X FACTOR BOSSES PULL SONG FROM iTUNES - BUT SPRAGGAN STILL DESTINED FOR FIRST CHART HIT

On air/off sale

TELEVISION

BY TIM INGHAM

X Factor bosses will be nervously awaiting the arrival of this Sunday's Official Charts after asking contestant Lucy Spraggan to remove her album from digital music sites.

Spraggan's performance of her own song Last Night (Beer Fear) on the latest ITV1 show triggered a spike in online sales for the existing version of the track.

X Factor organisers reacted by asking Spraggan to remove the song and related album Top Room At The Zoo - released independently last year - from the web, fearing any chart success during the programme's early stages could compromise the competition. By Wednesday morning, the song and album were both unavailable on the likes of Amazon and iTunes.

However, the move may have arrived too late to scupper Spraggan's first chart hit: Last Night registered at No.5 on Wednesday's Midweek charts with more than 22,000 sales whilst Top Room At The Zoo hit No.7 on the Albums list.

Rule changes on this year's X Factor allow contestants to have an agent and sing their own compositions. An X Factor spokesperson told Music Week: "All contestants have been asked to remove their recordings as it is essential that all the contestants are treated fairly during the competition and, where possible, receive the same exposure."

Spraggan isn't the only 2012 contestant to have been asked to take down material: James Arthur, who also performed last Saturday, has removed his existing recordings since the competition began.

Sheffield artist Spraggan warned fans on Sunday: "Oh dear. The album is coming offline in preparation for some things coming up. Not my call to make, get it while you can!"

A YouTube video of Spraggan's X Factor performance has racked up more than 2.7 million views, whilst her album was still available on Spotify at the time of going to press.

An X Factor insider said: "It's a difficult one because on the one hand, we're delighted for Lucy, and its testament to how great the song is and also what a huge impact this year's X Factor is already having on the pop scene. But on the other hand, The X Factor is a competition and it has to be a level playing field for all contestants."

A spokesperson for digital music distributor TuneCore told Music Week: "We received a message from the account holder requesting the removal of the track from TuneCore."

"TuneCore's policy allows anyone to take down their release at any time, so we followed her request."

Apple told Music Week it was not responsible for the decision.

QUEST FOR GLORY

Quest, run by Arcade Fire and Paul McCartney manager Scott Rodger (above), has picked up the X Factor management account for the new series.

The firm is 50% owned by Live Nation. Quest is given the option to take on any contestants who make it through to the X Factor live stages.

Lucy Spraggan and others entrants in the early stages of the competition have officially dropped any previously associated representation, Music Week understands.

Dutch Van Spall, co-director of Spraggan's former management team at Big Help, told Music Week: "We managed Lucy to the point [of X Factor], but we are now not officially representing her. We knew she had to get on TV. She has some great songs, but she is a visual person with great expression and character."

"The one thing X Factor can give you that no-one else can is TV exposure. This is only the tip of the iceberg. She has more great songs and her album will definitely be a No.1."

Q2's leading publishers revealed in new Music Week analysis

EMI and Sony/ATV claimed the leading shares of UK chart singles in Q2 in a period in which the biggest deal in music publishing history was sealed.

EMI grabbed an unrivalled 17.1% of the market based on the quarter's Top 100 sellers with second place occupied by Sony/ATV, which led the consortium to buy the rival publishing outfit for £1.4bn.

Between them EMI and Sony/ATV commanded a 33.8% sales share of the UK's 100 biggest singles over the three months with both companies having songwriters on Tulisa's chart-topping Young and Conor Maynard's Can't Say No. EMI's other hits included Train's Drive By and Sony/ATV's Whistle by Flo Rida and Rudimental featuring John Newman's Feel The Love.

The two companies' combined presence on the biggest albums of the quarter was even greater - 35.0% - with EMI on 18.7% and Sony/ATV on 16.3%, according to Music Week research. Emeli Sande's Our Version Of Events was among the albums in which both had substantial shares.

However, neither company could individually outscore Universal whose 23.8% share included albums by Adele, Nicki Minaj and Coldplay. Warner/Chappell, meanwhile, got back into double figures on both singles and albums.

EDITORIAL

Generation X given so few chances to shine

IT'S THE CATALYST that drives many modern music successes: the immediacy of The Moment; that slender second in time when a fledgling career takes flight and enters the stratosphere.

Fevered retweets, little blue digital thumb imprints and, soon enough, cold hard sales follow suit. The music industry's smart cookies - from Richard Russell to Daniel Glass - have clearly figured out that it doesn't pay to try and rush The Moment. It doesn't happen on your watch. It doesn't come with a price tag. It refuses to fit in with quarterly bonuses.

All you can be certain of - whether manager, label president, publishing guru, live promoter or poised pluggger - is that when The Moment finally arrives, you owe it to your artist, yourself and your bottom line to go hell for leather in its wake.

Lucy Spraggan's Moment crash landed onto ITV1 on Saturday evening. The Sheffield artist's performance of Last Night (Beer Fear) was a triumph; both for the singer/songwriter and for X Factor bosses, whose decision to permit original compositions on 2012's series was noisily vindicated by a crowd whooping even louder than when Christina Aguilera beamed pre-watershed smut into The Daily Mail's disapproving peepers.

"It's hard to blame X Factor bosses for blocking Lucy Spraggan's ascent: they acted to protect their No.1 property, which is a TV show - not an artist"

Problem is, like thousands of artists across the country, Lucy Spraggan's been clamouring for her Moment for years. Unlike your typical melisma-riddled X Factor karaoke types, she has history in this game. And that history doesn't fit with the Vaseline-lensed X Factor 'journey', which begins on that stage, on that night, in front of Louis Walsh's effeminate giggles.

For X Factor to work, the public must accept its audition stage as year zero; as light entertainment's fallopian tubes. Barlow, Tulisa, Mel B and even squeaky Louis have to remain all-powerful gate keepers to showbiz. You can't exactly convincingly pay your dues (read: mewlingly over-emote a Celine Dion song in a dodgy dress) while you're Top Five in the Official Singles Chart.

With that in mind, it's hard to blame X Factor bosses for snatching away Spraggan's year-old album from digital sites over the weekend. They acted to protect the sanctity of their No.1 property - and that's the TV show, not the acts it hosts.

(Could Simon Cowell, sat perplexed in silk Zig & Zag boxers, have personally pressed the big red button when he saw Spraggan's sales start to fly? Our industry's jaded on air/on sale brigade could have told him not to bother: thanks to the perseverance of Johnny Public, Last Night had sold more than 21,000 singles by Tuesday's Midweeks, on which it stood at No.2.)

Also, you can't complain too loud when the alternatives are so non-existent. Cowell now runs the last TV show where unsigned troubadours can truly shine. The fact this clashes with the medium-term aims of X Factor is merely a sticking point for Syco and a sore point for Spraggan's Victoria-Wood-meets-Kate-Nash act.

X Factor might be a scripted and conditional minefield, but at least Cowell is offering unsigned talents a thrilling taste of The Moment; a heck of a lot more than the embarrassing paucity of opportunities for young songwriters elsewhere on British TV.

SEAL DEAL AND CHART-TOPPER HERALD FRESH ERA

Horn of plenty for the resurgent SPZ

PUBLISHING

■ BY PAUL WILLIAMS

A new publishing deal with Seal and UK No.1 single with Sam And The Womp are signalling a real renaissance at Trevor Horn's SPZ Group.

The Kiss From A Rose star has agreed to extend his two-decade working relationship with Horn after signing a new agreement with SPZ's Perfect Songs, while Sam And The Womp's Bom Bom has given the company a double chart-topper as publisher and label.

Bom Bom is the first No.1 since Madness's House Of Fun on the Stiff label, which was revived by SPZ in 2007, while Perfect Songs also handles 100% of the publishing.

Among the writers is Trevor's son Aaron who is a member of Sam And The Womp.

The new Seal deal and Bom Bom's chart-topping success come in a period of renewed focus for SPZ with Trevor's daughter Ally - a lawyer by trade - having been brought in last year as managing director followed by the appointments of one-time Peter Waterman and Sony consultant Ian Usher as label manager of Stiff and ZTT and Sony/ATV UK creative manager Mel Redmond as Perfect Songs' creative director.

"Before I joined, for a long time the publishing company in particular had been dormant. There hadn't been new signings," said Ally Horn. "As soon as I joined it was very clear to me the publishing was the focus. We would release the odd thing on Stiff and ZTT but focus on the publishing company."

That has resulted in a number of new deals at Perfect Songs, headed by Seal who will imminently start work on an album of new material, ushered in by a two-week writing camp for the project in October in Horn's Los Angeles studio.

ALLY HORN, SPZ GROUP

"Everybody feels very positive about that signing," said Ally Horn. "It's good for me because I've known Seal since I was eight years old."

However, besides Seal, plenty of newer writers have joined the ranks, including Fred Cox who has produced tracks for the likes of Tinchy Stryder and Wretch 32, The Rushes' frontman Gerard O'Connell who is working on his own and other acts' projects, singer-songwriter Will Heard whom Redmond said was being courted by six labels and will play a series of showcases at SPZ's Sarm Studios on September 4, one-time A1 member Ben Adams who signed a deal last week and electronic act Fear Of Tigers (Benjamin Berry), whose remix work includes tracks for Kylie Minogue and Ellie Goulding and who signed just this week.

The Sam And The Womp recording success, meanwhile, has also opened up the possibilities for Stiff with a first album from the band expected next year. Although eventually released on Stiff via Warner label One More Tune, Usher and Redmond revealed the track initially had little interest from labels until pluggger Chris Slade secured a play on Fearne Cotton's Radio 1 show. "After that play my phone started ringing off the hook," said Redmond. "All the A&Rs came out of the woodwork."

Also a key part of SPZ is Sarm Studios, which had faced closure, but "we undid that quickly", said Ally Horn. Among the many clients this year have been Madonna, Paolo Nutini, One Direction, Rita Ora and Rihanna.

NEW BOOK OPENS UP ON HISTORICAL ISSUES DURING MAJOR'S DARK PERIOD

EMI's Terra Firma problems exposed

LABELS

■ BY PAUL WILLIAMS

Guy Hands' top music man at EMI has laid bare deep concerns he had at the time about the Terra Firma chief's masterplan to turn around the legendary record company.

As Vivendi Universal's own £1.2bn ($1.9bn) takeover of EMI Music continues to be scrutinised by regulators in the US and Europe, a new book reveals the significant doubts some of the senior music management working under Hands had about his ability to utilise his undoubted financial wizardry within a creative company.

Among those speaking out in The Rise & Fall of EMI Records, written by one-time EMI corporate communications executive Brian Southall, is Nick Gatfield who is now Sony UK chairman and chief executive but was employed by Hands as EMI's head of A&R for the UK and North America.

While he conceded there were some elements of Terra Firma's plan that were "sensible and proven and pragmatic", he realised following his appointment they would not necessarily work from an emotional, artist-centric understanding of the business.

One of Gatfield's biggest concerns with his job was that he was responsible for finding and signing artists in both North America and the UK, despite the territories being so far apart. "In my case it certainly didn't make sense to have a Brit based 6,000 miles away trying to run a creative operation in North America – it seemed absolutely ridiculous," he told Southall.

Gatfield also had to work within the confines of Hands' infamous matrix system, which meant all EMI's operations reported into a global chief who had various territorial heads. Under this set-up, the head of

"In my case it certainly didn't make sense to have a British exec based 6,000 miles away trying to run a creative operation in North America – it seemed absolutely ridiculous"

NICK GATFIELD,
FORMER EMI HEAD OF A&R

the operating EMI company in the US or UK was not responsible for his own A&R person. As the book lets on, Gatfield could never see this working and it was replaced by a simpler structure when Roger Faxon eventually became CEO.

"I was one of the key people in the global matrix system and maybe you can run a company that way in the catalogue business, but with the creative side it is effectively a local business which becomes global if you are lucky with an act," said Gatfield, adding: "I don't think anyone at Terra Firma understood how complex a business the music [industry] was and still is."

Indeed, a recurring theme of the chapters on EMI's Terra Firma era is what executives in or around the company saw as Hands' inability to deal with the artist community and his belief that music industry people were clueless about business.

"I don't think Guy Hands ever got any wiser about dealing

Brian Southall: author of The Rise & Fall of EMI Records and former corporate communications executive at the UK music company with artists and managers," said Chris Morrison, who was managing EMI acts Blur and Gorillaz at the time. "With EMI you are talking about reliance on people's creativity and building good, solid relationships and you don't bully and you don't demand."

Morrison acknowledged he did not completely disagree with Hands' thought process in which lots of people from outside the music industry were brought in to EMI "but he relied more on the people from outside than he did on the music knowledge he had on the inside".

Industry veteran and one-time EMI executive Roger Ames, who was brought back into the major by Hands, suggested in the book the Terra Firma man did not have a very high opinion of anybody in the music business to run a business. Another, who wished to remain anonymous, blasted: "He had no sense whatsoever of how to run a creative business and no respect for the important relationships that make the business work."

That reflects the worries at the time of the respected Hands appointee Elio Leoni-Sctei who before his swift exit as CEO wrote an internal memo – later made public – saying that artists and their managers were raising concerns about EMI and "morale within the company has reached a low point". This was at a time when a number of the major's key artists had exited, among them Paul McCartney, The Rolling Stones, Radiohead and later Queen.

These departures were big news in the financial pages and wider press as was the general business goings-on of EMI, something Gatfield revealed Hands could not get his head around. "He could not believe in the level of interest there was in EMI," said Gatfield.

One-time EMI Group CEO Eric Nicoli, former EMI UK chairman and CEO Tony Wadsworth, Robbie Williams' co-manager Tim Clark, Radiohead co-manager Chris Hufford and Chrysalis co-founder Chris Wright are among the other names interviewed for Southall's book, which traces the history of EMI from its beginnings, through to such highs as Frank Sinatra, The Beatles, Spice Girls and Coldplay to the various EMI/Warner merger and takeover attempts, Guy Hands' brief reign before Citigroup took charge and Vivendi Universal's deal announced last November. It updates a previous edition of the book published in 2009.

The Rise & Fall of EMI Records is published by Omnibus Press and is out this month.

WARNER RAMPS UP MARKETING FOR AMBITIOUS SIX-MONTH RELEASE PLAN

Green Day album trio 'makes perfect sense'

LABELS

■ BY TIM INGHAM

Warner Bros UK has readied a multi-pronged marketing blitz to maintain fan interest in an upcoming trio of new Green Day albums.

Uno! will be released on September 24, followed by Dos! on November 12 and Tre! on January 14 next year, whilst an 'Ultimate Box Set' of all three will also be made available.

The US band's decision to launch three new albums in a short five-month period has created a unique challenge for Warner's promotional machine, one which the label is meeting with a strategy of ongoing fan engagement.

Warner Bros Records UK vice chairman Jeremy Marsh told Music Week: "This has been an incredibly unique campaign in the sense that we were able to announce the releases so far in advance. Having release dates and artwork enabled us to get everything up for pre-order from the minute the hype started."

Three full tracks from Uno! were made available to fans with a month left to pre-order the LP, whilst a teaser trailer was launched offering a 90-second snippet of a fourth track. Digital tie-ins have included a Green Day-themed version of video game Angry Birds on Facebook starring band members as pigs.

Music Week set to print fourth-quarter DVD special Music Week will print a special feature on the Q4 retail opportunity made available by DVD releases in our September 21 issue.

The feature, sponsored by Koch Media, will offer a multi-page guide to the biggest and best DVD releases available to retail in the gifting season. These Basket cases: Green Day band members are being included in a themed version of Angry Birds as part of the promotion for their three-album release Uno!, Dos! and Tre!

"The game itself launches in full later in the year, and directly links to a retailer whenever the game pauses, generating a huge number of impressions," explained Marsh. "Digital social targeting will enable us to retarget people who have showed interest in the band over the life of the albums."

The band have spent time in the UK, including a special gig at Shepherd's Bush Empire last week and a surprise performance at Reading Festival over the weekend. Warner says these occasions have already ensured a spike in sales for the box set.

"That allows us to guarantee a number of sales on both Dos! And Tre!, as all are chart eligible," said Marsh.

Green Day also recorded a 360 session for Channel 4 whilst in the UK, and attracted coverage on the front pages of Kerrang!, Rock Sound, NME, The Sun and Sunday Times Culture - with Q magazine and Melje interviews expected to arrive ahead of the later albums.

Meanwhile, American Idiot: The Musical starts a two-month run in the UK in October, ending with a two-week residency at the Hammersmith Apollo in December.

"We're using some really interesting digital advertising solutions to enable us to retarget people who are interested in Green Day throughout the life of the project," said Marsh. "The bold artwork lends itself to an incredibly impactful outdoor campaign, which will be backed by TV, radio packages and online around launch."

He added: "As for whether this sets a trend or breaks a mould for other groups to follow, it's impossible to say. Arguably what works for a global-selling band like Green Day wouldn't work for a band earlier on in their career. But in this case, with a band creatively in such a rich vein of form and wanting their fans to hear everything that they've created, it makes some kind of perfect sense."

will include both non-music and music-related titles.

"Clearly there are declining pressures in all areas of entertainment - we are witnessing a steady drop in DVD revenues as people watch more of their favorite films and TV shows through digital platforms and pay TV subscriptions," said

Koch head of sales for film & TV Jamie Brewer.

"But the synergy between films and music has never been more relevant and it is a great idea to offer as much of a media spectrum as possible when you are trying to develop new customers and loyalty.

"Our key specialists are looking at promoting both music and film in their offers, and we are now beginning to see the grocery sector working closer with the suppliers that can tick both DVD and music sectors.

"The individual competitive markets need companies that are as joined up as possible."

PICTURE OF THE WEEK

THE TASTEMAKERS Today's opinion formers predict tomorrow's headline acts

1 GAV WILLIAMS BOWLEGS
Hot Panda • Language Mint Records

With treble-high guitars strumming frenetically to a rolling beat, Hot Panda's new single kicks up a euphoric riot. Any danger of inward-looking pretension is knowingly stamped out beneath its wheels, with a wave of Mexican brass at the back end colouring the picture to a joyous point of saturation.

2 STEVE BONIFACE LABELLED INDEPENDENT
Miccoli • Idle Stranger AJA Records

Family three piece Miccoli show a real lightness of touch with 'Idle Stranger', a track chock full of strong dynamics. The slow build opening breaks naturally into a chorus with blended, unison vocals to great effect before dropping out to the bare bones again, a trick used excellently throughout.

3 ALLY MCCRAE BBC RADIO 1
Olympic Swimmers • Knots Green White Violet

I cannot get enough of Knots - soaring indie delivered with a delicious mix of passion, intensity, subtlety and at times venom that makes it a track impossible not to have on several times in a row. You need this

4 MIKE SHALLCROSS MEN'S HEALTH
Robert Hood • Motor: Nighttime World Vol.3 Music Man Records

Angered by the 'Slow-motion Katrina' that has overtaken his hometown Detroit, the low-key but highly influential minimal techno pioneer has produced his most personal work yet. By turns, funky, eerie and finally uplifting it's a surprisingly expansive work that grows more absorbing with each listen and should win him a whole new bunch of followers.

SIGNS O' THE TIMES

Manchester-based band PINS have signed with independent record label Bella Union after reports that they were the subject of a bidding war. Their first release on the label will be four-track EP LuvU4Lyf, due in October, when they will also head out on a tour of the UK that will culminate at the Sebright Arms in London on the 24th.

British blues band Kill It Kid have signed a worldwide recording deal with Warner imprint Sire Records. The four-piece join from One Little Indian to join Sire, headed by Seymour Stein, as the only British band on the label. They are currently working on the first single of their new album with producer Mike Crossey.

Bella BMG Chrysalis's US operation has signed The Flaming Lips to a worldwide publishing deal. They recently resigned to the Warner in the US, while inking a deal with independent Bella Union for Europe. They released an album in the UK on July 30, and another studio LP is expected later this year.

SYNC STORY

The tale behind a standout sync deal in the industry this week...

- Track name Three Is A Magic Number
- Artist Bob Dorough
- Composer Bob Dorough
- Publisher Minder Music Ltd
- Usage UK national TV campaign for McDonald's BCO – Bacon, Chicken and Onion burger
- Key execs John Fogarty (Managing Director, Minder); Rik Brown, Jon Fox (Creatives, Leo Burnett agency)

Explains John Fogarty: "The point of this new commercial is to advertise McDonald's '3' Combination Burger and so the song Three Is A Magic Number was chosen as the perfect fit.

"The zany commercial features three decorators seamlessly performing agile and dextrous manoeuvres without spilling a drop of paint. In the background, the song is played before the commercial cuts to the three decorators having a break with the McDonald's BCO

Burger: bacon, chicken and onions.

"Obviously the song is perfect for the message but it is important for it to be associated with a world famous brand and used in such a positive way. The commercial is very original and unusual and a lot of fun and... we're lovin' it!"

ON THE RADAR THE NOISETTES

The Noisettes have taken a three-year break since the highly successful launch of last album Wild Young Hearts.

That release, which arrived in 2009 on Vertigo/Mercury, contained hits such as Never Forget You and Don't Upset The Rhythm - made extra famous by its use in a commercial for the Mazda 2.

Now the band, fronted by BRIT school buddies Dan Smith and agile lead singer Shingai Shoniwa, are back with an LP they hope will be filled with plenty more chart smashes. In advance of its release they've already clocked up some prestigious performances, including

The Diamond Jubilee Festival in Battersea Park in June, the BT River of Music (for the Olympic Games) and BT London Live in Hyde Park earlier this month.

Contact is released this week on Universal/Absolute, and was recorded in the US.

Track Travelling Light was recorded in the US with August Rigo (Justin Bieber, Music Soulchild). Winner and Never Enough were created with will.i.am songwriter Jean Baptiste, whilst R&B superstar Ne-Yo contributed to the composition of Star and Free.

Smith says: "I guess we've slowly been learning the craft of production and songwriting over the period of our whole career. Starting with absolute zero in the beginning, we now have a very strong grip on how to make things sound the way we hear them in our heads."

Explains lead singer Shoniwa: "Some bands have a one-size-fits-all mantra approach... They get together because they share identical musical tastes, then never do anything different.

"We're two divas with different record collections who constantly introduce each other to new sounds, whether it's African music, jazz, our own modern hybrid of soul music or new adventures in dance music, there always remains the spirit of rock 'n' roll without the clichés. For us, making music means keeping our ears open."

The dynamic duo will head out on a headline UK tour in November

THE BIG INTERVIEW ETHAN JOHNS

HONEST JOHNS

“When you’re at the end of life, your bank balance isn’t going to mean shit. What you stood for is going to really count. That’s what’s going to make your exit a smooth one”

ETHAN JOHNS

One of the industry’s most sought-after producers talks to Music Week about making ‘human records’

PRODUCTION

■ BY TOM PAKINKIS

It’s the bushy grey beard that makes it hard to put an age on Ethan Johns. Or rather, it’s the fact that a symbol of wisdom earned from decades of experience, hugs a face that looks like it never left its thirties.

Appropriately, while much of the conversation we throw at the MPG’s 2012 Producer Of The Year is met with middle-distance stares contemplating a long career, the awe and enthusiasm that Johns shows for artists he has worked with exposes a wide-eyed, youthful joy.

Like the music he helps create, there’s a timelessness to Ethan Johns - one that comes from a lack of pretence. It’s a philosophy that seems to cement everything he does. As we talk about the art of production and the music industry at large, the lauded producer always circles a central goal: to make the most honest records possible...

How would you describe your sound?

I think there’s a really strong element of humanity running through my records. I don’t overly process or overly edit things. I like unadulterated performances, I like to hear the human and the soul behind the performance.

That’s why I like to record live, primarily. I never put vocals on after. All of the records that I’ve done that you would know have been sung live with the band because, to get an appropriate performance out of the music, you have to have it inspired by that vocal. You can’t put the vocal on last because you’re denying the musicians the ability to react to the vocal performance. It just makes sense to me.

The standard way of making records now is to do a bit of pre-production, get tempo maps and then go in and spend two weeks cutting the drums or whatever. Then, once the drummer’s bit is done, he’s got nothing to do for the rest of the record. Then the bass player will do his thing and he’s gone. It’s a very divisive way of working, I find. It’s not a collaborative process. If you put everyone in a room together, it gives you a much better perspective on when an arrangement is right and when it’s not. The only way to really make those decisions is to hear it and to play it together.

What about location? Do you have a favourite studio?

I don’t really. I image records in different ways before I make them. When we made [Ryan Adams’ debut album] Heartbreaker, I’d never set foot in Woodland [Studios in Nashville]. It was a distant studio that Ryan found and it was just perfect.

Every studio is going to lend itself to different records. There are certain records that I just don’t want to work on in a studio so we’ll go to a location. I’ve made records in hotels, in rehearsal rooms, houses... I made a record in a squash court once.

There are certain records where you go to Abbey Road Studio 2 because that’s the sound for that record. Sunset Sound Studio 3 in Los Angeles is another one of my favourites, or what used to be Cello. Good studios are still crucial, I think, and it's a shame that a lot of them are closing now because the options are becoming smaller and smaller.

Was the squash court a sonic choice?

Actually no. I made part of a record with Counting Crows many years ago and they had rented a house up on Mulholland Avenue and built this studio in a squash court.

Every record has its own set of requirements and it's got as much to do with the atmosphere of a place as it does the sound. The sound is obviously crucial but you have to also take into account where it is and the kind of person the artist is; where they're at, whether or not they need structure.

If you feel it would benefit the artist to be on a tight schedule, in a professional studio, on the clock then you go to British Grove or somewhere like that. But if you want an environment where the artist doesn't necessarily know they're recording, I might go to somewhere like Real World, which has a completely unique atmosphere and just feels like a beautiful room.

I remember when we did the first Tom Jones record [2010's Praise & Blame] we worked up a routine for the first tune and he didn't even know we were recording. He thought we were just rehearsing. We had set up a controller at one end of the room and he hadn't even noticed. He was thrilled when he realised and I said, "Yeah don't even think about it, let's just keep going the way we're going."

There seem to be a lot of great records that are made in that way: very quickly and naturally...

Definitely. I don't know what it is about those records that remain, over time, the more interesting ones for me. Maybe it's because they're a little bit more mysterious.

Heartbreaker was five or 10 days, or something. [Ray LaMontagne's] Trouble was 10 days. There was no preparation for Heartbreaker and a five day preparation period for Trouble.

You just didn't have time to stop and think or second-guess what you were doing. The stars aligned and obviously the artists were in top form on both of those records.

Those records are still quite mysterious to me because they're the most pure form of artistic expression – there's nothing in the way, you're just doing it rather than deliberating over takes. You have such a limited window that you can't overthink it. It's very interesting to see what happens in the studio when you're under those kind of circumstances.

Who's the best artist you've worked with?

I can tell you this: I've never made a record with someone that I didn't want to work with.

Even in the early days? Were you never in situations which weren't quite what you wanted?
Nope, never.

What afforded you that luxury?

It makes sense on a few different levels to me. Anyone in the arts who doesn't stay true to themselves to further their career ends up having a very short career. That's one thing; the other is that I'm not that kind of record maker. If I'm not inspired I'm going to do bad work and I don't want to do bad work.

In my twenties, I turned down extremely well-paid gigs. I wouldn't say regularly but, from about 26 to around 30, I turned down at least four or five gigs that would have made me a lot of money. But it never seemed to add up to me.

I think it's because I respect music way more than I respect money – that's really what it comes down to. We all want to be appreciated and remunerated for our efforts but, at the same time, if you're not careful about those choices, it's very difficult to come back if you sell your principles.

I don't have any regrets about any of the things I turned down at all.

That's a great thing to be able to say...

It really is because I genuinely believe that, when you're looking at the end of life, your bank balance isn't going to mean shit. What you stood for is going to really count. That's what's going to make your exit a smooth one. I think it will be easier to let go at that stage knowing that you stayed true to your principles.

How do you think technology, which allows people to make decent sounding records in their bedroom these days, affects the current stock of big name producers?

It's a very difficult question to answer because different artists, given their circumstances, are going to produce different kinds of records at home. Elliot Smith's home recordings, I think are just remarkable. Paul McCartney, on his own with an 8-track machine, yielded pretty fabulous results in a barn somewhere. So it really does depend on the artist and how you're using the equipment you have.

Before, it was a four-track cassette player in a bedroom and it was songwriters who weren't worried about the sound. Maybe you'd have a bit of echo but that was about it really. They didn't know how to edit and they didn't know about compression or anything like that. It wasn't their place to know about that.

But now you're working with guys and girls who are coming at record making from a much broader perspective and are wanting to have a lot more input

Ethan after all: Johns strive to record bands live so that musicians can react to each other

LEFT
Master craftsman: Laura Marling called Johns "a master of his craft" when presenting him with the MPG 2012 Producer of the Year Award over areas of the job that at one time were solely the domain of the producer, engineer and the mixer.

I've noticed a significant change in not only artists' but record companies' attitudes. I think professional record makers were a lot freer to do their job before computerised technology arrived. You couldn't make changes unless there was something significantly wrong with the record.

Now, with recall being the way that it is, you're looking at people making ergonomic decisions about how they work based on the demands of executives, which doesn't quite add up to me.

I'm talking in generalities because that issue is not the case across the board, but it is a change that I've noticed with technology. It's a different process for me. I think I was really lucky to have been left alone for the amount of time that I was and to the degree that I was.

How important do you think record labels are going to be in 10 years time? With the likes of PledgeMusic, Kickstarter and digital channels in mind, you have the means to do it yourself these days...

You have and you haven't. You're always going to need a collection of services, I think. I love the idea of music reaching people on its own terms and I think all of the things you've just mentioned have facilitated people who don't want to engage the industry on a certain level. It's making doing that a little bit easier and if you've got the right people in place you can do extraordinary things. But I do think that labels are always going to be important because I think there are lots of different kinds of music being made, and I think there will always be an appetite for different kinds of music. Majors are going to continue to do what they do and indies are going to do what they do.

It's not so much about the companies, it's about the people that work in them more than anything else. That's changing all the time.

BUSINESS ANALYSIS Q2 PUBLISHING

EDITORIAL

Synergies and strength: welcome to the new powerhouse

THE COMBINED PRESENCE on Emeli Sandé and Lana Del Rey's albums gives some indication of the almighty powerhouse Sony/ATV and EMI will be in the UK under Guy Moot.

Between them the two brands can lay claim to 86% of Our Version Of Events and 89% of Born To Die, providing almost exclusive control of what are the two biggest-selling artist albums released in 2012.

That underlines real power in effectively one operation's hands, but it also shows just how many synergies exist between the two previously-separate publishing companies. In Sandé's case, EMI signed her for publishing, but her main co-writer and producer Naughty Boy opted for Sony/ATV, where the pair additionally this year launched a joint venture to sign other writers.

Similarly, Del Rey signed a publishing deal with EMI, but she would already be familiar with Sony/ATV as Born To Die collaborators Justin Parker, whose co-writes include the Ivor Novello winner Video Games, and Craze & Hoax are both part of the company's roster.

Beyond the writers themselves, there are also plenty of executive names known personally to both sides, including Moot who worked for years under Sony/ATV chairman and CEO Marty Bandier when he was running EMI and before that SBK. This therefore is unlikely to be a merger with uncomfortable culture clashes, as say the one between Sony's records operation and BMG was.

The Sandé and Del Rey albums were significant contributors to what added up across the Sony/ATV and EMI operations to around a 35% control of both the UK's singles and albums chart markets in Q2, according to Music Week calculations. In the previous quarter the combined albums share hit a mouth-watering 43.7% - little wonder then why European regulators ordered the exit of 12 contemporary Anglo-American songwriters from across the two rosters for fear the new combined operation would be just too dominant chart-wise.

That will mean an exit for the likes of Sony/ATV's Eg White who in this past year alone has figured on chart albums by the likes of Adele, Paloma Faith, Florence + The Machine, Rebecca Ferguson and Maverick Sabre. And when it comes to the next Take That album coming out the new entity will handle the publishing affairs of only one rather than three of the group who, since reforming, have split their songwriting royalties equally. Gary Barlow from the Sony/ATV side stays, while Howard Donald and Jason Orange, signed to EMI, are on the list to go.

Barlow's classic songs from the first incarnation of the group, including Back For Good, will also be heading out the door as they are part of Virgin Music UK, one of four catalogues that must be disposed to satisfy the EC.

Although the new entity will clearly be huge, bigger than anything that has previously existed in music publishing, it is difficult at this stage to know the exact impact it will have on our quarterly market shares. An obvious one is it will become a dominant player no one can match, but that was expected to happen when already hefty Universal Publishing absorbed BMG Publishing. Instead EMI proved to be more than a match, beating its expanded rival more times than not.

EMI OUT ON A HIGH

Q2 sees major players lining up to redraw publishing map

QUARTERLY ANALYSIS

BY PAUL WILLIAMS

The music publishing world changed forever at the close of Q2 as the FTC in the US gave the final approval needed for Sony/ATV's $2.2bn (£1.4bn) takeover of EMI Publishing.

But as this momentous event was being played out it was seemingly business as usual at the coalface with the usual suspects respectively heading the singles and albums publishing chart markets in the UK. That meant Universal taking charge of albums and EMI singles in what represented its last-ever quarter before coming under full control of a new ownership consortium led by Sony/ATV.

Of course, what was occurring was far from business as usual. It was, in fact, the total redrawing of the music publishing map which, simply going by the figures for Q2, will give one entity control of around 35% of the UK's chart market for both singles and albums.

For this past quarter at least EMI and Sony/ATV are ranked separately, but even apart their impact on the market was immense, occupying the top two places on singles and second and third spots on albums.

On singles EMI led for a third successive time and the sixth occasion in seven quarters, albeit with its lowest score in two-and-a-half years at 17.1% as Sony/ATV closed the gap to just one-third of a percentage point. EMI's modest score by its own high standards was reflected by it unusually having no writers among the period's top five selling tracks with its highest represented talent Roc Nation songwriter/producer Peter Ibsen as co-writer of Tulisa's (pictured) chart-topping Young. This was the quarter's sixth top seller. It also handled around 48% of Rita Ora featuring Tinie Tempah's seventh-ranked R.I.P. with its contributors including Stargate, Drake and Tinie himself, while its 100% control of eighth top seller Drive by Train came via lead singer Patrick Monahan and Norwegian songwriting and production team Espionage. Just outside the Top 10 Calvin Harris delivered for EMI yet again, this time with Cheryl's Call My Name.

No publisher reaped the rewards of Carly Rae Jepsen's Call Me Maybe, Q2's biggest single, as all three writers - including Jepsen herself - are currently without deals in the UK. But Warner/Chappell found itself among the action on three of the quarter's four other top singles as it mounted something of a comeback on the market share tables. Although it finished fifth again with Kobalt ranked ahead, its share of the market rose over the three months from 8.1% to 11.6%, its highest level in 18 months. This followed sizable shares of Q2's second top seller We Are Young by Fun featuring Janelle Monae (45%), third-placed Alex Clare's Too Close (50%) and fifth top seller Starships by Nicki Minaj (17.8%), the latter through Wayne Hector.

Sony/ATV claimed the other 55% of We Are Young through band members Jack Antonoff and Andrew Dost and the track's producer Jeff Bhasker, while it also figured on Starships, Young, Flo Rida's Whistle and Rudimental's chart-topping breakthrough Feel The Love as it finished as second top singles publisher for a third successive quarter. Its share, however, dipped to a 12-month low of 16.7% with Universal in third place again narrowly closing the gap.

Third-placed Universal's own 15.0% share was its smallest score since the close of 2010, although it was helped by having Alex Clare's own 50% share of his Too Close hit, while a presence on 10 of the quarter's 20 biggest singles also included claiming most of Coldplay and Rihanna's hit duet Princess Of China and a majority of Conor Maynard's breakthrough Can't Say No.

For the third time in five quarters Kobalt finished in fourth place on singles with its main contributor Gotye once again with Somebody That I Used To Know. It also appeared ahead of BMG Chrysalis on albums for the first time in 21 months, although was not strong enough to beat Warner/Chappell.

ALBUMS STRANGELAND PUTS UNIVERSAL BACK IN FAMILIAR TERRITORY

KEANE (inset) REMARKABLY SCORED their fifth UK No 1 album out of five releases in Q2 and their publisher Universal showed similar high consistency.

Controlling 100% of the band's Strangeland, Universal secured top spot on albums for the fifth time out of sixth quarters with its score rising to 23.3%.

Unusually for Paul Connolly's company, it had been outscored during the previous three months by Sony/ATV, which topped the albums rankings for the very first time in Q1, and found itself in equal second place with old adversary EMI. But Universal grabbed sizable shares of enough of the few big new albums released in the quarter to return in Q2 to its familiar place at the top.

Besides the Keane album, which was the period's 12th top seller, those new releases included its own signing Nicki Minaj's Pink Friday - Roman Reloaded in sixth position with a 46.6% Universal share and around 45.8% of 17th-placed Fall To Grace by Paloma Faith, also on the company's roster. These new contributions were backed up by some familiar names delivering once again, most obviously Adele whose 21 was outsold in the quarter only by the Now! 81 compilation, but also including Coldplay with Mylo Xyloto.

Universal's score further included a three-fifths share of Bee Gees best of Number Ones, which reached a new chart peak in the quarter following the sad passing of Robin Gibb. Robin and his late KOBALT ADDED ALBUMS to its independent singles crown in Q2 as it claimed one of the biggest publishing shares of runaway top seller Now! 81.

The compilation sold an unrivalled 641,783 copies in the quarter, according to the Official Charts Company, more than its next three rivals combined and that was hugely significant in Kobalt's ongoing battle with BMG Chrysalis.

While Kobalt typically has the edge on singles and BMG Chrysalis on albums, the combination of Kobalt's many hit songwriters gave it a 14.2% share of Now! 81, getting on for double its rival's share. This, as well as the likes of Gotye's album Making Mirrors, helped to give Kobalt a 22.0% share of the independent albums market, while it led again on singles with 31.4% with highlights including Somebody That I Used To Know.

Kobalt's double triumph left BMG Chrysalis second in both markets with its trio of writers on Adele's 21 leading it to 17.2% on albums, while its 11.5% singles share included stakes in Nicki Minaj's Starships and Tulisa's Young.

Imagem moved up to third on albums with its share more than doubling between quarters to 7.3%, its highest in 18 months. Bucks (6.0%) occupied the same place on singles with its successes including 11.1% of Jessie J's Laserlight featuring David Guetta whose album Nothing But The Beat carried a 28.4% Bucks share. This helped to place it fourth (5.7%) among indie album publishers.

Guetta's own publisher What A Publishing landed a 35.5% of his album and seventh place on the album rankings, while a series of hits from the Frenchman took it to ninth position on singles.

Finishing just outside the Top 10 independent album publishers was George Harrison's company Harrisongs thanks to the inclusion of Here Comes The Sun on the Gary Barlow-fronted Sing album with the Commonwealth Band.

twin brother Maurice's publishing is handed by Universal, while older brother Barry's is with Warner/Chappell, giving it the remaining share of the album.

Jack White's first solo album Blunderbuss, which was almost entirely written by the former White Stripes man, was the biggest new release of the quarter for EMI. It controlled 92.3% of the album, Q2's 18th ranked title, while it had the biggest share (20.9%) of Now! 81 in a quarter in which compilations had a greater presence on the top sellers list than for a while with three various artist packages in the overall Top 10. Among publishers, Sony/ATV had bragging rights on Keep Calm And Relax in seventh place with an unrivalled 20.0% share, while Universal's 23.8% share of Now That's What I Call Running in eighth position was unmatched by anyone.

Finishing second with 18.7% of the market, EMI also enjoyed further healthy business from Q1's two biggest new artist albums: Emeli Sande's Our Version Of Events and Lana Del Rey's Born To Die. With the two recording artists themselves on its books, it controlled 54.6% of Sande's album - Q2's third top seller - and 64.3% of Born To Die in ninth place. With Sony/ATV itself handling 31.5% of Our Version Of Events and 25.2% of Born To Die, Guy Moot's enlarged empire as head of EMI and Sony/ATV in the UK now controls both albums almost outright.

After experiencing the new buzz of heading albums in Q1 during managing director Rak Sanghvi's last full period in charge, Sony/ATV returned to some normality in the following quarter as it dropped down to third place. This was accompanied by a fall in its market share from 24.4% to 16.3%, its lowest in a year, but that did include not only its contributions to Sande and Del Rey's albums but majority shares of Ed Sheeran's + and Jessie J's Who You Are and 35.7% of its writer Gary Barlow's Diamond Jubilee album Sing with the Commonwealth Band. Having got back into double figures in singles, Warner/Chappell replicated the trick on albums with its share rising from 6.7% to 10.1% to lift it back to fourth place.

INTERVIEW NE-YONO BUSINESS LIKE YO BUSINESS

Award-winning artist and songwriter Ne-Yo is now an exec, too - VP of A&R for Motown Records

TALENT

■ BY RHIAN JONES

A decade ago, Ne-Yo was a frustrated creative with a frosty label relationship. Now he's a Grammy award-winning songwriter, an established solo artist and the recently-appointed VP of A&R at Motown Records. His fifth studio album R.E.D. (Realising Every Dream) is out next month. The title says it all.

The R&B star admits his first taste of the music industry "left a very, very, very bad taste".

"My first record deal was absolutely horrible," he says. "They had me doing stuff I didn't want to do, had me writing stuff I didn't want to write, had me wearing clothes I didn't want to wear; they just didn't know who I was."

Marred by the experience, he reverted to what he knew he did best: writing chart-topping hits, for the likes of Mario (Let Me Love You), Rihanna (Unfaithful, Russian Roulette) and Beyoncé (Irreplaceable).

A chance meeting then led to him landing a record deal with Def Jam. Two No.1 hits, three certified platinum albums, two BET awards, two MOBO awards and three Grammys later, he's back in the driving seat...

What is the most important thing working in the industry has taught you?

Trusting your own opinion is not a bad thing. To be an artist is to be a little bit insecure because your livelihood is based on the opinion and the acceptance of other people. It's okay to value another person's opinion but don't let that outweigh your own. The best policy is to always go with your gut.

What advice would you give to young musicians today?

The same piece of advice I've been given since the beginning of my career: know who the hell you are, because if you don't they will - and nine times out of ten who they make you out to be is not who you want to be. The hardest thing is to make another person understand your vision, so it might take a minute for somebody to appreciate who you are and why you do what you do the way you do it. But that doesn't mean you should change.

What would you like to change about the modern music industry?

The things that are important [in the music industry] are how nice someone's abs are, how nice somebody's legs are, how many times this person has been arrested, who this person is sleeping with... It's all about controversy and scandal now as opposed to art. So I would make the music industry more about the music and artistry as opposed to the controversy and the story.

"There's going to come a time when I can't spin around as fast as I could. But I can write a song when I am 105 - that's something I can do forever"

NE-YO

COMING UP

Ne-Yo's fifth studio album R.E.D. is released on September 17 through Motown / Universal

"I recall LA Reid saying to me that the music that feeds your soul and the music that feeds your kids are not always going to be the same"

NE-YO

Do you see yourself as an artist first or a songwriter?

I am and forever will be a songwriter first. The artist thing is cool, I love it, I love being able to perform and get onstage and get that energy but as everybody knows youth and all of that is limited. But there's going to come a time when I can't spin around as fast as I could or my knees ain't going to be as healthy as they are now. I can still write a song when I am 105 - that's something I can do forever.

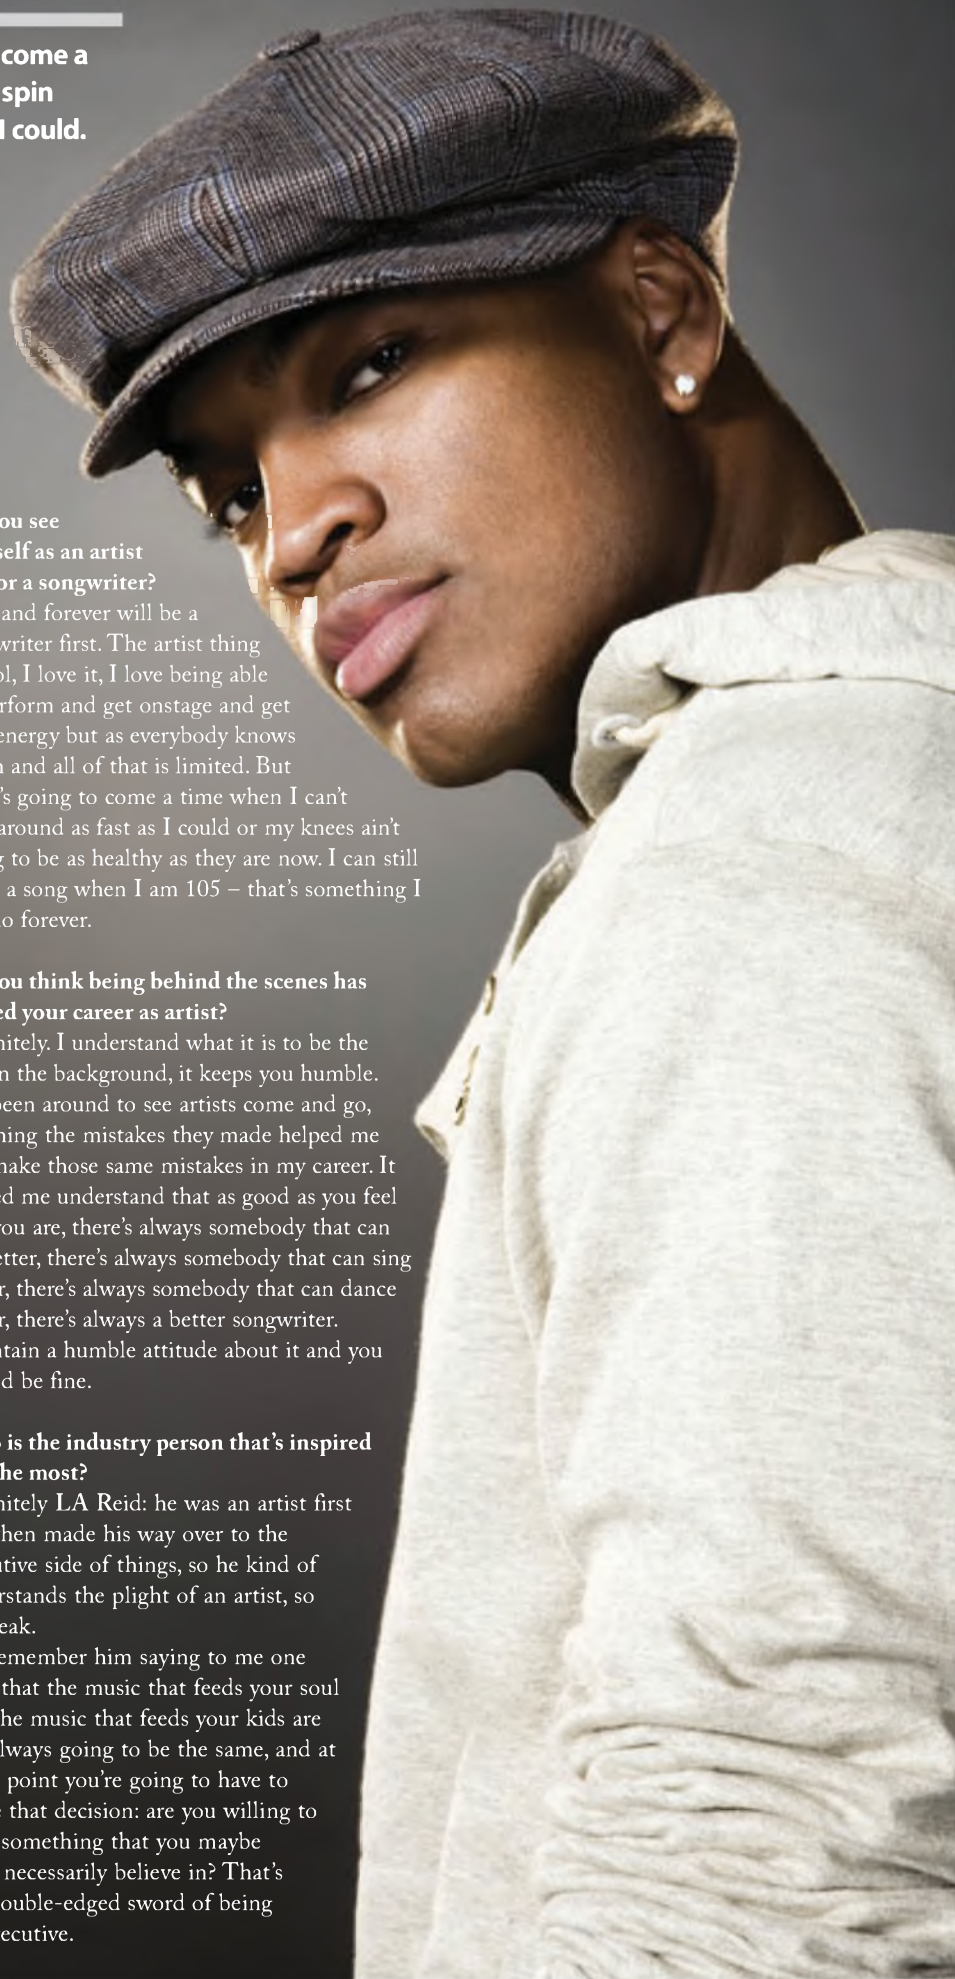

Do you think being behind the scenes has helped your career as artist?

Definitely. I understand what it is to be the guy in the background, it keeps you humble. I've been around to see artists come and go, watching the mistakes they made helped me not make those same mistakes in my career. It helped me understand that as good as you feel like you are, there's always somebody that can do better, there's always somebody that can sing better, there's always somebody that can dance better, there's always a better songwriter. Maintain a humble attitude about it and you should be fine.

Who is the industry person that's inspired you the most?

Definitely LA Reid: he was an artist first and then made his way over to the executive side of things, so he kind of understands the plight of an artist, so to speak.

I remember him saying to me one time that the music that feeds your soul and the music that feeds your kids are not always going to be the same, and at some point you're going to have to make that decision: are you willing to back something that you maybe don't necessarily believe in? That's the double-edged sword of being an executive.

VIEWPOINT MN2S

DIGITAL

BY DAVID ELKABAS, MN2S

MAJOR LABELS ARE LOSING TOUCH WITH REALITY

Why do the biggest record companies still focus on 'mass retailing'?

"Recording studios have been replaced by laptops and music apps developed to promote and market music, while mass retailing in stores has been swapped for digital downloads. The same technology that empowers the artist also opens up greater competition among musicians meaning getting noticed by a promoter or record company is as hard as ever"

DAVID ELKABAS, MN2S

Major record companies are losing touch with reality, operating within the realms of out-of-date business models that are threatening their future and the richness of our music culture.

They're missing a trick; focusing too heavily on making commercial music for the masses and underestimating the pull of Britain's music society and its diverse range of talent and tastes.

For too long, artists have been under the control of majors to make 'chart topping' music that is for mass retail consumption rather than them having the creative freedom to make music that suits their artistic talent and their specific fanbase.

But the balance of power between artists and management companies is now changing thanks to advances in technology, which, as we have seen with the recent EMI merger, is putting the majors in a more precarious position.

Advances in technology and communications – such as digital downloads and social media websites – has dramatically changed the way we consume music. Industry watcher Strategy Analytics predicts that digital music will overtake physical products after streaming music revenues were up 40% this year, generating £696m for the global music industry.

The digital and communications revolution is giving the artist greater control and influence over the way their music is made, sold and promoted. Gone are the 'closed market' days where artists had to rely on the major record companies and their mature relationships with high-street retailers in order to get their music to market.

Recording studios have been replaced by laptops and music apps developed to promote and market music, while mass retailing in stores has been swapped for digital downloads.

We now work in an open market with greater freedom and choice for the artist and fans. The cost to take music to market has also gone down as supply chain operations have been streamlined thanks to online communications and retailing. Artists no longer need hundreds of staff across various different departments and headquarters to promote and distribute their music – cost savings that can be passed to the consumer, making music even more accessible and affordable.

This open market model has seen a rise in independent music management companies. The same technology that empowers the artist also opens up greater competition among musicians meaning getting noticed by a promoter or record company is as hard as ever.

These independents are embracing the open market and the opportunities it presents to both them and their artists, which is challenging the management approach of major record companies.

Independents are responding to the pull of British music culture – facilitated by technology – by giving their artists greater creative freedom to make the music that they and their fans want and that will keep the diversity of British music alive.

The major record companies do still have a fair amount of influence in the industry but artists now have greater choice and opportunity to work with emerging technologies and smaller management companies that offer fairer deals on music copyright and retention rights, while getting the business support they need to grow.

Major record companies must adapt to the changes in the industry and listen to the voices of fans of today if they are to continue to remain 'major.' In the past, music such as punk, rock, and the new romantics of the Eighties was a big influence on the way people lived their lives; often forming part of their identity and responsible for cultural movements. We're seeing a return to music trends, fuelled by real culture, with the likes of electronic dance music. But we are not seeing that same sense of culture and togetherness that once was, with manufactured artists and bands of today.

There is a need for more genuine talent. This year, total spending on music is predicted to fall by £190m in the UK which Strategy Analytics puts down to the lack of new material coming through from some of our greatest pop and rock stars.

But the majors are still too focused on mass retailing rather than listening to what the artist and fans want. They are working within an industry that is becoming less about the talent and more about making contrived, commercial records that sells to the masses. This is bringing our music down to a lower denominator and is not reflective of the demands of today's open and diverse music society.

It's endangering the culture of British music; the depth and breadth of talent, and the music users that support it. The Olympic closing and opening ceremonies proved how Britain leads on producing some of the world's greatest artists. With the world's eyes upon Britain's music industry, we should be embracing this opportunity by encouraging and nurturing all types of artists and music for further generations to enjoy.

TERRITORY FOCUS SOUTH AFRICA

While the rest of the world is moving away from the physical format, South Africa is only now taking its first steps into digital territory

A WHOLE NEW WORLD

INTERNATIONAL

■ BY TOM PAKINKIS

South Africa is yet to adopt iTunes, let alone Spotify. While the rest of the world is slowly but surely leaving physical formats behind, the country is still awaiting its first taste of digital services, having struggled to establish the infrastructure necessary to attract big tech players in music and entertainment.

But the contrasts between the South African music market and those closer to home go much deeper than that. The territory itself stands on fundamentally different foundations to the rest of the world. You only need to look at the IFPI's 2011 recorded music market report to see the differences.

Where the UK progressed well in terms of digital adoption – with market shares at 58% physical and 32% digital last year – the South African music industry was still overwhelmingly dominated by the physical format, which had a 93% market share compared to digital's 6% and sync's 1%.

In terms of revenue, South Africa's physical format generated $94.9m in 2011 with digital dragging in just $6.1m. Total recorded music revenue last year landed at $102m.

Importantly, South Africa's total recorded music revenue decline was steep, dropping by 18.7% from 125.5m in 2010 compared to a 3.1% decline in the UK (from $1,480.1m to $1,433.7m).

The reason for these contrasting numbers are predictable but significant. As far as digital is concerned, 21.2 million households in the UK are internet connected, with 19.4 million boasting broadband, according to the IFPI 2011 report. South Africa, on the other hand, can only claim 2.7 million internet-ready homes, 2.5 million of which have broadband.

Mobile statistics are even more telling when it comes to South Africa's digital no-show. The country's 49 million-strong population has 60 million mobile subscriptions but only 11.7 million 3G subscriptions.

Compare that to the UK's 82.5 million mobile subscriptions and 46.7 million 3G subscriptions across a population of 62.7 million and digital music services in South Africa could be left wanting when it comes to infrastructure.

Sheer is one of South Africa's largest publishing companies and managing director David Alexander says that the territory's struggles are more fundamental than underdeveloped digital networks.

"Poverty is the main challenge," he says. "Although we have a relatively large population of 50 million people, most of them would consider music a luxury. Our per capita spend on music is less than $2."

"We have a relatively large population of 50 million but most of them would consider music a luxury. Our per capita spend on music is less than $2"

DAVID ALEXANDER, SHEER PUBLISHING

Alexander does, however, flag up the lack of broadband access as another major hurdle, explaining that most people who do have high-speed internet access have it at work and not at home, meaning they are limited in terms of the content they can access and often unable to download large music files.

Soul gathering

"The majority of connections are via mobile phones and 3G is not a stable platform for large file transfers," he adds. "All of this means that digital services have not invested. We don't have iTunes, Spotify or Pandora, for example."

Alexander suggests that foreign music execs visit the territory with realistic expectations saying that physical sales are down 10% in 2012 but have declined 45% compared to the country's best year in 2007.

"Broadcasting has been a growth area in the past, but that growth has slowed. Until we have finality on our Digital Broadcast infrastructure this will continue to be slow.

"Advertising continues to be a buoyant source of revenue," he offers as a positive in the market. "South African advertising agencies are starting to produce a lot of work for the Continent and these licenses are handled here – which has provided great extra revenue."

Just Music represents some of the world's leading indie labels in South Africa, including Beggars Group, Ministry of Sound and Domino, as well as local talent including KONGOS, Zebra & Giraffe, Pascal & Pearce, Goodluck and Shadowclub. Owner Karl Anderson flags up another struggle within South African borders, one that will be far more familiar to foreign execs.

"The last year has seen more music stores close down and some of our biggest music retail chains closing some of their less profitable stores," he says, explaining that traditional music retailers have diversified their product range to become 'lifestyle stores'. With shelf-space now taken up by anything from televisions to Angry Birds-branded speakers, Anderson says there is less and less room for traditional CD releases.

"This is making it more and more difficult to break and develop new artists in a market where there is no viable digital model in place and shelf-space at retail is at a premium."

Anderson agrees with Sheer's Alexander when it comes to offering advice to foreign music execs: they need to recognise just how different South Africa is as a territory, which in turn requires different marketing strategies and ways of operating in general.

"Sadly many industry executives sit in their ivory towers in London, New York or LA and have absolutely no idea how diverse and complex the South African market is," he says. "It's unlike any other country on earth."

"There is a wealth of talent down here. However, we don't have the necessary experience or support systems in terms of producers, managers, songwriters and studios to take things to the next level on an international stage."

When it does come to pushing South African music abroad, the challenge is, to a large extent, one of perception. Anderson feels there's almost a global assumption that South Africa just produces world music. In fact, it has thriving pop, rock, alternative, urban and EDM offerings as well.

"Over and above legends like Hugh Masekela, Johnny Clegg and Ladysmith Black Mambazo, right now, the best known South African exports are probably acts like Die Antwoord, Seether and The Parlotones," Anderson says. "The EDM scene in particular has exploded in South Africa over the past few years and international DJs can come out here and play to over 20,000 people a night."

Sheer's Alexander feels that government could give a welcome hand when it comes to pushing local repertoire abroad, but concedes that the creative industries don't bring in enough money to grab politicians' attention.

"South Africa still exports very little music and, when we do, most of it is in the form of live shows and not recorded product," he says.

"There is no government department or agency with a comprehensive creative industries or music industry strategy – anyone involved in the export market is on their own."

"The creative industries still don't bring in enough money to get the attention of the big government budgets. We live in a resource-rich nation but often the only resources that are traded internationally come from the ground."

Alexander goes on to say that there is some support for South African music abroad, but it hasn't gathered any real kind of momentum. "I think we have kept pace with the rest of the world and still rank in the 20-23 largest music markets, where we have been for the last few years," he adds.

"The large ex-pat South African community in the UK and Australia continue to support the music they remember from home, so the iTunes accounts do tick over, albeit very slowly. But the new streaming services make accounting a painful task – large volumes with very little return."

"South African households are struggling to make ends meet, which impacts on the number and type of events they attend"

ATTIE VAN WYK, BIG CONCERTS

Misha Loots, partner at Hilltop Live, parent company of South Africa's Oppikoppi Festival points to progress being made by the country's artists, saying that more local acts are touring overseas and still more waiting in the wings. "We are getting mails on a daily basis from agents and managers who want to get into the market. We started from nothing a few years ago, so every gig booked is growth. It feels like this is opening up slowly now, but we have certainly not reached our full potential."

Much like the rest of the world, while physical sales are declining, there's consensus that the South African live sector is holding its ground. Live entertainment promoter Big Concerts currently has two stadium tours on-sale for Q4 that will see Linkin Park and Lady Gaga visit the country with Red Hot Chili Peppers scheduled for 2013.

Big Concerts CEO Attie Van Wyk admits, however, that it has been difficult to secure headline arena talent for the second half of 2012.

"The other challenge has been a lack of disposable income in smaller markets," he adds. "South African households are struggling to make ends meet, which impacts on the number and type of events they attend."

Hilltop's Loots suggests the live scene is doing so well in South Africa that, again, the territory's infrastructure is struggling to accommodate. "There are many events taking place which clouds the playing field somewhat and there's a definite lack of venues which makes tours tricky," he says.

"It is in many ways still a very young industry, so one could call it growing pains, but on a whole it is a very exciting time and we are having a lot of fun."

While the future of the music industry around the world looks uncertain at best, there's a sense of optimism in South Africa. Van Wyk expects to see the quality and number of entertainment events increase significantly "provided the trading environment remains stable," while Hilltop's Loots is looking forward to innovative developments in the territory generally.

"It looks to us like the audiences are growing in many places and the community tools are getting stronger," he says. "Live music tribalism will probably get stronger and more powerful."

"The communities, technology and innovation that we are working with is extremely exciting."

For the recorded music and publishing sectors, it's new technology that is most important of all. Finding a catalyst for digital growth could make a big difference, and it may not be too far away.

"South Africa just saw the launch of its first streaming service Simfy," says Sheer's Alexander. "With expanding broadband penetration I expect more of the streaming services to launch and we also have high hopes that iTunes will arrive really soon."

"When someone solves how to sell music easily on 'dumb phones', Africa will become a very vibrant market," he adds.

"With ever-increasing mobile infiltration, the partnership opportunities, with global telecommunication companies entering these markets, are compelling."

Just Music's Anderson adds, "It's an exciting time given that the likes of iTunes and Simfy will be coming into the market. They will create new opportunities and level the playing field for independent artists who battle to get their music into traditional retail stores."

Ultimately, of course, the future of any music market rests on the talent of its artists and the teams surrounding them. Anderson is confident that South Africa's music industry has some impact players on the way. "The domestic music scene is producing some of the most exciting talent it's produced in decades," he says. "Hopefully we'll see one or two South African acts break internationally which will lead to more interest from the A&R community."

INTERVIEW MELANIE C

BRINGING SPICE TO THE STAGE

Melanie C is forming quite the relationship with the stage. In September, she'll appear in Jesus Christ Superstar and release a new solo LP of theatre classics via her own independent label

TALENT

BY TINA HART

The London 2012 Olympic Games Closing Ceremony was a gigantic platform for The Spice Girls - with an estimated audience of one billion watching around the world. But Melanie Chisholm's on-stage antics in 2012 won't stop there.

Next month, she will take on the role of Mary Magdalene as part of the Jesus Christ Superstar play. Chisholm appeared as a mentor on the related TV talent search show earlier this year, informed by her own experience starring in West End hit Blood Brothers.

Elsewhere on the horizon, there's the release of musical Viva Forever in December, the hugely anticipated stage show based on Chisholm and her bandmates' career in the Spice Girls.

Her sixth solo album, Stages, is due out on September 10 - a collection of twelve classic songs from theatre and film, released via Chisholm's own label, Red Girl Records...

You got asked to go on the Superstar TV talent show and ended up signing for the whole series. At what point did Andrew Lloyd Webber ask you about being Mary in the theatre production of Jesus Christ Superstar?

I first started working on the show as a mentor but when it came to the live shows there wasn't enough airtime to have a mentor role. They had a good reaction to the pre-recorded stuff, so then asked me to be a judge.

I spent five days in Osea Island, where the Jesus bootcamp was, and spent more time with Andrew and Jason [Donovan].

I said to Jason "Oh I'd love to play Mary" and he went "Go for it babe, go on, do it, you gonna do it?" So I mentioned to Andrew that I'd be interested and he was really excited. Luckily he thought I was right for the role.

Was that what made you decide to go down the theatre songs route?

It was before I got the Mary role actually. It was when I was working in Blood Brothers a couple of years ago. When I was there, it reignited my passion for musical theatre. I went to performing arts college when I was sixteen and spent a lot of time in the West End and it brought back all of those memories. I just remembered how many great songs there are, so that's when I started talking about it and put the wheels in motion.

I finished the theatre run and started recording some stuff so I've been working on it on and off for a couple of years - plus I did a pop record in-between [The Sea]. It'd been a busy time and then when ITV approached me about doing Superstar I thought, "It's time to get the album finished."

How did you choose the songs for the record?

I got just loads of ideas, scribbled down titles and shows. I was at home with my piano and worked with Peter Vettese, who has produced the album - he's an amazing pianist.

We'd play through a long list and sing so we'd be like, "Eurgh that's horrible" and, "Oh that's great" and then narrowed it down to the ones we felt we could do well.

We had some new additions recently, I recorded I Don't Know How To Love Him and thought that would be appropriate to be on there. Then I did I Know Him So Well with Emma [Bunton] this year too - that was a fantastic addition and it was so lovely to work with her again.

Your label Red Girl was set up in 2004 after you left Virgin, how did that all come about?

I was released from my contract, which is the most romantic way we can put these things. I'd had a great relationship with Virgin Records of course, with the Spice Girls and my first two solo albums. Paul Conroy, Ashley Newton and [the original Spice Girls team] had moved on.

A lot of the guys who instrumental in the Spice Girls had been poached by the US company and then we got a whole new set of people in. A&R changed, the MD of the company changed, and I think a lot of artists suffer with this; you build up these relationships over time and you have an understanding, they really understand who you are as an artist and what you want to achieve. To be thrown into a brand new relationship straight away can be difficult.

Also at that time where there were big changes within the music industry, the digital age was emerging, record sales were dropping and we didn't meet our expectations. The next thing you know you're gone.

I was quite relieved [to leave the label]. I was frustrated, angry and upset but also relieved. I felt like I was leaving a sinking ship so I was quite happy to go on my merry way. I did have options but to start my own label was the most dramatically different thing I'd ever done and that really excited me.

Being an independent you don't feel under pressure to make other people's mistakes. I think that was my only frustration I had with a major label sometimes, is that they really pushed for something that they felt was right - whether it was something that worked on radio or a certain direction musically they felt you should go in. You don't want to be fighting Goliath, so then when you are an independent you are free to make your own mistakes which you can kind of deal with. Making other people's mistakes sucks.

What's the most important lesson your career in the industry has taught you?

To trust your instincts. Trust them absolutely, one hundred per cent. If it's your own mistake, if you felt in your heart it was the right thing to do then fine, but if you go against your instincts and it doesn't work then that's pretty heartbreaking.

Who's the best music executive you've ever worked with?

Us girls did have a great relationship with all the guys when we were [at Virgin]. Paul Conroy was our MD, Ashley Newton was our A&R and Ray Cooper did our marketing. They were a great team. We had so much success together and so we had so many celebrations together and that will always be a really special part of my career with the girls.

FEATURE ROCKSMITH

Forget the plastic guitars: new video game Rocksmith gives fans the chance to learn the real deal

STRINGS ATTACHED

GAMING

BY TIM INGHAM

“I don't think there have been a lot of credible alternatives to iTunes. Guitar Hero certainly has that potential.”

It's the quote that reveals everything about just how bonkers the video-game guitar boom became. In 2008, the boss of Guitar Hero maker Activision, Bobby Kotick, was so confident in his plastic axes – and their associated downloadable music platform – he actually believed he could take on Steve Jobs. (He also had a rather public spat with then Warner Music boss Edgar Bronfman over royalty rates, but that's another story.)

Yet by February 2011, the Guitar Hero franchise was dead. Sales had tumbled into oblivion, its software creation house closed. The fad, and it was a fad, had well and truly passed.

Game over for guitar-based digital entertainment? Not quite. The music industry has licensed an all-new six-string replication game.

And this one quite literally comes with six strings. Ubisoft's Rocksmith teaches gamers the guitar as they play, rewarding them with digital accolades for nailing the solos and crunching the riffs. The artificial feel and unflattering physicality of Guitar Hero are banished – this is an Xbox title which puts players in danger of looking good in front of their mates.

“Rocksmith appeals to people who have a love of music and have always aspired to pick up a guitar and rock out to their favourite songs,” says Rachael Grant, brand manager at the title's publisher Ubisoft.

LEFT/ABOVE Caught in the axe: Rocksmith's interface is clearly influenced by Guitar Hero – but it gives players the chance to learn a real instrument

COMING UP

Ubisoft's Rocksmith will be released on September 14 for Xbox 360, PlayStation 3 and PC. The full version of the title is bundled with an Epiphone Les Paul Junior guitar.

“Anyone who wants to play guitar will be an audience for this game, and therefore a lot of our marketing activity is targeted to those who want to learn new things and have a passion for music.”

The game automatically adjusts to the player's skill level – ensuring it doesn't preclude those who will never naturally match Mark Knopfler in the noodling stakes. But it doesn't hold back for those who want to shred the frets, either. Well do you reckon you could keep up with Velvet Revolver or Muse?

“Guitar Hero was an extremely successful franchise but offered something different from what we are proposing by making players into instant rock stars,” explains Grant.

“Rocksmith focuses on the learning angle, and the idea that you will actually improve your skills by playing the game.”

The library of licensed music content in Rocksmith is impressive enough as it stands, but Ubisoft says it will welcome rights holders getting

A ROCK SOLID LINE-UP

Rocksmith includes more than 50 tracks from classic rock bands to current international artists, such as:

- Blur : Song 2 (inset)
- David Bowie : Rebel Rebel
- Eric Clapton : Run Back To Your Side
- Franz Ferdinand : Take Me Out
- Incubus : I Miss You
- Interpol : Slow Hands
- Lenny Kravitz : Are You Gonna Go My Way
- Lynyrd Skynyrd : Sweet Home Alabama
- Muse : Unnatural Selection
- Nirvana : In Bloom
- Pixies : Where Is My Mind?
- Queens Of The Stone Age : Go With The Flow
- Radiohead : High And Dry
- The Rolling Stones : (I Can't Get No) Satisfaction
- The White Stripes : Icky Thump
- Velvet Revolver : Slither

in touch to potentially provide additional tracks consumers can download in future.

“It was extremely important for us to ensure that we had the right music content in Rocksmith, because ultimately it's the choice of music that inspires people to learn guitar in the first place,” says Grant. “One of the most satisfying moments for any guitar player is hearing themselves play their favourite song for the first time. Rocksmith has an amazing library of songs from different music genres allowing players to experience those moments first hand.”

“Whether you're into classic rock like The Rolling Stones, Lynyrd Skynyrd or Bowie, or you're more interested in current chart-toppers like The Strokes, Muse, Radiohead and The xx, Rocksmith has it covered.”

“Not only does the game offer more than 50 of these tracks, but there is also an ever expanding tracklist featuring anything from metal to indie rock available for download, so consumers can continue to update their music library.”

No one at Ubisoft has delusions of taking on iTunes. But they might just be about to tempt swathes of square-eyed youngsters away from Call Of Duty – and towards the timeless joy of rocking out.

HIGH STREET HEROES

MUSIC WEEK SALUTES THE INDIE RETAILERS STILL FIGHTING THE GOOD FIGHT

Give us a brief history of The Union Music Store...

We've been here almost two years. The shop stocks folk, country and Americana only, so we're very niche. We opened it because of our love of those genres. We've got lots of friends in Nashville and we kept going there and loving what we saw and thought we'd try and bring some of that back to the UK.

We thought it was a bit of a risk opening a record shop in 2010 so we did it like a pop-up shop. We wanted it to be like a ranch outpost so everything's made out of wood from the back of our garden. Funnily enough, two years down the line, we're still here and it all looks nice and rustic.

How's business been?

It's been really good. We've developed what we sell in here over the period to see what goes well. We've got secondhand records and new vinyl and CDs, but we also sell folk instruments like ukuleles, banjos, cigarbox guitars as well as country shirts and cowboy boots. But our main bread and butter, alongside the CDs, is strings, capos and all the things musicians need.

Would you be able to exist selling music alone?

It's really hard to tell because one day I'll only sell CDs and won't sell any the next. It's hard to say whether or not we'd still be here if we just sold CDs.

We're very diverse. We've also got music-orientated gifts and everything has a bit of a vintage feel to it with a country-music theme. When I say country music I don't mean the cliché, there's no line-dancing.

We also have a small stage in our shop and we have in-stores every Saturday and CD signings, which is really great.

Do you participate in Record Store Day and how useful for you is it in terms of sales?

We certainly do get involved. It's amazing, absolutely brilliant. It's like a big party, we really look forward to it. It's also the best turnover day of the year without a shadow of a doubt.

Do you find there's enough product for you when you focus on such a niche?

Actually, in the first year, I wasn't sure where I should look to get stock but now, having been here a bit longer, more of the smaller distributors have heard about me and have been getting in touch.

There was a lot of folk on Record Store Day this year. Some of the big names like Civil Wars and Richard Thompson all brought stuff out so we did get a lot.

Do you feel that you get enough support from the industry?

Obviously the small independent stores are always going to struggle against Amazon and the likes. We all know that the big High Street shops aren't doing as well as they used to, so I don't feel as though HMV is my enemy. Lots of people come in here because they find those big shops overwhelming.

Being a female, one of things that I also wanted to do was open a record shop that was approachable for females. This is my theory, I have no proof, but I feel that a lot of record stores are slightly male-orientated.

I feel that people don't mind paying a little bit more for their CDs in here. We can't compete with the prices online. I look on Amazon and I'm gutted to see they're selling things for the same price I'm buying them from my wholesaler. But that's the way it is.

How confident are you about the future?

I feel really confident because we've got a lot of things going on. The Union Music Store is also a record label now with three releases and we also promote a gig from an American or Canadian band every month. We design our own T-shirts and stickers as well. I feel confident because when we go out and about people talk about us. Musicians in London know us so even though the turnover of the store isn't enough to make us think that we can retire next year, we feel that it's a growing thing.

PRE-RELEASE DAPPY'S BAD INTENTIONS TURNS GOOD AS PLAY'S NEW NO.1

Former N-Dubz rapper Dappy is flying solo and has jetted to the top of the Play.com pre-order chart, rising from 3 to 1 since last week, replacing The Vaccines at the summit.

Otherwise on the Play chart, the top 14 are all climbers this week – Jake Bugg's eponymous debut sits at 2 and is followed by Muse's The 2nd Law, Leona Lewis's Glassheart and Ellie Goulding's Halcyon at 3, 4, and 5. The rest of the Top 20 is made up of new entries including Skunk Anansie, Carly Rae Jepsen, Steve Harris, Tim Burgess, Calvin Harris and Aerosmith, from 15 to 20 respectively.

Over at HMV the Top 3 remains the same as last week with Two Door Cinema Club at one, followed by Muse and The Killers. Pink's Truth About Love LP rises from 5 to 4 and is the highest charting of a batch of climbers this week that includes The Script, The xx, Ronan Keating, Green Day's Dos and Tre, Leona Lewis and Calvin Harris. Like the Play chart, the lower part of the HMV Top 20 is flooded with fresh appearances. In this instance the 16 to 20 spots are occupied by new records from Mark Knopfler, Tulisa, Bob Dylan, Dog Is Dead and Modestep.

Muse continue to dominate the pre-order list at Amazon as The 2nd Law spends another week at No.1. Mumford and Sons creep up to 3 from 2, leapfrogging Bob Dylan's Tempest in the process. The Killers and The xx make up the Top 5, as they did last week. New entries come from Freddie Mercury & Montserrat Caballe at 15, Pet Shop Boys at 18 and Ronan Keating at 20.

PEOPLE

PERSONNEL 'SOUND GUY' ADHIKARI LEAVES RADIO 1 AFTER MORE THAN 25 YEARS

■ BBC RADIO 1

Described as one of Radio 1's most renowned live music balancers, MITI ADHIKARI (above) has left the BBC. He bowed out with his final live mix for Reading Festival's Sunday night headliners. The Foo Fighters - apt, as his first live mix from Reading was Nirvana some 20 years ago.

Since the early Nineties, Adhikari has been responsible for mixing sessions and live performance for Radio 1. It's estimated that he's recorded around 1000 sessions - within those he's worked with many high-profile bands and has often been personally requested by artists.

His introduction to the BBC was through family friend Mark Tully, the BBC's India correspondent. Adhikari joined the corporation in August 1978 as a trainee studio manager. His early career was spent at BBC World Service and in news before he made his way into the legendary Group 2 (the small collective of engineers responsible for the production of rock and pop live music). He also formed a band in the Eighties called Flying Blind which featured ex-controller of Radio 1 Andy Parfitt, on trumpet.

Adhikari has worked with Nirvana, Coldplay, Jack White, Radiohead, Blur, REM, been summoned to Madonna's dressing room, and got Eddy Vedder to postpone his private jet because he wanted to re-do some vocals.

■ WARNER/ATLANTIC

After nine years at the label, LINDA MAITLAND is leaving Warner to serve as an artist manager at DELIRIOUS BLACKSMITH MANAGEMENT which counts producers Naughty Boy, Mojam, Ishi, Craze & Hoax, Ben Harrison, plus a group of developing artists, on its roster.

Maitland joined then-called East West Records in July 2003 as a part of club promotions. In August 2005 she took on an artist relations work placement and worked her way up to assistant and then manager.

In her new role, Maitland will be looking after artists, producers and songwriters as part of a the management team.

■ TOWN HALL AND SYMPHONY HALL BIRMINGHAM (THSH)

RICHARD HAWLEY has been appointed director of Artistic Programming and Projects and will take up his new position on November 12, 2012.

Andrew Jowett OBE, director of Town Hall and Symphony Hall, said: "I am delighted that we have been able to appoint Richard to this key role within THSH. He brings with him a range of experience which will enable us to build upon the tremendous work done by his predecessor Paul Keene and ensure that the programme of concerts and events staged at our two world class halls continues to place Birmingham at the forefront of music making and upholds our vision of connecting people to music.

"Richard will also be responsible for overseeing our Education and Community policy, an integral element of our future development."

Hawley moved from Australia to the UK where his first appointment was as orchestra manager for the City of Birmingham Symphony Orchestra. He then served as festival director at the Lichfield Festival. He is a Fellow of the CLORE Leadership Programme and currently director of Arts Administration (maternity cover) at London's Southbank Centre.

MY BIG BREAK How UK luminaries arrived in the music industry...

Lucy Noble, Head of Programming and Education, Royal Albert Hall

"I came from the Royal College of Music and got my first job at Sadler's Wells. I'd applied for a stage door job and didn't get it. The next week, the GM of the Peacock Theatre (Paula Gillespie) asked me if I could do some temp admin work for two weeks - despite not knowing what a hard copy was or how to send a fax! Anyway, they asked me to stay.

"Next I was programming assistant, then co-ordinator and then got offered a job at IMG. It wasn't long before I landed the job at the Royal Albert Hall.

"Now I head up Programming and Education here, working with the best promoters and artists as well as engaging with over 100,000 children through our activities with music education - a huge part of our remit as a charity."

TOP TIPS

- Be prepared to work very hard for very little to start with, get as much experience as possible, your foot in the door and be nice to everyone - remember you don't know it all.
- Always go over and above what is required.
- Work hard and play hard - but never let one impact on the other.

So far this year, a handful of songs have dominated the world's singles charts. The first to do so was Somebody That I Used To Know by Gotye feat. Kimbra. Selling upwards of 5m in the US and a million in the UK, it reached No.1 in more than a dozen countries but age has dimmed its erstwhile ubiquity, and it no longer holds a place in the upper reaches of most charts.

Three other songs that have become global smashes continue to sell in large quantities. They are Maroon 5's Payphone (feat. Wiz Khalifa), Carly Rae Jepsen's Call Me Maybe and Flo Rida's Whistle.

Payphone is Maroon 5's second international smash in a row, following Moves Like Jagger (feat. Christina Aguilera). Moves Like Jagger topped the chart in 11 countries where accurate sales data is collected, and Payphone has thus far reached the summit in four. Although it has recently started its descent in most territories – follow-up One More Night is catching up with it quickly, and has itself already topped the chart in New Zealand, something Payphone failed to do – Payphone remains in the Top 10 in the US (5-5), Canada (4-7), Norway (8-9), Italy (9-10) and Finland (10-10) while reaching that portion of the chart for the first time in Brazil, where it climbs 12-10.

Call Me Maybe has been an even bigger hit, topping the chart in 10 countries. It remains No.1 in France, where it has so far spent eight weeks at the apex. It claimed a fairly modest total of four weeks at No.1 in Jepsen's homeland (Canada), although it has been on the chart there for 45 weeks and is still in the Top 20, rallying 13-12 this week. It is in the Top 10 in Italy (2-2), Wallonia (2-4), the US (3-4), Finland (5-3), Germany (5-5), Switzerland (5-7), Spain (7-7), Sweden (8-8), Norway (9-10).

Whistle was an out-of-the-box smash for Flo Rida (pictured), and has topped the chart in eight countries. It finally added the US to that list last week only to be immediately dethroned by Taylor Swift's first chart-topper, We Are Never Ever Getting Back Together, but has been fading fairly quickly elsewhere, and now remains in the Top 10 only in Sweden (1-2), Canada (2-3), Italy (3-4), Finland (6-6), Switzerland (6-8), Norway (7-8).

UPFRONT

COMMERCIAL POP

URBAN

DJ Fresh feeling flush as he enjoys double club domination

ANALYSIS

BY ALAN JONES

Jumping 4-1 Upfront and 9-1 Commercial Pop this week, The Feeling is the third number one of the year on both charts for DJ Fresh. Featuring vocals from RaVaughn, the track is yet another anthemic monster from the drum & bass/dubstep producer, who teamed with Rita Ora for Hot Right Now, which topped both lists in February, and with Dizzee Rascal for The Power, which topped the Upfront chart in May and the Commercial Pop chart in June.

In mixes by The Utah Saints, Julius Jordan, South Central, Metrik, Young Punx, Bobby Tank and DJ Fresh himself, The Feeling has an unusually commanding 21.96% lead over runners-up Sam & The Womp's Bom Bom on the Upfront chart, and a 5.23% lead over Cheryl's Under The Sun on Commercial Pop.

Ne-Yo leads the Urban chart for the fourth straight week with Let Me Love You (Until You Learn To Love Yourself). NY's Trophy Boy improves 3-2 but makes up no leeway on Ne-Yo, whose next big challenge might come from Def Jam/Mercury labelmate Mariah Carey, whose Triumphant (Get 'Em) jumps 10-3 on its second frame.

SINGLES

BY ALAN JONES

London-based but undeniably cosmopolitan, with a sound that is influenced by the music of the Balkans, Sam & The Womp debuted at No.1 on Sunday with their introductory single Bom Bom attracting first-week sales of 107,461 copies. Its release cut short the chart career of soundalike spoiler Big Hits 2012's version of the track, which got to No.65 last week but now exits the Top 200.

It also brings to an end the one-week reign of Rita Ora's How We Do (Party), which slipped to two (57,693 sales). Wiley's Heatwave (feat. Ms. D) also fell a notch, moving 2-3 (42,369 sales).

Taylor Swift is a phenomenon in the US, where her 47th Hot 100 entry We Are Never Ever Getting Back Together rocketed 72-1 this week after selling a massive 623,000 copies. In the UK, Swift reached No.2 with 2009 debut hit Love Song but none of eight subsequent chart entries here managed to breach the Top 20. That changed this week, as We Are Never Ever Getting Back Together stormed to a No.5 debut (35,970 sales).

Absent from the chart for the best part of two years, Devlin storms back - and registered his first ever Top 10 entry, with Watchtower (No.7, 31,671 sales), the introductory single from his upcoming second album, A Moving Picture. Featuring vocals from Ed Sheeran, the track is an adaptation of the Bob Dylan song All Along The Watchtower, a number five hit for The Jimi Hendrix Experience in 1968.

In five visits to the singles chart between 2003 and 2008, Simple Plan never made the Top 20. But the French Canadian band do so with ease this week, having debuted at 12 (23,133 sales) with Summer Paradise. Not content with releasing a single with the same initials as the band, it is also a collaboration with another SP - Jamaican reggae star Sean Paul, for whom the track is the 13th Top 20 hit to date.

Not released until Thursday, the Owl City/Carly Rae Jepsen collaboration Good Time nevertheless racked up 17,947 sales by close of business on Saturday to debut at 17.

With 842,409 sales, Fun's debut smash We Are Young (feat. Janelle Monae) is the third biggest hit of 2012. Falling 28-31 on its 20th week (10,766 sales), the track is joined in the Top 40 this week by follow-up Some Nights, which leaps 45-24 (13,498 sales).

Muse's Olympic anthem Survival dipped 22-58 (6,338 sales) while follow-up Madness debuted at 35 (9,119 sales).

With Channel 4 increasing the frequency of its Paralympics trailers, the song used in its promos - Public Enemy's 2007 recording Harder Than You Think - rocketed 56-11 (23,820 sales) beating the No.27 peak it scaled during an earlier phase of Paralympics promotion last month. It is also now the highest charting single of their 25-year career, replacing He Got Game, which got to 16 in 1998.

Overall singles sales were down 1.14% week-on-week at 3,379,982 - 8.29% above same-week 2011 sales of 3,121,115.

BY ALAN JONES

Only able to top the chart for a week on its first three visits to the summit, Emeli Sandé's Our Version Of Events extended its current residency to a fortnight on Sunday. With the Olympic effect fading, however, its sales dip 17.00% week-on-week to 25,581. Its overall sales since its release in February now stand at 646,883. It draws ever closer to Adele's 21 at the top of the year-to-date rankings. 21 moves 17-15 this week, with sales of 5,981 copies taking its year-to-date tally to 653,157 - a lead of just 6,274.

Number one on early sales flashes, Bloc Party's Four debuted at three on sales of 15,811 copies. Arriving six weeks after first single Octopus peaked at No.121, it was the lowest opening-week sale yet for an album by the band.

After surging 87-50 last week to become Paloma Faith's sixth Top 75 single, 30 Minute Love Affair - the second single from Faith's second album, Fall To Grace - slipped to 51 (6,067 sales). The album continues to prosper however, remaining at its peak of No.2, with sales up 2.90% week-on-week at 21,280.

Glam rock throwbacks The Darkness are back in harness, and delivered their third album last week, seven years after their second. Debuted at four (12,529 sales), the album is called Hot Cakes. The band's debut album, Permission To Land, debuted at two (40,469 sales) in 2003, and seven weeks later started a four-week run at No.1. It has sold 1,390,371 copies. Follow-up One Way Ticket To Hell And Back debuted and peaked at 11 (67,605 sales) in 2005, and went on to sell 213,344 copies.

Jessie Ware nibbled at the singles chart in June, reaching 61 with 110%, and again a fortnight ago, when Wildest Moments charted. The latter single jumped 73-46 (6,547 sales) this week, while Ware's first album Devotion, containing similarly smart pop/soul confections, debuted at five (9,319 sales).

Trey Songz has also landed two songs on the singles chart in recent weeks, and he also made his Top 75 album chart debut this week. The difference is, that as its title suggests, his Chapter V album is his fifth release. It debuted at 10 (6,585 sales). It is his biggest seller to date, with sales of 20,141 copies.

With first single Is This Love peaking at 35 in June, and follow-up Curtain Call reaching 49 last week, Aiden Grimshaw's debut album Misty Eye acquitted itself better than might have been expected, debuting at 19.

The influence of the Olympics fades with Ed Sheeran's + (down 3-6, 8,347 sales), Jessie J's Who You Are (7-13, 6,131 sales) and Elbow's The Seldom Seen Kid (6-23, 4,686 sales) among the losers.

Noel Gallagher's performance at V in Chelmsford helped his High Flying Birds to secure a higher chart perch for the fourth week in a row. The album jumped 20-16 (5,866 sales) to achieve its highest chart placing for 25 weeks.

Overall album sales were up 2.23% week-on-week at 1,441,556 - 14.61% below same-week 2011 sales of 1,688,221.

ALBUM OF THE WEEK

MICK HUCKNALL American Soul

(ATCO)
October 29

Former Simply Red frontman Mick Hucknall will release his debut solo album American Soul at the end of October, preceded by a week with the single That's How Strong My Love Is - his take on the Otis Redding classic.

Hucknall has selected twelve personal favourites from the genre for the collection.

Produced by Andy Wright, highlights include a re-imagining of Etta James's I'd Rather Go Blind and The Flamingos' I Only Have Eyes For You. Other tracks include Hope There's Someone and Baby What Do You Want Me To Do, which was one of the first blues songs Hucknall ever heard as a teenager.

As part of Simply Red, Hucknall has sold more than 50 million albums worldwide and won a plethora of awards - including three BRITS, two Ivor Novellos and a MOBO.

He will perform his first solo shows this September - two nights at the Royal Albert Hall - before a string of dates in 2013.

TRACK OF THE WEEK

LEONA LEWIS Trouble ft. Childish Gambino (Syc0 Music)

October 7

Seven years on from first stepping into the limelight and some 20 million single and album sales later, Leona Lewis returns with her brand new, much anticipated album Glassheart. She will release Trouble, the first single from it, a week prior to the LP.

The track features a rap by acclaimed US rapper Childish Gambino and was written by a cast of home grown talent; Emeli Sande, Naughty Boy, Craze and Hoax, Fraser T Smith and Lewis herself.

Lewis said of the Smith and Naughty Boy-produced track: "Trouble tells the story of love going bad and becoming destructive, aspects of which we can all relate to. It's a deeply emotional and poignant song that I have a real connection to."

INCOMING ALBUMS

THE TWANG 10.20 (Jump/The Cut/Essential Music)

Kicking off the campaign for their third studio album, 10:20, The Twang have made lead track

Mainline available to stream from their Soundcloud account.

The band's debut album sold over 200,000 copies and boasted hits Either Way and Wide Awake, whilst the sophomore offering delivered fan favourite Barney Rubble.

The Twang spent most of the last year in their own studio facility in Birmingham's Jewellery Quarter creating the record - titled after a note that an irate studio neighbour left taped to their studio door.

Singer Phil Etheridge said of the album: "We've tried to be disciplined, strip away the layers and leave something natural and beautiful".

Coinciding with the album release, The Twang head out on tour in October.

OCTOBER 29

LEMAR Invincible (AMP/EMI Label Services)

With a career that has stretched over ten years, Lemar's distinctive voice and songwriting flair has brought him seven Top 10 singles and two million album sales. In the live arena, he has toured with the likes of Justin Timberlake, Usher and Destiny's Child.

Previously Lemar came third in Fame Academy and signed a five-album deal with Sony, now the multi-BRIT and MOBO Award winner returns in 2012 with a "singer/songwriter vibe" and is taking the plunge as his own label boss in conjunction with EMI label services.

The lead track from the album, also titled Invincible, has gained support from Radio Two (it's on the A-list), plus the track was selected as the soundtrack to the new Sky Sports Summer promo and was used by the BBC during the Olympics coverage.

With over one billion views on its YouTube channel and counting, UKF has been a prominent force in the bass culture revolution since 2009.

Its force continues as summer sees the launch of the brand's sixth bass compendium; launched the weekend after it will take over the mainstage of London's SW4 festival.

UKF Bass Culture 2 is a snapshot of where bass movement is at in 2012. Represented across two CDs with 40 tracks, the compilation draws together many strands of electronic music, bridging the gaps between dubstep, drum & bass, electro and more in one bass-fuelled package.

OPOSSUM

Electric Hawaii (Fire)

Damn, there's some great music coming from Down Under at the moment. My favourite album of the last couple of years was Innerspeaker by Tame Impala; I'm practically salivating waiting for their new release. Its force continues as summer sees the launch of the brand's sixth bass compendium; launched the weekend after it will take over the mainstage of London's SW4 festival. UKF Bass Culture 2 is a snapshot of where bass movement is at in 2012. Represented across two CDs with 40 tracks, the compilation draws together many strands of electronic music, bridging the gaps between dubstep, drum & bass, electro and more in one bass-fuelled package. Featuring an eclectic selection UKF claims to have curated 'a bold statement of the rude health of electronic music in 2012'.

Not as heavy as Pond or Tame Impala, it leans more towards another great export from Down Under, The Avalanches, with clever production, electronic drones and sampled percussion. It's the kind of sound that you'd expect Brian Wilson to be making - if he was into breakbeat. Songs about love, drugs, love, a few more drugs and being free, all beautifully layered together and driven by frantic, Sixties garage beat drumming.

Lead single Blue Meanies swirls and stutters around with its rubbery bass, pop harmonies and heavy vocal chorus - "Blue Meanies, Blue Meanies" - a kind of modern day mantra that Mark Ronson could only dream about. Inhaler Song's down tempo, piano-led jazzy feel hints towards Mercury Rev. Stand out track Cola Elixir finds the album getting into proper modern psychedelia, giving the bass and rhythm section a chance to really flex their muscles, the groove-laden result not sounding too dissimilar to modern psych contemporaries Thee Oh Sees.

At 10 songs coming in at 30 minutes, Electric Hawaii moves along at a breezy pace and its quirky, sunny sound will be the perfect soundtrack to suit Britain's Indian summer. OUT NOW

(EMI TPSAD 7504)

Massively influential in the development of heavy rock and inarguably their finest release, Deep Purple's sixth album Machine Head's power is undiminished by the passage of time, and its 40th anniversary is marked by the release of this five-disc box set which includes the original release in excellent new remasters, a 1997 remix by band bassist Roger Glover, unique stereo fold-downs of the long unavailable quad mixes, a new mix of a BBC concert recording of the album dating from 1972, and an audio DVD featuring high resolution remasters and surround sound mixes. Housed in a luxury box alongside a detailed 64-page hardback booklet, from the awesome opener Highway Star to the spectacular closer Space Truckin', it's a riffastic delight.

BILLY PAUL: Ebony Woman/360 Degrees of Billy Paul

(Big Break CDBBR 0142)/(CDBBR 0175)

Now digitally remastered for simultaneous release on Big Break, two albums recorded by Billy Paul for different labels owned by Kenny Gamble & Leon Huff are enjoyable but very different. 1970 release Ebony Woman, for their Neptune imprint, is very much a jazz album, with Paul's interpretations of familiar material like Everyday People (Sly & The Family Stone) and The Association's Windy transporting them into traditional jazz territory. Paul's vocals are excellent but not all the arrangements work - Classics IV's Traces is ponderously slow, and Simon & Garfunkel's Mrs Robinson just sounds odd. Fast forward two years, and 360 Degrees Of Billy Paul is one of the earliest and biggest successes for Gamble &

Huff's rather more revered Philadelphia International label. Although still very much a jazz artist at heart, Paul's vocals are swathed in sweeter orchestral settings, and many of the songs are Gamble & Huff originals, including the US chart-topper Me & Mrs Jones and Brown Baby. Paul's version of Elton John's beautiful but intense ballad Your Song is a joyous celebration taken at a faster tempo, with Paul singing all around but rarely on the original notes, very effectively making it His Song.

VARIOUS: Electrospective - The Remix Album (EMI G 9140702)

The second release in EMI's excellent new Electrospective series - whose purpose is to chronicle the development of electronic music from its early roots in the 1950s to the present day - covers everything from extended remixes to full track reconstructions. A generously proportioned double-disc set, it features 24 rare remixes in a budget priced package containing well over two and a half hours music. Minor classics abound, with classic interpretations of recordings by the likes of Grace Jones, OMD, Depeche Mode and Soul II Soul by some of the most innovative mixers, including Masters At Work, Francois Kervorkian, Derrick May and Larry Levan. A series which may prove to be of lasting importance and build into a classic brand, if it can survive EMI's upcoming upheavals.

SLY & ROBBIE: The Best Of Sly & Robbie: Hot You Hot (Island 5339065)

2012 has been a vintage year for reggae reissues, as record companies mark the 50th anniversary of Jamaican independence. I'm not sure whether or not that is the motivation behind the release of this celebration of recordings by Sly Dunbar & Robbie Shakespeare, but whatever the catalyst, it is justified. Riddim Twins Sly (drums) and Robbie (bass) first joined forced over 30 years ago and have lent their tight rhythms and production skills to a plethora of artists over the years, including Grace Jones, Black Uhuru, Peter Tosh and Beenie Man, while quietly putting out releases under their own name for their own Taxi label. This compilation concentrates on the latter, compiling 19 of their recordings from 1980 to 1997, many of which are on CD for the first time. They include the terrific title track; the fabulously dubby Triple, which seems to be based on Yazoo's Don't Go; a nicely mellow instrumental re-interpretation of Michael Jackson's Billie Jean; and their only bona fide hit, the wonderful Boops (Here To Go), a good natured tongue-in-cheek rap track which samples Liquid Liquid's Cavern.

◀ A GREAT ADVERT FOR THE GAME

The Premier League can keep its glamour model WAGs, prima donna signings and multi-million pound wage bills – Cherry Red's having none of it. The UK indie label has just revamped its football sponsorships for the new season. They now include: League 2 AFC Wimbledon's stadium, known as The Cherry Red Records Stadium; the Combined Counties League, known as the Cherry Red Records Combined Counties League; and the Middlesex Counties League, known as the Cherry Red Middlesex Counties league. Said Cherry Red chairman Iain McNay (pictured here with AFC Wimbledon manager Terry Brown): "We all really love our football at Cherry Red and enjoy supporting non-league and lower league football."

▲ CLAWS IN HIS CONTRACT

It was a double celebration for Sticky Management man and top producer Jake Gosling this week: first, appearing in the last issue of Music Week with artist Mikill Payne as he signed to Bucks, and then posing with these two fishy fellas ahead of a birthday feast. Probably best not to think about the fate that awaited them...

KEY SONGS IN THE LIFE OF BOB BARNES

Chart Director,
Millward Brown

First record you remember buying?

Good Golly Miss Molly by The Swinging Blue Jeans. Got to No.11 in 1964.

Which song was the first dance at your wedding?

Show Me Heaven by Maria McKee.

Which track would you like played at your funeral?

What Happiness Means To Me by Amy MacDonald.

What's your karaoke speciality?

Make Me Smile (Come Up And See Me) by Steve Harley & Cockney Rebel (especially the guitar solo after the second verse).

What was the best artist meeting of your life?

Having tea with Amy MacDonald is up there, but over the years I met three of The Beatles, The Rolling Stones, Ian Hunter, Robert Plant, Cher, Prince, the Bee Gees and hundreds of artists in the days when all the record companies held annual conferences, which they say if you remember them, you couldn't have been there!

Recommend a track Music Week readers may not have heard.

The 8th by Paul Heaton. I saw him perform this recently released piece at the Manchester International Festival last year.

What's your favourite single/track of all time?

All The Young Dudes by Mott The Hoople - the band, and gig, that convinced me I wanted to be part of the music industry way back in 1972.

A Woolworths spokesperson said Geri Halliwell's first solo single Mi Chico Latino is "selling like hotcakes". The song looks set to confound critics by giving EMI:Chrysalis its first Top Two chart entry... NME is a big fan of Puff Daddy's latest single release from new album Forever: "Sean 'Puffy' Coombs fucking rules. Nominations for single of the year must form a queue behind 'PE 2000"... Byker Grove is fast becoming a breeding ground for pop stars. Following Ant and Dec's assault on the charts, Noddy and Marcus from the BBC teen drama have formed Point Break (pictured) with debut single Do We Rock set for release on September 13... BMG marketing guru Kevin Dawson has responded to news that the single release date for Moloko's Sing It Back clashes with Lou Bega's RCA release Mambo No. 5: "Perhaps RCA should publish their release schedule every week and then companies with proper records, records that obviously really mean something, can move them out of the way."

◀ IT'S GRIM DOWN SOUTH

RCA-signed Aiden Grimshaw has been promoting debut album Misty Eye hard up and down the country – and his visit to HMV Cambridge was no exception. Those girls look capable of some serious screams to us. Aiden's slightly shellshocked smile says it all.

▲ A RIGHT LEMON

It's not been a bad first week for Tom Clough, Sony Music's new synchronisation assistant. Within a few days of his new job, he was hobnobbing with Keith Lemon at the ITV2 star's own film premiere. Bang tidy.

◀ ▲ MORE THAN OK!

It's not every day a music manager gets in the pages of OK! Magazine, but the wedding of Paul Carey (Skinny Lister, Tina Barrett) to wife Julia drew the sort of stars a s'leb mag can't ignore – including Christopher Biggins and TV Hotel Inspector Alex Polizzi.

FABLED LABELS

ISLAND RECORDS

Founded 1959

Key artists U2, Roxy Music, Bob Marley & The Wailers

Founded by Chris Blackwell and Graeme Goodall, Island Records was born in Jamaica in 1959, before relocating to the UK in May 1962.

The label's first gold album certification for North American record sales was Bob Marley's Exodus, via a multinational distribution deal with RCA Records Canada. In 1983, Blackwell used the label to finance a new film production and distribution company Island Alive, using $5m royalties from U2's fifth album The Joshua Tree (the band Island signed in March 1980). A deal was struck whereby U2 (pictured) invested the unpaid $5 million into the company in exchange for a stake in Island.

In July 1989, Blackwell sold Island Records and Island Music to PolyGram UK Group for £272 million. From this point on, Island was no longer an independent company.

All of the PolyGram and associated labels were purchased by Seagram in 1998 and the label now operates under Universal as a division of The Island Def Jam Music Group in the United States and as a standalone label in the UK.

Did you know? The label takes its name from the 1955 Alec Waugh novel (left) and subsequent film, plus the Harry Belafonte song Island in the Sun.
