WHAT—NO LONDON BAROQUE?

The Editor,

Symphony Sid, who recently began his new career with a fine performance in the "London Baroque" series of concerts, has announced that he will not continue in the series.

His decision was prompted by the difficul of finding suitable music for the group, and he has decided to concentrate on more tra ditional repertoire.

The "London Baroque" series, which has been well received, was launched last year with a performance by the group under the direction of Sir Thomas Beecham. Since then, the group has performed a number of concerts, including one at the Proms, and has been praised for its fresh and uninhibi ted approach to Baroque music.
