1942's Star of Stars—Don McNeill of the "Breakfast Club"

Announcing the Winners of 1942's Star of Stars Poll
"Dark Fantasy's" Mystery of the "Dead Hands Reaching"

1942's Star of Stars...

ONCE again radio's faithful have named their favorites through the Movie-Radio Guide Star of Stars Poll of 1942. Beginning on the opposite page you will find complete results in pictures and tabulations. Here, a word or two about the poll and its results. It has never been claimed that our Star of Stars Poll is an over-all, indisputable reflection of nation-wide listener sentiment. However, we believe it is the most authoritative poll of regular, purposeful listeners. The kind of fans who are interested and devoted enough to vote for their favorites—and buy sponsors' products. Take, for instance, the case of the "Breakfast Club," a long-time feature of NBC, now heard on the Blue Network. Those casual listeners who turn on their radios just to get a background for reading or to drown out a noisy conversation may be a little skeptical and more than a little surprised that this early-morning scriptless variety show usually romps away with the title of radio's Favorite Program and this year catapults its emcee, Don McNeill, to the top of the pedestal as Star of Stars. But we who see how fans flock into Chicago from far away to see the program, and how they shower the cast with innumerable evidences of loyalty, are convinced that it isn't only the size of the audience that counts but also the general attitude of the audience. We think the case should prove something in commercial radio. The same point applies to others of the winners and close-runners. You will find familiar, long-established names in the top brackets. You will also find some newcomers. And you will find the respective ratings shifting somewhat as compared to other years. Radio isn't stationary. Its variability is one of the many things that make it interesting. But we are sure that the stars, both old and new, will be especially pleased in times like these, when they are trying harder than ever to bring extra entertainment and information and esprit d'armes, that their listeners are still eager to demonstrate their appreciation. It is hardly necessary to point out here the value of public entertainment to civilian morale. It would be superfluous also to emphasize the wholehearted, all-out manner in which artists are contributing to the total effort in entertainment and in many other ways. We submit that the public is well aware of this, and the radio listeners have said so in an abundant and especially meaningful vote in the 1942 Star of Stars Poll.

Another Movie-Radio Guide editor has gone to war. The importance of radio to modern war—for its communication, propaganda, financing and morale—has caused editors of Movie-Radio Guide to be particularly well trained to aid the Army and the Navy. That is good, we think. We are glad to sacrifice such men as Gordon Swarthout to the war effort. Meantime, those of us left at our civilian posts will carry on in the full belief of ultimate victory.—The Editors.

CALLING ALL

Horror Fans

EVER since "Lights Out" went out several years ago, fans of the fiendish have been clamoring for more good old goose-pimple horror drama on the air. Now they have it. One of the programs that currently freezes the airwaves with its chilling stories is "Dark Fantasy," comparatively new to the networks. In the late hours of Friday nights these shivery, shocking stories go out over NBC—right straight from Oklahoma City, which you might not have thought of as headquarters for haunts. Station WKY is the home of the "Dark Fantasy" plays, and the writer is Scott Bishop, who lives in the midst of mystery and the supernatural, represented by the innumerable volumes of thriller fiction, fantasy lore and all kinds of horror literature that fill his home and his office. Bishop has long contributed to network broadcasting and to magazines. He says, "Give the listener enough material to let his imagination go to work, and he'll supply his own goose-pimples." "Dark Fantasy" has been furnishing plenty of such material since last November. And judging from enthusiastic comment, the horror fans are responding with goose-pimples galore! If you haven't heard "Dark Fantasy" yet, check the pictures on these pages and tune in this Friday.

1. STORY of "Dead Hands Reaching": Judith West (Eleanor Caughron) pens note to Allan Blain refusing his offer of marriage, little dreaming how the shadow of the man looms over her life

2. ALLAN (Ben Morris) is ambitious and upright, but the blow of Judith's refusal is too much for him and he goes to pieces over the disappointment. Failing to forget by burying himself in his work, he finally seeks relief from his heartache in the opium-den operated in Chinatown by notorious Yung Si Fu (portrayed by Muir Hite)

3. DRUGGED, Allan finds himself in the midst of a weird dream. He discovers an ancient diary of his great-grandfather's. He reads the book, unaware of the shadow of things to come

4. THE DIARY tells of a treasure buried years ago beneath a horse-stall by an old man who was dying. Allan puts on old clothes and goes with a lantern into the barn to dig for the treasure

5. THE TREASURE is found there on the great-grandfather's old farm. But near-by bandits learn of the discovery, give chase to Allan and attempt to steal the treasure. With a faithful old Negro, who has been living on the farm, Allan hides out for a week in a damp cave until the bandits have lost the trail and given up the chase

6. EMERGING, worn and ill, Allan stumbles on the unkept grave of his ancestor, finds gruesome evidence the old man had been buried alive, his "dead hands reaching" out of grave

7. MEANWHILE, back in the realm of reality, Allan's friend, Philip, is horrified by the ghostly apparition of the skeleton hand. A phantom voice urges Philip to go help Allan at the opium-den

8. STILL in the grip of the awful dream, Allan becomes vaguely aware that he is drifting between reality and unreality. As the effects of the drug begin to wear off, he tries desperately to fight his way through the mental haze to full consciousness

9. DENIED entrance to the den, Philip forces his way in. On guard with gun in hand, he finds Allan, tries to revive him as Yung Si Fu comes upon the scene. Then what? Hear "Dark Fantasy" May 22 for one of the most unusual conclusions even horror fans could want!

KAY pleads with John not to jeopardize his whole future, not to desert his children. But he insists on leaving home and going to a club to live after their quarrel over the wily Mrs. Hayworth

PART 2 This exciting story of the radio program "Stepmother," fictionized by Wiley Maloney, is broadcast Monday through Friday over CBS at 10:30 a.m. EWT, under sponsorship of Colgate-Palmolive-Peet Company for Colgate's Tooth Powder. In preceding installment, Kay Fairchild in her position as wife of Walnut Grove's mayor, John Fairchild, and stepmother of his two children, Bud and Peg, faces a grave problem when her husband becomes influenced politically by Mrs. Luella Hayworth, a wealthy newcomer to the Grove. In order to combat the unscrupulous woman's wiles, Kay, a newspaper reporter before her marriage, goes to David Houseman, an old friend of newspaper days and now editor of the Morning Journal. She prevails upon him to allow her to write a column under the assumed name of A. M. Vigilant. Here she bitterly attacks Mrs. Hayworth's plan to hoodwink Grove taxpayers. Peg Fairchild, who has never accepted Kay, goes to Mrs. Hayworth, tells her that she has put a detective on Kay's trail, says she suspects from his reports that her stepmother is A. M. Vigilant. Mrs. Hayworth confronts Mayor Fairchild with that suspicion, and forces Kay's hand. On her way to John's office to confess that Mrs. Hayworth is right, Kay wonders if this means the end of her marriage. Now go on with the story.

—The Editors.

KAY FAIRCHILD was nervous and worried. She'd have given anything to avoid this encounter with her husband at the city hall, but it was something that had to be done. Kay wondered, for a moment, to what lengths a woman was justified in going to maintain her home when she sees her husband falling under the influence of another woman. She wondered, too, how John's children—Peg and Bud—would react when they knew the truth.

Had she been right in attacking Mrs. Luella Hayworth, and incidentally her husband, in the A. M. Vigilant column? Was she right now in going to him with the truth and perhaps losing him forever?

As Kay entered her husband's office, she noticed the fleeting fragrance of an expensive perfume. Rightfully, Kay guessed that Mrs. Hayworth had just left John's office and she resented the fact. Her husband was flustered as he tried to cover his embarrassment by shuffling papers on his desk.

"Well, John," Kay said, "how's the big plan coming along? Weren't you and Mrs. Hayworth just talking about it?"

John shifted uneasily in his leather-upholstered chair. He pushed a drawer of his desk in and drummed on the glass-topped surface with a pencil. His eyes did not meet his wife's.

"Yes," he replied, "as a matter of fact, we were."

"And that's why I came down to see you, John. I want to talk about it, too."

"If you've come down here to try to talk me out of going ahead with the bond issue and our beautification program for Walnut Grove, you might just as well save your time, Kay."

"Then you are going through with it—definitely? Don't you see the danger of refusing to give the taxpayers a chance to pass on it?"

"Kay, I've told you before that these are matters of business for me to decide. And I do not agree with you that this plan is either grandiose, fantastic or wild. And just because Luella did get the idea—"

Kay pounced. "That's all I wanted to know, John. I wanted to make certain that it was not one of your own sensible ideas but that it originated with that woman."

Kay told him that she thought the farce had gone far enough, that she knew he had been play-acting when he told the family about the bond issue.

"But why would I pull a stunt like that, Kay?"

"To trap me into an admission, possibly. John, don't deny you've been wondering how the information about the tax-assessment plan leaked out to the Journal's A. M. Vigilant. Well, I think it's time you stopped wondering."

With that Kay handed her husband the proofs of the last column she had written. He rustled the papers and mumbled through them hurriedly, growing anger in his voice.

"Well!" he exclaimed. "That's very pretty! Why, the whole project's given away here! Kay, who wrote this vitriolic attack on me and my plan?"

"I did!"

Silence dropped like a leaden weight between them. Kay heard the steps of people walking in the tile-floored corridors outside, the distant honking of automobile horns, the drone of traffic under the mayor's windows.

"You—you, Kay?" John still could not believe his ears. "You are A. M. Vigilant? How could you do such a thing? You, my own wife?"

"To protect you from yourself. To keep you from literally plunging to ruin by letting this Mrs. Luella Hayworth lead you on and on to a point where you smash your career with her spectacular ideas to bilk the public—to a point where, in your blindness, you endangered the welfare, the very existence of your home, your own family. I think any woman would agree with me that anything is justified to preserve a home, to safeguard those you love from the upheaval that follows such a business association as you have with Mrs. Hayworth!

"Well, I don't! Do you know what this means? Do you, Kay?"

"What does it mean to you?"

"It means we can't go on together, Kay! It means that I'm leaving you. I'll move to the club. And by Jupiter, I'll do it today!"

There was little more to be said. Kay wearily walked from the office, tears in her eyes. She had lost her fight. She didn't notice the curious glances of the people she passed. She could only realize her own tragedy. Was this really the end? Had Mrs. Hayworth's plan worked so completely that she now had accomplished what she had set out to bring about—a complete break between Kay and John? Had Kay sacrificed her own happiness in an effort to save her home and the welfare of those she loved?

John, too, left his office. But instead of going home, he called upon Mrs. Hayworth. He sought comfort, but Mrs. Hayworth was gloating. John had experienced a normal reaction, he could almost understand Kay's position. He tried to explain to Luella Hayworth.

"It's barely possible, you know, that Kay was acting from a standpoint of misguided loyalty," he said.

Mrs. Hayworth laughed spitefully. "What's the matter with you, John? You find out your wife is taking information about your plans, going behind your back and writing vicious attacks under an assumed name—and you're excusing her. Good heavens!"

"But, Luella, she probably thought she was indirectly helping me by keeping me from carrying out these new plans—"

"Yes," Mrs. Hayworth said sarcastically, "by literally stabbing you in the back while you're trying to get ahead and build security for your children."

John at last found justification for his actions. He told Luella that he was leaving his home, going to live at the club.

"Now," she said, "you'll be able to carry out your plans and be a real mayor for Walnut Grove without a lot of meddling interference."

"You bet I will—nothing's going to stop me now."

"That's the way to talk, John. I can see I did well to place my confidence in you. You'll go a long way in politics . . ."

WHEN John came home that night he was in an angry mood. He hurried upstairs and began packing a large suitcase. Kay, who could hardly believe her husband would go through with his angry threat to leave his family, tried to explain everything. With tears in her eyes, she told him she was sorry for what she had done even if it had been for his own good. But John was in an ugly mood and wouldn't listen. Kay tried to appeal to him on the grounds that he was deserting his own children. He told her not to be dramatic.

"I think I should have been dramatic sooner," she cried, losing control of herself. "I think I've been too calm. I've taken a lot, John. I've let your daughter, Peg, talk as no girl should talk to an older woman . . . I took it because—" Kay's voice almost broke—"because I kept telling myself that I wasn't her own mother, that I was only a stepmother."

"Must we go into that?"

"No, I mentioned it only to remind you it hasn't been too easy for me here in your house, John Fairchild. There have been times when I would have liked to do a little walking-out myself. But I didn't. I've tried to be a mother to your children even when the going was tough . . ."

But John refused to listen and, his bag packed, he left after telling Kay he would make provisions for the care of the family. Kay, in anger, said she'd go back to work before she'd take his money. Just as John was leaving, Bud came in and saw his father slam out the door.

"Gosh," said Bud in dismay, "he certainly—what's eating him, Aunt Kay?"

"Your father is a little upset, Bud. You see, dear, he's—he's going to stay downtown after this. He has lots of meetings and—"

"Skip it, Aunt Kay. You mean Dad—you mean he's leaving us." Bud became angry, then broke into tears. "So he's walking out just because he's mad. Huh! Walking out! That makes everything fine, doesn't it? Sure! That's swell." Bud's voice broke completely, he threw his arms around Kay's neck. "A swell guy he is—"

Kay tried to comfort the boy. She herself was on the verge of tears, but in helping Bud she was able to control her own emotion.

"Don't you see, dear, we've got to take this. And, Bud, you've got to grow up fast. Don't you see, you've got to help me. You—I just can't get along alone. And you—you're all I've got to depend on—now."

Kay's hand rested on the boy's shoulder. His eyes, filled with tears he was unable to hold back, looked straight into hers. In them she found love, loyalty. In losing her husband, she had gained this boy's affections. That was something. But at that moment the front door swung open and Peg arrived home. Kay winced. Peg, too, had to be told about her father.

Kay sent Bud to his room and turned to the girl who had been so bitter and resentful toward her. She was no different now when Kay explained the situation. Kay tried to calm Peg, tell her that she'd try her best to make things pleasant in the house. Peg would have none of it.

"You—you talk of keeping things pleasant," she said bitterly. "I just want to ask you what you have to say about it, about anything in this house. Why you—you—"

"I know. I'm just a stepmother."

"I wasn't going to say that. Not this time. Not any more. Why—stepmother! Don't flatter yourself. Now that Dad has left you, now that he's going to get a divorce, you aren't even that. You—why you aren't anything!"

Peg ran up the stairs to her room under the watchful eyes of Kay and Mattie, the Fairchild's maid.

"Didn't I tell you so, Miss Kay?" Mattie asked. "Didn't I tell you she was spoiled? I tell you someone has got to give that chile a talking-to."

"Maybe," Kay agreed reluctantly, "but I'm not the one to do it." Sadly she repeated, "Stepmother—no, not even that. Not anything. Did Peg mean that, not even a wife? Does Peg think her father is never coming back to me?"

There were other reactions to the situation, reactions that Kay could not know about. Gen Porter, for example, told David Houseman what happened.

DAVID was flabbergasted. "Well, I'll be—he's got a nerve! It's bad enough to leave his own child to Kay—but a couple of stepchildren!"

"That's the way I feel," Gen said. "I've been trying to get her to go back to work."

David said he didn't think Kay should have to find a job, that it wasn't fair to expect it. Gen told David that she supposed he meant that she should have a man to take care of her.

"Yourself for instance?" Gen asked.

"Well," David said blushing, "I didn't say that. But you know I've always loved Kay."

"Sure, I know, David, but how do you know Kay has any idea of divorcing John. And if you have an idea of persuading her to marry you, David, you'd better go slowly."

"Why?"

"Because—if I know women—at this point Kay is a little fed up on the whole business of 'loving.'"

"I see . . . but, Gen, I'm not like John. I'm younger and I'm more her type. We were pals when we worked on a paper together in Chicago. I—I can make her happy—"

"I wouldn't be surprised if you could, David. And I'm for you. If I weren't I wouldn't waste all this good advice. Look here, David, it's easy for a woman as attractive as Kay to find men to fall in love with her—a whole lot easier to find love than friendship. That's what she needs right now, David, a friend. So try to be her friend. Above all, don't let her suspect how you feel . . ."

During the three weeks that followed, Kay found herself gradually adjusting herself to the new situation. David Houseman did become a friend to turn to for advice and help. Never once did he permit himself to show the affection he felt for her. Kay, on her part, took most of the blame for the situation at first, but as time passed and she saw the responsibility she had for Peg and Bud as well as for little Billy, her own child, she began to blame John more and more for his childish attitude.

Kay made peace with Peg and both were on good terms again—if a bit cool toward each other. Kay believed Peg felt more respect and admiration for her than at any time since she and John had been married. Bud, through David Houseman, found a way of earning some money toward the support of the family by selling papers at a stand in Turtle Flats, a tough neighborhood and an eyesore in Walnut Grove. Kay felt it was a dangerous location, but Bud was one of the proudest persons Kay ever had seen when he gave her his first week's earnings, and she couldn't tell him he must get a stand in a more respectable part of town.

John Fairchild, meanwhile, had regretted his impulsive action, but he still was under the influence of Mrs. Hayworth, still living at the club. The woman made him dance attendance

DAVID HOUSEMAN loves Kay devotedly; but knowing that she needs friendship when John leaves her, he keeps silent, stands by when her husband returns home without warning and collapses!

WEST POINT • then

1800: Whisky or West Point? At the turn of the nineteenth century, United States Congressmen were heatedly debating whether $25,000 should be appropriated to re-establish the West Point Academy, which had deteriorated into a political football since its founding during the Revolutionary War. There were isolationist speeches that might have been made just before Pearl Harbor. And one legislator protested that the $25,000 would be better spent on the regular Army's annual grog ration. "Which shall it be, gentlemen," he cried, "whisky or West Point?" It was West Point—for which America is grateful. This is a small part of the very colorful and exciting story of the great military academy. And that story is excitingly and authentically brought to the screen in "Ten Gentlemen from West Point," soon to be released by 20th Century-Fox. Darryl F. Zanuck wanted a West Point film that wouldn't be "just another service story." He called on producer William Perlberg and director Henry Hathaway. And they called on official government records! They found such an interesting story in the facts that they had to do scarcely any fictionizing, except for the romantic theme. And when Hollywood can find little about a story to colossalize, there's a recommendation for the real thing! Movie-goers will thoroughly enjoy and remember "Ten Gentlemen from West Point," not merely as a picturesque historical document but more as a stirring real story of other times that are in many ways far removed from ours, but in other ways strikingly similar. The film furnishes a tailor-made vehicle for handsome George Montgomery (Hedy Lamarr's fiance), and it supplies another ample role for the great talent of Maureen O'Hara.

1. THE STORY: Of the "Ten Gentlemen" enrolled at West Point Military Academy, following its revival early in the nineteenth century, two are bitter enemies. Shelton (John Sutton) is a wealthy scion, Dawson (George Montgomery), a Kentucky backwoodsman. Both love Carolyn Bainbridge (Maureen O'Hara), a Washington girl who had helped restore the Academy by kissing Congressmen. Above, at picnic, Shelton is at Carolyn's right, Dawson at her left

2. ABOVE: Although they're teaming up here against an opponent, the Dawson-Shelton rivalry is intensified by a vicious lacrosse "game" between cadets and bombardiers. This athletic battle is a free-for-all highlight

3. RIGHT: A greater issue pushes the personal feud into the background. With their commanding officer, Major Carter (Laird Cregar), the cadets are called to help General Harrison put down Indian uprisings

4. ABOVE: A few against a thousand, the cadets use a ruse learned in their classrooms. They deploy around the Indians' camp, set up a wild hullabaloo and fire the wigwams, making the Indians think they are attacked by a huge force. Captured Major Carter is rescued

"Ten Gentlemen From West Point" Pictures a Great Military Tradition; Meanwhile America Itself Goes All Out for Up-to-Date War

1942: V for Victory! And the V might well be a formation of American bombers. Jarred to its senses, America knows more than ever now that well-trained, well-equipped armies—and navies, too—are essential to freedom from aggression. And that armies must have the Grants, Lees, Pershings and MacArthurs that are turned out by the West Point Military Academy. But air-minded America today realizes also that the most modern striking arm—air power—can win or lose a modern war. That's why pilots as well as planes are being turned out in a great stream. That's why previous strict requirements have been relaxed until almost any sound-bodied man between eighteen and twenty-seven who can pass certain scholastic and mechanical tests, can become an aviation cadet. That's why, too, the huge aviation training-station, Randolph Field, in Texas, is called the "West Point of the Air." Here and at other such training-grounds throughout the nation, prospective war eagles are put through rigorous courses of study and practise to fit them for today's mighty struggle in the skies. After thirty weeks of flight-training the cadet wins his wings and a commission as a second lieutenant and a chance to go into active duty. Across the continent from the great military institution on the Hudson is this modern Texas flying-field, and there's a sharp difference in the type of war-training. But that's not important. The thing to mark down on the scroll of history is that West Point of yesterday and today, Randolph Field, the camps and ships, factories, war-time homes are all of a pattern—the pattern of victory and freedom. That every war job, whether adventurous and dangerous or tedious and colorless, is worthy and important.

EYES SKYWARD, chins forward, shoulders back, these fledgling pilots (above) marching out to their planes symbolize strikingly the American Eagle spirit that will take all comers and eventually blast them out of the air. They are a few of the hundreds, swelling to thousands, being turned out at American training-centers like Randolph Field, Texas, the nation's biggest, called the "West Point of the Air." They have to learn a lot, train much, work hard for months to get their wings and chance for action

SEVENTY HOURS flying in these sturdy 450-horsepower training-planes during a ten-week course qualifies these future pilots for advanced training in bigger, multi-motored craft NIGHTFALL at Randolph Field is just another signal for aerial activity in the dark skyways above the Texas plains. These aviation cadets know bombers must be able to fly by night!

AND while they practise for victory, with imitation bombs, they keep fixed in their minds the real objectives they may soon be flying over, each of them hoping, perhaps, that he may be the one to deliver an actual model for the above twenty-five-pound note. Millions more in all Uncle Sam's services have same general idea!

THERE'S a right way and a wrong way to look at everything. Kate Smith apparently has the knack of VICTORY CARAVAN Brightest and biggest galaxy of stars ever gathered for one show was that assembled in Hollywood's "Victory Caravan," shown above just before stars boarded the special train in Los Angeles for a tour of thirteen key cities in America, with first stop nation's capital. Proceeds from shows will be poured into the coffers of the Army-Navy relief fund, for stars give services gratis. Lone man in foreground right is Gene Lester, radio's singing cameraman, "Caravan's" photographer

HERE'S a brief word-view of what Movie-Radio Guide readers would have seen had they been aboard the "Caravan" special en route to Washington: Director Mark Sandrich showing Cary Grant how to do a Fascist salute with sarcasm, with Desi Arnaz, star Lucille Ball's husband, adding details; Joan Blondell practising a neat strip-tease act; Bob Hope rehearsing Mussolini role; Jerry Colonna declaiming, a few coaches down, and Pat O'Brien and Charles Boyer experimenting with make-up, to mention a few of the eighty-eight performers' work aboard train

—Bruce Bailey

SURROUNDED by Army-Navy escort, "Caravan" gets off to a rousing start. Idea of tour was born when other cities clamored for a show similar to Walter Winchell's program for Navy Relief at Madison Square Garden

—Jack Albin

Sunny California? . . .

It was a gay May Day for Frances Neal, promising young starlet, when she announced her engagement to Metro's rising young star actor, Van Heflin, with a party at her home. Their marriage is expected anytime within the next several weeks and probably just as soon as Heflin finishes his current picture at Metro. Frances said she would "quit the movies" . . .

Clark Gable, with Lana Turner, has just completed the tentatively titled picture "Red Light," and almost immediately went into "Shadow of the Wing." It is after this latter picture is finished that Gable will turn to Government work and, in all likelihood, will become a member of Major Frank Capra's U. S. Welcomed back to Hollywood at a party April 27 were star Anna Neagle and producer-director Herbert Wilcox, after an eight-months' stay in England, during which time Miss Neagle starred in the Wilcox-RKO production "They Flew Alone," based on the adventurous life and heroic death of Amy Johnson, ocean flyer and one of Britain's most famed pioneer aviatrixes. Actress Neagle had this to say about movie production during war-time: "It takes hard and deep digging to make motion pictures in Britain under conditions of total warfare, but it is just the kind of digging which brings one to grips with earthy realism and turns up a deeper quality of sincerity" . . .

Another Hollywood favorite who has been deserting these haunts for a New York radio show and is now back in town is voluble Eddie Cantor. (Continued on Page 32)

A DAFFY spy plot helps put over Paramount's "My Favorite Blonde," rollicking comedy starring Bob Hope, Madeleine Carroll

MOVIE REVIEW

"My Favorite Blonde"

Cast: Bob Hope, Madeleine Carroll, Gail Sondergaard, George Zucco, Victor Varconi, Lionel Royce and Pete the Penguin. A Paramount Picture, produced by Paul Jones and directed by Sidney Lanfield.

Type of Picture: With Bob Hope in it, you don't need us to tell you that it is comedy at its richest. The framework for humor is a spy story which has Hope and his favorite blonde, Madeleine Carroll, dodging enemy agents all over the country.

This Is the Story: Hope has a vaudeville act in New York with a penguin. The penguin, Pete, is so clever that Hollywood has offered it $500 a week and $30 a week to Hope to take care of the bird! Hope accepts on behalf of Pete and is about to leave for the West Coast when he gets his life entangled with that of Madeleine Carroll, beautiful British secret agent. She has a scorpion pin which contains revised instructions for ferrying a squadron of bombers from California to England. A horde of Axis spies are determined she won't reach there with those instructions, so an equally determined Madeleine hoodwinks Hope into helping her. Thus starting in New York and chasing clear across the country is one hilarious sequence after another until the instructions are finally delivered safely. The real hero is Pete, the penguin, who tails the casket in which the Nazi agents have concealed Hope, thus calling the police's attention to the hoax.

The picture also brings out one of the funniest gags of the year. During his escapades, Hope walks up to a chap who looks peculiarly like Bing Crosby and asks, "What's going on here, Bub?" Bub answers, "The truck-drivers are holding their picnic." Hope walks away as though nothing untoward had happened, then suddenly he whirls around, gives a double take looking directly at the audience with hands spread and shoulders humped and says, "Uh-uh, uh-uh. It couldn't be!" Funny part about it is that the stranger WAS Crosby. While visiting Bob on the set one day they dreamed up the gag and it was inserted immediately in the picture.

Verdict: Most people will declare it is Hope's best. Take the family.

Hollywood Victory Caravan Rolls Spectacularly Out of Washington; Hope Listens to President, Then Does a Special Show for Service Men

WASHINGTON

By LT. COL. CURTIS MITCHELL

They say people make news. If that is the case, this week's Washington report is the best column I shall ever write, for it is all about people in whom everyone is interested.

Here are some of them. Olivia de Havilland, Bob Hope, Frances Langford, Pat O'Brien, Joan Bennett, Cary Grant, Rise Stevens, Charles Boyer, Claudette Colbert, Laurel and Hardy, Merle Oberon, Groucho Marx, James Cagney, Marlene Dietrich and others.

Those stars are members of the Hollywood Victory Caravan which opened here in Washington on April 30 amid such fanfare as this bustling city has not seen since the beginning of the war. The innocent perpetrator of this caravan was Walter Winchell, who staged a super-colossal benefit for Navy Relief in Madison Square Garden several weeks ago. Other cities wanted a similar event and other people wanted an equal opportunity to see so many great stars and contribute their bit to a worthy cause.

So the Hollywood Victory Caravan was born in a conference in a New York apartment between representatives of the Army, the Navy and the Hollywood Victory Committee. After that, it became a matter of mechanics.

First, who would be on the tour? Studios on the Coast vied with each other in order to reshuffle their shooting-schedules, each of them urging their own stars to participate. A list of a dozen cities was set up and committees of civilian, Army and Navy people in each community went to work selling tickets.

The Santa Fe railway donated a train. Musicians, stagehands, everyone wanted to do their share. The result was that a crew of eighty-eight persons arrived here in Washington on April 29, all of them weary but determined to make their show the best thing Washington had ever witnessed. All of them had rehearsed as the cars rolled through Arizona and Kansas and Illinois.

Rehearsals continued right through every minute preceding the opening curtain. I visited the Willard Hotel ballroom, where an orchestra made up of a dozen key men from Hollywood and another score from Washington were making music. Joan Blondell was rehearsing a strip-tease number. After a verse, she did a two-step around a circle. Her ankle turned and she careened to the floor, striking her head. Pat O'Brien was the first one to reach her. Presently he had her on her feet, smiling wryly and rubbing her bruises. She finished the rehearsal, cockier than any mother you ever saw.

I like this remark she made to one Washington reporter. He said, "I remember that you were here back in 1930."

Mrs. Dick Powell replied, "Yes, that was three babies ago."

From their ride in jeeps after being met by an Army band and a color guard at the Union Station to the bus that took them back to their special train after the performance here, every star displayed the same spirit of eager cooperation. So did the valets, maids and others who also were part of this very difficult assignment.

The best show Washington ever saw probably was revealed during the dress rehearsal for the first performance. It lasted from midnight Wednesday night until about six o'clock Thursday morning. Only at such an hour was the stage free. Everyone who could dropped in to say hello and to watch for a few minutes. Without exception, every visitor settled down and spent the whole night through. Here were the very special favorites of Hollywood at work on their special tasks under the direction of Mark Sandrich and that is something to see indeed. Here were men high in defense-bureau operations, Army and Navy officers, Senators and Representatives, each held by the fascinating scene on the lighted stage.

Groucho Marx, unsmiling but with a tongue that crackles like the tip of a whip, was everywhere. He had some lines memorized for his sketches, but cracks he uttered, neither written nor rehearsed, wowed that midnight audience.

Jimmy Cagney did a Yankee Doodle Dandy number that George M. Cohan originated years ago. He had the Cohan mannerisms so exactly that some of us who had seen Cohan at his peak were amazed at the resemblance. This Cagney is a real guy and as intent on doing a real job for the war effort as any soldier in the ranks.

Watching Eleanor Powell, I found myself wishing that the films could capture her personality. She is a different and vastly more attractive girl behind footlights.

One final note, and this refers to a chap once known to all MOVIE-RADIO GUIDE readers as Gene Lester, singing photographer. Remember when he appeared on various radio shows, singing and taking pictures, and this periodical then published a singer's-eye view of a radio program?

The official photographer with the Hollywood Victory Caravan, the one lensman selected from all the photographers in Hollywood, was our old friend, Gene Lester.

After thirteen weeks on the greatest station network, the Government's program, "This Is War," went into limbo on May 9. Its existence was turbulent, it can now be told. On several occasions scripts written by some of the country's most highly rated dramatists were scrapped, and the director, Norman Corwin, had to hastily write new shows.

It was the first time in radio's history that the four networks carried jointly a regular series of broadcasts, and naturally some petty differences on the part of network executives arose. Despite minor friction, most of the programs were received as they were supposed to have been received.

The Government admittedly would have welcomed a renewal after the initial thirteen-week cycle, but the Interesting slant on the Hope will to entertain, come what may, was his carrying on April 28 with a show for the officers and men from the Long Beach, Calif., Naval Reserve Aviation Base, despite the cancellation of Hope's airtime by the President's fireside chat that night. Along with the fliers, Hope and his company listened to Mr. Roosevelt, then staged their show!...

They are putting San Francisco back together again since NBC and the Blue Network took over there a week ago to dedicate the new NBC-Blue Radio City Building. You have to grab a tight hold on an observation platform of a train these days to interview the Hollywood celebrities; if they aren't just leaving for some Army camp or Navy base, they're just arriving home to change collars for the next. Bob Hope, at present, is among those absent. He just left for a swing that will take him into the midwestern, southwestern and eastern points that have been pretty much out of reach of the radio stars of Hollywood. First broadcast was May 5 from Great Lakes Naval Training Station at Great Lakes, Ill., north of Chicago. Claudette Colbert was his guest and was officially endorsed by the training gobs, but Jerry Colonna got a mighty big hand, too, Don Moore, our Chicago news sleuth, reports. May 12, Hope was to appear at Ellington Field, near Houston, Texas, and on May 19 the Pepsodent troupe will make five thousand service men at the New Orleans Municipal Auditorium very happy. Future dates include Atlanta, Ga., May 26; Quantico, Va., June 2; Camp Upton, Yaphank, Long Island, June 9, and New London, Conn., June 16...

Kay Halle, Intermission Commentator for Cleveland Orchestra Broadcasts, Gives Movie-Radio Guide's Robert Bagar a Happy Surprise Which He Shares With Readers

By ROBERT BAGAR

New York World-Telegram Music Critic and Associate Program Annotator for Philharmonic-Symphony Society of New York

THE one thing that Kay Halle wanted more than any other was to put the Cleveland Orchestra on the air. It meant work, lots of work. It meant persuading a lot of people. In short, it looked hopeless. But she succeeded, aided and abetted by several kindred souls, and now the Cleveland Orchestra is heard regularly during the concert season. What's more, Kay Halle is the program's intermission commentator, the only one of her sex to hold such a post in music.

We had never seen Miss Halle, though, naturally, we had heard of her. So when the opportunity came to interview her we leaped to it. In the meantime, we had made a mental picture of her. In our mind she looked matronly and capable, even determined. A lady in her middle years battling away for the cause of music. You have come across such types. We all have. You find them pioneering around in great projects, the holy fire of zealous devotion flaming in their eyes.

Well, this is the story. Miss Halle is young, really young. She is tall and slim and blond and glamorous-looking. Everything about her—her carriage, her gestures, her speech, her looks—gives the lie to such odd pre-impressions. She might be a Powers model; perhaps a theater or movie star. She might be herself, which she is, thanks be. In other words, we fell for Miss Halle, musicologist and all, like a ton of bricks. So would any man and so would any woman. You like her immediately. We are trying to say that we did, too.

In one of the smart little bars at the Ritz Carlton the young woman told us about herself between sips of grapefruit juice! "I've studied music. I play some piano. Had to give up the professional idea a long time ago—(a long time ago must be a couple of years, she is that young). This business of talking about music can get very boring to a lot of people, you know," she said. "You can't get technical. How many would understand what you were driving at? You've got to give them the story straight in simple terms. Tell them something about the background of a work, something about the composer's life.

"It's strange how people react when you show them that the great composers were human beings, full of faults, possibly, whose lives were every-day lives in most cases. Somehow or other the impression gets around that a Beethoven lived his span on frilly pillows under glass, that all during his lifetime he knew nothing but adoration, like some great poobah or something."

Miss Halle's chief aim has been to correct such imaginings. Tying up music with history has been another of Miss Halle's objectives. The literature is full of possibilities along these lines. For instance, there is the Kodaly "Te Deum," which was written to celebrate Hungary's freedom from the Turks. "That's the sort of thing I mean," she continued. "We dug around a lot, naturally, to get the right pieces. And we're very happy that the radio audience likes the idea."

Miss Halle gets a lot of mail from listeners. We asked her what people thought about her work. She said that most of the letter-writers have been kind enough to compliment her on her voice and delivery. One chap, a soldier in one of the camps, told her that for the first time he enjoyed listening to a woman on the radio. He liked what she talked about, too.

"I suppose my broadcasting was a little awkward, at first," Miss Halle said. "It isn't easy to jump into something entirely new to you and do it perfectly. I've still got a lot to learn."

We discovered that Miss Halle had been on the road with the Cleveland Orchestra, delivering her talks from different localities. "One hundred men and a girl," she said, "but great fun."

Now she appears on other programs besides the symphonic one. She is a sort of "roving commentator," as she put it. "I've interviewed all the celebrities that I could inveigle into coming on the air. Here are some of them: Jan Valtin, Lady Halifax, Alexander de Seversky, Joaquin Elizalde, resident commissioner of the Philippines, and so on."

An idea of peppery activity of this intense but poised young woman—which seems a paradox, but isn't—may be gathered from the fact that she flew all over South America recently, covering some eighteen thousand miles. In thirty-two days she visited eighteen of the twenty republics and got in a lot of sight-seeing, besides meeting and interviewing musicians, political and social figures.

"In Lima, Peru," she said, "one midnight I got a tribe of Indians to do a concert for me, which, fortunately, I recorded. I brought the records back and put them on the air over Cleveland's station WGAR. It went over smashingly with the listeners."

Miss Halle's friends and acquaintances run into fantastic figures. She knows practically everybody in music and outside of it. "Once," she told us, "I went with the late George Gershwin to some little night-spot on New York's 52nd Street. We heard an amazing violinist there, a swing violinist named Stuff Smith. He and his small orchestra jived their way through something or other. At the end of the performance Smith came over to our table and asked George, 'How did you like it?' George answered, 'Well, what was it?' And the surprising reply was, 'Why, one of your own tunes, 'I Got Rhythm.'"

A Youthful "Prank"

Felix Mendelssohn was only sixteen when he wrote his Octet in G Minor, Opus 20, a lovely and delicately contrived work. The scherzo from that octet is played separately more often than the whole piece itself. Scherzo, in Italian, means prank, a caper, a kind of light joke. Not all scherzos, however, adhere to the original meaning of the term in their content.

This scherzo of Mendelssohn's, though, fits the idea as neatly as can be. In the words of the composer's sister, "Only to me did he tell what he had in mind. The whole piece should be played staccato and pianissimo. The peculiar tremulous shuddering, the light, flashing mordents, all is new, strange, and yet so interesting, so intimate, that one feels near the world of ghosts, lightly borne aloft; yes, one might take in hand a broomstick, to follow better the aerial crowd. At the end the first violin flutters upward, light as a feather—and all vanishes away."

(The octet is scheduled by the "NBC Summer Symphony Concert" for the broadcast of Saturday, May 16, over the Blue Network. Izler Solomon will conduct.)

Concert Records

Columbia has released several better-than-average (the average is pretty high, at that) items this month, chief among which may be mentioned the Beethoven Fifth Symphony, as played by the Philharmonic-Symphony under the direction of Bruno Walter. As usual, Mr. Walter's fine appreciation of the composer is second to that of no other conductor, and that is all reflected in the elegance of the performance, the assurance of the playing and the cumulative dramatic effects it reveals.

Another worthy item is the album containing the Schubert Quintet in C, Opus 163, which is played by Budapest String Quartet with Benar Heifetz as the assisting cellist. And by all means listen to the "Encore Album" offerings, performed by Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist, and Valentin Pavlovsky, pianist. Included are a lot of engaging brief items which really grace the musical literature. Such things, for example, as the Ravel "Piece en forme de Habanera," the Prokofiev "Masques," as arranged by Mr. Piatigorsky, Debussy's "Romance" and Faure's "Tarantelle." They are all beautifully delivered, and no fooling.

FOREMOST exponent of Latin-American rhythms is Xavier Cugat, who brings his music to the air via "Cugat Rumba Revue"

POPULAR MUSIC

XAVIER CUGAT, very seriously called "The King of the Rumba" in some exalted circles, started out in life with the idea of becoming a "great concert violinist." He worked hard at the task of preparing himself, the ambition of being the first, second or even the third best violinist in the world burning brightly.

He soon discovered, however, that he seemed far from reaching the goal he had dreamed about, so he turned, oddly enough, to doing cartoons for the Los Angeles Times. Mr. Cugat's ability at satirizing his friends in pen-and-ink sketches is one of the wonders of the orchestral world. "What is a man who can draw like that doing in music?" some observers have asked. Mr. Cugat might answer simply and to the point, "Because I like music for my life work and cartooning for my—how you call it?—my avocation."

He parted company with the newspaper one fine day when he discovered that they expected him to "be funny by 10:30 tomorrow morning." Whereupon he took his lares and penates right into the dance-band business, setting himself up at the head of a six-man group. He is very amusing about his early experiences in that field of endeavor. Listen to him: "I have never been in a dance-hall before and we play only rumba from Cuba. Lopez, Coleman and the others have already play rumba, but that was way too soon. Den you had to throw your partner in the zelling and get a bandanna. When we start, twelve years ago, they all look at us like we are a bunch of wild animals."

The amazing popularity of Latin-American idioms in this country, to which he turned as naturally as could be, is chiefly owing to him. So that when you hear the phrase, "The King of the Rumba," you'll know it can mean only one person—Xavier Cugat.

Popular Records

Here are the ones we liked best in the past week or so. Duke Ellington playing "Moon Mist" and "The 'C' Jam Blues"; David Rose doing lovely things with "Holiday for Strings" and "Our Waltz"; Vera Barton singing Irving Berlin's "I Threw a Kiss in the Ocean" and "Just a Baby's Prayer at Twilight," a holdover from World War I (these are all Victors).

Short Waves

CBS Opens New Net

COLUMBIA Broadcasting System opens its new Latin-American Network of seventy-six stations—CBS "Cadena de las Americas"—on a full-scale operation schedule beginning Tuesday, May 19. The complete list of stations in the new network was published in MOVIE-RADIO GUIDE, issue of March 21.

The official debut of the Latin-American Network climaxes years of painstaking research, negotiations, construction and testing activities to develop the first radio chain linking the United States with its twenty neighbor republics.

During the first two months of this year, CBS completed work costing more than $500,000 on its three transmitters which are to serve the entire Latin-American chain. These are two 50,000-watt stations which bear the call letters WCBX and WCRC, and a companion 10,000-watt station, WCDA. Eight directional antennas, the last word in modern design, have been constructed on a two-mile-square tract outside the New York City limits to beam programs to the CBS stations in South America.

The Latin-American stations in the new network will pick up the CBS Spanish and Portuguese programs of WCBX, WCRC and WCDA and retransmit them to their own regional listeners.

Mr. Paley feels that "radio cooperation between the Americas must be a two-way street," so CBS has been bringing and will continue to bring radio audiences of this country programs which impart the culture, views and musical lore of Latin America directly from its own principal cities.

No small task in itself has been the assembling of a large and competent staff of technicians, announcers, newsmen and artists with broad experience in what interests Latin America.

Much thought and time has been devoted to this phase of the work by Edmund A. Chester, who resigned a somewhat similar post with the Associated Press to become CBS director of short-wave broadcasting and Latin-American relations.

Aiding him in this work is Dr. Antonio C. Gonzalez, former United States Minister to Panama, Ecuador and Venezuela. William H. Fineshriber was transferred from the music directorship of the domestic network to supervise Latin-American and short-wave programming.

Terig Tucci (see photo), Argentina conductor and composer, was appointed music chief of the new network. Juan Arvizu, rated high among the most popular singers of all the neighbor republics, is now in his second year as a CBS artist. Olga Coelho, decreed by the Brazilian government to be its own exponent of native music to the rest of the world, has brought her voice and guitar to CBS. Alfredo Antonini conducts the augmented Orquesta Panamericana CBS, composed of Latin-American instrumentalists of international repute.

Why Was Goering Nervous?

Goering's speeches are usually forceful, coherent and dynamic. His latest speech was stammering, weak and incoherent. He was nervous and ill at ease. There has been much speculation in official circles as to the cause of Goering's mental state. Wickham Steed, speaking from London, believes that Goering is under a strain because he thinks Hitler is up to something and suspects this "something" may be even more mad and fantastic than some of his other brainstorms. One thing that has never been settled is whether the German army is a tool of Hitler's or whether the army actually runs Hitler and the Nazi party. It was because Hitler was afraid of the power of the army and did not wholly trust it that he built up his own strong-arm organization, the Gestapo, with the fanatic Himmler as its head. The jealousy between the army and the Gestapo extends to Goering and Himmler, who hate each other. The army can't be very happy about Hitler's mishandling of the Russian campaign. He has no intention of letting the army get out of control. Goering probably thinks that Hitler forced the Reichstag to grant him the recent unlimited powers of life and death over every subject, over every organization—including the military, in order that he might exercise a more effective control over the army, perhaps subordinate it entirely to his own powerful Gestapo, in which case, with Himmler in supreme authority—well, no wonder Goering is nervous.

In a recent newscast from Berlin the speaker stated that there were fifteen hundred more foreign laborers in Germany in January of this year than in January a year ago. While this figure is undoubtedly grossly underestimated, the speaker went on to admit that at present there are two and a half million foreign laborers now working in the Reich, not including the forced labor done by prisoners of war in Germany. Imagine such an army of workers—everyone of whom hate the Nazis—infiltrated into every part of Hitler's domain. For a while brute force will hold these slaves in check, but the day that the shackles of oppression are broken is going to be a very unhappy one for Mr. Hitler and company.

Americans Call Home

American soldiers step before the microphone in Australia to send messages and greetings to their loved ones in this country in the popular feature "Americans Calling Home," which can now be heard daily as follows: For reception in western North America, at 12:40 a.m. over VLG6 (15.23) and at 11:15 a.m. over VLG2 (9.54) and VLQ2 (11.87); for reception in eastern North America, at 7:40 a.m. EWT over VLG2 (9.54). At the conclusion of the "Americans Calling Home" period a list of those soldiers who will speak the next day is given. The names and addresses of these men are repeated slowly and distinctly so that they can be written down. Here is how regular readers of this department in MOVIE-RADIO GUIDE can do a very good deed. Whenever possible, listen to this program and pay particular attention to the list of soldiers who will send messages the next day. If one of these names happens to be in your city or vicinity, why not take a little time and telephone that boy's father or mother. They will be very grateful and will certainly be breathlessly waiting to hear the voice of their loved one over ten thousand miles of sea and land. If they don't have a short-wave set perhaps one of you could arrange to let the relatives listen in on your set.

Entertainment for Doughboys

And still more radio entertainment is being dished up for our doughboys in foreign lands. War news, sports news and news from the old home town is being flashed overseas by the Esso Reporter from short-wave stations WRCA (15.15), WNBI (17.78) and WBOS (15.21) daily from 1:00 to 1:15 p.m. EWT. On Saturdays, at 7:00 a.m. EWT, CBS broadcasts "The Crime Doctor"; on Wednesdays at 7:00 a.m. EWT, Columbia sends "The Philip Morris Playhouse" winging abroad; on Fridays, at 7:00 a.m. EWT, the same network airs "Take It or Leave It" for the fighting men. All three of these shows are broadcast over WCRC (17.83) and WCBX (15.27). NBC rebroadcasts Arthur Tracy, the Street Singer, on Fridays at 11:15 a.m. EWT over WRCA (15.15), WNBI (17.78) and WBOS (15.21).

News About the Stations

Melbourne's morning transmission to the West Coast can now be heard daily from 11:00 to 11:45 a.m. EWT over VLG2 (9.54) and VLQ2 (11.87) . . . The early morning transmission from Moscow-Komsomolsk, daily 5:40 to 8:15 a.m. EWT, is now being broadcast on 15.23, 11.885 and 9.566 megs; news in English at 8:10 a.m. The best-heard frequency at time of writing is 11.885 megs . . . Radio Bratislava, Slovakia, is on the air again and is broadcasting programs to North America, in English, Mondays, Wednesdays, Fridays and Saturdays at 7:00 p.m. EWT on a frequency of 9.503 megs . . . An unidentified Paris station is being heard intermittently throughout the day.

W4IMM, Giant Mountaintop FM Outlet on Clingman's Peak in North Carolina, Is Licensed to Serve Almost 70,000-Square-Mile Area in Seven Southern States

By DICK DORRANCE

A RECENT survey by FM Broadcasters, Inc., national trade association representing the country's leading FM stations, indicates that despite restrictions placed on basic materials used in the construction of broadcast transmitters there are still several new FM outlets that will be able to get on the air during the next few months. These are stations which have been almost completed, with most of their essential equipment already installed.

An outstanding example is W4IMM, the giant mountaintop FM outlet on Clingman's Peak, North Carolina—not to be confused with Clingman's Dome in another part of the state—which, at last report, had its inaugural planned for the week of May 17. Originally scheduled for May 1, the opening was pushed up due to unavoidable delays caused by war shortages of labor and supplies. W4IMM is licensed, when at full operation, to serve almost 70,000 square miles in seven states of the South.

Other stations in Philadelphia and Fort Wayne are also expected on the air soon, according to an official of Westinghouse Radio Stations, Inc., which will operate them. Philadelphia's third FM outlet, W49PH, made its debut late last month and now transmits from 3 to 6 p.m. and 9 p.m. to midnight daily. Earlier in April, W75P, the second FM outlet for Pittsburgh, went on the air. This brings the total of commercial FM stations now operating in the nation to twenty-seven, not including an additional dozen experimental and non-commercial educational transmitters.

POWER increases and improved antenna systems may be possible for many of the FM outlets now in existence, providing such changes involve only the use of materials which were on hand prior to the issuance of recent orders by the Federal Communications Commission and the War Production Board that freeze further new station construction.

Although no more FM receivers—or civilian receivers of any kind—are now being manufactured (except in a few special cases), radio listeners will still find a number of FM models available through many stores. By means of voluntary rationing among their dealers, some manufacturers may be able to make reserve stocks last until next fall. Public demand, however, runs high—particularly because listeners realize it may be years before they may again have an opportunity to replace their present sets—and as a result long delays are to be expected before delivery of new frequency-modulation receivers can be made.

Incidentally, latest estimates by FM Broadcasters, Inc., place the national total of FM sets at somewhere between 350,000 and 400,000 units.

THE 10,000-WATT transmitter of W7INY, owned by station WOR, is located on the top floor of a skyscraper in midtown New York City. W7INY, the second FM outlet in the nation to begin commercial operation over a year ago, serves an assigned area of 8,500 square miles

FM's Steam-Heated Well

Several weeks ago we told you about the incredible obstacles faced and overcome by W39B when this FM station in the clouds—atop the 6,300-foot summit of Mount Washington, New Hampshire—was under construction. One of them was the problem of drilling a well through the rocky heart of the mountain. Tough granite sometimes impeded progress to less than fifteen feet a day and, despite weeks of patient drilling, no water was found.

Then, after three months, when the shaft had sunk about 1,100 feet down, it suddenly flooded with icy-cold water that bubbled and rose to within two hundred feet of the top. Its temperature measured 32.1 degrees Fahrenheit—just one-tenth of a degree above the actual freezing-point.

All the dour worries of the W39B engineers seemed to be over. Now, in spite of eighty- and hundred-mile gales that rollick over the bald summit of Mount Washington, they could still have plenty of pure water, pleasantly heated for shaving or the comfort of hot baths. This, together with the well-stocked larder of the lofty FM station which radiates programs to listeners throughout 31,000 square miles of Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine, could now make isolation pleasant no matter how low the mercury dropped on winter nights. (And it certainly drops! The average summer temperature, for example, is only forty-five degrees. And with a winter snowfall measured at two hundred inches, the W39B crew is frequently marooned for weeks at a time.)

This tranquillity didn't last for long. One morning the engineers awoke to find that their unique well—one of the deepest and, at the same time, highest in the world—had stopped flowing. Investigation showed that a plug of ice had clogged the shaft for more than forty feet of its length—and that the plug was lodged seven hundred feet below the FM transmitter site.

It could be drilled out, of course, but that wouldn't cure the situation for long. The engineers sat down once again and pooled their wits in a renewed battle against the elements that seemed to be doing everything in their power to make W39B an impossibility. Finally they tried squirting a jet of live steam down the smooth bore of the shaft. This softened the ice-plug enough to let the water flow again, but the remedy was only temporary. Apparently on its way upward the well passed through several strata of rock, cooled perennially to temperatures below the freezing-point. These refrigerated the water so that it lost the natural warmth brought from the earth's interior and eventually congealed.

The engineers quietly went about designing a permanent steam-heating apparatus which was installed deep in the well-shaft. Now the precious water for the needs of the seven-man crew at the W39B transmitter in the clouds can flow freely all year around—another triumph of the same ingenuity and determination that's made the miracle of FM possible for so many appreciative radio listeners.

Wanta Sell a Mountain?

Incidentally, the importance of height for good FM coverage has conjured up some rather golden pictures in the minds of people who own high hilltops and even mountains. But unfortunately the mountain has to be in the right place. Just any old mountain won't do. Then there are many other problems, including an easy route—preferably a paved road—to the summit, proper bedrock for antenna towers, water supply, the absence of excessively higher mountains at close range that might cut off part of the area to be served. If electric power and telephone lines pass near by, the desirability of the mountain is also enhanced.

The chances are, alas, that if you own a mountain, it won't have any immediate value as a possible FM transmitter site—particularly with war-time bans against new station construction. There's no harm, however, in sounding out some of your local broadcasting companies to see if they'd be interested in taking an option on it. FM is bound to boom when peace returns, and good sites will be at a premium.

In cities, of course, the taller buildings have been in much demand. New York City now has either an FM or a television station built or planned in almost every skyscraper over forty stories high. Realtors were quick to anticipate heavy profit, and boosted rents for top-floor space that formerly had gone begging. This attitude, however, is not always a good idea. If you own a tall building and ask unusually stiff rental of a prospective FM station tenant, don't forget that he can usually lease the top of a smaller building for a more reasonable sum, then construct a light-steel tower on this rooftop to put his FM transmitting antenna even higher than it would be on your building. And the chances are he'd still save money when the project is viewed as a long-time investment.

This weekly column of FM news and discussion is intended as a MOVIE-RADIO GUIDE service for the swiftly growing audience of FM listeners. Letters from readers are always welcome. We shall be glad to answer your questions and, if you do not yet have FM reception in your locality, advise you whether any is in prospect.

Comedian's Pay-off

Janet Cantor, youngest daughter of the "Time to Smile" comedian, recently sent her father a money-order for one dollar, together with a stern admonition to credit her for that amount. Puzzled, Eddie wrote asking for an explanation. Young Miss Cantor replied: "Daddy, I bought you a birthday present in January and charged it to your account. Now I am going to pay you out of the new allowance you give me. But for Heaven's sake, don't send the money back, because you will mess up my bookkeeping!"

Lum Plays Abner

"Abner Peabody" developed a lump in his throat on a recent broadcast, and it robbed him of his voice temporarily, but Abner spoke anyway. The sudden change of characters from "Abner" to "Mousie Gray" (both played by Norris Goff) brought a frog to Goff's vocal cords and he became speechless. He motioned to his partner, Chet Lauck (who plays Lum Edwards), and the latter, sensing instantly the difficulty, ad libbed a couple of lines for "Abner" until Goff got his tongue limbered up. The change was scarcely noticeable, even though Lauck had never attempted Goff's role before.

Eight thousand letters were the answer to Don McNeill's question on a "Breakfast Club" broadcast: "What is your favorite song and why?" Within a week the letters were sorted, read and judged. Ten awards of copies of Don McNeill's "Memory Time Book" have been mailed to the writers of the best letters. The most popular songs, according to the letters, are "Ave Maria," "White Cliffs of Dover," "Dear Mom" and "My Cathedral," by McNeill and Walter Blaufuss.

A Word for Ripley

Dr. Wilfred Funk, famous lexicographer of Funk and Wagnall's, has suggested a new word—"Ripleidian." The adjective is a combination of "Ripley" and "pleiad," which means a cluster of brilliant things. It means that something is so extraordinary that it rates a place in Robert "Believe It or Not" Ripley's collection and classification of the world's oddities.

Willson Advises Wilson

Meredith Willson, husky composer and conductor who carries no excess flesh on his 200-pound frame, was consulted by bulky announcer Don Wilson for advice. The latter seeks to lose twenty pounds and has placed himself under Meredith's care. The conductor's first assignment to the announcer was chopping logs—for Willson's fireplace!

Our Radio Vs. Nazis'

A fan letter from some Juan Q. Public in South America is often a tip-off on the efficacy of our short-wave broadcasts. Such a letter was received recently by Dr. Walter Damosch, conductor of the Blue Network's "Music Appreciation Hour" (off the air for the summer), from a miner in the Brazilian highlands, more than 1,000 miles from Rio de Janeiro. "May I tell you," the miner wrote, "how much we enjoy your programs, with your little introductory talks spoken in your sincere, homely and lovable voice and phonetically excellent Portuguese. Your music is such exquisite contrast to the inartistic and garbled noises into which music from the German stations seems to have degenerated."

Goff) not to explain why, after the cover of them and Lum's horse "Lum's Pride," and Lum's story of "Why I Hope My Horse Wins the Kentucky Derby," the horse finally was not entered in the historic race. Well, Lum was a very heartbroken horseman himself. He couldn't enter Lum's Pride out of kindness to the horse because just the Saturday before the big race the horse suffered a cut leg. To run him so soon again might have ruined the animal, and so, good sport that he is, Lum scratched his entry. Please forgive him, for he is as heartbroken as we (who had a small bet down) are, and more.

CHICAGO

By DON MOORE

Eddie Cantor stopped over here a few hours the other day between trains. He was taking his whole radio troupe to Hollywood, where the comedian will go to work as star of a big musical for Warner Bros. this summer. The "Time to Smile" program will emanate from Hollywood and from West Coast service camps for the remainder of the season, which is, by the way, the longest radio season of Cantor's career (running until near the end of June). Eddie thinks the public should be given comedy as continuously as possible to mix some laughter and smiles with today's tears and frowns. "It's doctor's orders," he says.

Cantor in ordinary conversation is a contradiction. Those cue-ball eyes roll around in a perpetual game of socket-billiards. But his words are soft, pointed, intense. Eddie, in reminiscent mood, talked mostly about his long-time friend and idol, the late Will Rogers, insisting that if the humorist-philosopher were alive today the United States would have been better prepared for this inevitable war. He also recalled hearing Rogers say something to President Woodrow Wilson that is startlingly pertinent today. "Mr. President," Will said, "if people want to know how you expect to train an army in such a short time, you tell them that when you train them to go in only one direction it takes only half as long" . . .

Radio aspirants will get a unique opportunity for authentic training in a project planned for this summer by

ONE MINUTE—two sales—$78,000. CBS star Kate Smith did it as she opened the Treasury Department's new booth in New York's Museum of Science and Industry recently. Kate herself bought a $50,000 bond, then sold $28,000 worth to Jack Dorman, United Wholesale Grocers executive Northwestern University and the National Broadcasting Company in Chicago. They will collaborate in an eight-week course in radio acting, announcing, writing, production and public-service programs. University credit will be given. The closing date for entrance application is June 1. Inquiries and applications should be addressed to Albert Crews, director, Summer Radio Institute, School of Speech, Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill. . . .

Star and writer of CBS' "Helen Trent" serial now have an extra-special common interest—new babies. On the same day Virginia Clark returned for her first rehearsal after the birth of her new baby son, the stork visited script-writer Mary Watkins Reeves (Mrs. Jesse Waring Mahoney) with a feminine bundle. The mother gave the little girl a favorite name, Brooke, which is also the name of one of her "Helen Trent" characters . . .

Paul Rhymer is a "Radio Man's Radio Writer." His "Vic and Sade" skit has been accorded many honors, but most novel is the recent title voted Rhymer himself. In a poll of one showed producer Sam Katzman filling in a corner as an extra, and, in another, the associate producer, Barney Sarecky, did a bit as a gravedigger. One corner of a room was used as a mausoleum and fifteen minutes later a bride and groom were sleeping in their bridal suite in the other corner! . . .

Orson Welles is having his troubles while in South America. Since arriving down there, his romance with Dolores Del Rio has grown colder than a Nazi on the Russian front, and his studio, RKO, is mighty unhappy over the extravagant expense accounts sent in by Mr. Welles, over which RKO has no control . . . There is also a strong indication that the first major break-up in the Mercury Theater set-up will come up any day, as Joe Cotton, Welles' number two man, is likely to leave the troupe to sign a term contract at either Universal or Warner Bros. Studios, both of whom are bidding high for his services . . .

Latest romantics of Lana Turner associate her and drummer man Gene Krupa. Lana's penchant for musicians is as consistent as the duration of her romances are short. First it was a quickie marriage to clarinet-tooter Artie Shaw, then a sizzling romance with trombone-slider Tommy Dorsey, and now it's skin-beater Gene Krupa, just recently divorced. It would seem that, besides good looks, Miss Turner has got rhythm . . .

Despite the sincerest hopes that those two fine kids, Ida Lupino and Louis Hayward, would manage to patch up their marital ills, it doesn't look as if such a recovery is possible. They are continuing to have heavy hundred sixty actors, writers, directors and musicians in Chicago radio, sixty percent chose the writer of the ten-year-old sketch their favorite radio author . . . Muriel Bremner, who plays nurse Helen Stephenson in "Road of Life," is taking Red Cross nurse's training . . . Jack Baker, "Breakfast Club" tenor, has always been active mornings entertaining a host of fans with his songs. Now he's busy at other times throughout the day doing the same. Jack is heard in an afternoon program of his own on the Blue Network Monday through Friday. And over on station WGN he is featured on a midday, three-a-week program titled "This Is Life."

GENERAL ENTERTAINMENT

By ARTHUR MILLER

The printed page serves few other groups of people better than it does that which appears on the radio. After an allotted period for broadcasting has transpired, the broadcaster's story is but a memory. Memory is elusive, and cognizant of this, book-publishers have, especially of late, shown much interest in material which the broadcasters supply.

Remarks heard on a series of broadcasts undertaken by Ted Malone are the latest to become endowed with that degree of permanency which a book furnishes. With a research staff, an engineer and a microphone, Mr. Malone visited the homes and shrines of many of America's great literary figures. The limitation on his observations which broadcasting time imposed was disappointing.

To tell in fifteen or thirty minutes all the things he thought worth the telling was impossible. That is why, more than a year after the final broadcast in the series, Mr. Malone has written a book called "American Pilgrimage" (Dodd, Mead & Co., $2.50). Sixteen famous American literary persons come under Mr. Malone's penetrating spotlight and are revealed in "American Pilgrimage."

Bret Harte, Harriet Beecher Stowe, Noah Webster, Washington Irving are included in the list. Probably lengthy biographies have been written about all these people, but certainly Mr. Malone's writings are possessed of intimate narratives which are original and which have the warmth of first-hand recounting, for on his pilgrimage he interviewed relatives and close friends of the great.

The Movie Front

Eddie is at Warners in preparation for the filming of "Banjo Eyes," a musical which will star him just as it did when he made it such a hit on the Broadway stage . . .

Latest big leading-men names who are headed for armed service are Tyrone Power, who goes into Navy in a few weeks, and Robert Taylor, who is trying to get in air corps. It's going to be a lonesome old town . . .

With everyone cutting every possible corner to save money for the purchase of war bonds and stamps, Monogram Studios, in making some of their six-day pictures, is utilizing their talent and property to the nth degree. In a recent chiller, one scene troubles. In fact, at last reports they weren't living together. You can expect to read about a final break almost any day now . . .

For all those people who saw "Here Comes Mr. Jordan" and thought it was one of the best pictures of 1941—and who that saw it didn't think so?—there is good news. Columbia has decided upon the story that will act as sequel to that rattling-good picture and it sounds like another gripping hit. It is going to be about an American flier who is shot down over France. His spirit moves into the body of a French Duke who is of the Vichy stamp and working in cahoots with Germany to sell out his country. If that "briefle" review isn't enough to keep you on the anxious seat until you finally see the picture, you simply don't have any imagination.

EXERCISE above is a wonderful tummy-slimmer and strengthener, provided you are careful to avoid strain in the beginning. Do it slowly—not more than six or seven times, as it's harder than it looks!

FEMININE FORUM

New Mothers Please Note

THE days when having a baby was an excuse for a sagging posture and an undetermined waistline are gone forever. The modern mother knows she can have her family and keep her figure too. Unless her condition is peculiar and her doctor prescribes differently, exercise is good for her before baby makes a bow and after the blessed event. Our modern beauty salons—Dorothy Gray in particular—offer courses in figure-control and rehabilitation for new mothers. Naturally, they require the doctor's permission, and the exercises they use are all okayed by the medicos.

If you're a new mother with a schedule that allows you free time and your budget hasn't already felt the strain of the heir-to-be, you might enroll in this type of exercise class. On the other hand, if you can find neither the time nor the money you can set up a home routine, following exactly the same posture procedure advocated by the Dorothy Gray beauty headquarters.

Consult your doctor first, however, and find out how soon you may begin. If you start after the third week you will do all your exercises lying down, with the pelvic area raised slightly on a pillow. You will do no exercises standing up until at least six weeks after Sir Stork's delivery. If you're a nursing mother you must be especially careful, doing only the exercises advocated by your M. D.

The purpose of these exercises is to strengthen the abdominal muscles—especially those that have undergone a strain. You'll start with a "builder-upper" called "knee chest position." To do this, get down on your hands and knees, lower your chest to the floor with bent elbows pointed out to the sides. Remain in this position for five minutes. Do it once in the morning when you awake and again at night before you climb into bed. Fact is, you can even do this exercise, and the one I describe next, while you're in bed.

An easy one for your tummy muscles requires that you lie on your back and draw your knees up to your chest. Wrap your arms around them and hold them there securely for at least five minutes. Relax for an equal length of time, flat on your tummy, before you resume the day's activities.

By the time your baby is old enough to take notice of you—say six or eight weeks—you're ready to start a more strenuous exercise known as "wall-climbing." Lie on the floor with your feet flat against a wall. Place your feet at higher levels each time until, after several weeks, they're raised high above your head and your weight falls pretty much on your shoulders.

Your posture undoubtedly took a beating during the months you carried your baby. Now is the time to concentrate on getting it back to a streamlined model. Start each day by standing with your back flat against the wall. Your heels, hips, shoulders and back of head are in a plumb-line. Walk away from the wall, keeping your body in the same position—keep it so whenever you're on your feet, walking or standing—all through the day.

IF YOU are not nursing your baby and your busts are flabby, you can erase this condition. Stand with your feet apart, toes turned in slightly, tummy in and up, buttocks tucked under and head held high. Hold your fingertips lightly together, arms at shoulder-level and press the fingers together sharply and firmly. Relax and repeat ten times.

To further increase the firmness of the bust, try the following exercise, which requires a bit more time and energy. Lie flat on your back, legs out straight in front of you, feet together and spine touching the floor. Hold a book in each hand and stretch your arms out level from the shoulders. Raise the books slowly in the air, keep arms straight. Lower them just as slowly. Raise the books slowly again and carry them held together to the floor over your head. Go over the same course and return to your original relaxed position. Keep your stomach flat while doing all these exercises but do not hold your breath. Most important of all—stop just as soon as you feel tired.

"Who said domestic bliss?"

HOW A YOUNG WIFE OVERCAME
THE "ONE NEGLECT" THAT WRECKS
SO MANY MARRIAGES

1. "Ideally mated," people said . . . I thought so, too. But Jack's ardor gradually changed to . . . well, a stand-offish coolness. It wasn't long before we were heading for a smash-up.

2. One day, I walked home from First Aid class with our teacher, a nurse I barely knew. And—out came the whole thing! (You'll tell a stranger, more than a friend.) "My dear," she consoled, "when romance goes out of marriage, it's often because a woman is careless . . . or doesn't know . . . about feminine hygiene."

3. "It's one neglect," she explained, "most men can't forgive. And there's no excuse for it. Modern women use a safe yet amazingly powerful germicide for feminine hygiene . . . Lysol. Just follow directions—it won't harm tissues, but it cleanses, deodorizes, kills all vaginal germ-life on instant contact. I know what I'm saying."

4. She was right. For now we're happy as love birds again. I've learned how gentle Lysol is—how easy and economical to use—and how effective. That nurse saved my marriage when she told me about Lysol!

Why you can depend on Lysol

GENTLE YET POWERFUL—Used as directed, Lysol is gentle to delicate tissues (not an acid—no free alkali), yet there is no germ-life in the vaginal tract that Lysol will not kill on instant contact. SPREADING—No other widely advertised douche preparation has the wide spreading power Lysol has—Lysol solution virtually searches out germ-life in tiny folds other liquids may never reach. ECONOMICAL—Small bottle makes almost 4-gallons solution. CLEANLY ODOR—Soon disappears. HOLDS STRENGTH to last drop—play safe with Lysol.

Miss L. Yost, Manchester, Conn.—Your favorite, CHESTER STRATTON, is heard as Mark Scott in "Against the Storm." Before he was ten years old he had been in every major city in the United States, traveling with his actor father. At twelve he fell in love with a circus performer and promptly ran away to join the circus. His inability to do a somersault caused him to be sent home and put to bed without any supper . . . He never gave up hope, and later obtained a job in vaudeville and became more successful as a boy soprano than he was as an acrobat. Between attending schools all over the country, including a final session at Rutgers, he continued his career as an actor. When stock-company seasons were over he sold washing-machines, became a packer in a crockery department, a newshy, a freight-train worker, clerk, worker on an oil-tanker, and finally became a furniture truck-driver . . . Because a producer of chain radio programs mistook Chester for an important western representative, Chester took the opportunity to talk up for an audition. From then on he climbed higher and higher up the ladder of important roles . . . Chester was born in 1912, is five feet nine inches tall, weighs 150 pounds, has curly light-brown hair and hazel eyes, would like to live in California, refused a three-year art scholarship to N. Y. U. but still paints a little . . . likes to swim, dance and read.

Mrs. Earle D. Wolfe, Ashland, Ohio.—Yes, WALLY BUTTERWORTH and PARKS JOHNSON have been teamed together for a long while on "Vox Pop," but since Wally has left the show, at least for the time being, "Vox Pop" is employing the policy of having guest co-interviewers. Wally has been off the air for about a month or so, and is not doing any shows now.

Mrs. Oren Fish, Walnut, Kansas.—MYRT and MARGE are no longer on the air . . . "When A Girl Marries" is the story of a young couple, Joan Field and Harry Davis (Mr. and Mrs. Davis), who fight for happiness together against family interference, difference in social position, and small-town gossip . . . Until she met Harry, Joan's life was largely determined by her position in the town of Stanwood as a member of one of the town's leading families. Harry, a struggling young lawyer, came from the other side of the tracks . . . The part of Joan is taken by MARY JANE HIGBY; Harry Davis is JOHN RABY; Lillie is GEORGIA BURKE; MICHAEL FITZMAURICE plays the role of Phil Stanley, the man Joan was slated to marry before she fell in love with Harry; Harry's mother, Mrs. Davis, is played by MARION BARNEY; FRANCES WOODBURY has the role of the domineering Mrs. Field.

WHAT'S COOKING!

By GEORGIA SCOTT

Salad Talk

TO HEAR all the commotion these days about how important it is to eat your green vegetables for your daily vitamin and mineral supply, you'd think the twentieth century had the copyright on the idea of raw vegetables for health. The truth of the matter is that although our ancestors couldn't have told you how many international units of riboflavin or thiamine there were in a portion of watercress, they were eating raw salads for health's sake many hundreds of years ago.

By 1500 the royal salad-bowl in England had thirty-five ingredients, including such unusual items as young spinach, wild succory, tansy and violet leaves. And the directions for preparing the ingredients and dressing of a succulent green salad, compiled in 1600-and-something by a gourmet, don't sound much different from those given in a modern cook-book. Listen to this:

"Your herbs being handsomely parcell'd, and spread on a clean napkin before you, are to be mingl'd together in one of the earthen glaz'd dishes . . . Take of clear and perfectly good oyl-olive, three parts; of sharpest vinegar, limon, or juice of orange, one part; and therein let steep some slices of horse-radish, with a little salt . . . add dry grated mustard as will lie upon a half-crown piece . . ."

There's your basic recipe for French dressing which you can find in any modern cook-book: 1 cup oil, ¼ cup vinegar, 1½ teaspoons salt, ¼ teaspoon mustard. Most cooks aren't using olive oil nowadays, substituting that good Wesson salad oil, or Mazola, or one of the other vegetable-oil derivatives; but that's about the only difference between that 1600 description of a salad and the modern recipe.

The mention of spinach in the royal salad is interesting because it wasn't introduced to this country, where green salads have become a national institution, until a few years ago, and, surprisingly enough, by a naturalized Armenian. George Mardikian, owner-chef of the internationally famous Omar Khayyam restaurant in San Francisco, whose picture you see inset at the microphone from which broadcasts are made weekly from his restaurant, won the International Restaurant award a few years back for this spinach salad recipe:

"Wash raw spinach well, and to help clean off sand add one teaspoon baking soda, then chop in one-inch lengths, season with olive oil and lemon juice. Add chopped hard-cooked eggs, garnish with tomato and asparagus, and serve with the following dressing:

1 egg	1 cup tomato sauce
2 teaspoons salt	or puree
1½ tablespoons sugar	1 pint oil
1 teaspoon paprika	1 cup vinegar
1 teaspoon mustard	2/3 cup warm water
1 teaspoon Lea & Perrin sauce

—T. E. Danley
RADIO author-actress Jane West, of airlines "The O'Neills," tosses an appetizing green salad in her kitchen

—Romaine
GEORGE MARDIKIAN, restaurant owner and chef, introduced raw-spinach salad to gourmets of the U. S.

"Mix egg and all ingredients, including tomato sauce, into paste. Add oil slowly and between times vinegar. When turned into dressing form, add warm water. Keep in a cool place."

Lettuce, either loose-leaf or head, is the standard green-salad base. There are, of course, many interesting varieties of greens which can be used to give a new tang to your salad-bowl. Endive and romaine are a little sharper in taste than lettuce. Have you tried the new vegetable (new to us, although the Chinese have been using it for years) celtuce in salads? It's so called because it looks like celery in form and yet resembles lettuce in texture; it's delicious tasting. Watercress when it's in season, parsley, chopped green peppers and onions, tomatoes, radishes, slices of raw vegetables like carrots and turnips—all of these, in varying combinations, are the life of a salad. Beyond these ingredients there are many herbs which can be used according to your taste for added zest.

It's salad time most any time of year, but especially in the spring and summer, so keep your ice-box stocked with green things.

on her constantly and he was starting to resent that fact. One night when John was out with Luella and Gerald Lowe, an influential Walnut Grove politician, he ran into his family at a hamburger stand out near the university. Peg, Bud and Kay had attended a lecture and had stopped at the place for a sandwich.

John saw them laughing and joking in one corner of the place and felt a tinge of envy. He walked over and spoke to Kay, who returned his greeting coolly. Peg, too, was cool, but it was Bud's attitude that opened John Fairchild's eyes.

"Let's go, Aunt Kay. Shall we?" he asked without meeting his father's eyes.

"I think we better," Kay said. "If you'll excuse us, John."

"Why, sure, but—but look, how are you going to get home?"

"We're walking, Dad," Peg said with some edge.

"I'll walk along with you."

"No, John," Kay replied. "Mr. Lowe and Mrs. Hayworth are expecting you to join them again and, besides, we have Bud to escort us."

"Sure," Bud said proudly, "I'm seeing 'em home. Don't worry. I'll look out for 'em."

"You see," Kay said quietly, "we do have a man, John—"

"That's it, Dad. Sure. I'm the head of the house now." He paused to let his father get the full effect of his words. "Shall we go now, Aunt Kay? I'll pay for the hamburgers."

Kay, Peg and Bud walked past silent John Fairchild and, as the door closed behind them, it seemed like a symbol to him. From now on, he asked himself, will I always find a closed door between me and the ones I really love?

That simple incident served to make John do some serious thinking. He realized that he was fed up with Mrs. Hayworth and her ways. A new note had come into her suggestions and John was fighting a battle to resist many plans she was promoting. They seemed too shady to him, although he could not put his finger on where they were wrong. To John, the plans seemed to favor the state machine and the gambling interests too much. Had Kay been right about Mrs. Hayworth after all? Where did she get all the money she was spending? The pressure was telling on John. He complained constantly now of vicious headaches and he had grown more irritable.

One night he dropped in on his family. Kay was distantly cool and polite. She treated him as she might any other visitor. But John derived so much pleasure from the evening that he dropped back again—and again. Finally he went so far as to ask Kay if he could come back and live with his family.

"You'll always be welcome in your home, John," she said, "but you must understand that things never will be the same between us. And what of Mrs. Hayworth? What will she say?"

John said he didn't know and didn't care what Luella Hayworth said or did. To him, anything was better than the lonely life he was leading at the club. If he came back, he at least could watch his family, might even be able to join in their fun. He found it strange at first when, instead of sleeping in his old room, he found himself moved to Billy's little room at the back of the house. He hardly could protest. Kay pointed out that to all outward appearance John and she were man and wife, but only to save public gossip that might hurt him politically.

Pressure at the office and the unsettled condition in his own home caused Mayor John Fairchild increasing unhappiness. When he went back to his family, Mrs. Hayworth dropped him cold and began fighting his administration. His headaches became more frequent. Peg sympathized with him, tried to get him to go to a doctor. But John was too preoccupied with other troubles to give attention to his personal health.

Peg was speaking to her grandmother about her father's headaches one evening when she looked out the window and saw Kay coming home from work at Gen Porter's dress shop with David Houseman. Peg saw them coming up the front walk and was alarmed.

"Suppose Dad should come home right now," she asked, "and see Kay coming in with David?"

"What if he does?" Mother Fairchild said. "David is a good friend of Kay's."

"That's just it. Dad thinks he's too good a friend. And if he sees him bringing Kay home, he may fly off the handle . . ."

PEG was more than right in her prediction. John did come home and he did "fly off the handle." He was taken with the greatest rage anyone in the family had ever seen. Kay and David were standing in the living-room when the front door banged open and John's unreasonable attack took them both by surprise.

"Don't bother to explain, Kay," John almost shouted. "I'm sick of explanations. Explanations that don't explain—that don't hide anything!"

"There's nothing to hide," David said in anger. "Look here, Fairchild—"

"You keep your mouth shut, Houseman. And get out of this house at once!"

"John," Kay cried, "are you out of your mind?"

"Yes," He laughed hysterically. "Sure," he cried. "Sure I am. Why not? Why wouldn't I be out of my mind?"

He went off into a gale of hysterical laughter. It sent shivers up and down Kay's spine and she looked at her husband with horror in her eyes.

"David," she cried frantically. "David! Do something!"

"David!" John almost shrieked. "Yes—David. Not—John. David."

There was a crash. John Fairchild fell forward on his face and lay on the living-room rug as still as death.

But John Fairchild had not died. John Fairchild had suffered a lapse of memory. He forgot everything that had happened for the past three or four years. He forgot he had married Kay, forgot that he had been mayor of Walnut Grove. He even forgot that little Billy was his own son. He had pushed the clock back to 1938.
