EVERYBODY knows about Orson Welles. As a boy genius he scared half of the United States with his realistic radio play War of the Worlds. Then he directed and starred in Citizen Kane which added startling new techniques to film production. And since then he has, artistically speaking, gone steadily downhill, still playing the boy genius (though now in his forties), still spreading his talents too thin over the entire field of theatre and film. Everybody knows all this.

One exception to this generalization is Welles himself. He feels he started going down hill artistically long before Citizen Kane.

"The first play I did (which was in Ireland) I made really the biggest success of my life. Everything since then has been downhill," he tells Bernard Braden in a Close-Up interview to be seen in two parts this Thursday and next on CBC-TV. "A newspaper came out to review the second play I did and said 'Well, Orson Welles is a bitter disappointment to those of us who looked to him to lead the Irish theatre.' I've been a bitter disappointment to people in show-business for about thirty years now."

Throughout the interview Welles shows a fascinating ability to ward off critical attacks upon his work by wholeheartedly joining the attackers. For instance, it has been said that the greatness of Citizen Kane was due more to the lucky meeting of various new film techniques, rather than to any contribution by Welles, who was almost entirely ignorant of film techniques. Welles agrees—almost.

"I'd never been on the set before my first day directing a picture. I simply didn't know, except theoretically, how it should be done. . . . The first day I arrived I thought after years of directing in the theatre that the lights were set by the director, since they are in the theatre, so I said this is where it will be, now let's move this light over there and so on, and I set the lights. Behind me the cameraman was motioning to all the people to shut up, let him go ahead. . . . I worked five days like that until somebody told me and I realized what a terrible thing I was doing, and the cameraman was furious that I'd been told. It's a great tribute to him I think. . . .

"Then I kept on asking for things which in my ignorance I didn't know were impossible to do. I didn't deliberately set out to invent anything. It just seemed to me, why not? That was the great gift I brought to Kane—ignorance."

The interview crackles with unconventional views which help explain the enigma of Orson Welles:

"I don't regard myself as fundamentally a professional, you know. I'm basically an adventurer. And those people who are serious and professional, truly and deeply serious at the expense of every other value in life, are probably the people who make the biggest contribution in art. I certainly wouldn't like to be one of them."

"Do you think that in dividing yourself in the way you have you are diffusing your contribution to art?" asked Braden.

"Probably, but that is not a bad thing for me. It might be a bad

The Sound of Rodgers and Hammerstein

by TONY THOMAS

At the risk of sounding absurd, I find it difficult to write about Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein because it is too easy—too easy to roll off a long list of compliments and so difficult to make any observations less than complimentary. I happen to like their work very much, as do millions of others, and now that I have spent some time with them putting together a double barrelled sound profile for Project '60 I like them as people. It would be difficult not to, both are gentlemen of pleasant manner and absorbing conversation.

The harshest thing one could say about Rodgers and Hammerstein is that they seem too good to be true. They both come from good families, they both have university educations, they both behave in a normal, respectable way and this shines through in their work.

The only thing the New York critics have found to criticize in their new show The Sound of Music is that it is all too nice and agreeable. Each week at the Lunt-Fontanne Theatre on 46th Street, tens of thousands of people are discovering the critics to be right—but not finding it a point to criticize.

These are supposed to be sick times, and Rodgers and Hammerstein are not sick. The upholders of the sick-nik creed have probably not tried to get tickets to see The Sound of Music or any of the other eight productions these gentlemen have supplied since 1943.

Add to the remarkable ease with which Rodgers and Hammerstein get along — professionally and personally — these coincidences: they are both native New Yorkers who attended Columbia University, they both have fathers named William, they both have wives named Dorothy (whom they met in the same year), and they each have two children. The main differences would appear to be that the Rodgers children are girls and the Hammerstein children are boys and Hammerstein is seven years older and about one foot taller than Rodgers.

Another considerable coincidence is that they began their separate careers in the same year — 1920. Rodgers' first show, along with Lorenz Hart, was Poor Little Ritz Girl while Hammerstein's initial effort was writing the lyrics for the musical comedy Always You; Herbert Stothart did the music.

The first big success of Rodgers and Hart was The Garrick Gaieties in 1925. From then until 1942 they wrote 23 other musical comedies for Broadway and three for the London stage, plus a number of scores for motion pictures.

During those same years Oscar Hammerstein was writing material for the stage and screen with a number of outstanding composers — Vincent Youmans, George Gershwin, Rudolf Friml, Jerome Kern, Sigmund Romberg. He even collaborated, in a sense, with Georges Bizet — on Carmen Jones, Hammerstein's deep-south version of the opera. The most successful of his collaborations were Rose Marie, The Desert Song, Show Boat and New Moon. He was also associated with many failures whereas Rodgers never knew anything but success or relative degrees of it.

When it was no longer possible to work with Hart, Rodgers looked for a new man and decided upon Hammerstein. They were no strangers; in fact they had even written a few songs together for amateur productions at Columbia some 25 years previously.

This new partnership came about in 1942. Hammerstein's career had been on a downward trend for several years and along Broadway there was the feeling that Rodgers wouldn't be able to adapt himself to a new and very different lyricist after all those years with Hart. After some months of doubt and negative pressure Oklahoma finally reached the boards. That was April of 1943. Seventeen years and a hundred songs later Mr. Rodgers and Mr. Hammerstein are still getting along beautifully.

A Declaration Of Love For The World

*Program notes on Mahler's
"Song of the Earth,"*

*by DR. HEINZ UNGER, who will conduct it this week on
CBC Wednesday Night*

A "Symphony for Tenor, Contralto and Orchestra" is Mahler's own designation for The Song of Earth. Thus the composer indicates that to him, this is not to be considered a cycle of six songs, but rather an entity carried by one underlying idea. What idea?

Not infrequently have listeners refused to accept the uplifting message of this work, because deceived by its moments of melancholy and resignation, they considered it to express a philosophy of pessimism. This is understandable if one considers nothing but the original texts of some of the poems which Mahler used. The Song of the Earth however has to be taken as a whole to be understood. Major and very decisive textual alterations — omissions and additions — of the original poems by Mahler himself speak a very significant language, which together with his music should leave nobody in doubt as to what he meant to express.

The Song of the Earth is based on a selection of lyrics by a number of Chinese poets as it had become known to Mahler in its German version by the poet Hans Bethge. Mahler has chosen from this selection the seven poems underlying the six parts of his work in such a way as to give a bitter-sweet picture of life as a whole, with its ever contrasting moods changing as rapidly as life itself. There is drama, there is idyllic restfulness, youthful frolic, despairing loneliness, gaiety, admiration of prowess, frustration, longing for beauty and love, and, permeating everything, the spirit of the wise who embraces and accepts all of it with deepest understanding.

PART 1. Drinking Song to the Misery of This World. "Here sparkles wine in golden vessels," the singer tells his assembled friends, "but do not drink ere you have heard my song!" And he reminds them of the transforming powers of grief and joy alike. He tells them how earth and firmament outlast the life-span of man, and only after having made them intensely conscious of the fragility of human life, he challenges them to empty their cups, and drink to the eternal mystery of life and death.

PART 2. Lonely in Autumn. Singer and orchestra describe in telling colours all the beauty and all the melancholy of autumn: blue mists on the lake, the golden leaves which will soon be floating away on the water. After the most subtle and loving description of autumn in nature, the singer remembers her own loneliness, and the autumn in her own soul. In despair she cries out for the "sunshine of love to shine to dry her bitter tears."

PART 3. Of Youth. A little lake, a little pavilion in its midst, a little bridge, arched like a tiger's back, leading to it, and in the pavilion a host of young friends enjoying life, chatting, playing, writing verses, everything as fragile as china. Suddenly the narrating singer looks into the clear lake, and there, mystified, he sees everything standing on its head, the little bridge no longer like a tiger's back, but rather like a half moon, the pavilion, the friends, everything upside down. He wonders. So does the music.

PART 4. Of Beauty. A fine summer day. Young girls picking flowers and chatting at the water's edge, a gentle wind playing with their garments, and sunshine reflecting their picture. A sudden storm seems to break. A cavalcade of young horsemen passes by. Look, one of the horses is shying and carries its rider far ahead of the others! The eyes of the most beautiful girl follow him. What she feels, music portrays in most delicate tones.

PART 5. The Drunkard in Spring. A philosophizing drunkard ponders on the thesis that life is nothing but a dream, a thesis which would make the mere thought of work and toil absurd; and drinking and singing the most justifiable of pastimes. A little bird wakes him and tells him that spring has come overnight, and as he converses with the bird he ponders about spring. In the end, however, he decides that spring is no concern of his and that it is preferable to get drunk again.

PART 6. The Farewell. Two different poems form the basis of this part, which is not only the longest but also the most conclusive of the whole work. Words and music describe an evening of superb beauty. Sunset behind mountains, evening

The Enemy That Never Was

A CBC Wednesday Night feature on Canada's Japanese communities during World War II

HE WAS a Canadian-born fisherman working out of one of the small ports near Vancouver, a family man, indistinguishable from countless other hard-working fisherfolk except for the fold of his eyelids. The year was 1941, just after Pearl Harbour. The Canadian authorities were losing no time in rounding up Japanese-Canadians on the grounds that they might be a security risk. One day without warning officials with a naval escort boarded the fisherman's boat and ordered him to prepare to be towed down to Vancouver. When they arrived in Vancouver his boat descending into the valleys, a gentle wind rustling in the pine trees, the moon floating up like a gondola of silver, the last birds going to rest, a brook whispering through the dusk, and the singer going to and fro on soft grass, lute in hand, expecting the friends . . . The friend does not come. Here the original poem ends abruptly with a reproachful accusation of the faithless friend. This is one of the decisive moments where Mahler's way diverges widely from the Chinese poet. No reproach here. The evening and the whole world are so beautiful that the coming or not coming of an expected friend has become unimportant. Mahler's singer and his orchestra break out into a paean to the "beauty of this world, drunk with eternal life and love" (Mahler's own words). After an orchestral interlude depicting tragedy and disappointment, the real "Farewell" part begins. The singer, apparently a different person from that in the first half, meets his closest friend to bid him the last farewell. He tells him that it has to be, and that he is going away into the mountains (a Buddhist expression for going to another incarnation). Fate has not been kind to him in this world, he says, and he is longing for home and rest. And then follow, replacing completely the resigned and tired words of the original poem, those incomparable words of Mahler's own: "Quiet is my heart and waiting for its hour. This beloved earth always will blossom up in spring and green anew. Always and everywhere will shine a blue light in the distance. Ever . . . ever . . ."

And with this vision of that which knows no limits "The Song of the Earth" fades away. A "farewell" symphony indeed, but a farewell in which the curtain goes up, not down, at the end, written in a spirit, which in saying good-bye, blesses the whole universe. Is this resignation? Is this pessimism? Is it not rather a most fervent declaration of love for this world and all it stands for, with all the joys, great and small, it has to offer, and in spite of all the sorrow and despair it causes time and again?

was taken away from him and that was the last he ever saw of it.

He was herded with other Japanese Canadians into a temporary camp, dazed, angry and worried about his family, and then was sent to work on a road gang in the Rockies. His wife, 18-year-old son and two younger children had no idea what had become of him until a knock came on the door of their small home and they were told to pack their personal belongings and prepare to leave. They were allowed 150 pounds apiece. Bewildered and frantic they bundled up their things, not knowing what to take and what to leave, and were carted off under guard to Hastings Park in Victoria, from which the older boy was sent to a road camp and the mother and small children to a ghost town in the B.C. interior.

Later the father managed to get transferred to a sugar-beet farm in eastern Canada, followed shortly afterwards by the boy, and later the rest of the family joined them. Their home, boat and all the possessions they had left behind were confiscated by the Custodian of Enemy Property, sold for a fraction of their value, and the fisherman was given a cash settlement. At the end of the war he and his family settled in Toronto, where they are now doing well and have become philosophical about their wartime experiences.

Their dramatic story, and others just as typical of Canada's Japanese communities during the Second World War, will be told in a 60-minute radio documentary called The Enemy That Never was on CBC Wednesday Night this week. The interviewer-narrator will be Douglas Leiterman.

Leiterman will present an historical examination of the Canadian-Japanese community in relation to the rest of the population from their early immigration to the present day, with special attention to the war years. To get a complete picture of the situation producer Del MacKenzie and program organizer Gordon Cullingham gathered between 30 and 40 hours of

Second of a two-part report on "Africa—The Infant Giant." On-the-spot interviews with Emperor Haile Selassie, Chagga Tribal Chief Thomas Marealle and Chief Festus (Federal Minister of Finance for Nigeria). A trip to the Roan Antelope Copper Mine in Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland—and the nearby town of 40,000 people; how a young man in Lagos, Nigeria gets a job; the Gondar Health College in Ethiopia, in which a girl trains to become a nurse and a young man to be a Health Officer; the first East African University for Africans (Makerere, in Uganda) where 850 students are enrolled solely through merit. Narrated by George Movshon.

Private stations will carry the seventh of a 10-week series of religious dramas and documentaries produced by the CBC in co-operation with the National Religious Advisory Council. "Armagh" (Presbyterian) is the dramatic story of Annagh, a Presbyterian Church home for unmarried mothers, as seen through the eyes of one young resident. Cast includes: Iris Krangle, Phyllis Malcolm-Stewart, Joe Austin, Katherine Blake, Katharine Hawtrey, Chris Wiggins, Nancy Lewis and Joan Maroney.

CBWT viewers will see the first program of the series—"The Saints" (Anglican), a drama about an Anglican priest and his work, the spiritual and material guidance he gives to a group of boys in an unusual club called the Saints. Cast includes: Peter Mews, Art Jenoff, Arch McDonnell, John Clark, Ray Bellew, David Somerset, Barry Lavender, Dennis Stanway, William Ferguson and Berney Hayes.

Country Calendar

Fifth in the series "Meet Your Agricultural Representative." This week - an interview with Morley Crowe, "ag. rep." from Weyburn, Sask. Gren Bates, producer. (CBC Winnipeg production).

Winter Conference

Second telecast in a two-part series from the sixth annual Couchiching Winter Conference held at the Ontario College of Education, Toronto, Ont. The role, expectations, and responsibilities of Business have undergone significant and far-reaching changes in the last fifty years, particularly since 1929. The purpose of the 1960 Couchiching Winter Conference is to examine and analyse the enterprise system in the light of these changes. What has actually happened? What are the attitudes and the expectations of the public? How has business reacted? How do businessmen see their role and function in the present and in the future?

CBWT—Premiere

"L'Echéance du vendredi" ("Friday Deadline") by Marcel Dubé. The story of a mechanic who is out of work and whose family cannot understand why he will not consider any other line of work. Dubé says, "This play tells of the ten darkest hours in the life of a man, but I do not think that it is completely black. I wrote with the conviction that I was throwing light on a situation that was well known in North America during the depression and post-war years." (CBC Montreal film).

Documentary '60

This week, first of two programs on "Poison, Pests and People." Prominent conservationists, agricultural experts, chemists and health authorities will give their views on various aspects of the increased use of pesticides in homes, fields and forests. Programs will show how modern chemicals destroy many harmful insects but present other problems such as danger to wildlife and control of residue. New chemicals have to be developed as insects develop resistance to those in current use.

"SUN IN MY EYES"—Jack Kuper's autobiographical play about his boyhood in a small Polish town during the German occupation, will be presented Sunday night on G.M. Presents. Leading roles are played by Toby Robins and Al Waxman, as the boy's mother and uncle (see cover). Alfie Scopp (above) plays the role of an elderly Jew who has his beard cut off by a Nazi soldier (Jeremy Wilkin).

Newsmagazine

Host for this program will be Stanley Burke, CBC UN correspondent who will comment on highlights of the week's news.

Lassie

This week—"Fur Coated Killers." Infuriated farmers blame a mink rancher when a fur-coated killer stalks the area wantonly killing chickens. Lassie and Timmy set out to find the predator, believing it to be a "little wild mink," instead, the boy and his dog find themselves face to face with a wolverine, a dangerous and cunning animal.

Walt Disney Presents

This week—"Kentucky Gunslick." John Slaughter's protege, Ashley Carstairs, makes a surprise visit to Arizona, bringing two Kentucky thoroughbreds as a gift to John. Carstairs brings two other items: a newly-developed quick-draw and a new found quick temper. Tom Tyron stars as Slaughter and Daryl Hickman plays Carstairs. Betty Lynn is featured as Mrs. Viola Slaughter.

Father Knows Best

This week—"Two Loves Has Bud." Bud, on the verge of leaving home because his girl friend Joyce refuses to see him, finds a new romantic interest in his new neighbour, Sandra. Later, Joyce wants to make up with Bud and the latter is faced with choosing between the two girls who want to go steady with him. He decides to go steady with both of them—with near disastrous results.

Joan Fairfax Show

Singing star Joan Fairfax, and guests, entertain in a nightclub setting. Today's guests are baritone Murray Goldkind, singing a number from Carousel; the Alf Coward Quartet, an instrumental group from a Toronto club, and Norman Hudon, Montreal cartoonist and club entertainer. With the Alan Lund Dancers and orchestra conducted by Samuel Hershoren.

G.M. Presents

This week—"Sun in My Eyes" an autobiographical play by Jack Kuper of Toronto. Set in a small Polish town in 1942, it tells of the suffering of the Jews under the hysterical tyranny of Hitler, as seen through the eyes of the author's family. The story opens when Yankel, the narrator, is just 12 years old, and it centres on Yankel's Uncle Mo'ishe. He is the idler and cynic of the Cohen family who prefers to roam the town market rather than help his widowed sister, Edzia, to provide for her two children, Yankel and Yosel. The tragedy of the Cohen family starts when the Nazis shoot the children's grandfather because he leaves town without a permit to work for a local farmer. The climax of the

GREETINGS!

Bob Hope greets Ginger Rogers, who will be his guest star on the Bob Hope Show Monday on CBC-TV. Other guests on the 60-minute special will be Wally Cox and the winners of the annual Photoplay Gold Medal Awards. (NBC).

savory to them, Howard and Eve conspire to lead the cook—who has written a pop tune—down the pitfall-straw recording path. To do this they enlist the aid of their agent and a termite control man. The cook's tune, "I May Be Too Late," was actually written by Ida Lupino who plays Eve.

Fibber McGee and Molly

This week - "Molly's Mother." Molly's mother visits the McGee home and Fibber introduces her to his other nemesis, Fred Nitney. Fibber hints that Molly's mother is financially independent and Nitney talks her into a restaurant partnership. Then the police close in on the beanery as a front for a bookmaking operation.

Youth '60

With host Tommy Common, Penny Williams, and Dennis Crothall. Ham radio will be featured today. A "Ham Rig" will be set up in the studio so that Henry Tom, a young Chinese-Canadian ham radio operator can make a live two-way conversation with another operator, Tommy George, (18) in Kingston, Ont. The ham radio expert will be Ross Conning, instructor in electrical theory and industrial electronics at the Central Technical School in Toronto, who will talk about ham radio and how viewers can acquire a set of their own. Tommy George of Kingston is an apprentice signalman with the Canadian Army. Jill Weatherstone will make a return visit to talk about diets. Jill, a young dietician at the Toronto General Hospital, drew so much interest when she was on Youth 60's "Slimnastics" program before Christmas that she was invited to come back and continue her talk on slimming and dieting. She will discuss slimming diets—and how dangerous they can be to teenagers health if they try slimming diets without the advice of a doctor; protective diets for protecting teeth, hair, etc., and for resistance against colds and disease. Cartoonist George Feyer will interpret her comments on diets with cartoons.

Don Messer Jubilee

Buchta Dancers will perform to Patronella and The Stone Boat Jig. The Islanders play Dill Pickle Rag, Heather on the Hill and the Big Noise From Winnetka. Marg Osburne sings The Alberta Waltz. Quiet-time song is Rose Upon the Bible. Wally Walpur sings a duet with Chamberlain, Mellow Mountain Moon and with Marg Osburne he sings Cool Water.

Danny Thomas Show

Danny and Pat Hannigan, Sr. (Jack Haley) get together to make out the invitation list to the wedding of their respective offspring. Danny insists that the O'Flaherty's be cut from the list; Hannigan maintains that the prolific Habeeb tribe should be deleted from the already-huge roster. A fight ensues over the Habeebs and the O'Flaherty's, causing the parents to call off the wedding—until the engaged couple have their say. Marjorie Lord co-stars as Danny's wife Kathy. Rusty Hamer and Angela Cartwright are seen as the Williams children, Rusty and Linda. Pat Harrington, Jr. plays Pat Hannigan and Penney Parker portrays Terry.

Music '60

Presents the Jack Kane Hour with Jack Kane, Sylvia Murphy, the Music Makers Chorus and Orchestra, and host Bill Walker. Guests on this weeks show will be singer Mel Torme and the conductor of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra, Walter Susskind. Mel Torme will sing St. Louis Blues. Walter Susskind will play The Ritual Fire Dance and Chopsticks. Torme and Sylvia Murphy will sing separate jazz and classical versions of I Love a Piano.

play arrives when the child Yankel and his cynical Uncle Moishe are the only living members of the Cohen family and Moishe discovers that he must make the most important decision of his life. "Sun in My Eyes" recently concluded a four-week run on the Toronto stage, Toronto critic Herbert Whittaker said, "It is good news that Mr. Kuper's play is to be done on television . . . ; it is worth an audience for it is a moving chronicle." The author a graphics artist for CBC-TV, drew the sketches which open the play. He also narrates the introduction.

The Twentieth Century

This week - "Downrange." What happens to an ICBM after blast-off? Who feels its pulse as it rises 600 miles into space, and soars 5500 miles across the sea? Who listens to its electronic delirium? This program will take viewers on a missile-ride to learn how Downrange works. Viewers will see the beginning and end of a missile's career, from the launching at Cape Canaveral to the landing underwater, where the frogmen recover its nose cone.

From experiments I have carried out, it seems that many of us expect to be lucky, on the average, once in every six attempts at a task. Similar expectations apply to being un-lucky. There seems to be a significant sex difference: women think they are luckier than men. If, for instance, there are 100 raffle tickets with one winning ticket, women are much more likely than men to think that they will be lucky and draw the winning ticket.—

John Cohen of the Department of Psychology, Manchester University, on BBC.

sity of Toronto, reports on current news events.

ARTIST IN THE KITCHEN—CHICKEN AND RICE KING—Chicken turns up in so many different culinary disguises, it's one of the most versatile meats we can use. This week, chicken and rice are used by Lucille Blair to make an attractive, nourishing main dish.

Mantovani

Mantovani plays the music of dreams. Guests will be Canadian singer Edmund Hockeridge and Joan Regan.

CBWT—Mary Liz Show

Marlene Brant and Father La-Violette are among the guests today, to take a well-informed look at problems of Indians and Metis in Manitoba, and preview the conference being held this week on this topic. Another important meeting is described by Mrs. Tom Croy of Balmoral, Manitoba, who is attending the Manitoba Dairy Convention, and will explain some of the newest and most effective methods of dairy farming. Mrs. C. E. Crawford continues her sewing instructions to help both the beginning and experienced seamstress create new garments from "almost-discarded" materials.

Susie

This week—"Star Struck." Movie hero Spencer Dane is looking for a new agent so Susie's boss assigns her to take him out and romance him with a view to signing him. An old friend of Susie's seems to ruin the plan to show Dane a high evening and the three spend the evening at her home eating a home-cooked meal and playing canasta. Fortunately, Dane turns out to be a real homebody.

Friendly Giant

Friendly reads a book entitled "The Little Brass Band," and Jerome, Rusty, Angie and Fiddle present another concert.

Maggie Muggins

Maggie and her friends attend a party celebrating Mr. Crow's birthday, at Fitzgerald's house, and they all bring presents. Grandmother Frog sings a welcome song, but the guest of honor doesn't arrive. Maggie thinks up a plan to get Mr. Crow to his party.

Sportstime

With host Doug Maxwell. Doug introduces a film on "games to enjoy in the snow."

PRAIRIE ACTORS IN "FORD STARTIME"

Douglas Rain and Frances Hyland, originally of Winnipeg and Regina, respectively, play leading roles in Ibsen's "An Enemy of the People" Tuesday night on Ford Startime. Both have studied in England, and both returned to Canada at the request of Tyrone Guthrie to play at Stratford. Another prairie actor, Leslie Nielsen, Regina-born star of American TV and Hollywood films, will play the leading role in Tuesday night's play. (For complete cast, see program notes this page).

Sky King

Today—"Two-Gun Penny." A refugee professor who now works for the government is tracked down by agents of his former country. When Penny is denied the privilege of accompanying Sky King and Clipper on a flying search for the professor, she sets out to outwit the desperate agents herself. She manages to capture the desperate foreigners almost single-handed—and is saved at a crucial moment by Sky King and Clipper.

Ford Startime

"An Enemy of the People," Arthur Miller's modern version of Henrik Ibsen's classic, adapted for television by John Bethune. In this version, Dr. Stockmann, an honest doctor, discovers that his town's famous springs, on which the whole economy of the resort depends, are polluted. He takes for granted that the people will want to know the facts. Through his brother, the mayor, however, he finds that the situation is immensely complicated. From Toronto. (For Mr. Miller's comments, see story this page).

Ibsen Updated

About Arthur Miller's modern version of An Enemy of the People

EVERY Ibsen plays begins with the unwritten words: 'Now listen here!' And these words have shown me a path through the wall of 'entertainment,' a path that leads beyond the formulas and dried-up precepts, the pretense and fraud, of the business of the stage. Whatever else Ibsen has had to teach, this is the first and greatest contribution."

American playwright Arthur Miller was discussing his modern version of Henrik Ibsen's play An Enemy of the People. We haven't used the word "adaptation" because Miller said he finds it distasteful. It seems to imply, he explained, "that one writer has ventured into another's chicken coop, or worse, into the sacred chamber of another's personal creations and rearranged things without permission. Most of the time an adaptation is a playwright's excuse for not writing his own plays, and I am not yet with my back against that particular wall."

Miller has a number of highly original plays to his credit, including All My Sons, Death of a Sales-

Nigeria. Our teacher-narrator will be assisted by a Nigerian student who will appear in his native dress and tell the audience of his life as a child in his country—what clothes he wore, what sort of a house he lived in, what schooling he had, what games he played. The program will emphasize that there are other countries in West Africa, such as Ghana, where the conditions of life are similar to those in Nigeria.

Part 2. "How an Airplane Flies." In this program, Gil Darnley will first point out that it has taken centuries of research for inventors (starting with Leonardo Da Vinci over four hundred years ago) to discover the secret of flight. He will demonstrate the basic principles of flight.

Our Miss Brooks

This week—"Hello Mr. Chips." When Connie learns that Mr. Boynton doesn't intend to marry until he reaches advanced age, she offers to make him believe that he is aging more rapidly than he thinks. With Eve Arden, Gale Gordon and Robert Rockwell.

Friendly Giant

Friendly reads some poetry, and shows pictures from The Big Blue Book. Rusty plays on his guitar, and Jerome, Rusty and Friendly sing songs.

Art In Action

The basic principles of art, with Professor George Swinton. Private stations will carry the eighth program in the series—Impressionism: The problem of light. CBWT will carry the ninth program in the series—Expressionism and Fauvism: The search for spiritual and emotional expression. Professor Swinton will have Murray Senens as guest model.

R.C.M.P.

This week—"Johnny Wolf." Johnny Wolf's father walked among the white men, an artist, a hero. Johnny tried to follow but had the ambition not the ability. It means excitement for Corporal Gagnier and other RCMP men at Shamattawa when Johnny realizes his limitations. Larry Zahab plays Johnny Wolf.

Perry Como

Perry's special guests this week will include songstress Kay Starr, comedian Bert Lahr, actress Anne Bancroft and the Mills Brothers.

Four For Tonight

English and American performers combine to give four TV shows in one. They are: Beatrice Lillie, who will (more or less) sing "Weary of it All" and "The Fan"; Cyril Ritchard, who will struggle hilariously with "Round the World on 80£"; night club entertainer Tammy Grimes, who will provide some of her own special brand of musical humour; and Tony Randall, who will appear in a number of brief sketches. Finally, all four will get together (see picture this page) to mimic an English singing society.

F.M. Network Plans Announced

OTTAWA—Details of the CBC's plan to establish Canada's first frequency modulation radio network were announced Feb. 11 by CBC President J. Alphonse Ouimet. The bilingual FM network is scheduled to go into operation in April and will link three existing CBC-FM stations in Montreal, Ottawa, and Toronto.

Mr. Ouimet said that for the first 18 months the operation will be largely experimental in nature. During that period the network will be under close scrutiny so that as the operation matures it will make full use of the lessons learned in its infancy.

Hayward Morse At Stratford

Hayward Morse, who starred in the Feb. 2 Ford Startime production of "The Browning Version," and earlier with Ingrid Bergman in The Turn of the Screw, has been signed to play at the Stratford Festival this summer. He will appear with Douglas Rain, Christopher Plummer, and Julie Harris in Shakespeare's King John. The 12-year-old son of Toronto actor Barry Morse will play the role of the tragic Prince Arthur.

The British have a habit of exaggerating their eccentricities. They take an innocent pleasure in thinking of themselves as distinct, collectively from foreigners, and individually from each other. This is well known to be true in the dealings of the British with the Americans, with whom they have, of course, very close affinities. It is the differences, not the similarities, that are thought interesting and brought out.—John Midgley, assistant editor of The Economist, on BBC.

This week—Bernard Braden interviews former Hollywood wonder-boy Orson Welles. The interview was filmed in Paris, where Welles, now 51, is working on a new film. (To be continued next week). See story page 2).

man, A View from the Bridge, and The Crucible.

John Bethune has prepared Miller's version of An Enemy of the People for a 90-minute CBC-TV production on Ford Startime this Tuesday night.

Miller says he decided to work on An Enemy of the People because "I had a private wish to demonstrate that Ibsen is really pertinent today, that he is not 'old-fashioned,' and, implicitly that those who condemn him are themselves misleading our theatre and our playwrights into a blind alley of senseless sensibility, triviality and the inevitable waste of our dramatic talents." Miller admits, too, that he "wished also to buttress the idea that the dramatic writer has the right to entertain with his brains as well as his heart."

He has tried to make An Enemy of the People as alive to North Americans as it was to Norwegians, while keeping it the way Ibsen moulded it. He says: "I believed this play could be alive for use because its central theme is, in my opinion, the central theme of our social life today. Simply, it is the question of whether democratic guarantees protecting political minorities out to be set aside in time of crisis. More personally, it is the question of whether one's vision of the truth ought to be a source of guilt at a time when the mass of men condemn it as a dangerous and devilish lie."

To set the plot straight for us Miller describes it as "the story of a scientist who discovers an evil, and constantly believing that he has done a service to humanity, expects that he will at last be thanked. However, the town has a vested interest in the perpetuation of that evil, and his 'truth,' when confronted with the interest, must be made to conform. The scientist clings to the truth and suffers the social consequences." Briefly, it shows that those who attempt to warp the truth for ulterior purposes must inevitably become warped and corrupted themselves. "This theme," he says, "is valid today, just as will always be, but some of the examples given by Ibsen to prove it may no longer be."

Miller tells us that "Ibsen wrote this play as a result of his being practically stoned off the stage for daring to present Ghosts. The plot is supposed to have come from a news item which told of a Hungarian scientist who had discovered poisoned water in the town's water supply and had been pilloried for his discovery. If this was the case, my interpretation of the theme is doubly justified, for it then seems beyond doubt that Ibsen meant above and beyond all else to defend his right to stand 'at the outpost of society,' alone with the truth, and to speak from there to his fellow men."

Because Miller found Ibsen's language in English "impossibly pedantic," he set out to transform it into contemporary vernacular.

"Working from a word-to-word rendering of the Norwegian, done by Lars Nordenson," he says, "I was able to gather the meaning of each speech and scene without the obstruction of any kind of English construction."

We were interested to hear an example of what he meant, and Miller supplied the following: Ibsen's "Well, what do you say, Doctor? Don't you think it is high time we stir a little life into the slackness and sloppiness of half-heartedness and cowardliness?" now reads: "Well, what do you say to a little hypodermic for these fence-sitting deadheads?"

Miller notes, too, that "throughout the play I have tried to peel away its trappings of the moment, its relatively accidental detail which ring the dull green tones of Victorianism, and to show that beneath them there still lives the terrible wrath of Henrik Ibsen."

BOY GENIUS

thing for art, but since I don't regard art as of prime importance I've answered your question. So the hell with posterity."

"There are more bad film directors at work than people know, because it is the only profession in the world where you can be incompetent and go on being successful for thirty years with nobody ever discovering it. I mean really and truly incompetent. Because the only job a director can do in a film of real value is to do something more than what will happen automatically. . . . Otherwise he is simply the man who says 'action!', 'cut!', 'take it a little slower,' and no one will ever know he doesn't know anything."

The discussion ranges over theatre, films, radio—and television. "I think television is a second-rate medium of entertainment. I think television drama isn't in the league of fine movies or theatre or radio. Television is basically in my view a medium of communication rather than of entertainment. You can expose a personality, deal with a subject; it's a medium of journalism, ideas and of information."

The Tempest

• It was a real pleasure to watch The Tempest. It would be wonderful to have many more of such magnificent plays.—Mrs. L. G., Mikado, Sask.

FRIDAY TV NOTES

They sing Miss Polly Had A Dolly, and The Great Big Truck.

Open House

SPRING FASHIONS — Jean Miller continues her report on trends in Spring clothes.

P.M. Party

With emcee Alan Millar, singers Donna Miller and Allan Blye, Rudy Toth and his orchestra, Rex Loring, and Daniel the Spaniel, with special guest dancer Joey Hollingsworth.

Woofers

Donna Miller and Woofers present today's film stories: Jack and the Beanstalk, illustrated by graphics; The Long, Slow Worm, a cartoon; and Walt Disney's The Ugly Duckling, based on the fairy tale by Hans Christian Andersen. In between, they talk about "things growing."

Hobby Corner

Fourth in a series of six programs on the operations of the Winnipeg Police Department. Co-host along with Glynne Morris will be James Toal, Chief Inspector of Detectives.

Four Just Men

"The Miracle of St. Philippe." Dan Dailey, as American journalist Tim Collier, uncovers some startling facts as he tries to recover a miraculous relic for the people of the French village of St. Philippe. Collier learns that every member of the town council stood to benefit from the theft of the relic which reportedly possesses healing powers.

Flying Doctor

Richard Denning stars as Dr. Greg Graham of the Australian Royal Flying Service.

• We are among the least vocal of your viewers but we couldn't pass up The Tempest without comment. We thought it was superbly done and were enchanted throughout the performance.—Mrs. E. McC., Winnipeg.

• I was bored to death with your wonderful show, The Tempest. I just had to shut off the TV set. I did not think the stinking thing could last 1½ hours. It's too bad to take away our good programs for a thing like that. It appeared to me as if it had been produced in a mental hospital.—J. S., Selkirk, Man.

• . . . A truly wonderful production! My two children (six and nine) sat glued to the TV tube till the end —surely some measure of your success.—R. D. C., Winnipeg.

• We appreciated the opportunity given to us by CBC of viewing this NBC program. Frankly I was a little skeptical that this would be a suitable program for our young children, but I found that in spite of the need to translate from English to French and explain much of the story, our youngsters sat enthralled for the full time and wanted to know if there would be more next week. I hope that this program was received with enthusiasm across the country so that we may have more plays of this calibre.—Mrs. J. H. L., Norwood, Man.

Browning Version

• Thank you for a perfect cameo in the performance last evening of The Browning Version. It was surely television at its best. Every part was played with great feeling to make a memorable hour.—Miss L. W., Winnipeg.

• A brickbat to the CBC from a long-time admirer. Why, oh why did you decapitate The Browning Version? Would Mr. Rattigan approve of such a butchering?—J. T., Dummer, Sask.

• May I say how much I enjoyed The Browning Version on Ford Startime? Maurice Evan's portrayal of the Greek master was most moving, and I found myself caught up in his emotions. It was a treat to remember.—Mrs. P. B., Winnipeg.

Chamber Orchestras

• I should like to say how very much we appreciate and enjoy the weekly concerts given over the radio by the CBC Winnipeg and Vancouver Chamber Orchestras. Both groups give us a wide range of interesting and unusual works which are particularly valuable to people such as ourselves who live in small centres and rarely have a chance to hear such works, or even become aware of their existence.—Mrs. J. E., Wolfville, Nova Scotia.

• • •

Pro-Canadian

• I am glad that the stuff we get from the American networks is so poor (except Ford Startime) compared to the wonderful CBC radio and TV programs. Otherwise I would never get any housework done.—Mrs. J. M. R., Edmonton.

• We have read in this column many letters from American citizens who prefer our Canadian productions. Why, then, should CBC go and get those American shows which are not suited to our education and mentality? In our whole community I have found only one person who likes the American shows; all the others shut them off.—D. H. D., Duck Lake, Sask.

• The CBC should be congratulated for the program R.C.M.P. even if it were just for export and not for Canadian viewers. It certainly gives us the opportunity to hit back in kind for such horrors shipped to us as Mike Hammer, and that wet western, Riverboat.—W. O. C., Portage la Prairie.

SATURDAY TV NOTES

Gloria Henry as his parents, and Joseph Kearns as their next door neighbour, Mr. Wilson. Featured in the cast are Billy Booth, William Newell, George Cisar and Jeannie Russell.

Movies With Manings

With host Alan Manings. "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington," starring James Stewart and Jean Arthur, with Edward Arnold and Claude Rains. Comedy-drama about a newly-elected senator and his misadventures in Washington.

N.H.L. Hockey

Detroit Red Wings vs. Toronto Maple Leafs. Play-by-play and commentary by Bill and Foster Hewitt.

Juliette

Singer Juliette with Bobby Ginby on trumpet, the Romeos vocal quartet, and Bill Isbister and his orchestra. For her medley tonight, Juliette will invite viewers to "sing along" and the theme will be "dream" songs.

MUSIC ON RADIO

by BOYD NEEL

About Wagner, concert halls, and conductors in bathing suits

SHOULD Wagner be performed anywhere but at Bayreuth? This may sound a silly question, but we must remember that Wagner himself never intended or expected that the "Ring" or Parsifal would ever receive performances elsewhere, and this accounts for much of the misunderstanding that has grown up concerning his music. How often have we heard the remark, "I love Wagner but he should have known better than to drown the singers with his enormous orchestra." Of course, actu-

Trappers' Festival On CBW, CBK

David Cruickshank of Outside Broadcasts at CBC Winnipeg and Marilyn Phillips, CBW's morning commentator, will be in The Pas, Manitoba, this Wednesday, Thursday and Friday to bring listeners in Manitoba and Saskatchewan daily reports on one of the continent's most colourful events—The Trapper's Festival.

David's reports will be heard Wednesday, Thursday and Friday at 5:00 p.m. on CBW, 4:00 p.m. on CBK. Marilyn's will be heard on CBW's Morning Comment (9:45 a.m.) Thursday and Friday.

Highlight of the event is the three-day World Championship Dog Race of 120 miles, with prize money of $5,000. Among the other events to be described by Marilyn and David—ice fishing, old-time fiddling and jigging, rat skinning, street dancing, and the fabulous Trappers' Rendezvous, a midnight-to-dawn dance sometimes called the Mad Trappers' Ball.

ally, Wagner did nothing of the kind, and it is only when these works are performed in theatres built in the standard way, that the orchestra may overpower the voices. I think one can say with all possible truth that, if you have never heard the works in the Bayreuth Theatre, you have never really heard them as Wagner wrote them.

The great composer was no fool and knew perfectly well what he was about when he scored the "Ring" for 120 musicians. With this huge orchestra in the depths of the Bayreuth pit, half under the stage and hidden from the audience, the balance between it and the singers is quite perfect. The singers do not have to force their voices in the least and can sing in a perfectly natural and conversational tone, every word being audible all over the auditorium. To the singers appearing there for the first time, the experience is extremely unnerving because, to them, the orchestra sounds so loud from beneath their feet, that they imagine they are not being heard at all, and artists making their first appearance there are sent into the auditorium at rehearsal, so that they can be reassured that they are being heard perfectly. There is no other theatre in the world today possessing these almost supernatural acoustics and if you are interested in these things it is worth going 3,000 miles just to hear one chord played in this astonishing building.

It is remarkable that, with all the theorizing of the acousticians and architects during the last fifty years, the only really perfect building, as far as acoustics go, was designed by a mere musician in 1876. I am quite certain that Wagner didn't bother about reflected sine waves and logarithms when he conceived it. He knew exactly what he wanted and how it would sound, and that was the way it was built. Mathematically, it probably violates every law known to the acousticians.

WINTER OLYMPICS REPORT

Bob Moir will devote several of his evening sportscasts on CBW (6:20 p.m.) to telephone interviews with leading Canadian entrants in the Olympics. Listeners in the prairie provinces will hear daily reports from Squaw Valley, California, on CBC News Roundup (9:00 p.m. on CBW; 8:00 p.m. on CBK and CBX) and in addition, listeners will hear a special feature item directly from the site of the Winter Olympics on Prairie Sports Final, Feb. 27 at 6:00 p.m. on CBW; 5:00 p.m. on CBK and CBX.

To sit in the vast cavern of the orchestral pit at Bayreuth is a unique experience and one forgets that the auditorium exists at all. The almost covered-in pit is as large as the average concert hall and the musicians, being hidden from the audience, play in T-shirts and shorts, the conductor even having been known to conduct in a bathing suit. It can get quite hot down there in the summer months.

What has, of course, changed in the course of the years, is the actual stage equipment, but there is no doubt that Wagner would have approved of the developments in that direction had he known of them. The stage, however, is the same and has not been changed, as far as its actual construction goes, since his time. It was his original intention that the theatre should be built in Munich and it was actually offered to that city, but the offer was turned down. Many years later when Bayreuth had become world famous, Munich regretted bitterly its decision and went so far as to build an almost exact replica of the Bayreuth theatre. This was the Prince Regent theatre in which Wagner

TRANS-CANADA MATINEE

No Wheel for St. Catherine. Jean Sangwine is the wife of a minister and has had much experience moving from one manse to another as her husband's charge changed. One of her favourite manses was in Souris, Manitoba. It had a window containing a reproduction of St. Catherine; a saint whom Mrs. Sangwine soon came to regard with much affection.

In My Opinion. A group of Montreal women with strong views argue the advantages and disadvantages of buying Canadian goods. Should we shun Japanese textiles and chinaware because they're under-selling our Canadian products? What about United States appliances and fashions? Can an exporting country afford to buy only home-grown products?

Speaking Up in the Bush. Alan Anderson, Toronto freelance broadcaster, has long possessed an attic full of old newspapers. From their yellowed pages, he has garnered impressions of the people and events of Keenansville, Ontario, and in this series he reconstructs some of the romance of newspapering in the 1800's. Today, he discusses the news pages; the curious admixture of straight reporting and editorializing of politics and local events.

Daily features . . . News commentary by Anne Francis of Ottawa, music and songs by Harry Mossfield of Toronto, and a reading by Montreal actress, Jane Hillary from Ericka Leuchtig's "With a King in the Clouds," adapted for radio by Charlotte Moore.

Starts Monday

The Greek and Roman World

A new "University of the Air" series by DR. W. G. HARDY of the University of Alberta

WHETHER we recognize it or not, patterns set by the Greeks and Romans are woven into our everyday life. Their civilization forms the base of our own, and if, as educated people, we want to understand our own civilization we must understand something of theirs. The latest series in CBC University of the Air is designed to give us some of that knowledge.

The Greek and the Roman World begins on the CBC Trans-Canada Network this Monday night. Dr. W. G. Hardy, head of the department of classics at the University of Alberta, will give the course. Dr. Hardy graduated from the University of Toronto, and gained his Ph.D. at Chicago. He has several times visited the chief classical sites in Greece, Crete and Italy. In addition to his publications in academic journals, Dr. Hardy is the author of six novels. The first, Son of Eli, was serialized in Maclean's in 1928-29, the latest The City of Libertines (1957), currently being translated into German, is set in Rome in the first century B.C. The CBC has also broadcast four radio dramas and about a hundred radio talks by Dr. Hardy. He is an executive member of the Classical Association of Canada, a Council member of the Canadian Authors' Association, and a life member of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association.

In this radio series Dr. Hardy will describe the world the Greeks and Romans lived in, the ways in which they dressed, ate, and were housed, their thoughts about government, and even more important, their ideas about the riddle of the universe and man's place in it.

Following are the details of the ten lectures (the dates in brackets indicating the repeat broadcast of each lecture):

February 22 (April 5): The Greeks Step on Stage—More than half of the words we used are derived in one way or another from Greek or Latin. In general too, the ideas expressed by those words come from classical civilization. The Greeks, who were the first to step into the limelight of history, are more important here than the Romans. The first lecture will describe how this people occupied the Aegean world and then scattered their colonies around the Black Sea and westward along the Mediterranean.

February 29 (April 12): Life in Fifth Century Athens (Part 1)—In the fifth century before Christ Athens became the centre of the Greek world. By modern standards a small city, it yet achieved an empire, and its explosion of art and literature and ideas is still felt today. To understand the Athenians themselves, as people, we look at the classes in their society, their treatment of slaves, stage as both singer and actress. She also played a solo role in the Jack Hylton musical, "School," at the Princes Theatre, was vocalist for a summer season at Margate, and sold a radio play and several talks about Canada to the BBC. Before leaving Canada Miss Langston played a leading role in the University of Manitoba musical, "Song of Norway," and won several acting awards. A graduate of the University of Manitoba (United College), she also holds a diploma in piano from the Royal Conservatory of Music in Toronto.

Miss Langston will play one of the roles in "Aunt Edna's Picture," which will be produced at CBC Winnipeg by Gus Kristjanson.

building. It was used only for opera during the summer months when the regular opera house in the city was closed. During the last war the Bavarian National Opera House was destroyed by bombs and the only large theatre left in Munich was the Prince Regent, which became the temporary opera house. The problem then was how to adapt it for the performance of other kinds of opera, since the Wagnerian orchestral pit was naturally unsuitable for the ordinary kind of opera making up the general repertory. There was, therefore, no alternative but to reconstruct the pit and, in so doing, ruining, once and for all, the acoustics, which was a tragedy. Bayreuth, therefore, remains the only one of its kind in the world today.

These musings on Wagnerian performance were prompted by the broadcast of Die Walkuere from the Metropolitan in February 20. Over the air, of course, we shall hear an excellent balance and no doubt in the theatre the conductor will have seen to it that the voices are well heard, but it will have been, as always in these cases, a matter of adjusting Wagner's dynamics to suit the conditions, and the singers having to work much harder than they would at Bayreuth.

Wagner operas to be presented on the Metropolitan matinee broadcasts this season—Die Walkuere (Feb. 20), The Flying Dutchman (March 5), and Parsifal (April 9). The other operas to be broadcast this season—Verdi's Il Trovatore (Feb. 27), La Forza del Destino (March 12), Otello (March 19), and Simon Boccanegra (April 2), and Puccini's Andrea Chenier (March 26), and Madame Butterfly (April 16).

tape-recorded interviews and commentary, by politicians and ordinary citizens who were prominently identified with one side or other in the controversy over treatment of Japanese Canadians, and with Japanese Canadians themselves — professional people, businessmen, an artist and workers of various kinds, all articulate, and all looking at their experiences as objectively as possible. From these accounts a selection was made to give an accurate picture of what happened and an understanding of its historical importance.

MacKenzie told us that when all the Japanese Canadians living within a 200-mile radius of the coast were rounded up, their anger was stimulated by the fact that many of them knew little or nothing of Japan, could not speak Japanese, and were completely Occidental in their thinking. They felt they were Canadians and resented being singled out for alien treatment — treatment different from that accorded people whose national origin was other countries with which Canada was at war. After the war Prime Minister MacKenzie King noted that there had never been grounds for suspicion of any of them — not a single instance of espionage, sabotage, or other disloyalty.

MacKenzie pointed out that most of these internees were segregated, the men and older boys being sent to road camps or sugar-beet plantations in Alberta or Ontario, but fathers and sons not always to the same place, and the

It's Time We Stopped Browbeating the Housewife. Ruth Drysdale is a housewife in suburban Toronto. As such, she's tired of magazine articles, radio programs, and newspaper stories, that tell the housewife how to conduct her day, her husband, her family, and her leisure time.

Carnival Time in Quebec. Betty Tomlinson, Matinee's hostess, brings us the sights and sounds of Quebec City during its winter carnival.

Balancing the Budget. This week, in her series about how families manage their finances, Betty Shapiro talks to Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Bazinet of Waterloo in Quebec's Eastern Townships. Mr. Bazinet is a carnation grower who works for a firm of market gardeners. He and his wife have been married for seven years and have two daughters, six and four years of age. They have just bought a $12,700 house (under NHA) and own an automobile. They don't believe in credit purchases except for such things as a home and a car; before they bought their house, they lived in a $30 a month apartment. Mrs. Shapiro is a Montreal broadcaster who is frequently heard on Matinee.

Daily features . . . News commentary by Joyce Irvine of Winnipeg, recorded music by Eugene Kash of Montreal, and another reading by Jane Hillary from Ericka Leuchtag's "With a King in the Clouds," adapted for radio by Charlotte Moore.

women and younger children to the ghost towns of B.C., where they worked for a nominal wage. Gordon Cullingham emphasized the fact that this break-up and summary removal of family circles had a much more traumatic effect on the closely-knit Japanese Canadians that it might have had on Occidentals. Having to leave sentimental treasures behind was particularly hard on the older folk. Some buried their keepsakes, others left them with neighbours, who were later ordered to give them up by the authorities. The evicted families were told their goods would be held in trust for them until the end of the war. Instead, their bits and pieces were sold, often for only half their value, and the proceeds sent to their owners. "If I had only known, I would have left a sweater out of my pack and put in mother's picture!" was a familiar cry when news of what had happened reached the camps.

After the war there was a movement afoot to give Japanese Canadians their choice of remaining East of the Rockies or of going to Japan, but the program never got off the ground. Before the war there were only a few dozen Japanese in Toronto. Now there are 7,000.

MacKenzie and Cullingham pointed out that the post-war adjustment of these people has been good, and their acceptance by other Canadians is high. The Japanese groups regard their war-time experiences as something passed and not worth being bitter about. But have we any guarantee that such a thing could not happen in the future to another Canadian group? The Enemy That Never Was looks into this question from several points of view.

BBC television newsreader Robert Dougall, who celebrated twenty-five years in broadcasting last November, receives regular mail from appreciative viewers. One of the letters he received recently was from an old lady. She hoped he was not distracted by her sitting close to "the machine," but she was troubled by deafness.

at what the schools taught and at the clothes the Athenians wore.

March 7 (April 19): Athens (Part 2)—In this lecture we stroll through the streets, houses and shops of Athens, consider the occupations of the people, the methods of production, the wages, the living conditions and so on. Then we follow a middle class Athenian through the routine of the day.

March 14 (April 26): The World's First Democracy — The Athenians were the first people to establish a true political democracy. But this democracy was a direct or "town-meeting" type of government. This lecture will ex-formerly CBC's morning commentator in Winnipeg, interviewed Mrs. McLennan at her Winnipeg home not long ago and Matinee is pleased to present her as "Guest of the month."

Petra Rediscovered. Petra is the original "hidden city" of the east, tucked away in the mountains in the south of Jordan, and forgotten for over 1,000 years. Robert Waldon, a Killarney newspaper reporter, travelled abroad for about 20 months and during his trip his visited Petra.

Daily features . . . News commentary by Anne Francis of Ottawa, music and songs by Baritone Harry Mossfield of Toronto, and another reading by Jane Hillary from Ericka Leuchtag's "With a King in the Clouds," adapted for radio by Charlotte Moore.

plain how such a system could run a city and an empire with reasonable efficiency. We will glance at the Athenian courts where mass juries operated, and finally draw some lessons for us from Athenian democracy.

March 21 (May 3): The Greeks as Writers and Athletes — The Greeks believed in "a sound mind in a sound body." It did not seem strange to them that the dramatist, Aeschylus, was both a writer and a soldier, or that Sophocles was a "Steward of Hellas" and also a poet. In this lecture we look at the amazing literary achievement of the Greeks, emphasizing its qualities and its major types. But for the average Greek, athletic festivals were probably more important than literature, so we look at their athletic ideals, the events they favoured, and the records they made. For athletics of today also owe much to Greece.

March 28 (May 10): The Torch of Greek Thought — It has been truly said that the Greeks founded western philosophy and science. We glance very briefly at the pre-Socratic thinkers, the first exponents of the restless, enquiring mind. We will then concentrate on Plato and Aristotle, the giants of Greek philosophy, following that with a brief summary of Epicureanism, Stoicism, and Cynicism, three philosophical systems which made a strong impact on the Romans.

April 4 (May 7): The Roman World — A century-long struggle for survival forged the Roman world. But with the principate of Augustus (31 B.C.-14 A.D.) the Pax Romana began. For roughly two centuries there was security and physical comfort such as the world has seldom attained. This lecture describes the size of the Roman Empire, its roads and seaways, its methods of travel, and its trade. We will look at the recent discoveries at Pompeii and Herculaneum, and examine the housing, plumbing, and general conditions of living.

April 11 (May 24): The Romans at Work and at Play — Rome, then as now, was an "Imperial City" and its narrow streets, tall tenements, and huge palaces were crowded with citizens, freedmen, slaves, foreigners, and visitors. To understand the Romans as persons, we will look at their social classes, occupations, the status of women, the details of a Roman wedding and the like. We will also look briefly at the method of government and the law-courts.

April 18 (May 31): Roman Luxury and Poverty. We look first at the living conditions of those Romans who were "on the dole," and then at the almost unbelievable luxury of the wealthy. We look at one example of state expenditure, the Roman Games, those spectacles presented at the theatre, the circus, and the amphitheatre with such prodigality that here we can find one factor in the fall of Rome.

April 25 (June 7): Why Rome Fell. We summarize the various factors which appear to have contributed to the collapse of the seemingly impregnable Roman Empire. We conclude with a brief statement of the more important contributions of the Graeco-Roman world to western civilization.

When it comes to buying fruit and vegetables in Paris, one is expected to pick and choose and prod. These people are still specialists (you find very few chain stores in France—it is still the land of the craftsman, the little shop-owner, the family business) and they want to show that they are better at knowing what is good than those others in the shop round the corner.—Leslie Keating, on BBC.
