On one of Munich's main streets, the whistling of the traffic walls is a subtle sound that can be heard between the buildings, creating a lively atmosphere. In the 50s, this was used as a cinema until the Deutsche Grammophon Company took it over to convert it into a recording studio. A decade later, the company was sold to singer Abi Ofarim and his partners. Then in 1980 it came into the hands of Peter Kirsten. But throughout, the Arco Studios have been counted among the best in West Germany with names like Elton John, Marvin Gaye, Falco and Donna Summer among their clients.

"Arco is a world of its own," says Arco Studios chief engineer, Menzel. "It's a place where music is created and recorded. The atmosphere here is unique. People from all over the world come here to record their music. And we provide them with the best possible conditions to create that special sound that makes their music unique.

The list of artists who have worked at the Arco Studios shows how good their reputation is and includes: Elton John, Alan Parsons, Paul Simon, Sting, Bruce Springsteen, Madonna, Quincy Jones, and many more. We have also worked with some of the biggest producers in the world, including Giorgio Moroder, who is known for his hit "From Here To Eternity".
