductors of our time. His vogue in certain quarters borders on the sensational. And deservedly so. For the grace, the delicacy, and the continence with which he is capable of infusing those scores in which there is a vein of romantic sentimentality, is unsurpassed.

The discussion then (or dispute, if you prefer) resolves itself largely into a matter of taste. His performance of Wagner's works differs from Toscanini's. I prefer the Italian's, and for reason. You may prefer Mr. Walter. That does not mean that one of us is right, and the other wrong.

You may have your own opinion as to how a work should be played. But you (or I) would have a fairly difficult time in proving that our way is the correct way. You may say, as I do, that for your taste such and such a conductor is unsatisfactory. And no one has the right to dispute you.

BRUNO WALTER is well versed in the scores he conducts. He accomplishes many beautiful and significant things with them. But he is not a conductor of what the Germans call large Format. That is why I do not like his Wagner. I am glad to have heard these programs. They serve only to confirm my conclusion: Mr. Walter's artistic constitution is less definitely integrated and more subject to emotional fluctuations than that of a Toscanini.

Each strand in the web of Wagner's tone stands forth, a golden ribbon of color, yet but one of the many hues in the painter's palette. And you feel as if you were

BRUNO WALTER

"There is much that is enchanting in Mr. Walter's Wagner. But it lacks perspective . . ." so says Carleton Smith. Hear Mr. Walter conduct the New York Philharmonic Symphony orchestra in an all-Wagner program at 3 p. m. EST (2 CST) Sunday on the CBS-WABC network and judge for yourself seeking out the inmost depths of melody, and plumbing there the multiple, interwoven song. In it all you are conscious of the unassailable rectitude of feeling and presentation. And least of all is it subjective romanticism.

All-Wagner Broadcast

MR. WALTER'S FINAL all-Wagner broadcast (CBS, Sunday at 3 p. m. EST; 2 CST) includes a Faust overture, the preludes to Acts I and III of Lohengrin, and Act I from Die Walkure, with LOTTE LEHMANN as Sieglinde, PAUL ALTHOUSE as Siegmund, and EMANUEL LIST as Hunding.

The familiar music of Lohengrin, telling as it does of the descent of the Holy Grail, and its deliverance by the angels to the holy Titurel, presents an ethereal picture unequalled in its tonal sublimity. The beautiful wedding music preceding the third act describes by contrast the brilliance of earthly joy.

The first scene of "Die Walkure" is laid in Hunding's home, to which Siegmund comes in a storm. But of all this, LAWRENCE GILMAN will tell you.

Lawrence Gilman

HAVE YOU ENJOYED Mr. Gilman's glowing descriptions of the Philharmonic programs these past Sundays? I don't know of anything other than the music itself that could give me as much pleasure as our present commentator. Through his devotion to intellectual and aesthetic essentials shines a poetic elegance and originality in stating distinctions that gives his statements their singular value.

Lawrence Gilman comes to music with an open heart. He is seeking to plumb its depths and to receive its subtlest imprint. This he returns to us in elegant and eloquent prose. He is a fountain of inspiration.

My only regret is that he does not publish a book of his remarks during the past two winters, so that we might have them to read as often as we like.

Dusolina Giannini

DUSOLINA GIANNINI is all too little known in her own country. Born in Philadelphia, this fine artist has made her reputation largely in Europe, where she is everywhere acclaimed for the intimate grace and charm of her artistry. She is not a singer who overpowers by the opulence of her voice. It is a clear, pure soprano. And in the use of it, Miss Giannini shows her innate taste and an exquisite sense of style. It is for something that she stopped the performance of Don Giovanni last summer in Salzburg, the home of Mozart.

The Ford Sunday Evening Hour is to be congratulated on bringing us such intelligent artists of the high calibre of Dusolina Giannini. Hear her Sunday (December 30, CBS at 8 p. m. EST, 7 CST).

Pagliacci in English

IF THERE IS ANY one who hasn't heard the story of Pagliacci and its Laugh, Clown, Laugh theme, let them tune in on the Opera Guild Sunday (NBC at 8 p. m. EST, 7 CST). According to present plans, JOHN CHARLES THOMAS will sing the role of Carrio; JOSEPHINE ANTOINE, who made such a favorable impression as Gilda a few weeks ago, will be the Nedda; and the tortured clown, Canio, will be FREDERICK JAGEL. This series in English is being well received. Listeners who never before took any interest in the plot of operas are now doing so. Offenbach's seldom performed Tales of Hoffman is scheduled for next week.

Radio Road to Health

The eye is subject to certain common defects which need the attention of an oculist for adequate correction. Among these defects are far-sightedness or hypermetropia; near-sightedness, or myopia; astigmatism; antimetropia, or different degrees of refraction in the eyes of one individual; presbyopia, or the hardening of the lens due to age; and cross-eye, which is technically known as strabismus.

In far-sightedness the eyeball is too short from front to back. Thus the image formed by the lens is thrown behind the retina. To overcome this defect the ciliary muscle, which controls the lens contracts; the lens is made more convex and the image is drawn forward. To avoid this strain the far-sighted individual must be provided with eye-glasses which will add the needed convexity and allow the lens and muscles to rest.

Near-sightedness entails an exactly opposite condition. In near-sightedness the eyeball is too long. The image therefore is thrown in front of the retina. The near-sighted person is doomed to blurred vision of all distant objects, unless the condition is corrected by eye-glasses with concave lens which will make the light rays diverge, thus throwing the image farther back.

In astigmatism there is an irregularity in shape of cornea or lens. The horizontal and vertical meridians differ, and a blurred image results. The ciliary muscle does its best to make the adjustments, but real relief can be given only by proper eye-glasses. In antimetropia each eye suffers from a different defect. One eye may be near-sighted the other far-sighted. It becomes extremely difficult to obtain comfortable simultaneous use of the two eyes.

In this defect each eye must be treated for its specific condition.

Crossed-eye results from the tendency of the eyes not to focus simultaneously on the same object. The unfortunate victim often forms the habit of using one eye only and squinting the other. This condition is frequently caused by extreme far-sightedness, or sometimes by muscular defects. Adjustments often may be made by means of eye-glasses although in extreme cases an operation is necessary.

In caring for our eyes we must use common sense. If forced to close eye work for long periods, we should rest our eyes at intervals by raising them from our work and looking into the distance. The eye is built for distant focusing. It is at rest when it focuses at a distance of about twenty feet. When reading, make sure that the light is adequate—neither too dim nor so bright that it casts a dazzling reflection.

Ed Wynn, the Perfect Fool

to organize a radio chain of his own. The doomed project cost him more than a quarter of a million, and he still is paying off creditors of his Amalgamated Radio System.

The comedian's foray upon the stronghold of radio was no mere whim. It came as the result of a dream fabricated of ambition—the ambition to create for his son, Keenan, a professional empire over which he might reign without having to breast youth's storm-beset path to success. Just as Ed's father had builded for his son—only to be thwarted—so did Ed Wynn plan, only to find frustration his reward.

To the Fire Chief his boy is the all-important thing of life, and around his devotion revolves a story recently made known. Keenan has a penchant for flying. So fearful is Ed Wynn that his son's predilection will lead to tragedy, that he recently extracted a promise from airport executives around Long Island to exert their utmost co-operation to keep the lad on the ground.

Here is a literal example of history repeating itself. Just as the hat manufacturer had attempted to baffle his son's efforts to go on the stage, so is Ed Wynn, no longer merely the set but himself the anxious father eager to direct the footsteps of his offspring.

Unfortunately, the network venture was ill-starred. But its collapse has not dampened the spirit which moved Ed Wynn to desert a luxurious home to make his own way to fame and opulence.

He still is the spirit of comedy, effervescent and inspired; and the manner with which he dashes to the microphone on Tuesday nights is positively infectious. When he declares, "This will slay you, Graham!" it nearly does—and millions of listeners as well—so literally compelling is his fine sense of jest.

Ed Wynn's inimitable comedy may be heard any Tuesday evening over an NBC-WEAF network at 9:30 EST (8:30 CST) sponsored by the Texas Company.

By Dick Bard

THE FAMOUS Dionne quintuplets didn't make their radio debut, after all. Permission was denied in Canada, so when the time came for a CBS announcer to state: "we switch you to the cribside in Callender, Ontario," he said instead: "The broadcast will not be presented at this time."

I talked with a gentleman from the official party when Doctor Dufue made his visit to New York.

"Those quintuplets belong to everybody in the Dominion of Canada," said Mr. Mulhern, for that was the gentleman's name. "At least, every man, woman and child seems to have adopted them. So when Columbia announced that a broadcast of the quint's cries was to be made from the cribside, a storm of protest arose all over the Dominion."

"Why did they protest?" I asked. "Well," said Mr. Mulhern, "they were afraid that the girls would be persuaded to cry, by some mechanical method."

"Ridiculous," I suggested. "Exactly," replied Mr. Mulhern, "but you can't reason with self-appointed guardians."

Mr. Mulhern said that the government—which pays $150 a day to preserve the health and welfare of the quint, is jealous of its responsibility. The medical profession, too, is opposed to broadcasting anything in relation to the medical aspects of the care of the famous infants.

"Why are they opposed to a broadcast?" I asked.

"Ethics," replied Mr. Mulhern.

THE PROGRAM that appeals to all nations—that's the way WMCA's "Folk Singer" and her work has been described.

Lovely little Eva Miller is the girl whose big rich voice features these weekly programs each Thursday at 7:30 p. m. EST. Each week she takes her rapidly expanding audience to a different country, in song. In a few deft words she creates the atmosphere of the country of the song for her listeners—swiftly she describes the scenes, the people and their mode of living. Cleverly these brief descriptions lead directly into a native song which Miss Miller sings with effortless versatility. Many listeners have written in to ask how this tiny young woman can be so thoroughly at home in the songs of so many different parts of the globe. Part of the answer is that little Eva is an honor student of languages.

For all of its simplicity and appeal, the Folk Singer program is invariably the result of careful thought and painstaking preparation. Miss Miller insists that every detail be meticulously accurate. The result is that alert geography teachers are beginning to direct the attention of their pupils to the programs. They know that each statement of the Folk Singer's descriptions will be correct, and that these clever introductions, plus the songs themselves, will give to students a greater understanding of the atmosphere of the different countries "visited," than could possibly be obtained from books.

Miss Miller's powerful, deep voice does justice to every song and every nation featured on her program. For it, an excellent musical background is provided by

The Child's Hour

By Nila Mack

Many parents will fly up in arms when I tell them that most nervous and neurotic children are made that way by the parents themselves. But it is a sad fact that many parents have developed nervous and morbid inclinations in their children by intensifying or even manufacturing afflictions that do not exist.

For instance, I know a mother who invariably greets her seven-year-old daughter at the breakfast table each morning with a "you don't look so well this morning, dear. You're not well, are you? Have you a headache? I don't think I'll give you any more fried chicken before you go to bed. It seems to disagree with you."

I know another mother who greets her son almost every afternoon upon his return from school in the following fashion: "Johnnie, you look all tired and pale. I forbid you to play in the street this afternoon; go in and lie down and rest. And I wouldn't study today's lessons if I were you—I don't think you'd be able to stand the strain."

Nothing but harm can result from talking to children this way. Children are normally healthy, and abnormally imaginative. Keep planting such seeds, and you'll have a nervous, neurotic child on your hands, or at best a young hypochondriac who always is imagining that something is wrong with him.

Of course I do not recommend that no attention be given to the health and nervous conditions of the children. Attention should be given to these matters; but children themselves should not be made conscious about disorders that probably do not exist.

Parents should remember that children can not be made healthy by being frightened about ill-health. Don't make your children morbid and afraid by asking about conditions that do not exist. Don't ask your child if he doesn't feel well. Dwell on this long enough, and it's almost a sure bet that your child will imagine that he doesn't feel well, even when there is nothing wrong with him. A child usually will tell you when he feels ill—and if he doesn't, there are scores of ways for an observant mother to tell with a degree of accuracy whether her child is ill.

I once had a little girl enrolled in my class who is a perfect illustration of what an unthinking parent can do to a child's imagination. This youngster absented herself frequently, refused to participate in any of the games, and in general acted as if she were an invalid.

By careful questioning of the child and parent, I discovered the true state of affairs. The child actually had been frightened into a supposed state of ill health by her over-solicitous mother!

I asked the parent if she had taken her child to a doctor for an examination, and she answered in the negative. I summoned the studio doctor, and he gave the youngster a thorough examination. There wasn't a blessed thing the matter with her!

Open Door to Beauty

By Countess Albani

Oily skin almost always means enlarged pores—dust-laden pores—blackheads and shine.

For the youthful with oily skin, the most helpful cleanser is tincture of green soap and tepid water. For the rest—a light cleansing cream and then a soapless, luke-warm bath. So long as the sebaceous glands are overactive in the face, a smart thing to do is to make them work somewhere else and take some of the strain from the physiognomy. Bathe daily and in fairly warm water. Rub the body briskly with a towel. Create something to do for the glands of the body, and help them take their concentration of effort off the innocent ones of the face.

Very often an oily condition exists only on the nose or chin or forehead. This is a mixed skin; then only the oily sections should be treated radically. The rest of the face may receive its normal amount of lubrication. A good astringent and one that can be made easily in the home, if you should like to experiment, is: one-half pint of camphor water; one ounce of witch hazel; and one-quarter pint of boric acid water. If only certain portions of the face are oily, I would suggest using this astringent on these portions alone.

A simpler and just as effective astringent is to run some water in the wash basin, put a trayful of ice cubes in it, and add a few drops of tincture of benzoin. When the cubes have almost dissolved, dip your face cloth in and pat on your face.

When you purchase your creams, shop for them—don't take the first one at hand. See if one agrees with your skin—and if it does not, discard it and try again.

For an afternoon "pick-up" or for the cocktail date, take a few drops of Eau de Cologne and obliterate the sheen. Your skin should be as peachdown, not like the smooth, shiny surface of an apple.

If this were in medieval times you probably would hear all about milk baths. Even though it isn't, I'm going to tell you that milk applied from the exterior is just as good as when you drink it. Pat it on after your clean-up—allow it to remain a few minutes to benefit from its mask-giving properties—and then rinse. It is worth its weight in silver.

All these things will help your skin—they're hound to. But you also must help that skin by the things you eat—the six glasses of water you drink daily—and the calisthenics you do.

Health and hygiene measures cost nothing—a few minutes of your time; but what they do for you, couldn't be bought with all the allowances in the world.

Countess Albani will be glad to answer all questions pertaining to beauty and make-up. Address her in care of Radio Guide, 731 Plymouth Court, Chicago, Ill.

Every Sunday evening Countess Albani sings on the Silken Strings program over an NBC-WJZ network, at 9 p. m. EST (8 CST) under the sponsorship of the Real Silk Hosiery Company; and later over a split network at 11 p. m. CST, for the West Coast.

New Year's Eve at the White House

are paid out of the President's private funds. Of course I have no idea what the exact expenditures are, but I'm fairly certain that they cost in the vicinity of $2,000.

The personnel of my orchestra for the White House affairs never varies—always twenty musicians. About two weeks before the advent of the parties, I furnish the names of my musicians to the White House. The men are checked and investigated. As we file through the East Gate, the Executive Mansion looks very Christmasy, for there always are four Christmas trees on the front porch. As we pass through the corridor leading to the East Room, the Chief Usher ticks off all the men on a list which has been checked by the Secret Service.

The fashions prevailing at these parties compare with any up-to-the-minute society party. The girls all are beautifully gowned and coiffeured. Uniforms predominate among the men.

In one respect, however, the parties vary from the average social affair. At an average similar gathering the guests straggle in at all hours. The guests at the White House arrive promptly at 10 o'clock, when the doors to the East Room are thrown open. I never have known a guest to be late at one of these White House functions.

Amplification was used for the first time at last year's White House party. At the special request of the Presidential family, I am using it again this year. Of course I have no basis or authority for making the following statement—but I do believe that the time is not far distant when the Presidential New Year's halls will be broadcast around the world!

At the present moment I am busy setting up my dance program for this week's White House party. Really, though, setting up a program is superfluous work, for the guests are busy all evening long requesting special tunes. The requests, of course, invariably are granted.

Last year, I remember, I played only two numbers which had been set up in my dance program Mrs. Anna Roosevelt Dall and Franklin Junior requested Smoke Gets in Your Eyes no less than an even dozen times. This year I am certain of but two songs—an especially arranged version of Tiger Rag, which has been requested in advance by young Franklin, and Home on the Range, President Roosevelt's favorite tune.

I would like to make a song prediction for the coming party. I predict that most of the guests will request The Continental, and numbers from the musical comedy Anything Goes, which is extremely popular with the members of the younger social set.

Here is the way I would summarize the salient facts about White House New Year's Eve. Gayest affair and most informal—the Roosevelt party. The most brilliant socially—the parties held during the Wilson regime. Most elaborate—the Harding parties. Most formal—any Hoover affair.

Favorite tunes: Wilson: For I'm Going to Marry Yum-Yum, President Harding, La Paloma, Mrs. Harding: End of a Perfect Day, President Hoover: Here Comes the Sun, President Roosevelt: Home on the Range.

President Harding was the only Chief Executive who danced, Mrs. Wilson and Mrs. Roosevelt the only First Ladies who tripped a light, sedate toe.

Meyer Davis and his orchestra will broadcast over an NBC-WEAF network Saturday, December 29, time to be announced.

Mother Schumann-Heink

to me! Not only did he feed my ambition, helping me to sing and to learn, but also he fed my body, and my poor, undernourished children. . . . What was that?—The children?—Oh, yes, by this time there were four of them, and Heink whom I had loved and married, had left me. Yes, there was my little August, and then my Letta and the small Henry. And my little Hans was to come—and I had in wages, about the equal of ten American dollars a month. Yes!

"My love stories are not so light and gay, nor so exciting as are usually told about the people of the stage and the opera. Perhaps it was because did you ever hear it said that old contracts are honestly? Well I do not say that the rule is invariable—but if there is a rule I was not one of the exceptions. Oh there have been happy times for me too. My second husband, Schumann, was good, and we loved each other and were happy working and studying together. But he was sick. And he died. Yes, I had a great love for him. But he died!"

And she was sad for some minutes before she could go on.

"Madame Schumann-Heink," I prompted, "will you tell me now about how you came to America? It was to the Metropolitan, wasn't it, and through Maurice Grau?"

I could see the effort with which the dear woman shook off her sad thoughts.

Life in New World

"Ah, the dear Maurice Grau! That fine man who was my good angel! I was singing concert and opera by this time and was of course under contract to Pollini in Hamburg. Pollini had learned to appreciate me by that time too, I tell you! We went on tour, Pollini was our manager, Scandinavia, Vienna—everywhere we went! But Grau had heard me sing Annerys in Aida, and he wanted me to go to New York. But there was the contract. And Pollini said, 'No! Nordica and Sembrich urged me to go, to break my contract. I would not do it. And then I didn't need to, because Pollini died. And Schumann and I came to America to the Metropolitan Opera House in New York, he as stage director for the Wagner Operas."

"What a tremendous change it must have been for you, Madame!"

"Ah, yes! It was indeed a new world, a new life. Nevertheless, I could not leave all my troubles behind me. Some of them, at this distance, seem almost funny. For instance the good Maurice Grau was horrified to death when I appeared in New York with another baby almost ready to be born! But why didn't you tell me?" he cried—oh, very loudly. I tried to appear casual. "Oh, I said lightly, 'a baby is nothing! I have them many times! And always I sing!"

"The poor Grau, what could he do?" "But I was very, very frightened. And Schumann was frightened, too. But it was such a comfort to have him with me."

"My debut was in this city here in Chicago. I like to think of that. I was to sing Ortrud in Lohengrin. It is a hard part. In the wings were such good friends, anxious and watching. They knew about the baby. Dear Pol Plancion and the de Reszkes. There is a prayer where I had to kneel. They agonized over whether I could get on my knees. And, even if I did, could I get up again?"

Success in Chicago

"It was a very real question. But I did it. Down and up both! Such applause! This big-hearted Chicago! Do you wonder I love it? The curtain rang up twenty times. Schumann-Heink was a success—and no more could that worried Maurice Grau scold me for such a small thing as a baby! Why everybody has babies all the time and the work of the world gets done just the same. I named the baby George Washington. Yes, George Washington Schumann, an American boy!"

"As in Hamburg so in America I sang much Wagner. Lulu in Das Rheingold, and Negrid; Waltraute in Die Gotterdammerung; Ortrud in Lohengrin, and Biancane in Tristan. I loved America. The people seemed to like me too—not my voice only. There is such joy in mutual love! It must be dreadful to face a hostile audience. I have not known that. My audiences have always been good to me."

To know Schumann-Heink—or "Heink-e," as Maurice Grau named her—is to understand just why she has inspired love as well as admiration in all the countries of the world that have acclaimed her genius. She overflows with a sort of universal affection, and the world, like a mirror, reflects that warmth back to her again.

She has known much sorrow, but it has not embittered her. In 1915 her eldest son, August, the only boy who remained German in sympathy, almost broke her heart by returning to Germany to serve his "Kaiser and Fatherland." Of the eighty-four submarines in the fleet with which he went out, to smash everything, only four came back. August was among the missing. In the same year her "little Hans" died in her arms of typhoid pneumonia and the "just one small baby," whose too evident advent caused so much anger and despair in that poor Maurice Grau. George Washington Schumann, enlisted in the U. S. Navy.

Shadow of Death

Twelve trips he made across the ocean, all the time writing to his mother such letters of affection that she wants them to fill her coffin when she passes on. Finally his ship was wrecked, off the French coast. And he wrote her, in an hour when he was expecting death: "If I go down with this boat, and if you ever get this, don't cry but be proud that I could die for the greatest country on God's earth!"

He did not die, but returned to comfort her poor, brave heart.

At that time Heink-e was doing her bit" singing for the soldiers. Colonel Patsy O'Neill of the 21st Infantry asked her to sing the Star Spangled Banner on the parade grounds for the recruits. She assented, though she didn't know the words. So she sang it with do, re, mi, fa, sol. A newspaper man wrote of that singing: "The voice of Mme. Schumann-Heink is a great inspiration, but we would be much obliged if she would tell us in what language she sings it!"

Her house in California and her house in Chicago were open to the soldiers. All of her sons were in the service. All returned safely—except one in the U. S. service and the poor boy who fought for "his Kaiser and his Fatherland."

Her Kaiser knew her well and was reasonably friendly to her although she was not in such good standing by reason of her having kidnaped her family and run away to America with them after being officially told "They are German. They stay here." When she was given an audience with the Kaiserin, her singing so pleased the royal lady that she said: "Now I want to make you happy, and I know that nothing could please and honor you more than to have the great privilege of meeting my husband the Kaiser!"

So she met him and made her "low bows" which were the result of having "learned the etiquette of meeting Royal Personages" in her early training as the daughter of an Austrian officer. He said many nice things and seemingly thought it as well not to mention the awkward question of the military duty owed by the boys now safely and irretrievably in America. At the same audience she was presented to Queen Alexandra of England, who remembered her as the young singer "who made those beautiful low bows" when she sang for Queen Victoria.

To Her, The Chief

Yes, she has known them all, the great ones of the earth. President Taft was her good friend, the story is told of a day when he no longer was President to any one but Schumann-Heink. He entered the observation car where she was traveling and she rose and stood until he was seated. A newspaper woman, scenting a story, said to her: "But he is no longer President . . ." And the lover of all human creatures answered: "But he was President of the United States—and I respect him for that is higher than any Kaiser or King. While he stands, stand."

Other Presidents she has known. The first Roosevelt had a great affection for her; she sang for him when he was governor of New York and often while he was in the White House. Her Schumann accompanied her on a visit to the White House and forever afterward treasured the few blossoms which he begged from "Mrs. Teddy's" bouquet. And when Schumann died, soon after, the first condolences came from President and Mrs. Roosevelt, and that night, when, in true theatrical tradition Schumann-Heink consented to sing in Loves Lottery, President Roosevelt, with his entire staff, came to the theater and stayed for the entire performance. At the end, when the poor lonely woman broke down and cried while singing Home, Sweet Home Roosevelt in his stage box was "crying a little, too."

But it is not the great I would tell you about. It is the others I have known, and the good faces I remember. Come another time. We will have hotel soap, and I will tell you of them.

All of them—God's children—I love. And I hope they will make New Year resolutions—and keep them—and be ever happy in 1935."

Carleton Smith will tell, in the next RADIO GUIDE, of Madame Schumann-Heink's "thousand lovers—the happiest period of her life—her views on how a woman can achieve greatest happiness for herself—and many intimacies besides. It will be in the Wide World dated Week Ending January 12.

Beginning Sunday, January 6, Madame Schumann-Heink will appear regularly on the Sentinels' Serenade, Sunday at 5 p. m. EST 4 (CST) over the NBC-WEAF network, sponsored by the Hoover Co.

expect. If he found the man . . . He found no man. He found nothing but the awful peace of death. Thrusting through a clump of weeds that masked the opening of a culvert, he found little Leone. She was jammed partway into the culvert. As the youth stood, fighting his sobs for breath, a few snowflakes settled gently upon her feet and legs.

"Put up your hands!" The youth whirled. His hands clenched again . . . but it was the uniform of a state trooper that he saw, above the levelled pistol. Troopers Pierce and Horvath also had found the trail of blood, followed it off the tracks. Of course they did not know that it was another searcher they had come upon—the child's own brother. For all they knew, they might have caught a murderer red-handed. But a few words of explanation sufficed to make the situation clear, and soon one of the troopers was speeding to a telephone. Now Operator Roberts' clipped orders brought all radio cruisers swiftly to the culvert.

From the East Lansing barracks, Captain Laurence A. Lyons dispatched Detective Sergeant Harold Mulbar, Leroy Smith of the Identification Bureau, and Detective Sergeant P. L. Hutson. Tenderly the broken body was lifted from the water-filled drain. Even the most experienced officers were shaken. The child's head was a mass of matted blood and hair.

Still clutched to her stiffened fingers

Song Hits of the Week

EVER since Lucienne Boyer, the Parisian warbler, introduced the number several months ago, Hands Across the Table has been sweeping steadily into popularity. This week it climaxed its climb by leading all song opposition in the weekly kilocycle race for supremacy. Another Tin Pan Alley newcomer, With Every Breath I Take, was runner-up. June in January, last week's handleaders' hit selection, again captured the palm in that division. A glance at the tabulated standings, however, will disclose an odd situation, for while June in January is tops in one column, it is a dead last to the other! Such are the vagaries of the kilocycles.

SONG HITS PLAYED MOST OFTEN ON THE AIR:

Song	Times
Hands Across the Table	30
With Every Breath I Take	28
Stay as Sweet as You Are	27
Dancing with My Shadow	25
The Continental	22
Earful of Music	20
Difference a Day Makes	18

BANDLEADERS' PICK OF OUTSTANDING HITS:

Song	Points

Stay as Sweet as You Are	24
P. S. I Love You	23
Winter Wonderland	21
Invitation to Dance	18
Night of Love	16

Song hits requested most frequently from a few of the maestros last week were:

Victor Arden: June in January, Difference a Day Makes, Night of Love, Emil Colemao: With Every Breath I Take, Dancing with My Shadow, P. S. I Love You.

Mark Waronw: Flirtation Walk, Love Is Just Around the Corner, Hands Across the Table.

was the strip of unsold Christmas seals. Soon the forlorn spot was dotted with the blue and gray uniforms of state troopers searching for clues. As soon as the word was flashed to Lansing that a little girl had been found murdered, a trek of the curious began. The milling crowd had to be restrained from obliterating possible evidence.

Seven troopers started a house-to-house canvass of the sparsely settled neighborhood, looking for information that concerned anyone who may have been molesting children.

Taking Up the Trail

Troopers Horvath and Pierce followed the set of boot-tracks across the drifting field.

At the Identification Bureau, second in size only to that of the United States Department of Justice, Detective Lieutenant Vao A. Loomis checked the lists of known abnormal persons.

Meanwhile, the grim business of the autopsy was conducted by Doctor Milton Shaw, assisted by Doctor LeMoyné H. Snyder, brilliant young physician and attorney, medico-legal adviser to the state police.

Gently washing the unfortunate victim's head, Doctor Snyder exclaimed in astonishment. Behind the right ear was a scalp puncture the size of a pencil point—a bullet hole. Later a .22 calibre slug was recovered to the left lobe of the brain.

A second disclosure was equally startling. The girl had not been criminally attacked.

At the barren crime-scene state police photographers and finger-print experts strove to salvage clues. Detective Sergeant P. L. Hutson turned to two little girls who were watching intently.

"Any strange man trying to talk with you lately?" he asked.

The children hesitated, then one spoke: "Yes, sir. A bad man. He's been to Jackson."

Jackson is the site of Michigan State Prison.

"Who is he? What's his name?" Hutson, asked unmuting excitement creeping into his voice.

"I don't know, but Teddy does. And Teddy says . . ."

"Just a minute," a farmer interjected quietly. "I work for Teddy's father, and I think the child refers to LeRoy Carson. He was released from Ionia Reformatory a short while ago. Carson lives on the old Holt-Lansing Road, behind that patch of woods to the west."

The officers hastened across lots. Troopers Pierce and Horvath were still trailing the mysterious bootprints. The tracks led directly to the woods, passed around a small shack, traced several circles as if looking for game, then were obliterated on the Holt Road at a point opposite the Carson home!

Uncle Gives Clew

LeRoy Carson's uncle met the officers at the door. His manner was that of a man weighed with a grievous burden.

"I've been listening to the radio," he offered as if in explanation.

"LeRoy went to visit his mother, who is critically ill at Edward W. Sparrow Hospital," the uncle continued in response to questions. "What has he been wearing? A suede jacket with jersey knit collar, a light cap, and blue trousers. And my boots out there on the porch."

Police snatched up the boots, bore them off the veranda while the older man watched, puzzled.

Those boots fitted the tracks the two troopers had been trailing and—they bore dark red stains!

Speeding toward Sparrow Hospital, the officers pondered how a man, implicated in the murder of a defenseless child, could go straight from the crime to the bedside of his sick mother.

The cops of Michigan's crime-fighting machine were meshing rapidly.

State Chemist Woodward pronounced the boots stained with human blood.

Lieutenant Loomis found that Carson, on August 31, 1934, had completed the maximum of a three- to five-year sentence for breaking and entering a resort pavilion. A. S. Rowley, state psychiatrist who had examined Carson, said the convict was subnormal mentally.

At 1:45 p. m., WRDS went on the air with Message 5709:

Attention, all cars. Wanted in connection with the murder of a twelve-year-old girl this morning. LeRoy Carson, alias Corsten, white man, paroled out of Ionia recently. Twenty-four years old, height 6 feet, weight 164, slim face. This information is for the attention of all cars and stations surrounding Lansing.

At 1:47 p. m., Trooper Flanders repeated Carson's description over WRDS.

While Flanders spoke, a black cruiser sped to an address supplied by the suspect's relatives.

Again the fugitive eluded his pursuers. The police started for another residence frequented by Carson.

From their dashboard radio came Flanders' flash:

Corporal Hopkins reports thirty-five minutes ago this man was seen in the 900 block, Baker Street, Lansing!

For the third time descriptive message 5709 went on the air, at 2:06 p. m.

A Twisted Trail

The trail twisted a few miles north. Four minutes later, when Flanders shutted into the mike:

Additional information on Carson . . . Attention all cars in the vicinity of Mount Pleasant . . . This man has an uncle west of Harrison in Clare County on farm . . . Watch all roads coming into Mount Pleasant. Check uncle's farm.

Meanwhile, the officers were told at the second residence that Carson had started south on the Michigan Central right-of-way.

If this were true, Carson was a little more than a mile from the scene of the crime and headed in its direction.

Three cruisers circled south. Troopers in the lead car discerned a gangling figure plodding down the tracks. They concealed themselves behind a railroad shanty. When he came opposite, they stepped out.

"Are you LeRoy Carson?" demanded Sergeant Hutson.

"No, James Carson."

The denial was not impressive. He was dressed in clothes that had been described as Carson's.

"You're Carson." The officer affirmed sternly.

The man blinked and stared.

"Know what you're picked up for?" he continued.

The suspect shook his head.

"You may as well tell us. Are you going to be reasonable?"

Carson seemed engaged in profound thought. At length he said dully: "Yes, I may as well. It was an accident."

Over WRDS the final word went on the air:

Cancel message 5709. This man is apprehended and has made a confession.

And confess Carson did, after offering several concocted stories of an accidental shooting. When Leone threatened to tell her elders about his improper advances, he admitted he had shot the child.

The final chapter spun as swiftly as the first. Before Circuit Judge Charles B. Collingwood Carson was sentenced to life imprisonment in Marquette, the ultimate penalty provided by Michigan law.

Judge Collingwood's statement was brief. Even the varied resources of the English language are inadequate to describe the revolting baseness of certain types of criminal behavior.

Radio's Gala 1934

welfare appeals were made on the air during 1934, notably the series of outstanding programs prepared and broadcast for the Annual Mobilization for Human Needs. Broadcasting time was regularly contributed also to the major national welfare and charity associations in their appeals for aid for the needy.

Many factors, such as increased leisure time, developing from the unusual conditions of the past few years, are bringing a distinct growth in the number of daytime radio listeners. This new situation has been met by Columbia with a new theory of broadcast entertainment resulting in a general revision of daytime broadcast schedules to strengthen morning and afternoon periods. In the latter part of the year fifteen new daylight features were introduced, several of them of full hour duration, with such outstanding entertainers as Kate Smith and Cabina Wright.

"Naturally the technical development of radio must keep pace with its forward movement in other fields. This is particularly true as it affects the broadcasting of fine music. The Columbia engineers look upon 1934 as a high fidelity year. All efforts have been directed toward the improvement of transmission.

"Both the technical staff and the program directors have interesting plans for extended service to listeners in 1935. Columbia's schedule of classical music will be enhanced in the early part of the year with a notable series of concerts by the Pro Arte string quartet of Brussels. This world-famous group will play eight of the great Beethoven Quartets. The Cleveland Quartet will come to the network on Sundays; the New York Philharmonic Symphony children's concerts will be resumed, and the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra will be heard in a new Friday afternoon series. Performances of operatic and symphonic works by leading orchestras and soloists of foreign lands will be brought here as part of an extensive short-wave series. Other international broadcasts, arrangements for which are already under way, will draw their subject matter from such widely diversified interests as economics, the race to arms, national points of view and light entertainment of folk festivals, typical of the countries of origin."

Great Radio Scoops

Noteworthy broadcasts, standing out in the amazing year 1934 were many. Probably the most impressive of all was that of the funeral ceremonies of Albert, King of Belgium, accidentally killed in a fall while climbing a mountain. Most unusual and replete with pageantry was the broadcast, on Thanksgiving Day, of the wedding ceremony of Princess Marina of Greece and Prince George, Duke of Kent, and on February 28, the reporting over a 10,000-mile short wave circuit of the coronation of Henry Pu Yi as Emperor of Manchukuo.

Thrilling programs were numerous. Stratosphere and trans-oceanic flights kept the loud-speaker buzzing but undoubtedly the most thrilling of all were the weekly broadcasts from Admiral Richard E. Byrd and his expedition in Antarctica. These brave adventurers have provided scores of hair-raising episodes from their everyday life in Little America.

Likewise to be classed in the thrill group was President Roosevelt's spectacular review of the fleet on May 31.

Most colorful of all programs was that supplied on Christmas Day when the British network of high-powered short-wave stations brought to this country's networks remarkable sound scenes from every corner of the turiling British Empire. And perhaps the most ambitious single program by a sponsor was that of Nash Motors, likewise on Christmas Day, when an array of the greatest names in the entertainment world contributed to a program lasting nearly three hours.

Stunt broadcasts, classed by the networks as "special events" but more of interest to listeners because of their extraordinary nature than their news value, were high-lighted by the CBS interview with the San Francisco Chinatown telephone exchange, the only one of its kind in America—and the providing by CBS on December 22 of an "American Scene" in which national points of interest from New York to Hollywood were picked up and described.

Radio sports reporting gained new laurels during 1934 with the recounting of the historic International Lup Race between America's defender, the Rainbow, and the English challenger, the Endeavour. The World Series broadcasts, incidentally, were sponsored for the first time in 1934 with Henry Ford, the famous motor car manufacturer, paying a reported $100,000 for the privilege alone of exclusive air rights to the games.

While it may not be a part of a summary of 1934's radio record, nevertheless it is of significance that last year saw Mr. Ford "go radio." Hitherto lukewarm on the subject and almost disinterested, the great industrialist's enthusiasm began February 4 with the signing of Fred Waring's Pennsylvanians to two half-hour programs weekly. Following the World Series venture, he added a high-class program of symphonic music to his radio contributions.

In closing the list of unusual broadcasts of 1934, the one most discussed though not forgotten. It was on a Sunday night late in 1934 when Walter Winchell, the World's greatest gossip, scooped himself during his program by flashing to all that a little bundle of happiness is expected in 1935 at the Winchell home.

New trails toward musical excellence were blazed, perfected in fact, during 1934. There is scarcely a star in the musical, operatic and symphonic constellation who was not heard during last year by the invisible audience. Every great symphony orchestra appeared before the microphone; the Metropolitan opera broadcast the closing of its 1933-34 season, and has started the current season on the air.

In the field of drama huge strides were made. Mary Pickford and Maude Adams were called to the air and added their extraordinary qualifications to make the radio play a better thing. The Sunday Radio Theater contributed great names and great plays of the stage without stint.

News Flourishes

Operettas, even with original music as in the Gibson Family, became a strong trend of 1934. With it was brought that grand name of the musical-play realm, Sigmund Romberg, who continues to appear himself in the series which was inaugurated last Fall. George Gershwin, genius of modern music, became a radio regular likewise last year.

The coverage of news events and their reporting by radio stations was crystalized and perfected during 1934 as a result of the hostility of the newspapers to radio's attempts to render the listening public a spot news service. Much progress was made in this field. The newspapers, by their failure to co-operate, only goaded the broadcasters to air "scoops" on their printed rivals.

A report of radio's 1934 achievements cannot neglect the development of the West Coast as a program center. San Francisco last year yielded the great serial drama, One Man's Family, and the rollicking Carefree Carnival, both of which have found national sponsors. Hollywood Hotel is another West Coast commercial, and the many popular sustaining programs from there include one worthy of special mention—Al Pearce's Gang.

Incidentally, it was radio that solved the bitter San Francisco general strike of last July. Broadcast appeals lifted the strike order and brought about satisfactory arbitration.

As an index to the popularity of the hundred of popular songs which made their appearance in 1934, the following six numbers were played the most frequently over the networks: Smoke Gets in Your Eyes; All I Do Is Dream of You; Everything I Have Is Yours; Let's Fall in Love; A Thousand Good Nights; Beat of My Heart.

Technical progress in radio during 1934 was shown chiefly in the receiver, rather than the transmitter. Research has been focused on high-fidelity stations, but high-fidelity receivers are being marketed vigorously. These receivers in most cases combine short wave with the regular station reception. More than a hundred foreign short-wave stations now are sending strong signals and regular schedules of high-class entertainment which may be heard on this continent. Among the technical advances, of course, is to be listed the launching, on May 2, of the giant 500,000-watt station WLW, at Cincinnati, the world's most powerful transmitter. Police and airplane radio likewise were improved in many respects.

Such is the radio record for 1934—an ambitious record, so far unequalled. Attention now turns eagerly to 1935.

Artist Gets Break

Dear VOL: Muscatine, Ia.
Would like to have my say in regard to radio artists answering requests. I realize the majority of the fans are thoughtless on this subject but Evans Plummer should know better.

Why do the fans figure that just because they admire someone's talent, they should have a mortgage on his life? It is very unreasonable. When one considers that the most popular artists get the most requests, naturally they could by no stretch of the imagination answer them all. Therefore, not wanting to favor some and overlook others they avoid answering requests, which I think is logical and fair. Most fans make requests anyway because they like to hear their names on the air—"We are playing this for so and so who is celebrating his 18th birthday today!" I think that is cheap and spoils a program.

This is just something to think over from another fan who appreciates radio and does not plaster stars with expensive requests for photographs, autographs, batons, and musical numbers. I like the stars who are good and appreciate what they are doing for me free. I didn't and you didn't make them good. They got that way through their own efforts. A Real Fan

Motion For Defense

Dear VOL: Minneapolis, Minn.
Just a few remarks about certain letters to this page. First, to the southerners protesting against Pardon My Southern Accent: It's really very silly, for who takes a popular song seriously? It's not an insult. Before we know it, Alabama will be objecting to the stars falling on it!

Second, to the Crosby-Bernie complainers: I hear them both, Bing at 8, Bernie at 11 from a western station. RADIO GUIDE tells you that.

And third, to anyone interested in the Lombardo-Garber argument. I confess being a Lombardo fan of long standing, but I never objected to his legion of imitators. But Jan Garber should be "suffering hourly from pangs of conscience," as Thomas Hale put it. Garber has taken the original Lombardo technique, removed the compact mellowness, and injected a too staccato tiny element, and he's gaining popularity on it! Now when that happens, imitation ceases to be flattery and becomes downright chiseling. E. K.

Saint's Alive

Dear VOL: Gloversville, N. Y.
Why is it necessary for bright radio performers in east aspersions and doubt on good old Santa Claus? Just the idea hinted at that the old Saint may not be real, is enough to set in motion doubts that may kill the old fellow entirely, especially when a small five-year old child, such as mine, worships a radio.

I have one more quarrel—this time with the female of the species in announcers. If they don't stop talking down to their unseen audiences as though they were morons or kindergarteners (that is the audience, not the announcers) there is going to be trouble. Mrs. Fred Fuhrer

Coffee Opera For All

Dear VOL: Corinth, N. Y.
This letter is being written in protest against such absurd statements as those made by Harry C. Gillen in regard to the Chase and Sanborn opera hour. May I inform Mr. Gillen (because he is ignorant of the fact) that opera is for anyone or everyone who is interested in the finer type of music, and this must certainly do not exclude working people. It is not the working classes but the ignorant people who do not care to better themselves by cultivating an appreciation, not necessarily the grand opera, but far better music.

Increase the amount of work that is being put into this program in order to condense and dramatize the operas so that everyone can understand them.

And last, but emphatically not least, Chase and Sanborn do not "feel that their coffee is too good for those who do not enjoy grand opera," as Mr. Gillen states, but they are trying to bring about an appreciation for better music in all the American people.

A thousand gold medals to Chase and Sanborn, and prizes to Harry C. Gillen. J. Tropp

Rockefeller Did It

Dear VOL: Staunton, Va.
I have just finished listening to Amos 'n' Andy and decided to write you a letter about them. Our family has been listening to them for years and has thought they were fine up to now. The art is as dull and dumb as I have ever heard. Amos is about as dumb as Aedy now. If they would only get some sense and outsmart the "Kingfish"! In the first place, no one would start building a city without anything to bring people there. They are losing their grip on the country, but I think if they would get even with the "Kingfish" or pop him on the head, as Andy would say, and get some sense into him, the program might be normal again, but as it is, Amos 'n' Andy are losing a listener. J. Lewis Gibbs, Jr.

A Pat for Jones

Dear VOL: Atlanta, Ga.
Just a word to compliment Chevrolet on their splendid program which features Isham Jones' fine orchestra.
There's a marked improvement on this half-hour lately. The band is featured more than it was at the start of the series. I know all of Jones' fans are grateful for this opportunity to keep in touch with this fascinating orchestra.
What a help VOL is to us fans who must express our likes and dislikes. Don't ever cut it out of RADIO GUIDE. Pat Denniston

Very Bad Grammar

Dear VOL: Monroe, La.
Something should be done about Grandma Wilson in the House by the Side of the Road.
I suggest we listeners retire her on a pension. It is certainly lamentable to have one person spoil an otherwise perfect program, for who can harmonize Grandma Wilson with such an aestet as Tony Weiss, or any of the other artists who appear on the program, The House by the Side of the Road?
Grandma Wilson is the most exaggerated portrayal of any character on the radio to whom I've ever listened, except in burlesque. If I had a grandmother who talked as she does, I'd refuse to contribute to her support and let her die. Verily, verily, I would. Prossit! Mae McIntosh

Don't Blush Readily

Dear VOL: Cape Vincent, N. Y.
Why can't you find room in your delightful weekly to put in a picture of Kay Kyser and his outfit, or at least to mention him occasionally?
Now, there's an orchestra! Its distinctive style and that unique way of singing the song titles make his band outstanding. His singers, Art Wilson, Bill Stoker, and little Maxine should make the other vocalists blush with shame.
Here's one tune-tinner who would tune out any program on the networks just to listen to Kay Kyser say "Good evening", folks. How're you-all? What a band! Mrs. Guy Irvine

FRANK MUNN

As He Appears Under the

MIKEroscope

By Harry Steele

THERE is no dependable data on Frank Munn's first revelation of a magnetic tenor voice. Some biographer tends toward the belief that it all happened at the time Frank, while sledging, was run over by a beer truck. He is said to have murmured "O Sole Mia" so soulfully that the Italian truck-driver absent-mindedly took him to a New York conservatory of music instead of a hospital.

But there is no getting around the fact that he has a magnetic voice, regardless of the circumstances of its discovery. It is so appaling, in fact, that in the past ten years Munn has been on the air at least once a week without a single interruption. Most weeks he has broadcast many more times than once.

If he seems to display a preference for the tear-stained ditty, In the Baggage Coach Ahead, that should not prejudice the listener. One phase of his career was devoted to railroad engineering and Frank is charged with making all his hauls in reverse just so that he could intone the dirge as he tingered the throttle. That automatically put the baggage coach up ahead and justified the tune.

It should be apparent from his singing that Munn is Irish. He is a product of the Bronx, New York, where he was born on February 27, 1895. He is the son of a policeman. Because of the early death of his mother, he was raised by his father and grandmother. But theirs were merely the guiding hands, as Frank did most of his own rearing in the fashion peculiar to husky lads brought up in a busy and crowded metropolis.

Munn's first job had a tremendous influence for rhythm in his life. He was shuttle boy in an embroidery factory; he hummed in cadence with the precisely timed machinery as it turned out its quota of edgings and fichus. Humming led to singing, and the singing led to the realization that his voice was one of rare quality. As a boy Frank had done very little singing in the bathtub for the simple reason that—well, he was just a boy growing up, and maybe his grandmother wasn't always on hand Saturday nights.

So word drifted back to his family that he was blessed with talent, and it was arranged for him to take vocal lessons. He studied under Dudley Buck. Before long he was a favorite artist in church minstrels and similar media of social entertainment.

When he was 25 years old, and radio hadn't grown beyond its embryonic stages, he was asked to perform before the microphone. Even the inefficient equipment of that day failed to distort his ringing tones. Someone from a phonograph recording company heard them. From that time on Munn was not concerned about remuneration or engagements. His records have been best sellers ever since.

Radio fame came to him when he was introduced as Paul Oliver on a soap program. The synthetic title was compounded to build up the name of the product. He later held out for his own name—and that's how he's known to millions today.

Frank's figure is as nicely rounded as his voice. Only five feet and seven inches in stature, he weighs 220 pounds; when he sings he puts every ounce of that poundage into his work. Maybe that's the reason football is his favorite sport, and several gridiron stars his particular heroes.

Truly of the city, Munn characteristically craves rural life and surroundings, and seeks them at every possible opportunity. Being single, he can indulge his bucolic yearnings at will. He meets at least half of Celtic specifications, as he has black hair but eyes that are brown instead of blue.

Favorite Stories of the Stars

Gracie Allen's pet yarn has to do with a gullible Long Island suburbanite who was fleeced of ten dollars, and who blamed his plight on Gracie.

"You know," says Gracie, "I thought I was the dumbest individual alive, but this chap from Long Island must be as dense as a billiard ball. About a year ago I received a letter from him, in which he said that he was a great fan of mine, and for that reason he loaned a chap who claimed that he was my nephew the sum of ten dollars. Here's his letter:

"Dear Miss Allen: I met a man about six weeks ago in a gin mill. We got to discussing radio actors, and he told me that he was the nephew you were always talking about in your broadcasts. To make a long story sad, he borrowed ten dollars from me, promising to send it to me in about a week. Six weeks have elapsed and I haven't seen hide nor hair of him. I'm beginning to think that he was an imposter, and not your nephew at all."

"You know," concluded Gracie with a chuckle, "I warned him to chase any other relatives of mine who tried to put the 'bite' on him for money. It was worth the ten to me to discover such a dumb guy. Sure I sent it to him!"

Ed Wynn never tires of telling the story about his English friend who resided in Canada. "This chap," tells the Fire Chief, "was the typical Englishman—smart in many respects, but dumb in many others. At any rate, here's the story: Among his servants were a butler and a maid who were secretly betrothed. But our English friend had a cute little trick of waylaying the maid at every opportunity, and kissing her. He was quite a devilish chap—eh, wot?"

"Finally the maid and the butler got together and resolved to blackmail the old guy. It was arranged that the butler was to hide behind some portieres with a camera, and snap a picture of the maid and the master in loving embrace. Everything came off as scheduled, and the butler obtained a swell picture of the pair.

"When the picture was developed, the butler confronted his master with the film. He expected him to cringe and offer a big sum to have the evidence destroyed.

"Instead the Englishman looked at the picture carefully and finally said: 'Fine—excellent! Order me a dozen prints, my good man!'"
