Horse and Buggy Days Are Here Again!

Prankster Lou Costello Combines a Gag With a Preview of Things to Come for America

LOU COSTELLO, that hardy perennial prankster, didn't of course hire this horse-drawn hansom cab because of necessity when he escorted Mrs. Costello and Marjorie Woodworth to the Mocambo, Hollywood nightclub. It was quite patently a gag. Yet in the light of present conditions it can easily be a preview of things to come in America. With the present rubber shortage and drastic gas-rationing, transportation problems are daily becoming more acute. The sputter of motors is giving way to the clatter of hoofs as horse-drawn wagons now make deliveries. America's way of life is slowing up in order to supply the necessary materials for victory. Two comedians who are backing America's war efforts to the hilt, Abbott and Costello understand the value of laughter in maintaining morale. Their Thursday night radio show, which went on the air October 8, and their latest comedy, "It Ain't Hay" for Universal, are added proof that the pair are past masters at combating the fever of war with the nostrum of laughter.

Paging Susan Hayward for Stardom

Coincidence Landed Susan in Movies
But Hard Work Has Kept Her There!

THE old Scottish saying, "The redness of the hair lends strength to the battle," fits little Susan Hayward to a "T." When she ran out of funds for dramatic training, she turned model, posed for color illustrations that by coincidence George Cukor saw in New York while searching for a girl to play Scarlett O'Hara in GWTW. Turned down for that role, Susan de-cidied to stay in Hollywood and try her luck in other studios, finally clicked. As Hester the hellion in "Adam Had Four Sons" she was excellent. "Reap the Wild Wind" added to her laurels, and now her role in Paramount's "Forest Rangers" finds her stealing the show from star Paulette Goddard—three good reasons why we're paging Susan for stardom.

ONLY real competitor of Vivien Leigh for Scarlett O'Hara role, Susan went to Hollywood, tested repeatedly ELATED over her fine performance in "Reap the Wild Wind," Paramount restyled Susan's beauty. Like it?

Dime-a-Picture for the USO Campaign

PRICE—one dime. That's what your favorite radio star will charge you for his or her picture next time you ask for one. It's not that the stars are going high-hat or chiseling.

George Burns and Gracie Allen,
CBS Merrymakers, Are Sensible,
Down-to-Earth Folk off the Air

AS GRACIE ALLEN she's a nitwit of the airways, a chirruping, dithering damsel of many words and absolutely no sense. But as Mrs. George Burns, Gracie is an intelligent, charming and witty housewife, mistress of a lovely home and the devoted foster mother of two children.

For more than twenty years, George and Gracie lived out of trunks, for they were troupers, ever on the go. But several years ago they settled down to radio and movie work, built a twelve-room house in California and adopted Sandra Jean and Ronnie.

Their new life has been rich and happy. Gracie's talents easily swung into domestic channels.

Like every other homemaker, concerned with the coming generation, Gracie takes the war effort seriously. She and George have toured many Army camps as far from home as the East Coast. They are now making shorter trips to boost the war-bond drive. The American Women's Voluntary Services recently dedicated the "Gracie Allen Canteen" for servicemen. Gracie privately backs this canteen and serves as a hostess.

Gracie is a serious student of first aid, and spends several nights a week attending Red Cross classes. She practices on the family—usually with better results than those shown in the picture below. Yes, Gracie Allen is doing her part.

GEORGE AND GRACIE, heard on CBS Tuesday nights, are among radio's most famous and successful zanies. The couple are sensible married folk off the air, proud of home and kids

WAR IN THE AIR

By Major Alexander P. de Seversky

Air Strength Will Decide the War, Says Famous Plane Designer

AMERICAN radio has done a magnificent job in covering this war. It has every reason for pride not alone in its news reporting but in its interpretation of that news. To complain of one sin of omission may therefore sound carping and ungrateful. I venture to do so, reluctantly, only because the sin seems to me so vitiating that it affects the quality of the entire war analysis by radio. Besides, I am encouraged to intrude with the complaint by the fact that the broadcasting companies recently have begun to correct that omission and have thus, in effect, conceded the justice of my "kick."

I refer, of course, to the conspicuous absence of war analysis from the air-power angle, by airmen or others specifically trained to the idiom of the aerial weapon. It was altogether natural for radio, as the war crisis developed, to turn to seasoned military men, with splendid reputations in their own fields, for expert interpretation of war events. In practise that meant reliance on Army and Navy officers too old to be in active service, or retired for other reasons; in any case, on men trained in old-style warfare, steeped in the text-

The Case of the CURIOUS FISHERMEN

MR. DISTRICT ATTORNEY

Clue of the Left-Handed Man Solves a Murder and Leads Mr. District Attorney to a Much More Important Conspiracy

FICTION

ON THE face of it, there was no case. Just because young Bill Howell insisted that his uncle, Captain Joe Palmer, was left-handed was hardly reason to press an investigation.

Mr. District Attorney, a tall, vigorous, keen-faced man, listened carefully as Bill, who was about 16, told how "Cap" Palmer had gone to sea with eleven fishermen on a regular cruise and how the boat had been found next morning with all aboard, including the captain. But "Cap" was dead and he was Bill's uncle. The police of the little fishing-village agreed that "Cap" had died accidentally. It seemed that his right arm had caught in the craft's engine some way and became mangled. He died during the night because none of the fishermen knew first aid and none knew how to pilot the boat ashore. It was tragic but accidental.

"I don't care what they say, Mr. District Attorney," said Bill earnestly. "Uncle Joe hasn't been able to use his right hand for years. How could he get it caught in the engine, then? There's something wrong . . ."

The D. A. knew "Cap" Palmer; in fact, he'd fished from the captain's boat during vacations. Harrington, the Chief's assistant, knew him, too. And they both knew the boy.

Bill Howell was tall for his age and his grin was typically American—that is, when he grinned. He wasn't grinning today. He was very serious. The D. A. hated to let him down and looked at Harrington for help. But Harrington was looking out the window. The D. A. looked at Miss Miller, his attractive secretary, but she was fussing at her eyes with a handkerchief. Bill's explanation had been touching because Bill had loved his uncle.

"I'll tell you what, Bill," the District Attorney said at last, "I wish you'd keep on snooping around. Make your own investigation, and if you come up with anything tangible, get in touch with me. I promise I'll come down there at once. But honest, Bill, I can't go ahead with an investigation on the mere statement that your uncle was left-handed."

The lad stood up, thanked the D. A., shook hands with him and Harrington and nodded to Miss Miller as she showed him to the door . . .

The case was forgotten for two days, but was brought to the D. A.'s attention again when young Howell called long-distance from the little fishing-village.

"I think I've uncovered some—some very important evidence," he said.

would be necessary. He explained that if the clue was as important as Howell indicated, he would come down to his village. The boy thought that was swell, and said he'd do some preliminary work before the D. A. arrived. He said he had the addresses of the passengers aboard the boat at the time of his uncle's death and would check to see if they were correct. The D. A. said that could wait and told Bill to meet him at his uncle's fishing-boat.

"And, Bill," he added, "watch out for yourself. Just stay put until we arrive . . ."

It took about three hours to make the drive. Harrington and the D. A. knew the place well, having spent many happy hours fishing in the sound. Harrington drove the car to the spot where Captain Joe Palmer's boat was moored, and the D. A. pointed it out to Miss Miller as Harrington brought the machine to a stop.

It was dark and a fog had come in. Miss Miller shivered slightly at the mournful sound of a fog-horn out in the bay. The waterfront was deserted and lonely. The mist swirled about them as they walked toward the small fishing-craft. The footsteps on the wooden pier sounded hollow and Miss Miller unconsciously drew closer to the District Attorney. Harrington whistled to attract young Howell's attention aboard the small craft, but there was no answer.

They went aboard and Harrington whistled again. The District Attorney called down the tiny companionway. The boat was empty. The fog closed in tighter. The District Attorney and Harrington searched the boat for young Howell, then came back and stood beside Miss Miller. The D. A. frowned. He told Harrington to take the car to the police station and get the names of the passengers aboard the night Palmer died.

"Meanwhile," he said, "Miss Miller and I'll look the boat over. I'm worried about that boy."

Harrington left. Miss Miller and the District Attorney went down into the cabin and Miss Miller found a seat on one of the wall-benches. The District Attorney poked around the cabin for a time with a flashlight, then went forward. Miss Miller heard his footsteps on the deck overhead and occasionally saw the beam of his light at one of the portholes. After a time he came back.

"Did you find anything, Chief?" she asked.

He nodded positively but grinned when he said: "I found nothing."

"What do you mean?" the girl asked.

"Well," said the District Attorney, "I expected to find some evidence that fishermen had been aboard the boat. This party was out all day, you know, and should have caught something. But there's no evidence of it. As I said, I found nothing . . ."

"And—" Miss Miller prompted.

"Well," said the District Attorney, "I think the eleven men who went with Captain Palmer on his last trip were curious fishermen. I'm beginning to believe that boy had something when he came to see me and I'm more worried than ever about what's happened to him. I was afraid he might continue with his own investigation. And now—"

The D. A. was interrupted by a voice shouting hoarsely from the dock. The fog distorted the sound and the D. A. blinked off the flashlight and blew out the ship's lantern which they had lighted in the cabin. He and Miss Miller came on deck. They laughed when they discovered it was only Har-

Ben Bernie Leads South Bend's Bond Victory Fete

All-Day Show by the Ol' Maestro and All the Lads Honors a Quota-Busting City

BEN BERNIE believes in giving credit where credit is due. Ben's favorite method of giving credit is to put on a first-class show.

Credit was definitely due to St. Joseph County, Indiana, and to its important city, South Bend. In September, the county led the whole nation in bond sales in September, more than doubling its quota by a drive that produced almost $3,000,000 worth of sales.

So Ben, Gale Robbins, Jack Fulton, the King's Jesters, Yogi Yorgesson, Jackie Heller and all the Lads went down to South Bend to give the citizens a day crowded with shows of big-time proportions.

Festivities centered around the city's public market, and the Bernie troupe kept the throng happy—and in a buying mood. The Hoosiers bought $75,000 more in war bonds, receiving coupons good for merchandise equal in value to their bond purchases.

The Ol' Maestro staged his own CBS network show out of doors before a huge audience. He and his troupe also put on three other complete shows in honor of the occasion. Indiana's Governor Henry F. Schricker and State War Savings Administrator Eugene C. Pulliam joined Bernie in praising the fine campaign of the St. Joseph folk.

Yes, Ben believes in giving credit—and here was a case where it was certainly due. Yowsah!

HOLLYWOOD

Hollywood's still talking about the whooper-doooper success of its canteen opening. Even the most glittering premiere ever staged in Glanourtown couldn't hold a candle to it. Of course there was the hundred percent cooperation of all the big-name stars, but what really made the affair outstanding was the hard, unselfish work of every guild and union member in the town. Their deep desire to show the men in America's armed forces what they feel for them was heart-warming and gratifying. Sorta made the scoffers on both coasts, who said a Hollywood canteen would never succeed, eat their words. Bette Davis, canteen president, said, "It exceeded even our greatest expectations." What's more, there was only one calamity during the affair: Laird Cregar, self-appointed

"The Glass Key"

Type of Picture: A rousing murder mystery that keeps you guessing right up to the last minute.

Verdict: Dashiell Hammett's plot par excellence plus the good work of Donlevy and William Bendix and the Ladd-Lake combination make this picture a natural for spine-tingling thrills.—Adult.

BIRTHDAY CELEBRATION FOR THE BARN DANCE

Ol' Hayloft Still Thrills Radio Fans After Nine Years on the Net

HI-JINKS and a specially merry shindig marked the 470th program of the "National Barn Dance." The Ol' Hayloft rang as the Barn Dance crowd celebrated their ninth anniversary on the networks. On hand to aid the festivities were nine members of the cast of the original show, all still active Barn Dancers.

The four Hoosier Hot Shots, Lulu Belle and Skyland Scottie, the Arkansas Woodchopper, emcee Joe Kelly and announcer Jack Holden were the veterans. They were aided by Eddie Peabody, Pat Buttram, the Dinning Sisters.

The "National Barn Dance" is a national phenomenon. Year in and year out, a Coast-to-Coast NBC audience listens every Saturday night for a taste of truly rural, truly American music and entertainment.

OL' HAYLOFT has a new setting, the Civic Theater, to which the "National Barn Dance" moved after Army took over the old theater. Here's "Barn Dance" crew

THE MOVIE FRONT

So when Mary found the ideal domestic, an elderly woman who's a jewel of a housekeeper and a whiz of a cook, she took no chances and signed her discovery to a seven-year contract, drawn up by an attorney and duly notarized and signed. But what gave the agreement a real star-twist was the fact that it calls for regular six-month options, each one stipulating a substantial raise in pay . . .

Jottings from Movietown: Kenny Baker's making "Silver Skates" for Monogram. Pat Morison, just back from an A. E. F. tour in the British Isles, will play opposite Kenny . . . Besides selling a whale of a lot of bonds on her Government tour, Veronica Lake collected $186,000 for a lock of her hair in Atlanta—which went into the bond box too . . . Right up the same alley, Jeanette MacDonald collected an extra $20,000 on her en-cores during a recent concert tour for Army emergency relief . . . Pat O'Brien plays a chief gunner's mate in "The Navy Comes Through," wears for the first time chevrons he coveted as an eighteen-year-old boy in World War I . . . Hollywood gossip has it that the John Payne-Jane Russell romance is more serious than it's been reported. Mebbe! But our guess is that Anne Shirley is still head girl in Johnny's heart, no matter how many lovelies may be found clinging to his arm . . . Marie McDonald's engagement to

George Guinle, Brazil's Rockefeller, has gone pfft! . . . Charles Drake, who plays Bette Davis' first sweetheart in "Now, Voyager," was awed at the idea. "Gosh! Imagine me kissing a girl with two Oscars!" he exclaimed. Laughed Bette: "And he acted at first as though he was kissing an Oscar instead of me" . . . Robert Donat (Academy Award winner as "Mr. Chips") is now in England, but his nine-year-old son John is in America for the duration, and has just been signed for a role in RKO's "This Land Is Mine."

LAUGHTON STAGES SOLO BOND DRIVE . . . BERNIE PLANS TRIP TO IRELAND

Crosby Brothers' Laboratory Aids War Production; Behind the Scenes at an Audition; Scooter Aids "Vox Pop" Show

NEW YORK

By E. KAY

We walked into a one-man bond drive when we entered the smoke-filled quarters of Charles Laughton at the NBC studios in Radio City. Laughton appeared on seventeen programs in one day and spoke personally with all who called to pledge the purchase of war bonds. During our stay we saw him dash to various programs and answer hundreds of telephone calls. In the brief lulls, he would relax by reciting page after page of "Alice in Wonderland," and you have never known Alice until you hear Laughton bring her to life.

Then came the return of Fred Allen and troupe to the airwaves. Lo and behold! There was Charles Laughton, the actor and not the salesman. Fred explained that Charles had brought the latest news from Hollywood—Mrs. Mickey Rooney had been awarded custody of their yo-yo but Mickey would be allowed to visit it once a month. The Allen show had sixty minutes of entertainment crammed into thirty. When the program went off the air Allen asked Laughton if he wanted to tell the audience of his experiences on his bond-selling tour. Charles told again the story of those rescued from the airplane carrier Yorktown. Never before have we seen people so moved—it took truth to do it. A deep curtsy to the men and women of the theater, screen and radio for the work they are doing to awaken the American public to the dire need of shaking off their apathy. In the words of Charles Laughton, "Believe me, ladies and gentlemen, the flame of democracy is flickering—and God help us and our children and our children's children if that flame ever flickers out" . . .

Leave it to "Vox Pop" to do something on the different side. When broadcasting at the New Jersey Lakehurst Naval Air Station, they ran an extension microphone to the airship hangar. While Parks Johnson was talking with an interviewee in the auditorium, Warren Hull dashed to the hangar by motor scooter to be on hand to describe the landing and berthing of a blimp returned from ocean submarine patrol . . .

Yippee! Roy Rogers and the rodeo have hit town . . . The new Bob Hawk program, sponsored by Camels, will be aired October 31. It will be titled "Thanks to the Yanks" and will be aired over the CBS network . . . Norman Tokar, Henry in "The Aldrich

By AVERY THOMPSON

We wish to report that Bob Burns recently received a request from our soldiers in the Canal Zone to be the judge of their Har contest. Bob, a connoisseur in that field if ever there was one, wrote back and said he would oblige. The tall stories came, Bob read them all and picked the best. To the lucky gent, Bob sent a letter of congratulations and one of his best bazookas. All was quiet for a while until Mr. Burns got a package in the mail one day and found his bazooka had been returned by the very same boys. They weren't ungrateful and there was a note of explanation. After combing through all the troops they couldn't find one who could play the horn, so they returned it, asking if in its place they could have a harmonica, which would be a lot less confusing for the boys . . .

Cutest gag of the week: When a friend asked Eddie Cantor whether the Cantor program was going to continue keeping Dinah Shore on the air this season, he quipped back with "Why, it's Dinah that's keeping the Cantor show on the air!" . . .

The Crosby menage has produced some very astute guys. Those boys have interests that are so varied that it's a difficult thing to keep up with their newest ventures. Bing, Bob and brother Larry have formed a partnership in a large foundry which now produces over fifty parts for airplane plants. Besides this they own the Crosby Research Laboratory, which has to date perfected over two dozen inventions which are being used in the war effort. That's a mighty fine thing in these days when each person's individual effort counts so much.

BRUNO WALTER DIRECTS SCHUBERT, MAHLER SYMPHONIES OVER CBS SUN.

Erich Leinsdorf Schedules Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" for NBC Symphony Concert Sun.; Brief Analysis of Popular Music

By ROBERT BAGAR

New York World-Telegram Music Critic and Associate Program Annotator for Philharmonic-Symphony Society of New York

WITH the Philharmonic-Symphony's inaugural broadcast over CBS this season Bruno Walter turns to two of his favorite composers for programmatic material—Schubert, who is represented by the "Unfinished" Symphony, and Mahler, by the First Symphony.

Mahler has been a special predilection of Mr. Walter and it is not too hard to understand why, for he knew him intimately. Moreover, he studied under him, besides admiring his music.

Gustav Mahler, a native of Bohemia, began work on this symphony about 1883. He was an assistant conductor at Cassel at the time, and his musical surroundings were congenial to composition.

Not till the composer had become conductor of the Royal Opera at Budapest, however, did the work obtain its first performance. And to that Hungarian city went the honor of hearing the first in a line of ten symphonies by Mahler. He conducted the premiere himself at a concert of the Budapest Philharmonic in 1889.

Oddly enough, that first program carried the description of the First Symphony as a "Symphonic Poem in Two Parts," and, still more odd, when it was introduced to a Weimar audience on June 3, 1894, it went by the inexplicable title of "Titan" and its two sections also had mottoes, "From the Days of Youth" for the first and "Commedia Umata" for the second.

Each of these two sections had subdivisions and that same program announced to the uninitiated with considerable eclat the significance of each.

The initial one of these earned the sobriquet "Spring and no end. The introduction represents the awakening of nature in the early morning." The second, "Mosaic" or "A Chapter of Flowers," was an andante which went by the wayside after that Weimar performance. The third offered, "Under Full Sail."

But the most elaborate description of all was given to the fourth. It read, "The hunter's funeral procession: a dead march in the manner of Callot (a seventeenth-century French engraver). The composer found the external source of inspiration in a burlesque picture of the hunter's funeral procession in an old book of fairy-tales known to all children in south Germany. The animals of the forest escort the dead forester's coffin to the grave. Hares carry flags; a band of gipsy musicians, accompanied by cats, frogs, crows, all making music, and deer, foxes and other four-footed and feathered creatures of the woods, leads the procession in farcical postures.

"This movement, expressing moods now ironically merry, now gloomily meditative, is followed immediately by . . . the abrupt outburst of a wounded heart."

Amusing as this may seem, Mahler later flayed unmercifully all program books as being obstacles to the enjoyment of the music. Once, after a performance of his Second Symphony, he is purported to have said, "Down with program books! They propagate false ideas! The audience should be left to its own thoughts about the work that is being played; it should not be forced to read during the performance; it should not be prejudiced in any manner. If a composer by his music forces on his hearers the sensations which streamed through his mind, then he reaches his goal. The speech of tones has then approached the language of words, but it is far more capable of expression and illumination."

Since Mahler envisioned this symphony in two parts, despite the fancy nomenclature utilized for four sections at the Weimar performance, he recommended that a pause of five minutes be observed between the first and second sections, or—to be up-to-date about it—between the second and third movements. The symphony is scored for four flutes (three interchangeable with piccolos), four oboes, English horn, three clarinets, bass clarinet, three bassoons, double bassoon, seven horns, four trumpets, three trombones, tuba, kettledrums, bass drum, cymbals, triangle, tam-tam and har besides the usual strings.

(Bruno Walter and the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra play the Mahler First Symphony and the Schubert "Unfinished" over CBS on Sunday after noon, October 25.)

WAGNERIAN batonist of the Met Opera is Erich Leinsdorf, who directs NBC Symphony program of Prokofieff, Bach music Sunday

The Russians Again

Don't look now, but music by modern Russian composers is having an American field day. Probably every tot in the country knows the name of Shostakovich by now. And that of Serge Prokofieff is by no means an unfamiliar one. Hence it should be no startling news to the radio listener to learn that Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" ("An Orchestral Fairy Tale for Children") is to be heard on the NBC Symphony program conducted by Erich Leinsdorf.

A child prodigy, Serge Prokofieff wrote numerous works in all the forms while still a youngster. His later attitude toward these works of childhood would not exactly be termed propagative. In short, he recalled them all. The compositions of his maturity—an opera, "The Love of Three Oranges," several ballet suites, symphonies, concertos and the like—have been received with particular enthusiasm wherever performed.

He completed the score of "Peter and the Wolf" in 1936, and the first performance was given at a children's concert of the Moscow Philharmonic Orchestra on May 2, 1936.

The fly-leaf of the published score contains the following commentary, placed there by the composer:

"Each character of this Tale is represented by a corresponding instrument in the orchestra; the bird by a flute, the duck by an oboe, the cat by a clarinet in a low register, the grandfather by a bassoon, the wolf by three horns, Peter by the string quartet, the shooting of the hunters by the kettledrums and the bass drum. So now that you have heard the different instruments, you will be able to recognize each one of the characters in the music."

Of course, Prokofieff's idea is the instruction of children in the mazes and mysteries of leitmotifs, the thematic subjects upon which he bases his musical work. Richard Wagner, as we well know, traveled far on such paths, assigning special themes to each character, condition, situation, idea, and so on, all through his operas. He interwove them with miraculous smoothness in stunning polyphony. But Prokofieff merely hints at the whole device in "Peter and the Wolf," since in this work he is directing his message to an audience of children.

But "Peter and the Wolf" is an enchanting piece, so much so that grown-ups, both as to years and musical lore, have been captivated by it. The tale on which the music is based is mighty simple—just a little saga of bravery shown by a little boy.

(Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," as well as two pieces by Bach, will be played by the NBC Symphony, Erich Leinsdorf conducting, on Sunday, October 25.)

POPULAR MUSIC

Benny Goodman led the way in the swing field

SINCE it seems to be the time for definitions, the subject of whys and wherefores of different types of popular music might be taken up. There has been and probably still is a good deal of confusion concerning the classifications of songs, performances and such, but the whole thing apparently is coming out of the haze and clarity, at last, is setting in.

For a long time the word "swing" was utilized to describe everything that went wild and woolly. That was a wrong assumption, it now appears. There are three general classifications under which most of the popular performances fit. They are swing, hot and sweet music. In none of these does tempo have anything to do with the subject.

Swing music now signifies music that is of a strictly rhythmic nature, usually the instrumental type of piece, but fully or partly arranged.

In other words, where you find order and logic and a definite plan in the music, BESIDES a rather speed-up tempo, there you will find swing.

Hot music is music that is improvised. It is made up on the spot, that is, either by a group of musicians or by a soloist. Here the ensemble starts off on some general thematic idea and then the individual musicians begin to invent figures and phrases which are taken up by the others and developed as the session goes along. When there is real inspiration to such music-making as this, the results often achieve really high artistic pinnacles not only of interesting melodic and harmonic invention but also form. It can be readily seen that even solo performers, a pianist, for example, can do the whole thing himself. The technique is the same, noodling, for a while around a main idea, then to take it up and make it grow under constantly growing inspiration.

Sweet music is music that is, as its name explains, sweet and uninvolved, usually featuring melody. Some of the big-name bands play a great deal of this music with orchestral arrangements that enhance the original melody. And it is not infrequent when an arrangement is much superior to the tune on which it is all based.

These, therefore, are the three general classifications. Blues music can fit into any of these categories, but boogie woogie most often is considered hot music. Of course, even boogie woogie can be planned in advance, which would then make it swing.

from overseas. He may take his singers along and pick up a band over there, or he may simply broadcast a "spot" bit himself, which would be worked into the rest of the show in the U. S. . . .

I've just been watching the hopefuls trying to storm the gates of network radio. It has been a rather depressing experience, despite the fact that the hopefuls were treated with courtesy and consideration.

The occasion was a general dramatic audition at the NBC studios here. It was one of the frequent auditions at which anyone is welcome to come and present his talent before the mike.

The hopefuls were all women and children—typical in these war years when many men have grimmer jobs at hand. Most of them were nervous.

They were the people you and I know—the people who recite pieces at church socials, who give "readings" to women's clubs, who act in amateur-theater groups. All of them had some talent; all of them had undoubtedly received the unstinted applause of their friends and encouragement from their elocution teachers and dramatic coaches.

But—and this is the tragedy—most of them are amateurish. To Art Jacobson of NBC and Ted MacMurray of Blue, directors of the auditions, the gap between this undeveloped talent and professional competence is the difference between possible and impossible. One after another the ladies read poetry and excerpts from plays. They "emoted" energetically, leaped from dialect to dialect, from tragedy to farce. Finally, as an attractive young lady was playing a grandmother bit, Ted turned to me and said, "What I want to see is a nineteen—" rington, who had returned from police headquarters with the list of names.

"How many are there?" the D. A. asked, turning on the flashlight.

Harrington counted slowly. There were twelve names.

"Does that mean something, Chief?" Miss Miller asked.

"Yes," he replied, frowning in concentration. "I'm convinced now that young Howell's suspicions were well founded. Remember, he told us that eleven men went along on that party. Well, according to this list, twelve came back. Who was the extra man? Where was he picked up?"

"And now you think the old man was murdered?" Harrington asked.

"No-o-o," the District Attorney said carefully. "But from what we've uncovered, it's pretty evident that he could have been."

"But what'll we do now?"

The District Attorney thought a moment, then said, "Well, we're pretty certain that young Howell was making his own investigation. The last thing he told me was that he might check on the passenger list. I told him not to, but you could hardly blame him for following up something he started. The thing to do now is to find him. We'll divide the list, each take four names.

I want you both to try to see your people personally. Tell them that the boy was to meet you there. Watch their reactions closely . . . We'll meet back here in an hour."

"Right, Chief," said Harrington.

"Okay," Miss Miller replied.

"I have a feeling that the roll of film the boy told me about is the key to this case. We've got to find him before it's too late."

The first three names on Miss Miller's list were blanks. She found no houses at two of the addresses and the third address was a darkened warehouse. She was keyed up and excited when she discovered that the fourth address was that of a small camera shop. An attendant, a raw-boned blond youth, was closing up for the night.

He replied courteously when Miss Miller asked if the place was Mr. Ludlow's shop, but shuffled his feet nervously when she said that she had come there to meet a friend of hers named Howell. She asked the young man if he was Mr. Ludlow.

"No," the fellow replied. "Mr. Ludlow's busy at the moment. What was your friend going to see him about?"

"He wanted to find out something from him. I do hope he hasn't been here and gone."

The attendant said he wouldn't know about that, and explained that he was about to close the shop; that it would be impossible for Miss Miller to wait. At that moment, however, a door at the rear of the shop opened and a man with a deep scar on one cheek came into the shop. His voice was soft and pleasant. He was a tall, well-dressed man about thirty-five, who introduced himself as Mr. Ludlow, and said he had overheard the conversation with his clerk.

"It's not comfortable in the front of the store," he said casually. "Suppose you come in the back room and wait."

Miss Miller hesitated, but Mr. Ludlow called for the clerk, whom he addressed as "Paul," to close the shop. Miss Miller knew that if anything was wrong, the District Attorney and Harrington would find her eventually. But how long would she have to wait? Was it important that she follow Mr. Ludlow?

A moment later she knew the truth. As she stepped into the back room, Mr. Ludlow dropped his polite manner. He pointed to the far corner of the room.

"There is your young man," he said.

"Oh," cried Miss Miller in horror as her eyes followed Ludlow's pointing finger. The Howell boy lay on the floor, strangely doubled up. His hands and legs were tied and his eyes were closed.

"Don't be startled," Ludlow said. "He's merely unconscious. He's quite comfortable there on the floor. His condition is merely the result of stubbornness. He wanted to know too much about a roll of film my men dropped on his uncle's boat."

"Why don't you do something for him?"

"I'm going to," said Ludlow in a guttural voice. "I'm going to do something for both of you."

Miss Miller noted the change in the man's voice, the almost German accent that had crept into it. Ludlow asked what she was doing in his shop. She recognized her danger and tried to stall for time. Mentally, she tried to calculate how long she had been gone and how long it would take Harrington and the Chief to get back to the boat, where they had planned to meet. She attempted to hide her mental distress from Ludlow and explained that young Howell was merely her sweetheart with whom she had a date for the evening. Ludlow wasn't fooled.

"I enjoy listening to a convincing liar," he said, smirking. "You are asking me to believe that an obviously cosmopolitan young lady like yourself is the sweetheart of this country oaf." Ludlow turned to Paul, who also had entered the small room. "Relieve the young lady of her handbag, please," he ordered.

Paul snatched the bag from Miss Miller's hands. Ludlow told him to look inside for identification papers. In that way they discovered that she was from the D. A.'s office.

"I thought so," Ludlow said. "The boy has been in touch with the District Attorney. Since he is missing, they

Italians Reported Apathetic

ITALY is apathetic because of disillusionment and betrayal, says Natalia Danesi Murray, head of the Italian section of NBC International.

Mrs. Danesi Murray says that the common people know that their alliance with Germany was a bitter mistake. They hate the Nazis the way the French, the Dutch, the Belgians and all other conquered peoples do, and for the same reasons—the Germans' greed, dishonesty and cruelty.

The dynamic Italian writer-announcer, a graduate of the Royal University of Rome, is one of the bitterest critics of Mussolini's fascist philosophy. For nearly five years she has been broadcasting to Italy, building an immense audience of faithful listeners.

"Talking to people in Italy on the short waves is like talking to a very sick man, and what I have to say to them must be like medicine," explains Mrs. Danesi Murray. "Through various channels we learn that our programs are heard throughout Italy. We are urged to keep up the job of telling the Italian people the truth about the war, since they are completely shut off from truthful news in their own country. Also we have learned that many Italian officers assemble in closed rooms to listen to American and British news programs."

Four basic rules guide Mrs. Danesi Murray in her broadcasts to the Italian people. This is the way she sums up her approach: (1) "I never identify the Italians with Fascism. I talk kindly to the Italians and I speak aggressively against Fascism. (2) I never belittle the fighting qualities of the Italian army. On the contrary, I praise every defeat as a demonstration of their unwillingness to fight for Germany and a German empire. Indeed, I treat the Italian defeats almost as acts of valuable sabotage. (3) I try to speak to the Italian hearts and emotions. Italians are an emotional people. They respond when one appeals to their sentiments. (4) I talk directly and personally to the Italian listeners, though they may number millions, exactly as if I were speaking to one person in the same room."

Asked how this mighty weapon was forged on the airwaves, Mrs. Danesi Murray said: "Well, we forged it long before America went to war. We forged it by broadcasting the truth and only the truth. We told the truth to our listeners before we went to war, and we tell the truth today. That is more than Axis broadcasters can say."

Out of the Loudspeaker

According to Frank J. Cuhel, speaking over the Melbourne short-wave station, the forces of the United Nations are on the march. The former Japanese rashness and bold military strokes must now give way to a concentration of forces at important points. The Japs are not having their own way anywhere now. The outcome will henceforth be decided by that side that has the best gray stuff under their caps; that has the most ammunition around their midriffs. . . . A commentator on "Radio Newsreel," popular London short-wave feature, recently described the homing pigeons that almost every bomber carries as part of its standard equipment on long raiding-trips. These little birds are carried in bright-red and orange boxes. They require no especial attention and great height doesn't seem to bother them at all. When they are released they must be thrown head down from the plane and in the same way that it is moving in order that they won't be caught in the slipstream. Once away from the plane they thrash around a bit, and then with that unerring instinct which has defied scientific explanation they take off for home, hedge-hopping over streams or lakes but again taking to higher altitudes once the obstacle is crossed, never ceasing, never faltering until they flutter into the home roost. . . . According to the Australian short-wave station, munitions workers throughout the Commonwealth will soon be able to get hot meals for twenty cents. The first canteen already opened will accommodate eight hundred men at a time. . . . There are more women in the Royal Australian Air Force now than there were men at the outbreak of war in September, 1939. . . . A commentator over WJQ, "The Voice of America," in recently giving some facts about Admiral Leahy, quoted him as saying that "the problem of fifth columnists could be solved by 'lamp-posts.'"

Not with dramatics or oratory but with dialogs and funny two-way conversations two little comedians—escaped from Czechoslovakia—are using a new air technique to deflate Hitler. Their nightly programs over WGEO, Schenectady, are so popular at home in Czechoslovakia, a country where listening to foreign radio broadcasts means the firing-squad, that John R. Sheehan, program manager, was forced to issue a special warning to the Czechs not to whistle, hum or sing on the streets any songs heard over Radio Schenectady. "We have learned from reliable sources," Mr. Sheehan explained, "that a number of Czechs have been shot because the Nazis heard them whistling the songs we broadcast, and therefore knew at once they had been tuning in our programs." Formerly owners of a theater in Prague, these two men co-authored many songs and plays. Now in this country, they have joined, through the potent medium of General Electric's international broadcasting station, the United Nations forces waging war against the Axis. The two comedians have been ridiculing the Germans for thirty weeks. They have even written new Nazi-stinging words to some of their old songs, which were sung throughout Czechoslovakia before the invasion. For obvious reasons, their names cannot be revealed.

Notes About the Stations

The Kuching, Sarawak (Borneo), short-wave station on 6.98 megs, now under Japanese control, is being heard irregularly by Thomas Van Auken of Alpine, Texas, from 12:15 to fadeout near 2:00 a.m. EWT. . . . August Balbi of Los Angeles, Calif., is hearing a Calcutta, India, station on 7.26 megs from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. and from 9:00 to 10:00 p.m. EWT. English news is given at 9:30 p.m. EWT. . . . Australia is now broadcasting to western North America from 12:25 to 1:10 a.m. EWT on new frequencies. VLG3 (11.71) and VLQ5 (9.68). The newsletter to the Australian forces in the Middle East is given at 1:13 a.m. EWT over VLG3 (11.71). Since October 1, no messages from American soldiers in Australia have been broadcast over the Melbourne short-wave station. . . . Tokyo's latest propaganda stunt is a take-off on American cartoon characters, Maggie and Jiggs. Their skit consists of a discussion of war and domestic happenings in this country. It can be heard irregularly at 1:30 a.m. EWT over JZK (15.16) and JZJ (11.80). It is needless to say this very unfunny act falls flat with American listeners. . . . GRI (9.415), London, has been added to the group of transmitters that broadcast the North American Service nightly. It is in operation from 9:30 p.m. to 12:45 a.m. EWT. . . . It is rumored that Germany will put several new 200,000-watt short-wave transmitters into operation soon. . . . Berlin often broadcasts the names of American prisoners of war taken from torpedoed vessels of our Merchant Marine, at the conclusion of the English news period, which begins at 10:00 p.m. EWT.

What, No Jive?

All sailors aren't jitterbugs, Margery Mayer, contraalto member of the "Hymns of All Churches" choir, discovered recently when she was the featured vocalist of the Illinois Symphony Orchestra recital at Chicago's Navy Pier. The sailors and marines stationed there requested Margery to sing "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice," "Habanera" and "Hugette Waltz."

From early boyhood, planes were a passion with Alexander de Seversky, whose wizardry with air power is making aviation history today. He never rested until he got into an aviation school. Eagerly he went up for his first flight with an instructor. Three times around the field and then down was the extent of it. "Now," said the instructor, "you are ready to solo." "But we were up only a bit over six minutes," gasped the youthful Seversky. "It's not the time but the aptitude that counts," replied the instructor. "You are ready." And so with six minutes and thirty seconds of actual flying time, Alexander de Seversky got his wings!

For a story by Major de Seversky on "War in the Air," see page 4 of this issue.

Vaudeville Rogue's Gallery

Joe Laurie, Jr., smallest member of the trio of joke experts on "Can You Top This?," reputedly has one of the world's largest collections of vaudeville pictures. He is the proud possessor of some fifty thousand photographs of greats and near-greats who played the variety halls of yesteryear. He has them filed away alphabetically in large trunks in his home.

O'Keefe Writes for Women

Walter O'Keefe, influenced no doubt by his m.c. job on "Battle of the Sexes," is writing articles for women's magazines. In the next issue of Vogue, he will have an article on "Capital Punishment" (all about his experiences with the confusion in Washington). Next month, his treatise on "All Women Can Be Beautiful" will appear in Glamour.

Beautifying Baby

MISS 1942's beauty routine begins early. Quantities of Swan Soap suds, and a bit of byplay with mother, add to the fun, make daily morning bath a pleasure!

STILL a little damp around the edges, the contented baby above is fresh from a dip and ready for play

ALWAYS a joy—a clean baby is healthy, happy. Johnson's Baby Powder ensures her lasting comfort

AT LAST! The baby you've waited and planned for has finally arrived. He or she is so tiny, so helpless, and seems to look at you as if to say, "Please take good care of me." But of course you will! And if you are a brand-new mother with a brand-new baby, you are probably worried about all the things you should do. In fact, you may be a bit skeptical even though you have been a mother before. However, all you mothers will agree that she must have the best possible start in life. So let her be a bathing-beauty!

There's nothing in the world more lovely than a clean, sweet baby. What's more, a clean baby is not only more comfortable but is more likely to be a healthy child. And bathing that helpless but adorable chunk of humanity can be the most pleasant part of caring for her. While you are handling her and making her comfortable, play with the baby but, most important of all, watch her grow!

Leading pediatricians and maternity centers recommend, of course, only the sponge bath for your baby until the umbilical cord comes off and is healed. Utmost care must be used to make sure that you do not touch the cord. So give baby the pleasant experience of a sponge bath in a room regulated to seventy-five degrees Fahrenheit—but not warmer. Remember, not a single draft should blow on baby during the bath. Heat your water to one hundred degrees Fahrenheit or more, and sponge the baby with a sudsy wash-cloth. Use only pure soap or a special baby-soap which has been specified by your doctor. Rinse the wash-cloth several times to make sure every smidgen of soap has been sponged away. Pat her skin dry with a soft, downy cloth, and watch her kick with glee!

Now you are ready to literally cover the baby with antiseptic oil. Mennen's puts out a splendid product which not only cleanses but prevents infection as well. To properly apply this oil, use a gentle downward stroke—and make sure the oil reaches the bottom of all baby's many creases in the groin, armpits, neck and behind the ears. If you notice a crust or scales on her scalp, generously apply the oil to soften and loosen before washing—then, after patting her dry, use again to keep her in a healthy condition. And do care for her tiny ears! Only attempt to cleanse them externally while she is still so very young. A small piece of cotton moistened with antiseptic oil will gently purify her delicate skin. Then give special care to baby's neck, arms, legs, and your child will never suffer from chafing or friction!

But babies will grow, and after the umbilical cord is healed and the navel

War in the Air

book "laws" and deep-rooted traditions of strategy and military thinking.

Not for a moment do I question the erudition, the intelligence or the patriotism of the superannuated admirals or old-style Army men who have labored mightily to make this complex global war more comprehensible to the American people. I do question their capacity to grasp the nature of the aerial weapon and to read aright the implications of the extension to war-making to the third dimension. Indeed, it is unreasonable to expect a general or an admiral, or anyone else who still thinks in terms of surface warfare of the 1918 model, to interpret war in the "air oceans"; as unreasonable as it would be to expect an expert horse-breeder to analyze automotive methods.

It is no accident that non-military reporters, like William Hillman and Wythe Williams, let us say, have consistently shown more understanding of air-power facts than military experts of the old school. Laymen, at any rate, have nothing to unlearn; they do not start with a set of traditional preconceptions; they do not attempt to fit three-dimensional facts into a two-dimensional frame of ideas. No matter how hard they try to modernize their thinking, the normal Army-trained and Navy-trained experts continue to regard the battleship and the soldier with a bayonet as the decisive elements in war; they continue to look upon the airplane as an auxiliary of the older services, as a variation and strengthening of old strategy rather than the instrument of a totally new strategy.

It should be said for radio, of course, that it merely has reflected accurately the general underestimation of air power. The self-same failure to comprehend the air-power factor in modern war-making has been characteristic of military analysis in the press and in a great many books by old-line experts; it has been characteristic, alas, also of our military leadership. The fact that airmen and others equipped by their education and training to view the war from the vantage-point of aviation are at last being invited to use the facilities of radio may be taken as proof that American thinking on the war is going through a much-needed revolution.

No doubt certain elements in the science of war and the arts of strategy remain eternal and unchanging, whether in the days of Attila or Napoleon or Hitler. But what concerns us more immediately are the new elements, of which Attila and Napoleon could not have been aware.

Until our day and age, new weapons changed the tempo and the effectiveness of war. The efficiency with which the enemy's strength could be destroyed, his fortifications leveled, his men disarmed, might be raised; the speed with which distances could be negotiated might be increased; the thoroughness with which siege and blockade could be enforced might be improved upon. But these operations remained on the surface of the planet, where walls—walls of men, fortifications or naval units—could block an enemy or hem in an enemy. Under those circumstances every new weapon meant only an improvement or variation on old methods of war-making, on the age-old procedure of mile-by-mile, island-by-island, ocean-by-ocean conquest.

Air-power cannot be fitted into this pattern. Its advent has not merely altered old methods—it has canceled them out! Walls become useless, at best accessory in character, no matter how big and strong they might be, once nations acquired wings to leap over such impediments. And by walls I mean any surface barrier, such as massed armies or navies.

Aviation caused not only variations in the science of war-making but a complete revolution. It opened up to conflict a whole world until then inaccessible to mankind—the three-dimensional world of air that envelops our planet. The air ocean, let it be remembered, is continuous; only those who haven't succeeded in breaking through the traditional military idiom still think of air-over-land and air-over-water, rather than of one unbroken element. And the air ocean is deep, deeper than any of the seas.

In the past it was enough to capture a surface area, on land or sea, and to erect around it a shielding wall of men and metal. Of what use is such a wall today, when air-power can strike at the heart and vitals of an enemy directly, in total disregard of strength massed on the surface? The only force that can meet such attack through the air is air-power. It avails a country approximately nothing to possess the mightiest armies and navies; these constitute only so many convenient targets for attack from above, unless they are protected by superior air-power.

Let me put the matter in the most elementary—and admittedly oversimplified—form. Assume that one nation has huge armies and immense naval forces, but is entirely devoid of air-power. Assume that its enemy, on the contrary, has vast air-power but is totally devoid of armies and navies. Which would come out victor in such a struggle?

The air-power nation could not be successfully invaded by land or sea, since every approaching army or naval fleet would be systematically annihilated from above. The armies and navies would therefore be immobilized, useless until they could provide themselves with a cover of aviation. In the meantime, however, that country would be wide open for deadly offensives through the sky—offensives which would wipe out at leisure all the military and civilian targets below. Consider the relative positions of these two nations in the matter of blockade. Not all the armies and battleships could stop air traffic; but air-power could sink ships and cut land communications and impose blockade on the enemy.

Obviously conditions are not so simple. The nations in this war have all the weapons, on the surface and in the skies. But military events are so much gibberish unless we recognize the primacy of air-power—the fact that a decision in the air is the first and decisive factor in any modern battle.

In the Battle of Britain, the land and sea forces of both nations could not even come into contact; they stood aside, helpless onlookers, while the question of who controls the air over the British Isles was being answered. Because it was answered in Britain's favor, a surface struggle became unnecessary and impossible.

In the Battle of Crete, Germany had a virtual monopoly of air-power, Britain a virtual monopoly of sea-power. The outcome in favor of the air-power nation was inevitable.

Germany is a country with so little

Rose Lambrecht, Kankakee, Ill.—In the CBS show "Bachelor's Children," ALICE HILL has the role of Dr. Madelyn Keller and JANE WEBB plays Dorothy Keller.

Lily Winwood, Weirton, W. Va.—Handsome HARRY JAMES BABBITT began looking forward to a musical career when he was twelve years old. He started on the drums and xylophone, then the sax, and later studied voice. Harry even had a band of his own, but gave it up to travel over the country playing in theaters and night-clubs. In February of 1937 Babbitt started with Kay Kyser and has been the cause of much heart-fluttering ever since. Harry was born in St. Louis on November 2, 1913, is now five feet eleven inches tall, tips the scales at about 165, has dark-brown hair and eyes. He's ready to tell you about his maternal grandmother, who was a member of the Cherokee Indian tribe and was raised on a reservation in Oklahoma.

Harry Babbitt sings for Kyser

Patsy Marsh, Denver, Colo.—Since Irna Phillips' NBC show "Road of Life" is going to continue on the air and her "Woman in White" is not, she has lifted three of her favorites so that they might continue to live. BETTY LOU GERSON will bring Karen to "Road of Life" fans, KARL WEBER will continue as Dr. Harding and GLADYS HEEN as Loretta Hendricks. With this trick device, your old friends will be with you still.

Miss Ruth Ely, Chicago, Ill.—"Abie's Irish Rose" brings MERCEDES MCCAMBRIDGE to the airwaves as Rosemary, and DICK COOGAN is husband Abie Levy.

Lilly Geringer, New York, N. Y.—Six-foot-four-inch DURWARD KIRBY was born at Covington, Kentucky, on August 12, 1912, went to Purdue University to study mechanical engineering but stayed to sing in the glee club.

Kentucky comic Durward Kirby Station WBAA at Purdue signed him as a vocalist, and later as an announcer. After school, Kirby tried in vain for a job in radio until 1934, when he went to an Indianapolis station to make a reputation for himself. Blond, blue-eyed Kirby is married to the former Mary Paxton, likes to try detecting a person's home town by considering his accent, doesn't like people who talk during movies. D. K.'s first job was delivering groceries for the local store; his present job includes extracting laughs from a loyal Blue Network "Club Matinee" audience.

Mrs. James Hamrick, Jr., Richmond, Va.—No'm, ARTHUR TRACY cannot be heard on the networks at the present time. He's not scheduled to return to the air at any future date.

GRINNING Jack-o'-lanterns (left) for canapes. Try this with your favorite cheese spread and use olives or pimento for decoration

BEWARE! The hobgoblins will soon leer around shadowy corners; ghosts will moan on the wind; gaunt witches shall ride through the inky sky; and black cats will peer from dusky alleyways! Of course, it's Hallowe'en!

Back in the good old days of the superstitious Druids and Romans, the souls of the wicked supposedly entered the bodies of beastly animals and viciously prowled around the countryside. Then, as centuries passed, customs and superstitions changed. The wicked souls suddenly had no bodies—they became witches and spooks! And by some strange phenomena, romance also found its way into the holiday. Love-sick English maidens breathlessly waited for Hallowe'en so they might duck for apples. Any gal who was lucky enough to catch a bobbing apple and hold it in her teeth was the center of instantaneous attention. Fate had definitely marked her future! Trembling with anticipation, she carried the apple home and carefully placed it under her pillow. Then the handsome face of her husband-to-be would appear in her dreams!

Of course, you and I don't believe in these ancient customs and superstitions, but what a wealth of material for a Hallowe'en party! It's fun to discard every-day conventions—to rollick in the sport of make-believe. So gather your friends together and have a gay evening of byplay! With a few tricks, you can turn your living-room into the den of witches. Prop a few cornstalks in the corners for atmosphere, drape weird ghosts around the room, decorate your table with an effective Jack-o'-lantern filled with fruit, and you're ready to concoct interesting and unusual refreshments. So, to carry out the spirit of the evening's gaiety, serve something like this:

- Hot Consomme
- Funny Face Salad
- Olives
- Celery Curls
- Bread and Butter Sandwiches
- Hallowe'en Cake
- Hot Coffee with Cream

WHAT'S COOKING!

By GEORGIA SCOTT

Serve a Hallowe'en Supper!

Funny Face Salad

Tomato preparation: Wash medium-size, firm ripe tomatoes; peel and scoop out the centers. Then cut one side of the tomato just the same as a pumpkin face or Jack-o'-lantern.

To define the features: For mouth, strip of the white of a hard-cooked egg, cut lengthwise; for nose, triangular pieces of hard-cooked egg white; for eyes, mash the hard-cooked yolk and fill in eyes; for eyebrows, pieces of hard-cooked egg white.

Serve with French dressing.

Hallowe'en Cake

- 1 1/4 cups flour
- 2 teaspoons baking powder
- 1/2 teaspoon soda
- 1 teaspoon cinnamon
- 1/2 teaspoon nutmeg
- 1/4 teaspoon cloves
- 1 cup nutmeats
- 1/2 cup raisins
- 4 tablespoons shortening
- 1 cup sugar
- 1 egg
- 1 can condensed tomato soup

Sift flour, then measure, add baking powder, soda and spices and sift again. Wash and cut the raisins. Chop the nuts. Then mix and add two tablespoons of the flour mixture with the nuts and raisins. Cream the shortening, add sugar gradually and cream well. Add beaten egg and mix thoroughly. Then add the flour mixture alternately with the tomato soup. Stir until smooth. Then fold in the raisins and nuts, which have been combined with some of the flour. Bake in a nine-by-nine-inch cake-pan in a moderate oven (350-375 degrees F.) for forty minutes.

Cream Cheese Icing

- 1 package (3 oz.) cream cheese
- 1 1/2 cups confectioner's sugar
- 1 teaspoon vanilla

Cream the cheese until soft, then add the sugar gradually and stir until smooth. Add vanilla and spread on cake.

To smooth icing: Dip silver knife in hot water and smooth out icing before putting on design.

To make cat design: Outline design on cake with toothpicks.

Chocolate Butter Cream Icing

(for black cat design)

- 2 tablespoons butter
- 1 cup sugar
- 1 square chocolate, melted
- 1/2 teaspoon vanilla
- 1 1/2 tablespoons milk

Cream the butter well and mix in one-half cup sugar. Then add the melted chocolate, vanilla and remaining one-half cup of sugar, and one tablespoon of milk. Mix well and add rest of the milk if necessary for a good consistency that will spread. Spread the icing to form the design or put it into a pastry tube and put design on cake that way. Pull out toothpicks before serving cake.

Feminine Forum

is dry, she is ready for his first tub bath! Place your tub on a low stool or chair. Fill it half full of water (ninety-five to one hundred degrees Fahrenheit)—warm enough but not too hot for your elbow. Start baby's bath while she is lying on a table. Cleanse her nose and ears and wash her face with pure water—no soap. Carefully sponge her head and scalp, then pat her dry with a soft towel. Soap her little wiggling body with a sudsy cloth and she is ready for the tub. When you lift baby from the table, be sure you do not frighten her. Carefully support her head and back and place her in the tub feet first. Support her head with one hand and rinse her with the other. The job finished, she is ready for oil and fluffs of Johnson's Baby Powder.

Of course, you must give baby's diapers meticulous care, so they are always soft, smooth and fresh. Soiled diapers should be placed in a pail of water into which you have added two tablespoons of borax. This makes the water soft and all traces of soil are easily cleansed from the fabric. After diapers have been boiled in softened water, wring them out and rinse in a solution of boric acid. If possible, hang the diapers in the sun to dry, then fold them up for future use. As a time-saving device, carefully dust the diapers with baby powder before you put them away. This will prevent skin irritations and infections.

So with your baby clean as a whistle and as radiant as the morning sun, lay her on the bed, watch her kick, listen to her coo. And if you notice carefully, a tiny smile will cross her face as if to say, "I like this—it's fun!"

"Yes, it is tied to the dock below." Miss Miller tried to talk fast, but to no avail. She broke away and tried to reach the shop door. Ludlow snapped an order to Paul—and he talked in German!

"So that's what this racket's all about," Miss Miller said. "A couple of Hitler's little stooges!"

Ludlow smirked and made a low, mocking bow. "Very effective ones, my dear," he said. "We are little stooges who have an objective and we are going to carry it out! I don't mind telling you now what it is. After all—you might as well know about your journey. It's going to be a one-way passage anyway."

"Really?" Miss Miller asked, stalling for time.

"Yes," Ludlow replied. "My assistant is delivering a very important package to a U-boat that is awaiting his arrival out at sea. The last time we took on another agent."

"That's how you used the fishing-boat? That accounts for the twelfth man in your party."

"This time we are using a much speedier craft. We do not fear pursuers, because it will not be necessary for the boat to return."

"And we're supposed to swim back, is that it?" the girl asked.

"You won't be able to swim," Ludlow snapped. "You'll both be unconscious and young Howell there—" he nodded toward the unconscious boy—"has accidentally broken his arm."

Miss Miller looked at Ludlow and saw the cruel grin. Abruptly she knew the truth. Captain Palmer had met with no accident. These men had pushed his arm into a boat's engine and then let him bleed to death so that the whole thing looked like an accident. Now they had broken the boy's arm trying to torture the truth from him. For the first time she began to fear for her own life. Where was the Chief?

Ludlow gave quick orders to Paul in guttural German. Paul went to a drawer and produced a Luger pistol. Ludlow dragged the unconscious Howell boy across the floor. After he had the boy aboard the slim, speedy craft below, he came back to the room and spoke again to Paul.

"I will go to the tower, now," he said. "When I see your boat clear the harbor, I will flash the signal out to sea. You will take care of these two?"

Paul saluted and Ludlow left by the front door of the shop. Paul approached Miss Miller with the gun. She dodged him around the table, knowing that he was afraid to fire a shot for fear of bringing police. She still had to stall for time. Paul, she knew, meant to knock her unconscious, then drag her aboard the boat. Paul seized her arm and raised the butt of the gun . . . the door of the small room suddenly burst open.

The Chief fired one shot. Paul's arm dropped uselessly to his side. The Luger clattered across the floor.

"Thanks, Chief," said Miss Miller calmly, though she felt more like fainting. "This is a Nazi spy set-up, Chief."

Quickly she explained how Ludlow had headed for some sort of tower to signal to an enemy submarine out at sea. The Chief, who knew the district like an old-timer, guessed quickly that the "tower" could mean only the Sailor's Memorial Tower, which was the only tall building in the small fishing-village. Despite their haste, they found Ludlow just as he signaled.

He put up no fight and openly boasted that he'd sent the signal in time and that his mission had been carried out successfully.

"Yes," said the D. A. dryly, "but your confederate isn't in it. The boat that left the harbor was a decoy, Ludlow, a decoy that revealed the position of your submarine. Listen—there's an inshore wind tonight—I think we'll hear something."

The three men and Miss Miller stood in the wind-swept tower, and suddenly, on the wind which had blown the fog from the harbor, came a dull booming sound from the darkened sea.

Ludlow dampened his dry lips with his tongue. "What's happening out there?" he asked.

The District Attorney smiled. "Our bombing planes appear to have contacted the U-boat," he said.

"Yeah," Harrington said with a grin, "and to use the words of our American heroes, it sounds to me like, 'Sighted sub, sank same!'" sea-power, as compared with the United Nations, that it may justly be regarded as wholly lacking this element. Britain and its allies have a monopoly of surface strength at sea all around Europe. Yet the fact remains that sea forces cannot approach the Continent, because it is girded with land-based Axis aviation. If ever we do invade that continent it will be because we have neutralized or knocked out the defending Axis air-power.

What has the struggle in the Pacific been, when viewed from the revealing perspective of aviation, but a race for air bases? Japan has carried her air-power from island to island, the range of its aviation determining the extent of every surge forward. On the several occasions when Japan ventured beyond the range of its land-based aviation—in the battles of Coral Sea and Midway Island, for instance—and into the orbit of our land-based air-power, it has been defeated. The struggle in the southwest Pacific takes its name mostly from land groups, such as the Solomon and the Midway Islands, but always it is a struggle for air bases, in which the outcome is decided by conflict in the skies. Indeed, none of these battles can be understood except in relation to mastery of the skies, and anchor points on the surface for that canopy of aerial domination.

The whole war, in sober fact, can no longer be judged by this or that battle, or measured in square miles of land or sea. It is in the first place a struggle for ascendancy in the skies, and that on a global rather than on a local scale. Air-power has upset every old rule of war-making. It is in the process of evolving strategies and techniques of its own, to which all surface strategies become secondary and subordinate. There are no books from which this can be learned—the unfolding war itself is the book, and only those familiar with the language of aviation can hope to read it with some approximation of accuracy and to interpret its meaning for the future. There is no skirmish or battle which does not require judgment and interpretation from the angle of aviation.

These are a few of the manifold reasons why the war events must be analyzed by airmen, must be seen in relation to the three-dimensional realities. The war in the air is not just a phase of the larger war. This is primarily an air war. Victory and defeat will be determined, in the final analysis, by the respective aerial potentials of the contending nations.

Finally a little boy stood at the mike, sure of himself, steady, one eye cocked on Grandma by the sidelines. He read pretty well, had some punch in the right places. "We'll try him," said Art, and Ted nodded agreement. "He's no sensation, but he's worth calling in for a special audition. He might handle small parts."

And that was all. Without comment or criticism the directors led the hopefuls out, told them to call in a few days. Those calls, when they came, would mean dashed hopes for all but the little boy. For him it would mean a chance to appear in another audition before all the directors of the local NBC organization. If they approve of him, he will be placed on the talent lists and may be called to audition for particular roles in particular shows. If he wins a bit part, he will be privileged to join the hun-
