I'm happy to report this week that you don't have to be young to be in the news. Neither do you have to be a beautiful blonde model on the run from the Mounted Police. Ageing rockers, Johnny Rotten and friends are being recorded for an album of their own. The recording session took place in the studio of the Rock 'n' Roll Hall of Fame in Cleveland. The champagne and food were swallowed by many famous mouths.

Even Radio One was there — along with some kraft TV chaps — to record the event so that everyone can say they were there. In fact, Alex Jones, the lead singer of the Pistols, was the first to arrive on the scene. Stu was barely halfway through his roadie speech when he was interrupted by the sound of an emergency vehicle. It was the police, come to check on the crowd.

Alex Jones was still talking when the police arrived, and he told them that they didn't need to worry, as he was just about to begin his performance. The police officers were skeptical, but they decided to let him perform, as long as he promised to stop any trouble.

As the performance began, the crowd went wild. Alex Jones was able to perform several songs before the police arrived and shut it down. The crowd was disappointed, but they understood the need for order. The event was finally called off, and everyone went home with a smile on their face.

Next week we'll be reporting on the latest news from the music world. Stay tuned!
