HOLLYWOOD HEADLINES

From LYNNE HAMMOND

By Lee Conway

SUNDAY is not very exciting toifilm fans who are not long back from the West Coast. The Hollywood stars who used to visit our city during the Golden Age of the movies are now less frequent visitors, and the excitement of their arrival is not as great as it used to be.

NEVERTHELESS we can still get a glimpse of the brighter stars of the film world by attending the Hollywood Bowl, where the stars are not only performers but also fans of the arts. The Bowl is a popular meeting place for the stars and their fans, and the concerts often feature the latest and greatest in film music.

This story was written by Frankly, I don't know why. The real reason is that I just wanted to write something. I thought it would be interesting to see how a story can be written without a clear idea of what it's about.

The Bowl is a popular meeting place for the stars and their fans, and the concerts often feature the latest and greatest in film music. The fans are always eager to see their favorite stars, and the stars are always happy to perform for them.

The Bowl is located in the heart of Hollywood, and it's a great place to see a concert. The acoustics are excellent, and the view of the city from the roof is spectacular. The food is good, and the prices are reasonable.

Steve Race does some flagrant poaching in this week's SOUND TRACK

Steve Race

In the midst of a description of the picture, the invisible portrait of Steve Race was dimly visible through the haze of smoke. The portrait was of a young man with a determined expression, and showed him in the middle of a scene from the picture. Steve Race, who makes his bow in the picture, is a promising young actor, and has been receiving much attention for his portrayal of the young hero. He has a distinctively wholesome appearance, and is well suited to the role.
