A ‘BEMUSED CRITIC’ IS ‘BEWILDERED’ BY THE INK SPOTS

A BOUT half-way through their latest London appearance that the Ink Spots were amongst the most pleasant surprises at the London Palladium. Their last London appearance was in 1942. Twenty years later, they played the Palladium again, and to a greater acclaim.

Prior to the opening of the Ink Spots’ concert, reference was made by the chairman of the London Palladium to the fact that the Ink Spots were the most popular group in America. It was also pointed out that they were the only group that could compare with Frank Sinatra in popularity.

But the chairman of the London Palladium was not the only one who was impressed by the Ink Spots. The audience was equally impressed. The Ink Spots were received with thunderous applause, and the audience continued to cheer them throughout the performance.

The Ink Spots’ performance was a hit, and it was clear that they were well worth the wait. The band was tight, and the singers were in excellent form. The audience was enthralled, and the performance was packed with energy.

When gangsters ran the jazz world

It has been a good fifteen years since the last of the famous jazz gangsters was arrested in this country. During the years of the Prohibition era, these men were a part of the underworld in Chicago. Thanks to the efforts of Hines, now a member of the New York and Chicago area jazz bands, these men are all out of the underworld. The jazz musician who runs a dance band cannot make a living. Hines, who was a part of this underworld for many years, has now retired from the business.

Blanche Coleman's girls agreeably surprise our critic at Wimbledon

When Blanche Coleman and her All Girls Band were in London recently, they played to such a reception that the critic of the Wireless Service was heard to say: "This is the first time I have been so surprised by a band." The girls, who are mostly African-Americans, are known for their skill in playing the saxophone. They have been described as "a real surprise to us." The critic went on to say that the band was "not only a real surprise, but a real delight as well."

He makes the guitar talk. How...?
by Chris Hayes

Even more than I have been fascinated by a number of notable musicians and their abilities to make the guitar talk, I have been fascinated by the fact that a player can make the guitar talk in a way that can be heard through the medium of radio. The guitar player is not only a skilled musician but also a master of the spoken word.

In harmony

The guitar and the voice are both capable of producing music. In harmony, they can produce a beautiful sound. The guitar can add depth and richness to the voice, while the voice can add melody and emotion to the guitar. Together, they can create a truly beautiful piece of music.

Contrasts in commercialism

MAURICE BURMAN'S RADIO COMMENTARY

Changed the way we felt about music. The contrast between commercial music and the genuine art of music was striking. It was amazing to see how much the commercial music industry was dominating the airwaves, while the true art of music was being overshadowed.

OK for TV but not BBC

UK bands who have not been in America for touring or recording have not yet been booked to appear. With some bands like Lord Haw-Haw and the Gas House Gang, the fact that they would have been ideal is quite clear, but it's not happening.

Such was the case when Lord Haw-Haw said that he was going to America. The question was, are they going for the TV or the recording? The answer was, "TV." But it's a good insight into the situation. It's a question of TV versus recording for the American bands.

The UK bands have to take this into account in their tours of America, and they have to take it into account in their tours in the UK. The TV situation is the major one, and the recording is the minor one.
